

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

DECIDED IN THE Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.

Watson v. Fletcher.

April Term, 1850, Richmond.

1. Equity Practice—Gambling Partnerships—Right of Partners to Contribution.—A court of equity will not lend its aid for the settlement and adjustment of the transactions of a partnership for gambling. Nor will it give relief to either partner against the other, founded on transactions arising out of such partnership, whether for profits, losses, expenses, contribution or reimbursement.

2. Same—Same—Failure of Pleadings to Show Nature of Proof—Case at Bar.—Though the pleadings do not shew that the transactions sought to be settled and adjusted, arose out of a partnership for gambling; yet if this appears from the evidence taken before the commissioner who was directed to settle the accounts, it is proper for the Court to recommit the accounts, and direct an enquiry into the consideration on which the claims of the parties are founded.

3. Gambling Partnership—Death of One Partner—Qualification of Survivor on Estate—Right to Question Title.—One of the partners qualifies an administrator of the other, and there is personal property belonging to the partnership, which had been bought and used for the partnership purposes. The administrator cannot question the title of his intestate to his moiety of this property, on the ground that it was bought and used for gambling purposes.

2 *4. Same—Same—How Personal Property Divided.—The whole, and not a moiety, of the personal property belonging to the partnership must be sold, and the proceeds divided between the living partner and the estate of the deceased partner.

3. Equity Practice—Settlement of Partnership Accounts—Case at Bar.—Two partners own real estate jointly. One of them dies, having made a will subjecting his whole estate to the payment of his debts, and having, subsequent to making the will, conveyed real and personal estate of his own to his sole devisee and legatee. The surviving partner qualifies as administrator with the will annexed; and then files a bill against the devisee and legatee, charging that his testator was largely indebted to him, and seeking to set aside the conveyances as without consideration, and void as to creditors, and to have his claims established. He then offers for sale his testator's undivided moiety of the real estate owned by them jointly. HELD: That having by his bill invoked the jurisdiction of the Court to establish the validity of his claims as creditor, and the invalidity of the conveyances, he thereby placed his whole trust and authority under the control and direction of the Court; and it was an abuse of his fiduciary relation to proceed to sell the said real estate before an adjudication of the matters in controversy between himself and the devisee and legatee; and the sale was properly restrained by injunction at the suit of the devisee and legatee.

On the 26th of February 1844, Thomas R. Comer made his will, by which, after directing that his debts should be paid, he gave the whole residue of his estate, real and personal, to Ellen Fletcher; and he appointed Samuel H. Myers his executor. On the 11th of April following, Comer, upon the consideration, as stated in the deed, of 1500 dollars, conveyed to Ellen Fletcher a house and lot on L street, near Bacon Quarter branch; and on the same day by another deed, on the consideration as stated therein, of 300 dollars, he conveyed to Ellen Fletcher all the personal property in said house. Comer died on the 23d of April 1844, and his will was duly admitted to probat in the County court of Henrico, when Samuel H. Myers having refused to qualify as executor, administration with the will annexed, was committed to Thomas D. Watson.

On the 6th of June 1844, Watson, in his own right, and as administrator with the will annexed of Comer, *filed his bill in the Superior court of chancery for the Richmond circuit, against Ellen Fletcher, in which, after stating the foregoing facts, he said that he was only induced to qualify as administrator with the will annexed upon the estate, because he was a large creditor of Comer. That Comer and himself had purchased jointly, a house and lot on 14th street, in the City of Richmond, for which they agreed to give 8000 dollars, of which the complainant had paid the whole amount; and a deed had been made to Comer and himself for the house and lot; so that complainant had a claim against Comer's estate for 4000 dollars, and an equitable lien on Comer's moiety of the said house and lot; and it was doubtful whether the said moiety would reimburse the complainant the advances made by him. That in addition to this debt, Comer was indebted to the complainant in the following sums, viz: 415 dollars, with interest from the 18th of April 1840; 2795 dollars 87 cents, with interest from the 15th of October 1842; and 1000 dollars for money loaned to him or paid for him, for which sums complainant had vouchers; thus making Comer's indebtedness to the complainant about 8000 dollars.

The plaintiff further charged that few, if any, debts were due to Comer; and that the whole means which could be relied on from this source, would not be more than 1000 dollars; and this, with the moiety of the house and lot aforesaid, would not exceed 5000 dollars of available means for the payment of Comer's debts. That at the time of making his will, he had sufficient capacity for executing such a paper; but between that period and the 11th of April, when the deeds aforesaid were executed, from constant excitement, his mind became greatly impaired, and he was on the 11th of April, totally incapable of discreetly disposing of his property, or entering into any contract; and for this reason, the said deeds ought to be treated as nullities. That 4 moreover, *the said Ellen Fletcher, who was a free mulatto, and had been the mistress of Comer for some years, never paid one dollar for this property; that she never was worth 1800 dollars, but that she was at all times, dependent on Comer for the support of herself and her relations. That the property thus conveyed was worth at least 4000 dollars: that the conveyances were fraudulent, and were contrived and designed to defeat the payment of the debts of Comer. That the said Ellen Fletcher had entered upon and taken possession of the real and personal estate so conveyed to her, and the complainant apprehended that for the purpose of consummating the fraud, she would sell the personal property conveyed to her; which would then be wholly lost to the estate and creditors of Comer, as Ellen Fletcher had no means to make satisfaction for the value of the property. He therefore prayed for an injunction to restrain the said Ellen Fletcher from alienating the said house and lot; and that the Court would direct the sheriff to take possession of the personal property aforesaid, and hold the same subject to the future order of the Court, unless Ellen Fletcher should give bond with approved security to have the same forthcoming subject to the final decree of the Court. That the Court would set aside the deeds aforesaid, and subject the said property to the payment of Comer's debts; and grant to the plaintiff such other and further relief as might seem just and equitable.

The Court overruled the plaintiff's application for an injunction in his character of administrator with the will annexed of Thomas R. Comer; and also rejected his motion to enjoin the sale of the real property charged in the bill to have been fraudulently conveyed by Comer to the defendant, being of opinion that the lis pendens created by filing the bill, afforded adequate protection; but on the ground of the defendant's alleged insolvency, the Court
5 awarded to the plaintiff in his individual *character an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling the personal property conveyed in one of the deeds of the 11th of April 1844, until the further order of the Court.

On the 25th of June, Ellen Fletcher filed her bill in the same Court against Thomas D. Watson in his own right, and as administrator with the will annexed of Thomas R. Comer. She stated the death of Thomas R. Comer, and the admission of his will to probat; and further stated that at the time of his death, he was the partner of Thomas D. Watson, and that they were the joint owners of a house and lot on 14th street in the city of Richmond; and that they were jointly and equally interested in numerous and large outstanding claims against various individuals; and that Watson was indebted to Comer for his share of numerous debts which were due to them jointly, and had been collected by Watson, some of which she mentioned, and among them a debt of 3000 dollars and upwards collected by Watson of James Garden of the county of Charlotte. This debt was secured by a deed of trust upon land and slaves, which were sold to satisfy it, and were purchased by Watson, and retained by him; thereby making him chargeable to Comer for one moiety of the debt.

She further charged that Watson had advertised the undivided moiety of the house and lot on 14th street, for sale at public auction, upon the pretence that Comer was largely indebted to him, which she charged, was not true if a fair settlement of accounts between the said Watson and Comer was had. That though Watson held a bond of Comer's for about 2500 dollars, the amount of that bond, and probably no part of it, was due, if a fair settlement was made, and the credits to which Comer was entitled, were allowed. That although Watson may have made the payments to Galt for the 6 house and lot on 14th street, the payments were *not made out of his own private funds; and that Comer made large payments for the repairs and improvement of said house, for which he was entitled to credit. That under these circumstances, even if Watson was entitled to sell the house and lot, which she was advised was at least questionable, yet it would be unjust and injurious to the complainant to permit him to sell an undivided moiety thereof before a settlement of his account with Comer was had, so as to ascertain whether a sale would be necessary. She therefore prayed that Watson might be required to render a full account of all moneys received by him, to any portion of which Comer was entitled; that he might exhibit all his claims against the estate of Comer, and fairly settle the account between himself and said estate; that he might be enjoined from selling the undivided moiety of the said house and lot until the further order of the Court; and for such other and further relief as her case might require, and to equity might seem meet.

The injunction was granted as prayed for in the bill.

In July 1844 Watson answered the bill. He denied that Comer was his partner at the time of his death. He alleged that he had paid the whole purchase money of the house and lot on 14th street, and that the improvements and repairs thereon were paid for out of money furnished by him; and that Comer was not only indebted to him for his proportion of the purchase money and of the costs of the repairs and improvements made upon the house, but was indebted to him to a large amount in addition thereto. He denied that he was indebted to Comer for his share of numerous debts which were due to them jointly, and had been collected by him, or that he owed Comer one dollar on that account. He alleged, that on the 15th of October 1842 they had a settlement of all accounts between 7 them, (except the sum of 415 dollars, for which Comer *had previously executed to him his bond,) on which settlement Comer was found indebted to him in the sum of 2795 dollars 87 cents, for which he executed his bond. He denied he was indebted to Comer on account of the debt of Garden, in any form whatever. He said Garden was not jointly indebted to Comer and himself, but was indebted severally to each in different sums. He denied that Comer's estate was sufficient to pay his debts without a sale of the lot on 14th street, or that on L street, in which the plaintiff Ellen Fletcher lived.

Upon filing his answer Watson moved the court to dissolve the injunction; but the Court overruled the motion, and made a decree that he render before one of the commissioners of the court an account of his administration of the estate of Comer; and the commissioner was authorized to examine the defendant upon oath touching the subject matter of the accounts, if required by the plaintiff. On the 25th of February 1845 Ellen Fletcher filed her answer to Watson's bill. She admitted the execution of the conveyances by Comer, but denied he was incompetent at the time. She admitted, too, that she did not pay to Comer money for the property conveyed to her, and that he was prompted in a great measure by regard for her to make the conveyances. She denied that Watson was a creditor of Comer; or if he was, the estate of Comer was ample to pay him and all other of his creditors, without touching the property conveyed to her. If it was not she would make no question of that property being liable for the payment of Comer's debts. That she was, however, the devisee of the whole of Comer's estate, after the payment of his debts, and the plaintiff admitted that his will was valid.

8 In March 1845 the Court made a decree in the case of Watson v. Fletcher, that the plaintiff should render *before a commissioner of the Court, an account of his administration upon the estate of Thomas R. Comer, deceased, and of all debts due to or from the estate of said Comer, and from whom and to whom due; and that the same commissioner should take and state an account of the value of the personal estate held by the defendant, and conveyed to her by the deed of the 11th of April 1844.

In pursuance of this decree, the commissioner reported in May 1845, that the personal property held by the defendant under the deed from Comer, was of the value of 308 dollars 33 cents. And he reported that by consent of parties, the other accounts directed by the decree, were reported in the case of Fletcher v. Watson.

In the case of Fletcher v. Watson, the commissioner reported a balance of 22 dollars 25 cents, due from Watson as administrator of Comer. In stating the private account between Watson and Comer, the commissioner assumed that the bond dated the 15th of October 1842, for 2795 dollars 87 cents, which was executed on a settlement of accounts between them, closed all their accounts up to that period. This bond was therefore charged as the first item in the account. There were then other credits to Watson for all payments made after the execution of the bond, for the house and lot on 14th street, and for taxes, and repairs done to the house, and moneys due to them jointly, which had been paid to Comer; and the credits to Comer were for payments made by him for repairs and moneys received by Watson. And the balance reported to be due to Watson on this account, on the 31st of December 1844, was 6911 dollars.

The plaintiff Fletcher excepted to the report of the commissioner; 1st. Because Watson was allowed a credit for payments made to Galt for the house and lot on 14th street, after the 15th of October 1842, whilst all credits to Comer prior to that period, as for instance, Garden's debt, were excluded.

9 *There were other exceptions to the omission of particular items of charge against Watson and credits to Comer, of the latter of which one was for failing to credit Comer for 1788 dollars 54 cents, paid by him for improvements and repairs to the house, and expenses of the establishment.

In June 1845, the Court recommitted the report with the exceptions to the same commissioner, with instructions to make a general and thorough re-settlement of the accounts between Watson and Comer; and that he should require Watson to state, and shew as far as practicable, the true consideration, and all the particulars which constituted the amount of Comer's bond to Watson, for 2795 dollars 87 cents, and to render an account of all partnership property, if any. And the commissioner was authorized to examine the defendant Watson upon oath touching the said accounts, if required by the plaintiff, or deemed necessary by himself.

The evidence taken when the accounts were before the commissioner, and which was in the record when the last order was made, throw suspicion over the accounts between Watson and Comer; and although it was not positively stated by any of the witnesses, that the connexion between them was for gambling purposes, yet both from the witnesses and their evidence, this was strongly to be inferred. It appeared too, that on the 15th of September 1841, Watson had received from a sale of the property of James Garden, on account of a debt due from Garden to Comer, a sum of money which he afterwards admitted to be 1065 dollars 46 cents.

When the case went before the commissioner under the order last mentioned, the examination of Watson left no doubt at all, that a gambling establishment was conducted in the upper part of the house on 14th street, and that Watson and Comer were partners in that establishment. It

10 appeared, too, that certainly many of the items of account between them was connected with that business; and the doubt was, whether all of them were not. The Court below thought they were; this Court excepted the purchase of the house and lot, and Garden's debt.

The commissioner first reported an account to shew the consideration of the bond of 2795 dollars 87 cents, and according to his statement, after crediting Comer with Garden's debt at 1065 dollars 46 cents, and also crediting him with his payments for improvements and repairs upon the house on 14th street, and also for supplies furnished the gambling establishment; and excluding the bond of 415 dollars mentioned in the plaintiff's bill, he stated the amount due from Comer to Watson on the 15th of October 1842 at 2774 dollars 6 cents. The report stated Comer's indebtedness on the 31st December 1844, at 6909 dollars 55 cents of principal, and 872 dollars 46 cents of interest.

The plaintiff, Ellen Fletcher, excepted to this report, for every charge in the account for money paid as capital or expenses for the gaming establishment; to every charge not supported by testimony other than the oath of Watson; to the due bill for 415 dollars; to all credits on account of payments to Galt, on the ground that they were covered by the bond of the 15th of October 1842; and as against that bond, she claimed a credit for Garden's debt, and some other debts which she claimed that Watson had collected.

In April 1847, the Court made another decree in these causes, by which the accounts were recommitted, with directions to the commissioner to state an account of all sums paid by Comer in his lifetime, and by Watson respectively, on account of the purchase of the house and lot on 14th street, and for repairs, taxes and other expenses thereof, and also of all sums received, expended or advanced by either for the other, in or about any bona fide dealing or transaction; omitting, however, the 11 rents of the lower part of the said house to the period of Comer's death, and all bills paid the tenant by either of the said parties for clothing furnished the other during the same period.

Upon the account in relation to the house on 14th street, the report stated that there was due to Watson, on the 15th of October 1842, the sum of 2072 dollars 22 cents, and on the 20th January 1844, there was due the sum of 5378 dollars 88 cents. And for other bona fide advances by Watson to Comer, there was due on the 1st of February 1844, 923 dollars 45 cents. There were exceptions to this report by Ellen Fletcher, but it is not necessary to state them.

In the progress of the cause, the Court, on the motion of the defendant Watson, made a decree, that, unless the plaintiff, Ellen Fletcher, should execute a bond with satisfactory security, with condition to account for the rents of the real estate conveyed to her by Comer, that the sheriff should take possession thereof as the receiver of the Court.

It is not deemed necessary to extend this statement by setting out more particularly, the items in these accounts. Those which are commented on by the Judge, are sufficiently explained in his opinion, and any further explanation of them is not necessary to a correct understanding of the principles involved in the cause.

The two causes came on to be heard together on the 30th of June 1847, when the Court decreed that the injunctions awarded the parties, should be dissolved; the order for the appointment of a receiver should be set aside; and the bills of the plaintiffs, respectively, should be dismissed without costs. From this decree, the plaintiffs in the causes, respectively, applied to this Court for an appeal which was allowed.

Stanard & Bouldin for Watson, and Lyons for Fletcher, submitted the causes.

12 *BALDWIN, J. In these causes it appears from the record that Watson and Comer, gamblers by profession, were associated several years in one or more co-partnerships for gaming purposes, during which others were connected with them, from time to time, as sub-partners. The particular partnership out of which this controversy has arisen existed early in the year 1841, and perhaps previously, and continued until Comer's death in the month of April 1844. The information which we have of the operations of this concern, is mainly in regard to an establishment on 14th street in Richmond, where a faro bank, with its appurtenances, was kept, in a house purchased by Watson & Comer from Galt, on the 1st of February 1841, at the price of $8000, of which one third was to be paid in cash and the residue in two equal annual instalments. At the date of this contract the house and lot was conveyed by the vendor to the purchasers jointly, and the deferred instalments were secured by the joint bonds of the latter, and a deed of trust which they gave upon the property.

Of the terms of this gaming partnership we have but little reliable or distinct information. It does not appear that there was any written partnership agreement, or that there were any partnership books, or that any other means now accessible have been preserved, of ascertaining the capital stock invested in the business, or its expenses, profits and losses, or the advances made to or receipts from the concern, by the respective partners, or to or from each other upon the faith of the partnership funds or resources. In short, there are no adequate materials for a settlement and adjustment of the partnership affairs for the purpose of ascertaining any supposed rights or interests of the parties litigant therein, or their respective claims against each other arising therefrom, if such settlement and adjustment were at all allowable in a court of justice.

13 *But it is clear that a Court of equity will not lend its aid for such a purpose, nor give relief to either partner against the other, founded upon transactions arising out of their immoral and unlawful partnership, whether for profits, losses, expenses, contribution or reimbursement. I am not aware of any reported case in relation to a gambling partnership; but the principle is a general one in reference to partnerships prohibited by law or for an unlawful purpose; and prevails at law as well as in equity. Coll. Part. 50, ed. of 1848; Gow. Part. 119; 1 Bac. Abr. 109, n. Assump. A, ed. of 1846; Aubert v. Maze, 2 Bos. & Pul. 371; Holman v. Johnson, Cowp. R. 343; Watson Part. 5, 7; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 John. R. 438, 486, 489; Mitchell v. Cockburn, 2 H. Bl. 379; Knowles v. Haughton, 11 Ves. R. 168. And it is applicable with peculiar force to such an association as the one developed in this controversy, the object of which was a tissue of offences, and a course of conduct denounced, restrained and severely punished by law; and moreover not only contrary to good morals, but highly prejudicial to the public interests. There is in the administration of justice but one rational and politic treatment of the mutual claims of such associates, thus springing out of their spoliations upon society, and that is, to refuse them all aid in the prosecution of their respective demands of that nature against each other. Of this the parties litigant and their counsel in the Court below were doubtless apprised, and accordingly we find that the true character of the association and of its operations is withheld from the pleadings; but it is sufficiently exposed by the evidence.

Comer, at his death, left a will, by which he gave all his estate, real and personal, to Ellen Fletcher, a woman who had lived with him a number of years in a state of illicit intercourse, charged, however, with the payment of his debts, and directing 14 that his other *property should be sold before the house and lot where he resided on L street. The will was admitted to probat, and the executor named therein declining to take upon himself the burthen thereof, Watson qualified as administrator with the will annexed, and took possession of the decedent's papers. The testator, however, after the making of his will, and shortly before his death, executed deeds to Fletcher, by which he conveyed to her the house and lot on L street, and his furniture therein.

Watson, soon after his qualification as administrator, filed his bill in that character, and also in his individual right, against Fletcher, in which he alleged himself to be a creditor of his testator's estate to a large amount, specifying his claims to be, 1, Comer's moiety of the purchase money of the house and lot on 14th street, the whole of which he charged that he had himself paid, and for which moiety he represented that he had an equitable lien on Comer's undivided moiety of that property, the sufficiency of which for his reimbursement he considered very doubtful; 2, the sum of 415 dollars, with interest from the 18th of April 1840; 3, the sum of 2795 dollars 87 cents, with interest from the 15th of October 1842; 4, about 1090 dollars for money loaned to or paid for him. For all these claims he alleged that he had vouchers, but these were not exhibited with the will. He represented that, being the personal representative of Comer, he could not sue himself, and thus place his debts on the footing of judgments, as other creditors differently situated might do. He further represented the insufficiency of assets, and charged that Comer, at the time of executing the deeds above mentioned, was, from the disordered state of his mind, incapable of contracting, and that the deeds were without consideration and fraudulent. And he prayed an injunction to prevent the defendant from disposing of the property conveyed, and 15 that the deeds *might be declared null and void, and the property to belong to his testator's estate, and subject to the payment of his debts.

We need not consider whether the provision in Comer's will for the payment of debts was a mere charge upon his estate for that purpose, with a direction as to the order in which that charge should be enforced; or a devise of lands to be sold for the same purpose, to be executed under our statute, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 104, § 52, p. 388, by his personal representative. Watson himself seems to have thought, that as administrator, with the will annexed, he had authority to make sales of his testator's real estate, as well as personal, and he appears from the language of his bill to have only desired the aid of the Court to remove out of his way the deeds to Fletcher, which invested her with the title to the property thereby conveyed, and operated pro tanto as a revocation of the charge for payment of debts. And we find that a few days after filing his bill and obtaining his injunction, he advertised a sale of Comer's undivided moiety of the house on 14th street, and of the furniture therein. In this he acted improperly and oppressively. Having invoked the jurisdiction of the Court to establish the validity of his claims as creditor, and the invalidity of the conveyances to Fletcher, he thereby placed his whole trust and authority under the control and direction of the Court, and it was an abuse of his fiduciary relation to proceed to sell an important portion of the real estate, before an adjudication could be had of the matters in controversy between him and the only object of his testator's bounty. To arrest the contemplated sale, Fletcher filed her bill, and the injunction which she prayed was granted. Her bill, and her answer subsequently filed to Watson's bill, put in issue the justice of his demands, and assert that nothing will be found due to him upon a fair settlement before a commissioner of the Court.

16 *Under interlocutory decrees for accounts, several settlements thereof were made by a commissioner of the Court, and numerous depositions and vouchers were returned and filed.

It appears from the evidence that the deeds to Fletcher were executed by Comer when he was in due possession of his mental faculties, and were not obtained from him by any fraud or duress, but were his own spontaneous acts. They were not made, it is true, for the pecuniary considerations expressed to have been paid by her, and therefore stand in relation to creditors, as she admits in her answer, merely upon the footing of voluntary conveyances. But they are not the less obligatory from that circumstance upon the representatives of the grantor, and are good against them both at law and in equity, notwithstanding the character of the cohabitation between the parties. A bond or other instrument for the consideration upon its face of future cohabitation is doubtless unlawful and void, but not where the consideration expressed is for past cohabitation, for that is not incompatible with a motive of honour and duty, Newl. Cont. 488, and serves only to place it upon the footing of a voluntary deed. And though equity has, on the ground of fraud, enquired into the consideration of, and given relief against, securities obtained by the arts of common prostitutes, yet a great Judge has held that the cases which have determined against securities given to common prostitutes, went upon the circumstance of the securities being given previous to the cohabitation, which being turpis in its nature, the Court had relieved against them; but that there was no principle of equity which says that a man may not give a voluntary bond to a common prostitute, and that it would be going but a little further to say he could not give her money without being liable to be called upon for it. Hill v. Spencer, Ambl. R. 641. In the present case, 17 however, *there is no proof, nor even allegation, that the grantee was a common strumpet, nor any reason to believe that the grantor was influenced by any other motive than a sentiment of attachment for her, and a desire in his last illness, and in view of approaching death, to secure to her some provision for her future maintenance. And, in fact, a successful impeachment of the deeds, upon any ground, could avail Watson nothing in this controversy; for if the deeds were null and void, the will devising the estate to Fletcher, and which has been admitted to probat, would still remain; and no one supposes that could ever have been impeached, whatever might have been the want or turpitude of consideration.

The most important of Watson's claims against his testator's estate, is that for contribution on account of the purchase money of the house and lot on 14th street. The evidence is satisfactory to shew that the whole amount of the purchase money has been paid by Watson, and there is no reason to believe that his payments thereof were not made out of his individual resources. On the contrary, the relative pecuniary condition of the two persons, and the cotemporary declarations of Comer, warrant the conclusion that he contributed nothing himself, directly or indirectly, on that score. Watson is therefore entitled to the reimbursement sought by him on this head, and to an equitable security therefor upon Comer's undivided moiety of the property, unless, indeed, his demand can be repelled, as falling within the influence of the unlawful gambling partnership which existed between them.

There is no proof that this property formed any part of the partnership funds, or that it was purchased for a gambling establishment, though the circumstances of the case seem to indicate it as probable that the parties, at the time of their purchase, contemplated the use of *it by themselves for gaming purposes. It was a joint purchase in fee by these persons, upon the strength of their individual resources and credit, of real estate, to be held by them and their representative in perpetuity, or until alienation; and the temporary abuse of it by gaming operations could stamp no permanent unlawful character upon the property. The contract with the vendor was perfectly lawful; each of the joint vendees was liable to him for the whole purchase money; from that liability Watson could not escape, and has fully discharged it; and his right to contribution is the legal and equitable consequence. It is not founded upon or derived through the unlawful partnership, but springs from a transaction collateral thereto, though it may have been connected therewith; and in such cases I take the true principle to be, that the claim to contribution or reimbursement cannot be repelled. See Gow. Part. 109; Toler v. Armstrong, 4 Wash. C. C. R. 297; 11 Wheat. R. 258.

Watson's claim to a debt, as due him from his testator, of 2795 dollars 87 cents, with interest from the 15th of October 1842, stands upon a different footing. His bill is silent as to the consideration and nature of that debt. But his answer to Fletcher's bill states it to be due by a bond, of the amount and date just mentioned, executed to him by Comer, on a settlement of all accounts between them, except 415 dollars, (mentioned in his bill,) for which Comer had previously to wit, on the 18th of October 1840, given him his obligation (a due bill under seal). By the interlocutory decree of June 1845, recommitting a report which had been returned by the commissioner, with the exceptions thereto, for a general and thorough resettlement of the accounts between Watson and Comer, an enquiry was directed as to the consideration of the bond for 2795 dollars 87 cents, with authority for Watson's examination upon oath.

19 *The direction of this enquiry was perfectly proper, for obvious reasons. There was at least a prima facie repugnancy between the execution of that bond, upon a settlement between the parties of their accounts, on the 15th of October 1842, and Watson's claim for a moiety of the whole amount of the purchase money of the house and lot; it appearing from his vouchers that the cash payment was made by him in February 1841. There was, when the enquiry was directed, evidence in the record disclosing the gambling partnership, and in relation to its operations, and mutual claims of the parties litigant arising therefrom. It was a duty which the Court owed to itself and the public, to sift these transactions thoroughly, in order to repel all efforts to make it the instrument of enforcing or relieving against the turpis contractus, and its consequences, at the instance of either of the parties, standing as they did in pari delicto. This was emphatically so when the personal representative, with his decedent's papers in possession, was seeking to charge his estate with a heavy debt as due upon settlement, without any proof or even suggestion of the nature of the dealings upon which it was founded. The enquiry, therefore, was warranted by the evidence, and, under the circumstances, it would be idle to consider whether it was covered by the pleadings. A reference to them, however, will serve to shew that the substantial controversy between the parties was, whether Watson was a creditor (and of course a lawful creditor), of Comer, and if so, to what amount.

The result of the enquiry directed into the consideration of the bond was, that, according to Watson's own shewing before the commissioner, it embraced Comer's moiety of the cash payment for the house and lot on 14th street, and numerous items of account arising out of the operations of the gaming establishment. It was therefore disregarded in the resettlement by the commissioner, and also in his final report; and the accounts restated as if it had never been executed.

20 *The claim of Watson in his bill for a debt of about 1000 dollars, as due to him from his testator, "for money loaned to him or paid for him," falls into the consideration of the unliquidated matters of account, exclusive of the purchase money of the house and lot.

These unliquidated matters of account, it is obvious, have originated to a great extent, if not entirely, out of the relation between Watson and Comer as partners in the gambling concern; and the difficulty is in ascertaining how far, if at all, they can be treated as individual transactions between them, which would not properly belong to a settlement of the partnership affairs, if that were allowable.

Such of them as consist of bills paid for supplies of provisions and liquors for the comfort and refreshment of gaming guests, or for furniture and other articles purchased for the concern, or of collections of debts due the partnership, are upon their face of such a nature as to condemn and expunge themselves from the controversy.

The debits and credits claimed for bills paid to mechanics for the fitting up, reparation and improvement of the house and lot while used as a gaming establishment; and for payments during the same period, of taxes, insurance and the like; and for collections of rents of a part of the building occupied by tenants, require more consideration. If these items could be referred exclusively to the joint ownership of the property in fee, and its permanent advantage—if the expenditures were such as would have been equally incurred by joint owners unconnected as gambling partners—if the payments were made out of their respective individual means, and not out of the capital, profits or funds of the partnership—if the rents were applied to their individual, and not to their partnership purposes; in a word, if their expenditures upon and receipts from the property appeared to be separate and distinct from their gambling op-

21 erations, *and, so, unaffected and untainted by the turpitude of their temporary association, I would think that such matters of account would be proper for adjustment by the Court. But I do not so understand the evidence. The house, though owned jointly, was devoted during the partnership to the purposes of the concern; the use of it for that period may be regarded as part of their stock in trade; and its revenues and charges were blended indiscriminately with the partnership affairs. It is impossible now to separate them; that could not be done, if at all, without a settlement of the gambling partnership, including its capital stocks, profits and disbursements; even if the Court could lend its authority for such a purpose.

The items for moneys loaned or advanced by one partner to the other, stand upon the like footing. It does not appear from any distinct or reliable evidence, that the sums reported by the commissioner on this score were derived from individual funds, or designed for other than partnership objects. Indeed, it appears from Watson's examination before the commissioner, that a sum corresponding with that claimed by Watson, in his bill, "as loaned to Comer, or paid for him," was sent to Comer by a servant, to pay mechanics' bills, and buy furniture; and that the 500 dollars per check, claimed before the commissioner, was furnished for the same purpose. The further sum, it is true, reported by the commissioner per note for 600 dollars to Tate, is stated by Watson, in his examination, to have been a loan to Comer for his own purposes; and the answers of a party to interrogatories upon such an examination are doubtless evidence for him, to the same effect as a responsive answer to a bill, but liable to discredit in like manner; and no one can read the examination before the commissioner, without agreeing with the Chancellor, that its statements in support of Watson's pretensions, are entitled to but little weight.

22 It is to be remarked, also, *that the form of the transaction as stated, a blank endorsement for raising money, left by the absent with the resident partner, indicates an advance to the firm rather than a loan to the individual. And that such was the fact, is shewn by Watson's own statement of the items of the settlement of the 15th of October 1842, when Comer's bond for 2795 dollars 87 cents was executed; in which Comer is debited with only a moiety on account of the note to Tate, and with a moiety only of the 1000 dollars per servant, and of the 500 dollars per check; and credited with a moiety of a large amount of disbursements in payment of mechanics' and other bills.

Of the unliquidated matters of account between the parties, there remains only to be noticed, the credit to Comer, reported by the commissioner, of 1065 dollars 46 cents, on account of the debt from Garden. That debt appears from the evidence, and is admitted by Watson, to have been due to Comer individually, and the sum credited was furnished by Watson, as the true amount for which he was accountable. It may be doubted whether the credit is not short of the proper sum; but the materials for correcting it, if wrong, are not in the record, and there appears no sufficient reason for disturbing it.

The claim of Watson in his bill for a debt of 415 dollars, as due him from Comer, with interest from the 18th of April 1840, without explanation of its consideration or nature, appears from the voucher subsequently filed, to be evidenced by the due bill under seal of that amount and date. It is therefore not embraced by the period for which the accounts between the partners have been reported by the commissioner, commencing in February 1841. And yet, there is evidence that they were gambling partners during several years previous to that date, and of course, at and before the date of the due bill; and of outstand-

23 ing gaming debts due them, *and collections on account of them, made by the partners respectively in the year 1839. And there is no evidence of any legitimate business transactions between them prior to the execution of the due bill. The presumption of law from a due bill under seal, is that it was given for a true and lawful consideration; but in this case, the presumption of fact, under the circumstances, is the other way. And the claim, with others, proved to have sprung ex turpe causa, is preferred in a Court of equity, by a fiduciary, in possession of his decedent's papers, and seeking to subject the estate which he represents, without evidence, or even suggestion, of the consideration upon which it is founded. I think it ought not to be sustained.

The foregoing views dispose of all the matters of controversy between the parties down to the time of Comer's death; and the result of them, if correct, is to reject all the items of debit and credit reported by the commissioner, until that period, except the debits in favour of Watson, on account of his payments of the purchase money of the house and lot on 14th street, and the credit in favour of Comer, on account of Garden's debt.

I think, therefore, that the decree of the Chancellor ought to be reversed, and the injunctions which had been granted to the parties respectively, and the order for the appointment of a receiver, reinstated; that the accounts between the parties down to the time of Comer's death, should be recommitted and reformed as above designated; that the administration account ought also to be recommitted and reformed, and continued so as to exclude all credits to the administrator for costs and counsel fees in these suits, and add all proper debits against him for debts due the estate which he has collected, or ought to have collected; and on account of the rents of the house and lot on 14th street, which have accrued since Comer's death, with the proper 24 *deductions for repairs, taxes, insurance and the like; that the whole of the furniture in the house on 14th street, ought to be sold under the direction of the Court, and a moiety of the nett proceeds paid to Watson, and the other moiety carried into the administration account to the credit of the estate. That furniture was no doubt purchased for the gambling establishment; but it does not fall within the principles above indicated; for Comer's undivided moiety thereof having come to the hands of Watson as his personal representative, it would not be competent for the latter to deny, on any such ground, the title of his testator; and in fact, he has not done so, but has held and treated the same as belonging to the estate. He was wrong, however, in the attempt to sell Comer's undivided moiety of the furniture, the proper course in such cases of joint ownership of such property being to sell the whole, and divide the proceeds.

I am further of opinion that the creditors of Comer's estate ought to be convened before the commissioner, by a public notice to come in and assert and prove their demands. This is proper in order to close the administration, and to the due disposition and application of the assets legal and equitable. After the balance of principal money and interest due to Watson, shall have been ascertained, as also the sums due to other creditors, the Court should proceed according to the rules of equity, observing due priorities, to charge the same upon the assets legal and equitable, and to a final decree according to the rights of the parties.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Judge Baldwin.

The following was the decree of the Court:

The Court is of opinion, that the decree is erroneous, and ought to be reversed and annulled, and the injunctions
25 *which had been granted to the parties respectively, and the order of the 27th of June 1846, for the appointment of a receiver, reinstated; that the accounts between the parties down to the time of Comer's death, should be recommitted and reformed, by rejecting all the items of debit and credit reported by the commissioner until that period, except the debits in favour of Watson on account of his payments of the purchase money of the house and lot on 14th street, and the credit in favour of Comer on account of Garden's debt; that the administration account ought also to be recommitted and reformed, and continued, so as to exclude all credits to the administrator for costs and counsel fees in these suits; and add all proper debits against him for debts due the estate which he has collected, or ought to have collected, and on account of the rents of the house and lot on 14th street, which have accrued since Comer's death, with the proper deductions for repairs, taxes, insurance and the like; that the whole of the furniture in the house on 14th street, ought to be sold under the direction of the Court, and a moiety of the net proceeds paid to Watson, and the other moiety carried into the administration account to the credit of the estate; that the creditors of Comer's estate ought to be convened before the commissioner, by a public notice, to come in and assert, and prove their demands; and that after the balance of principal money and interest to Watson, shall have been ascertained, as also the sums due to other creditors, the Court should proceed, according to the rules of equity, and observing due priorities, to charge the same upon the assets, legal and equitable, and to a final decree, according to the rights of the parties. It is, therefore, adjudged, ordered and decreed that the said decree of the Chancery court be reversed and annulled, with costs to the appellants respectively; and that these causes be remanded to the Chancery court, to be proceeded in according to the principles above declared.

26 *Clough & c. v. Thompson.

April Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent, CABELL, P.)

1. Oath of Insolvency—Property Vests in Sheriff—Right of Sheriff.—Upon taking the oath of insolvency all the property and rights of the insolvent debtor are vested in the sheriff, who, as representing the creditor, is entitled to assert the legal and equitable rights of the creditor, and to set aside fraudulent conveyances of the insolvent, and recover the property for the benefit of the creditor.
2. Same—Property in Possession of Third Person.—The Oath of Insolvency—Property Vests in Sheriff—Right of Sheriff to Sue for.—For the proposition that, upon taking the oath of insolvency all the property law does not permit a sale of the goods, chattels or estates of an insolvent debtor in the possession of a third person, until the same shall have been recovered in the mode prescribed by the statute.

3. Same—Sale of Property by Sheriff—Incumbrances.—

The sheriff, who is a trustee for all who are interested in the estate of an insolvent debtor, is not justified in selling the interest of the debtor in the estate surrendered by the schedule or vested by law in the sheriff, when, owing to alleged incumbrances, the validity of which is controverted, or the extent thereof is unascertained and uncertain, the property is not in a condition to be disposed of for its fair value.

4. Same—Real Estate—In Whom Title Vests.—

The real estate of an insolvent debtor vests in the sheriff of the counties in which it lies; and a sale thereof by the sheriff of the county in which the oath of insolvency is taken by the debtor, is without authority and void.

5. Same—Property Not in Possession of Sheriff—Sale—

Purchaser.—Debts due to the insolvent debtor, and slaves and other personal property not in the possession of the sheriff, or which is in such a condition that he cannot take possession without any process, cannot be sold by him so as to vest the legal title in the purchaser.

6. Same—Sale of Property in Schedule—Effect upon

Purchaser.†—Where a variety of property is embraced in a schedule, a sale, not of the property specifically, but of the schedule itself, is a violation of duty on the part of the sheriff; and the purchaser at such a sale, if he acquired the legal title, would, in a Court of equity, be treated as a trustee for the benefit of those interested.

7. Fraudulent Conveyances—Bill to Set Aside—Parties.‡

†Same—Sale of Property in Schedule—Liability of Purchaser.—For the proposition that where the sheriff sells the property of the insolvent embraced in the schedule and not specifically, the purchaser will be liable as trustee for the benefit of those interested, the principal case is cited and followed in Penn v. Spencer, 17 Gratt. 94.

‡Fraudulent Conveyances—Bill to Set Aside—Parties.

—For the proposition that, in a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance the trustee in the deed is a necessary party, the principal case is cited and approved in Fisher v. Dickenson, 84 Va. 329, 4 S. E. Rep. 737; foot-note to Norton v. Bond, 28 Gratt. 815. See monographic note on "Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances" appended to *Cochran v. 27 *By deed bearing date the 7th day of November 1842, John C. Dickinson and Martha A. H. his wife, reciting that Dickinson was indebted to George N. Clough in the sum of 10,175 dollars 25 cents, by single bill of that date, payable on demand, which he was desirous to secure, conveyed to William T. Dickinson, Burwell B. Dickinson, and Leonard J. Clough, a tract of land in the county of Hanover, a tract lying partly in Caroline and partly in Spotsylvania, a moiety of a tract in the county of Caroline, a number of slaves by name, with their future increase; horses, mules, cattle, sheep, hogs, wagons, carts, all his plantation utensils of every description; all his household and kitchen furniture, including a clock; his whole crop of tobacco, corn, fodder, shucks, straw and hay; also five shares of Louisa railroad stock; blacksmith tools, two stills, a carriage, his interest in the life estate of Mrs. Sarah Ashley in a tract of land called Ashley's, and all debts then due, or which might thereafter become due to him, either by bond, bill, note or account, in trust that said Dickinson and wife should be permitted to remain in possession of the property until default should be made in the payment of the said sum of 10,175 dollars 25 cents, with the interest thereon accruing, in whole or in part; and then upon the further trust that the trustees, or either of them, should, whenever they or either of them might think best for the interest of the parties, or the said George N. Clough, his heirs or assigns, might direct, proceed to sell the said property, or so much thereof as might be necessary to pay off the said sum of 10,175 dollars 25 cents, and interest, for cash, upon thirty days notice in one of the newspapers in Richmond and in the neighbourhood of such sale; and out of the proceeds of such sale should, after paying the expenses thereof, pay to the said George N. Clough the aforesaid sum of 10,175 dollars 25 cents, with the interest thereon accruing; and the balance, if any, *should pay to the said

28 Dickinson, his heirs or assigns. This deed was signed by Dickinson and wife and the trustees, and was duly admitted to record in the clerk's office of the County court of Hanover, as to Dickinson and wife, on the 15th of November 1842. On a part of the property embraced in this deed a previous deed of trust had been executed to secure a debt due to William Hancock.

On the 10th of December 1842 Dickinson confessed judgments in six several actions at law depending against him in the Circuit court of Hanover county, and being prayed in custody he took the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors, and was discharged. His schedule then delivered referred to his interest in two deeds of trust from John Clough, sr., dated in November 1819 and September 1822; and also all the property mentioned in two deeds of trust from himself and wife, one for the benefit of William Hancock and the other for the benefit of George N. Clough, subject to any liens created by said deeds; and he said that he had no other property, real or personal.

In February 1843 the sheriff of Hanover offered the said schedule at public auction for cash, when it was purchased by Charles Thompson for 300 dollars; and the sheriff executed a paper bearing date the 28th of February, which was intended to be a deed, and was acknowledged and admitted to record as a deed, conveying the said schedule to Thompson: the paper was, however, without a seal.

About the time of the sale of the schedule by the sheriff, the trustees in the deed of the 7th of November 1842, advertised the property thereby conveyed to them for sale; and then Charles Thompson filed a bill in the Circuit court of Hanover to enjoin the sale. In his bill, after stating the foregoing facts, he charged that the deed executed to secure the sum of 10,175

29 *dollars 25 cents to George N. Clough was fraudulent and void, and intended exclusively to cheat the creditors of Dickinson, by putting his property beyond their reach, as he supposed, until he could first take the oath of insolvency, and then obtain the benefit of the bankrupt law, for which he was, at the time of the filing of the plaintiff's bill, an applicant. That the plaintiff would be able to prove from the admissions of Clough, that Dickinson owed him nothing, and that in fact Clough never did lend, and never was able to lend, to Dickinson, or otherwise fairly become his creditor for, ten thousand dollars. That Dickinson, who was the brother-in-law of Clough, had been permitted to use and consume the perishable property conveyed in the deed, and to remove the tobacco to Richmond, and sell it as his own and for his own use and benefit.

Clough, Dickinson and the trustees were made defendants, and Clough and Dickinson were called upon to disclose how, when and where the pretended debt of 10,175 dollars 25 cents was contracted; whether it was by a loan of money, or for the purchase of property; if a loan of money, whether it was lent at one time or at different times; if at one time when and where, and in what kind of money and in whose presence; if at different times to exhibit the account of it; and that Clough should be required to exhibit the evidence, if he had any, of the said debt, and especially the single bill recited in the conveyance.

The prayer of the bill was, that the trustees should be enjoined from selling the property, or any part thereof, without the order of the Court; and that the sheriff should be directed to take possession of the personal property conveyed by the deed and in the possession of Dickinson, and to sell the perishable part thereof, unless the defendants, or one of them, would enter into bond in an adequate sum, to be fixed by the 30 Court, with ample security, with condition to have *the property forthcoming to answer the decree of the Court, and to account for the hires and increase thereof. That the conveyance of the 7th of November 1842, might be declared null and void, and the property thereby conveyed delivered up to the plaintiff; and for general relief.

The injunction was granted; and it was ordered that unless the defendants, or some one or more of them, should execute a bond with sufficient security payable to the plaintiff, in the penalty of 4000 dollars, with condition to have all the personal property, or the proceeds thereof, forthcoming to answer the future order of the Court, the officer who might execute the process was directed to take all said personal property into his possession, to hire out the slaves for the balance of the year, and to make sale of the residue of said personal property on a credit of nine months, taking from the purchasers bonds, with good security; and to make report of his proceedings under the order. If the defendants should execute the bond required of them, they were to be at liberty to sell the said personal property, and the officer was authorized to take and to judge of the sufficiency of the security.

Under this order, the defendants having declined to execute the bond thereby required, the sheriff took possession of the personal property as directed, and hired out the slaves and sold the remainder.

Clough and Dickinson filed their separate answers to the bill. They both deny that the deed was fraudulent; and allege that it was executed to secure a bona fide debt due from Dickinson to Clough. Clough said that the debt secured by the deed was for money lent by Clough to Dickinson, not at one time but at various times, commencing as far back as 1822; that when such loans were made acknowledgments thereof were taken, in which the interest reserved was added. That these loans were repeated from time to time, *down to 31 the date of the deed of trust and single bill therein mentioned. That the evidences of the dealings between the parties, except the single bill, were not in his possession, but were surrendered from time to time to Dickinson. That he kept no account of the several sums lent, and of the interest thereon, and could exhibit none. He denied that he had ever admitted since 1822, that Dickinson was not indebted to him, or that Dickinson had been suffered to waste any of the property conveyed by said deed, and said that some wheat and tobacco sold by Dickinson after the trust was made, was sold on account of Clough, and for which he was ready to account.

Dickinson's answer was substantially the same.

The testimony in the cause related to the admission by Clough that Dickinson was not indebted to him; to the declarations by Dickinson after the making of the deed, and in the absence of Clough, that he was not indebted to Clough; but especially to the ability of Clough to make advances as to Dickinson to the amount of 10,000 dollars. On this point several witnesses expressed the opinion that he could not have made the advances unless he was possessed of resources of which they had not heard. To the evidence of the declarations of Dickinson, and to the opinions of the other witnesses, Clough excepted, and introduced testimony to shew his ability to make the advances.

When the cause came on to be heard, the Court below overruled the exceptions to the depositions, and made a decree wholly setting aside the deed of the 7th of November 1842, as fraudulent and void, and confirming the plaintiff's title to the property thereby conveyed, under his purchase of the schedule and conveyance to him by the sheriff, subject, however, to Mrs. Dickinson's right of dower in the land; and the sheriff was directed to transfer to him the personal property in his possession, and account 32 with him for the proceeds *of such as had been sold, and for the net hires of the slaves. From this decree Clough and Dickinson applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

R. T. Daniel and Patton, for the appellants.

Lyons and Scott, for the appellee.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that the deed of trust executed by John C. Dickinson and Martha his wife, on the 7th day of November 1842, to William T. Dickinson, Burwell B. Dickinson and Leonard J. Clough, for the benefit of George N. Clough, was made with intent to defraud the creditors of said John C. Dickinson, and as against such creditors is fraudulent and void; but that the same was good as between the parties thereto; and therefore, the decree of the Circuit court was erroneous in wholly setting aside and vacating the said deed. The Court is further of opinion, that under the act of assembly concerning executions, and for the relief of insolvent debtors, 1 Rev. Code, p. 524, all the property and rights of the insolvent debtor are vested in the sheriff, who as representing the creditor, is entitled to assert the legal and equitable rights of the creditor, and to set aside fraudulent conveyances of the insolvent, and recover the property for the benefit of the creditor.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that although the said John C. Dickinson, in the schedule subscribed and delivered by him, surrendered his equity of redemption only, in the real and personal estate described in the deeds of trust in the schedule referred to, subject to any lien created by said deeds, the sheriff claiming under the law, which for the benefit of the creditor vested in him all the property of the insolvent, had the right in a proper proceeding, to impeach said deeds or either of them, and set them aside as against the creditor, if made with intent to defraud the creditor.

33 *The Court is further of opinion, that as the law does not permit a sale of the goods, chattels or estates belonging to the debtor, and in the possession of any other person, until the same shall have been recovered in the mode prescribed; so neither is the sheriff, who is a trustee for all interested in the estate, justified in selling the interest of the debtor in the estate surrendered by the schedule or vested by law in the sheriff, when owing to alleged incumbrances, the validity of which is controverted, or the extent thereof unascertained and uncertain, the property is not in a condition to be disposed of for its fair value. The Court is further of opinion, that as by the deed of trust of the 7th November 1842, for the benefit of said George N. Clough, portions of the property thereby conveyed, are described as being situated in the counties of Caroline and Spotsylvania, the interest of the debtor in such property vested in the sheriffs of those counties respectively; and a sale made thereof by the sheriff of Hanover, was without authority and void; and as by the said deed all the personal estate of said debtor was conveyed, including amongst other things, all debts then due, or which might become due to him, such choses in action were not the proper subjects of sale; and as it does not appear that the sheriff was in possession of the slaves or other personal property, or that the same was in such a condition that he could have taken possession thereof, without any process, it would not have been competent for the sheriff to have made a valid sale thereof so as to vest in the purchaser the legal title.

The Court is further of opinion, that where, as in this case, a variety of property was embraced in the schedule; a sale, not of the property specifically, but of the schedule itself, would be a violation of duty on the part of the sheriff; and the purchaser at such a sale, if he acquired the legal title, would, in a Court of equity, 34 *be treated as a trustee for the benefit of those interested.

But it appearing in this case, that no regular conveyance has been made by the sheriff, the paper executed by him dated the 28th February 1843, not being under seal, no title to the real estate contained in the schedule has passed to the purchaser, and the title of the insolvent is still vested in the sheriffs of the counties where such property shall lie or be found. The Court is therefore of opinion, that the decree of the Circuit court was also erroneous in holding that all the title of the said John C. Dickinson to the property conveyed by the deed of trust of the 7th of November 1842, passed to the appellee, Charles Thompson, and in directing his title to be quieted, and declaring the same to be complete; and in decreeing that the sheriff should deliver over to him, the slaves and other personal property, and pay over to him the net amount of all hires of the slaves, and all money rising from the sale of the perishable property.

The Court is further of opinion, that said Circuit court, instead of proceeding to render any decree, should have required the appel-lee to amend his bill and make, as defendants to the suit, the sheriffs of Hanover, Caroline and Spotsylvania counties, the creditors of said John C. Dickinson and the persons interested in the deeds of trust in the schedule referred to. And the parties being regularly before the Court, there should have been a decree for the sale of the property belonging to the debtor, and vested in the sheriffs aforesaid; and from the proceeds arising from the sale of the property embraced in the deed for the benefit of William Hancock, the amount of his debt should have been discharged; the validity of the deed for his benefit not being impeached; and the balance, if any, arising from the sale of the property in said deed described, together with the proceeds 35 *described in the deed for the benefit of said George N. Clough, or arising from the hires, rents or profits thereof, should have been applied to the repayment of the sum of 300 dollars paid by the appellee to the sheriff at the sale of the schedule, with interest from the time of such payment, in the first place, then payment of the creditors of the said John C. Dickinson according to their legal priorities; and after satisfying the claims aforesaid, the residue, if any, should have been decreed to be paid over to the said George N. Clough.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged, that said decree be wholly reversed and annulled—that the injunction be reinstated, with costs to the appellants, and the cause remanded, with instructions to direct new parties to be made, and for further proceedings, according to the principles above declared, in order to a final decree.

April Term, 1850. Richmond.

1. Executors—Qualification—Refusal to Permit—Appeal as of Right.—To the judgment of a County court refusing to permit a person named as executor in a will, to qualify as such without giving security, an appeal demandable as of right, lies to the Circuit court.
2. Same—Bond—Necessity for—Case at Bar.—A testator appointed his wife and son executrix and executor of his will; and expressing his confidence in them, directed that they should be permitted to qualify without giving security. Some years afterwards, he added a codicil, by which he says: I further appoint J. H. ex'or to the within will, with my wife and son. HELD: J. H. is not entitled to qualify without giving security.*
3. Same—Same—Intention of Testator—Parol Evidence.—QUÆRE: If in such case parol testimony is admissible to shew the intention of the testator.

The principal case is cited in Amliss v. Williamson, 17 W. Va. 679. See generally, monographic note on "Executors and Administrators."

*Supp. Rev. Code, ch. 158, § 2, p. 216. "But where any testator or testatrix shall leave visible estate, more than sufficient to pay all his or her debts, and by his will shall direct, that his or her executors shall not be obliged to give security, in that case, no

Henry Fairfax, of Prince William county, made his will, by which, after giving small legacies to several of his children, he gave the residue of his estate to his wife for her life, and at her death, to his son John Walter and his daughter Martha Lindsay, for their lives, with remainder to their children, and cross remainders over. Among the legacies given, was one to his daughter Sarah Ann, the wife of Dr. James Hunter, of Fairfax county, of 300 dollars per annum, for her own private 37 *use during her life, and a negro girl, Mary; and after her death, the negro girl with her increase, was to go to Mrs. Hunter's children, if she had any, and if she died without children, to the children of the testator's daughter Elizabeth.

The last clause of his will was as follows:

"I hereby nominate and appoint my wife Elizabeth and my son John Walter executrix and executor; John to qualify at the age of twenty-one years. And I appoint Benjamin Johnson my trustee; and in case of the death of the said Benjamin Johnson, I appoint John P. Philips of Fauquier county, in his place, trustee of this my last will and testament. And I hereby desire that as I have implicit confidence in them, and in their prudence, and in my trustee's honesty, and the estate owing nothing more than there is ample provision made by me to pay off, and for all legacies that I have given, by interest on stocks that will be coming in every year, to pay them off, that no security shall be required from them; but if my said wife shall marry again, then I direct that she shall give sufficient security for the true performance of the trusts appertaining thereto according."

This will bears date the 21st of September 1840; and there was added to it the following codicil:

"I further appoint Dr. James Hunter, of Fairfax county, executor to the within will, with my wife and son John." This codicil bears date the 22d of September 1846.

This paper was offered for probat in the County court of Prince William, in November 1847; and there being no subscribing witnesses thereto, it was admitted to probat upon proof that it was wholly in the handwriting of the testator.

At the June term 1848, of the County court of Prince William, James Hunter, one of the executors named in the codicil of the will, moved the Court to security shall be required, unless the Court shall see cause, from their own knowledge, or the suggestions of creditors or legatees, to suspect the executors of fraud; or that the personal, as well as the real estate, by the said will devised to be sold, when the same may be subjected to the payment of debts, will not be sufficient to discharge all the debts, and shall require security, when the same shall be given before a certificate shall be granted, notwithstanding any directions to the contrary in the will."

This motion was opposed by John W. Fairfax, by his guardian ad litem, and by Martha L. Fairfax, and Benjamin Johnson the trustee; and the Court being of opinion that the said James Hunter ought not to be permitted to qualify as executor as aforesaid without giving bond and security conditioned as the law directs, overruled and rejected the motion, and refused to permit him to qualify unless he would give bond with sufficient security according to law. And from this opinion and judgment of the Court, Hunter took an appeal to the Circuit court of Prince William.

The case came on to be heard in the Circuit court of Prince William in October 1848, when in addition to the transcript of the record of the cause from the County court, the appellant Hunter introduced several witnesses, by whom the following facts were proved, viz: The testator's estate was estimated at one hundred and seventy-five or two hundred thousand dollars, of which the personal estate amounted to 120,000 dollars; and he owed few or no debts. His wife had been suffering from an attack of paralysis for three or four years before his death, and died about a month after he did, between fifty and sixty years of age. The testator's son John was, at the death of his father, a minor, but would attain twenty-one years of age in June 1849. Dr. Hunter married the testator's daughter, Sarah Ann, in 1838. When the will was written in September 1840, he and the testator were not on friendly terms, and they did not visit. Afterwards, on the illness of John Walter Fairfax, Dr. Hunter was sent for, and attended him; and subsequently, attended the daughter Martha and Mrs. Fairfax. John, after his recovery, studied medicine with Hunter, and lived in his family. Dr. Hunter was represented by the witnesses, as highly respectable, and much esteemed in 39 the county of Fairfax, where he *resided; and prudent in the management of his affairs. His circumstances were limited; his property being estimated at between five and seven thousand dollars; but he was entirely unembarrassed in his circumstances. The witnesses expressed the opinion, that he would not be able to give the security necessary to be given by an executor of the testator.

The Circuit court held, that by the true construction of the will and codicil of the testator, taken in connexion with the facts proved by the witnesses, the testator intended that the appellant, Hunter, should act as his executor in like manner, and on like terms as his wife and son, who were appointed executor and executrix, and were to qualify as such without giving security. The judgment of the County court was, therefore, reversed and annulled with costs; and the cause was remanded to said Court with instructions to permit Hunter to qualify as executor upon his executing his bond without sureties, in such sum as should be fixed by the Court, with the usual condition. From this judgment,

John W. Fairfax applied for, and obtained an appeal to this Court.

John M. Patton, jr., for the appellant.

The act Supp. Rev. Code, ch. 158, § 1, p. 215, in relation to the qualification of executors, directs that they shall give bond and security with condition for the faithful performance of their duties. To this general provision, the statute makes but one exception; and that is where the testator directs that the executor shall qualify without giving security, and the security of creditors and legatees does not, in the opinion of the Court, render security necessary. This act, too, provides that in determining whether security is necessary, the court may act on its own knowledge. The act thus gives the rule and the exception; and the party who claims the benefit of the exception must bring himself clearly within it.

40 *Let us look, then, first to the will, to see whether the appellee, Hunter, is within the exception. The will provides distinctly, that the testator's wife and son shall qualify as executrix and executor without giving security; and states the grounds on which he makes that provision; his confidence in them. The codicil certainly does not in terms, direct that Hunter shall qualify without giving security. The whole foundation of the argument in his favour, is the single word "with." The testator appoints Hunter executor of his will with his wife and son. The word is in common use, and invariably means "together," "in company." Give it that meaning here, and there is no want of sense in the sentence; nor is it inoperative. Hunter will be a joint executor with the wife and son. But to give the codicil the effect of dispensing with security on the part of Hunter, the sense of the word is not to be changed, but other words must be interpolated; and the codicil must be read as if the words "on the same terms" preceded "with." It is true that, to give meaning to a sentence which has none, or to effectuate the obvious intent of the testator as manifested by other parts of his will, words will be interpolated; yet I submit, that no authority can be found for thus amending a sentence, which, of itself, expresses a plain, sensible, operative meaning, for the purpose of giving to the testator an intent which is nowhere else discoverable in his will. And this is still less excusable when, as we see, the testator was fully informed of the necessity of expressing the intention if he entertained it, and knew well how to do it.

If, then, the will and codicil do not sustain the pretension of the appellee, is it aided by the parol evidence? I shall not enter into any minute examination of that evidence. It certainly has no direct bearing upon the question in issue; and the only use which can be made of it is as a foundation for the inferences that security; and that he was deserving of the testator's confidence. But the last inference conflicts with the first. If he was entitled to the confidence of the testator, the testator might well believe that he so possessed the confidence of others that he would find no difficulty in giving the necessary security. But I submit that such inferences are much too vague and unsatisfactory to be adopted as the basis of the Court's action; especially on a subject which the legislature has guarded with so much anxious care.

But if the parol testimony was as strong in favour of the pretension of the appellee as he could desire, I submit it could have no influence upon the judgment of the court; because it was improperly admitted in evidence. The principle is too well settled upon authority to be now a subject of discussion, that parol evidence is only admissible to explain a latent ambiguity, such as the person or thing intended, or the circumstances of the testator at the time the will was made. Here, there is no latent ambiguity in this codicil; and the testimony has no relation to the circumstances of the testator when the codicil was written. I refer the court for the law on this subject, to Jarm. on Wills 349, 382; 1 Greenl. Evi. 410, note 415, 418, 419; Puller's ex'or v. Puller, 3 Rand. 88; Miars v. Bedgood, 9 Leigh 361, 368, 373; 2 Lomax Ex'ors 11.

I submit, in conclusion, that the Circuit court had no authority to revise the judgment of the county court. The act which has been before cited, provides that the probat court may act upon its own knowledge in refusing to permit an executor to qualify without giving security, where the testator has dispensed with it. Therefore, even if the testator had directed that Hunter should be permitted to qualify without giving security, it was competent for the County court to refuse the permission; and that upon grounds derived from 42 their own *knowledge. In this case, the ground of the refusal is not stated upon the record; and as it is the judgment of a Court having jurisdiction of the subject, that judgment will be presumed to be right.

Robinson, for the appellee.

The statute gives the absolute right of appeal in such cases as this from the County to the Circuit court. The case goes up precisely as it was in the County court; and the Circuit court may pass upon all matters of law and fact involved in the cause. It is against all the analogies of the law, to suppose that it is intended the judgment of the County court shall be final. At least in such cases, the record should shew that the grounds of the judgment were such as cannot be reviewed by the appellate tribunal.

There is no question that the statute does authorize a testator to direct that his executor shall qualify without giving security. And if this testator has so directed, then there is just as little question that under the facts of this case, the executor should have been permitted to qualify without security: the estate is ample; the executor, Hunter, is a man of high character, and no fraud in him, or danger to creditors or legatees, is suggested on the record.

There is no doubt either, that the testator directs that his widow and son shall be permitted to qualify without giving security. Now the statute obviously contemplates a general authority by the testator to his executors to qualify without security. The testator may possibly make a distinction between the executors; but this is not to be presumed, and is not probable.

The office of a codicil is not to set aside the will, but to vary or explain it; and the will is not to be disturbed further than is absolutely necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the codicil. Jarm. on Wills

160. When the will of Henry Fairfax
43 was made, his wife *and son were appointed executrix and executor thereof.

Afterwards, by a codicil, the testator appointed Hunter an executor with his wife and son. This provision of the codicil is to be read as if it was introduced in the clause of the will appointing executors. Read the two clauses thus together, and without adding or taking away a word, it is obvious that the provision, as to the security, applies to all the executors.

No case precisely like this in its facts, is to be found in the English books; but it is easy to find cases which are similar in principle. Thus, in Jarm. on Wills 161, the case is given of a devise to A, subject to a rent charged to B; and a revocation by a codicil, of the devise to A, and the devise thereof to another without noticing the rent charge: And it was held that the second devisee took the land subject to the rent charge. There, though nothing was said in the codicil about the rent charge, yet it was held to exist as to the new devise. So here, the appointment of a new executor by the codicil, is to be considered as made in pursuance of the provisions of the will. So where a legacy was given upon certain contingencies, and by a codicil a legacy was given "in addition," it was held to be subject to the same contingencies. Jarm. on Wills 165.

In the case before the Court the word "further" is used, which is in effect the same as the words "in addition;" and if "further" had been substituted for these words in the case referred to, the construction of the clause would have been the same. But the words "with my wife and son" must necessarily be construed to mean on the same terms.

So where, by a codicil, a trustee was appointed in place of one named in the will who had a legacy fixed on land, it was held that the substituted trustee took in the same way. Jarm. on Wills 168. Suppose Hunter 44 had been appointed in the place of the testator's wife and son; under the principle of this last case, the *provision as to security would certainly apply; and is a distinction to be made because he is appointed with them?

This construction of the codicil is sustained by the parol evidence, which goes strongly to shew that the testator intended Hunter to qualify without giving security. With this intention he wrote the codicil, and did not doubt, plain man as he was, when he directed that Hunter should qualify with his wife and son, that he would be understood to say that he should qualify in the same way. We see that when he wanted to provide that his wife should give security in the event of her marriage, he directed it in explicit terms.

The parol testimony introduced in this case is not liable to the objection made to its competency. It is not offered to contradict the will, but to shew the circumstances, situation and relations of the parties, so as to explain what the testator meant by the words which he used; and for this purpose it was admissible. Kennon v. M'Roberts, 1 Wash. 96; Shelton v. Shelton, Id. 53; Hamletts v. Hamlett's ex'or, 12 Leigh 350; Trent v. Trent, Gilm. 174; Powell on Dev. 488-9.

Whatever may be the result in this case, the appellee should not be subjected to costs; they should be paid out of the estate. Grant v. Leslie, 1 Eng. Eccl. R. 373; Dean v. Russel, Id. 411, in note.

John M. Patton, sr., in reply.

As to the costs of this Court there can be no question, as the statute allows no discretion. This, too, is the case as to the costs of the Circuit court; and as to those of the County court they are de minimis.

The question in this case is, whether the executor shall be permitted to qualify without giving security. This is a mere personal privilege. The whole object is to get the commissions; for the wife was dead; the whole estate is given to the son and 45 daughter; the son *would be of age within six months, and qualified as executor about the time the appeal in the case was allowed. It is therefore a personal matter entirely; and if the appellee shall fail in his object, it is entirely proper that he shall pay the costs of the proceeding.

But let us come to the consideration of the case. First, then, Was the judgment of the County court open to revision by the Circuit court. This is not a question about the probat of a will, or the right of an executor to qualify; the will has been admitted to probat without question, and nobody disputes the right of Hunter to qualify as executor. If, therefore, the Court had stated the ground of its judgment, it is questionable whether, under the statute, there was an absolute right of appeal. But however that be, it is clear that where a case is submitted to the discretion of the justices upon grounds peculiar to themselves, there can be no appeal from their judgment; especially when the ground of their judgment is not stated on the record. By the act Supp. Rev. Code, p. 216, § 2, the Court is authorized, when the testator directs it, to allow an executor to qualify without giving security, unless they shall see cause from their own knowledge or the suggestion of creditors or legatees to suspect fraud. Suppose the order of the Court had said, that from their own knowledge, or from the suggestion of creditors or legatees, they suspected fraud; would that be a matter, either of law or fact, that an appellate Court could review? Not as a matter of law, certainly; for the act authorizes it; not of fact, because, from the nature of the case, it is impossible to review it. Could you interrogate the Judge of the probat Court as to the ground of his suspicions; and then consider whether the ground is sufficient to warrant the suspicion?

If such a judgment, thus stating the grounds on which it is made, is not examinable by an appellate Court, then is not

46 this general judgment equally beyond *the review of such a Court? Every Court having jurisdiction of a subject must be presumed to have acted correctly. This has been lately decided by this Court in a very strong case. Carpenter v. Utz, 4 Gratt. 270. Then the judgment of the County court in this case must be presumed to be correct, if there be any ground out of the will, and resting in the knowledge of that Court, upon which it may be sustained. It is said that there is no suggestion of fraud. Why was there not a suggestion that there was no fraud? Here is a judgment; and there is a ground not negatived which will sustain the judgment; and therefore it must be sustained.

Our law has carefully provided against the dilapidation of the estates of cestuis que trust by trustees. The act Supp. Rev. Code, p. 115, § 1, requires all executors to give security. The second section authorizes an exemption where the testator directs it, provided creditors and legatees are not thereby endangered. The counsel on the other side suggests that the law does not provide for exempting some of the executors without the others; but he admits the testator may do this. He seems to infer that where some are exempted, the others will be considered as exempted, unless it clearly appears that the testator did not so intend. I have referred to our statute to shew that such exemption should be made by clear provision of the will, and not left as a matter of inference or doubt. Here we are considering a case on a will which appoints Hunter executor, without exempting him from the obligation to give security, and it is argued that he is exempted because others are exempted. But, on the contrary, does not the maxim apply, expressio unius est exclusio alterius?

Counsel seems to suppose that great aid to his case is derived from the fact that the appointment of Hunter is by a codicil, and that of the other executors is by 47 *the will. I concur in the principle which he has stated: a codicil is only to add to or vary the will. When it adds to the will, each is to be construed separately. When it varies the will, they are to be construed together, so as to give full effect to the codicil; but it is not to disturb the will further than is necessary to give it full effect. Then what is the effect of this codicil? It does not disturb the appointment of executors made by the will, but only adds another. The first are exempted by the will from the obligation to give security; the codicil does not exempt the last from this obligation.

It is said that the testator was a plain man, and wrote the codicil. That is true; and he wrote the will too; and that was before him at the moment when he wrote the codicil; and this Court is asked to say, that though he has not used a word that is not natural on our construction, yet he meant something else; and to make out this something, other words are to be added.

It is said the word "further" is an important word in this codicil. Why, the will had been made by the testator; and if he was to do any thing more he must go further; and he uses exactly the language which would have been proper if he had made this codicil the last clause of his will, where it must be considered to be, if it is read with the will. So, too, the words, "with my wife and son," are relied on to sustain the pretension of the appellee. The testator had before appointed them, and did not intend to revoke their appointment, but to appoint Hunter to be an executor with them. The argument is just as strong to prove that the testator revoked the exemption as to the wife and son, as it is to prove that he exempted Hunter.

There is no doubt that the testator might have exempted Hunter from the obligation to give security; nobody questions that;

48 and if he had written the codicil *as the counsel for the appellee reads it, it would have had that effect. The counsel assumes the testator intended to exempt the appellee, and then reads to effect it; though the provision as to the wife and son is founded on the expressed confidence of the testator in them, and though no such confidence in Hunter is expressed. And indeed the reading of the counsel would effect the same object, though the words "further" and "with my wife and son," had been omitted.

It is said that the reasoning of the counsel is sustained by cases very analogous in principle to this; and we are referred to Jarm. on Wills 161, 165, 168. These authorities only carry out the principle that the will is not revoked further than is necessary to give full effect to the codicil. If the question before us was, whether the exemption in favour of the wife and son had been revoked, these cases would have been apposite to repel such a conclusion; but an examination of them will shew that they have no bearing upon the question before the Court.

But there are other analogies, which I submit are much more apposite to this case. On the question, whether legacies substituted by codicil for legacies in a will, were to be free from legacy duties, because the first were, it is held that it must clearly appear that such was the intention of the testator. Jarm. on Wills 167. May I not say that here are cases apposite and a fortiori? We have not merely substituted legacies, but a provision for a third person; not a case in which we are to look for the intention of the testator, but in which we have the statute which expressly declares that the executor shall give security, unless he is expressly exempted.

There is no case in which parol evidence has been admitted to prove what the testator intended, where there was no ambiguity in what was said, or as to the person or thing spoken of. Some dicta may have gone further, but no respectable authority does. The strongest case is Miars v. Bedgood, 9 Leigh 361; and yet there the evidence was excluded. The dissenting Judges rested on the ground that there was an ambiguity, and on that ground were for admitting the evidence. In Puller v. Puller, 3 Rand. 88, all the Judges said that the testimony was inadmissible to shew what the testator meant by the phrase "used," except to shew what was the condition of the estate. These cases are in entire accordance with the third proposition of Wigram on Wills, p. 14. In conclusion, I refer to this same work, p. 29, 30, 31, 32, 43, 44, 48, 50, 51.

DANIEL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

By the 30th section of the act establishing the Circuit Superior courts of law and chancery, it is declared that appeals to the said Courts shall be demandable as of right from sentences or orders of the County courts, in controversies concerning the probat of wills and letters of administration. And by the second section of the act, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'an act reducing into one the several acts concerning wills, the distribution of intestates' estates, and the duty of executors and administrators.'" Supp. Rev. Code, p. 216, it is declared that when any testator or testatrix shall leave visible estate more than sufficient to pay all his or her debts, and by will shall direct that his or her executors shall not be obliged to give security, in that case no security shall be required, unless the Court shall see cause, from their own knowledge or the suggestions of creditors or legatees, to suspect the executors of fraud. The controversy in this case is one concerning "letters of administration;" and the terms in which the right of appeal from the orders or sentences of the County courts in such controversies is given, are general.

No exception is made of the case wherein the controversy turns on the question, whether an executor shall be permitted to qualify without giving security; and it would seem, therefore, incumbent on those who deny the right of appeal in such case, to shew, either that the law, as to such case, is repealed by some other, or that the question involved in the controversy is of such a nature as to preclude the possibility of its being properly re-examined by the Superior court.

There is no suggestion that the law in relation to the right of appeal has been expressly repealed in the particular above mentioned, by any other statute; but it is urged by the counsel of the appellant in argument here, that the County court may have acted on its own knowledge or the suggestions of creditors; that such grounds of decision are from their very nature incapable of a review by the Superior court; and that the Superior court was bound to presume, in the absence of record evidence to the contrary, if so to presume was necessary in order to sustain the sentence of the County court, that the said last mentioned Court did act, either on its own knowledge or the suggestion of creditors.

This Court is, however, of opinion, that, even supposing the decision of a County court in such case, based on its own knowledge or the suggestions of creditors, were incapable of review by the Superior court, in order to deprive said Court of a right to re-examine the question involved in the controversy, it must appear from the record that the County court did proceed on such grounds. The party complaining of a sentence of the County court from which the law has given an appeal, demandable as of right, is not bound to shew to the Superior court that such sentence was erroneous, in order to entitle him to a review of it by the latter. It is enough for him to shew that he is interested in and a party to the controversy, and that he has complied with the condition of the statute providing for a faithful prosecution of his appeal. He cannot be deprived of the right to have his case reheard by the Superior court, by the suggestion that the sentence or order of which he complains may have been based on grounds which, if they had been made to appear on the record, it would be seen did not admit of re-examination.

The Court is, however, further of opinion, that there is nothing in such grounds of decision rendering them incapable of review by the Superior court, when properly brought before it; that the Circuit court properly took cognizance of the appeal in this case, and was bound, upon a full view of all the questions of law and of fact bearing on it, to decide whether the executor should be permitted to qualify without giving security.

It is manifest from the record of the proceedings of the Circuit court, that the whole controversy in that Court turned simply on the question, whether the testator had by his will directed that his executor, the appellee Hunter, should not be required to give security. A question has been raised, whether the parol testimony offered on the trial of the case in the Superior Court was properly admitted. This Court does not deem it at all necessary to enquire under what circumstances and to what extent such evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of explaining the intentions of a testator; inasmuch as, whether the will and codicil be consulted alone, or read in connexion with the other evidence offered, the meaning and purpose of the testator in this case are equally manifest. The Court is of opinion that the testator did not intend that the appellee should be permitted to qualify without giving security; and therefore that the Circuit court erred in reversing the sentence of the County court refusing to permit him to qualify, except on the condition of giving bond and security. The Court is therefore 52 of *opinion to reverse the sentence of the Circuit court with costs, and to affirm that of the county court.

BROOKE and BALDWIN, Js., said they thought the whole merits of the case were before the Circuit court de novo, and that the judgment of that Court was right.

Armstead v. Hundley.

(Absent DANIEL,* J.)

Equity Practice—Sale of Land by Agent—Suit to Set Aside—Laches†—Measure of Relief—Case at Bar.—A and others owning lands jointly, in the State of M-I, employ an agent with power to sell and convey them. A sells to H a certain number of acres of these lands, equal to his interest therein, but does not make a conveyance. H goes to M-I, and on his return, informs A that the agent had sold all the lands; and thereupon they rescind their contract, and make another, by which A assigns to H his interest in the proceeds of the sales, for the purpose of paying H what he owed him, and for the damages which H claimed for his failure to get the land; and he gives H an order on the agent for the amount. And to enable H to settle up the business, A executes to him a deed for his interest in the land. When H goes again to M-I, he learns that the contract which the agent had made for the sale of a part of the lands had failed; and he conceals this fact from A, whilst he conceals from the agent, the rescission of his first contract with A, and the making of the second: and he receives from the agent, A's proportion of the proceeds of the land sold; and he purchases all the lands remaining unsold, and settles with the agent, receiving credit for the price of the quantity of land sold to him by A by their first contract; that being considerably more than he was to have given A for it. Some years after this, A files a bill against H to set aside the conveyance by the agent to H, as to the quantity of land to which A was entitled. HELD: A is entitled to have 53 relief. But *as the agent had power to sell and convey, and the lands were sold at their value; and as the lands of all the parties were sold together, and had been conveyed to H, and had been improved by him: and as A had been guilty of laches in failing to make enquiries, and in the prompt assertion of his claim; and the lands lay in another state, the proper measure of relief is compensation for the injury, instead of a rescission of the contract.

†See monographic note on "Laches" appended to Peers v. Barnett, 12 Gratt. 410.

By an act of the Congress of the United States, the heirs of General Joseph Martin, of Virginia, were authorized to locate five thousand acres of land in the states of Alabama or Mississippi, of land which had been offered for sale but had not been sold, and in tracts not less than one hundred and thirty acres. These heirs, of whom there were seventeen, employed Col. William Martin, of Tennessee, one of their number, as their agent to locate the lands; and they also gave him authority to sell them after they were located. The locations seem to have been made about the year 1826, in the state of Mississippi.

Among the heirs of General Martin was Sarah, the wife of Samuel Armstead, of the county of Campbell, who died in the lifetime of her husband, leaving three sons, her heirs at law. In 1828 Samuel Armstead had become possessed of an interest in the lands aforesaid equal to three hundred acres; and he then sold this interest to Thomas Hundley; and having afterwards acquired another interest, equal to four hundred and fifty acres, he, in 1831, sold this interest to Hundley; the price of the whole seven hundred and fifty acres amounting to 1412 dollars 62 cents. At this time Armstead had not himself obtained a conveyance of these interests, and he executed to Hundley a bond to secure the conveyance to him.

In 1832 Hundley went to the state of Mississippi; and on his return to Virginia in 1833, he informed Armstead that all the lands had been sold by Col. Martin to Elias P. Kent, so that Hundley could not 54 obtain *his seven hundred and fifty acres. He stated further, that the lands were then worth more than he had given Armstead for them, and insisted that Armstead should make up to him the difference. Armstead seems to have acquiesced in this demand; and on the 25th of September 1833 they had a settlement, and entered into an agreement under seal. To this agreement Armstead's sons were parties. It appears from the statement of the account between Hundley and Armstead, that Armstead was indebted to Hundley on other transactions to the amount of . . $ 693 54

There was to this added supposed cost on 1400 acres of land, . .	250 00

Immediately following this statement was the agreement, by which the Armsteads, in consideration of the sum of 2800 dollars, as above stated, relinquished to Hundley the proceeds of fourteen hundred acres, (that being the amount of the interest of Armstead and his sons in said lands, including the seven hundred and fifty acres before mentioned,) it being part of the five thousand acres aforesaid, "lately sold by Col. William Martin or his agent." The agreement then proceeds to state from whom the Armsteads acquired the fourteen hundred acres, and that they had given Hundley an order on Col. William Martin, the agent, when the proceeds should fall into his hands.

The agreement further provided, that the lands had been or should be legally 55 *relinquished; and that for so much of the sum of 2800 dollars as Colonel Martin should pay or accept to pay out of the interests of the Armsteads in the said lands, they were to be released; and so much thereof as might not be due to them out of the said claims, they were to pay to Hundley, after it was ascertained how much Col. Martin owed them. And if there should be due to the Armsteads more than 2800 dollars, Hundley was to pay it to them; and he was to settle with Col. Martin for the cost attending the location, sale, &c., of said land, before he settled finally with the Armsteads; and the title bond before that time executed to Hundley by Samuel Armstead was declared to be null and void. And it was lastly provided, that if Hundley failed to collect the sum of 2800 dollars from Col. Martin, or the person who had lately purchased the lands, after legal recourse on them, then that the Armsteads were bound to Hundley to pay him so much as he failed to collect.

In pursuance of this agreement, the Armsteads, on the same day, addressed a letter to Col. William Martin, in which they say:

"We are informed that you or your agent has sold the Mississippi land belonging to the estate of Gen. Joseph Martin, deceased, for a little upwards of two dollars per acre, at one and two years. We have purchased the interest of," &c., which "will probably amount to fourteen hundred acres or upwards; and have sold the same to Capt. Thomas Hundley. You will be pleased to pay him the net proceeds of the same, when collected, with interest from the time it becomes due. We presume it will amount to 2550 dollars, after expenses are paid. Should these interests amount to more, pay or accept to pay it to Captain Thomas Hundley. Should it amount to less, accept to pay for what may be due us, when we exhibit our title as conveyed from these legatees as before stated."

56 *Although it was true, that when Hundley was in Mississippi in 1832, Col. Martin was negotiating with Kent for the sale of the lands belonging to Gen. Joseph Martin, and it is probable both parties thought that the sale was made, yet in fact the negotiation failed. As early as August 1833, Martin seems to have considered the contract ended, though it was not until July 1834 that it was finally broken off. In the meantime Hundley returned to Mississippi in the fall of 1833. On the 21st of November 1833, he wrote to Armstead as follows:

"According to promise, I now drop you a few lines on the subject of the land that I purchased of you. I have seen Mr. Kent and M'Craven; I find that M'Craven has become a partner with Kent in the purchase, and they have executed their notes for the money. The purchase appears to have been made the 29th of March last, at which time the payment will fall due in two annual payments. I have purchased Kent's interest giving him 800 dollars on his interest in the purchase, telling him that I had an interest of fourteen hundred acres, and that I should contend for the land, and was not willing to receive the proceeds of sale as made by Col. Martin. He says that Col. Martin made the sale without reserve, and that he shewed him sixteen powers of attorney; but that is neither here nor there about the matter, as I have purchased Kent's interest."

"I hope you have not written to Martin that I am to take the proceeds of the sale; and don't do so, as I shall arrange every thing with Col. Martin so soon as you can forward me the title legally made. You will only say to Col. Martin in your letters to him, that I am entitled to fourteen hundred acres of the land, or so many interests, and I will settle with him without incommoding him in respect to the sale of the land. I wish you to write to me immediately on the receipt of *this.

57 I want the titles; and I want you to write a different letter to the one you have given me to Col. Martin; that is, don't shew in it to him that I am in any way bound to take the proceeds of sale. You know I told you I would give you 50 dollars in case I could become interested in the purchase. I shall do so; therefore write to Col. Martin in the manner that I have informed you."

On the 9th of March 1834, Hundley wrote to Col. William Martin from Clinton in Hind's county, Mississippi, and stated to him that he had purchased of Samuel Armstead fourteen hundred acres of the land belonging to the estate of Gen. Joseph Martin; and that since that purchase he had purchased of Kent sixteen hundred acres of the thirty-two hundred sold to him. He said further, that he had written to Col. Martin from Louisville, Kentucky, some six weeks before, by a Mr. Hancock, and had sent by him Mr. Armstead's letter to Colonel Martin, amounting to an order on him for the land; and telling him that he (Hundley) would settle with him all expenses; and that having heard that Hancock was sick in Kentucky, he feared that Hancock would not see Col. Martin before Kent did. And he said his object in writing was to propose to set off the amount due from Kent for the sixteen hundred acres, by his own interest in the land, as far as it would go, say fourteen hundred acres; and also to give to Col. Martin any security he might ask for the delivery and the correctness of the titles from Armstead and the legatees from whom he purchased; and that he would call on Col. Martin the next fall with the titles.

This letter Col. Martin answered on the 5th of April following; and after acknowledging the receipt of Hundley's letter, he proceeded to state to him how much of the land had been sold to meet the expenses of locating and selling, what amount of the proceeds of the sales of other lands was on hand for distribution among the parties interested; and that there remained unsold about three thousand acres. He also stated to Hundley the circumstances in relation to the contract with Kent. That he had from the 31st of the previous December considered the contract at an end; but that Kent had been to see him a few days before the time he was then writing, and insisted that the agent of Col. Martin had misunderstood M'Craven when he understood him to decline the purchase; and claiming to have the contract executed. That Colonel Martin had agreed to wait for four months; and if in that time he was satisfied that his agent had been mistaken he would carry out the contract; otherwise he should consider it, as he then did, void.

In December 1834, Brice A. Martin and Lucy C. his wife, from whom Samuel Armstead had purchased some of the interests in these lands, executed a deed, whereby they conveyed to Thomas Hundley the entire interest that the said Brice A. Martin and Lucy C. his wife, were entitled to in the lands aforesaid; and the children of Samuel Armstead executed at the same time to Hundley a similar deed.

On the 27th of January 1835, Hundley applied to Col. Martin for a settlement, and then, as it seems, for the first time, presented to Colonel Martin the letter of the 25th of September 1833, from Samuel Armstead and his sons, hereinbefore given, and the conveyances aforesaid; and upon the authority of these papers, Col. Martin paid to him the proportion of the proceeds of the previous sales of the lands to which, according to them, he was entitled. He at the same time sold to Hundley all the lands then remaining unsold, amounting to three thousand and sixty-nine acres, at three dollars per acre, after deducting eight hundred and twelve and a quarter acres, which was the proportion of the three thousand and sixty-nine acres to which he was entitled under the conveyances to him from Brice A. Martin and the Armsteads. After this sale Kent returned to Hundley the amount he had received under their contract.

In 1838, Samuel Armstead instituted a suit against Thomas Hundley on the chancery side of the Circuit court of Campbell county. In his bill he stated the title to the land in the heirs of Gen. Joseph Martin, the location thereof by Col. Martin, and his authority to sell; the first sale of three hundred acres by Armstead to Hundley; the second sale of four hundred and fifty acres; the visit of Hundley to Mississippi, and his return with the information that all the land was sold, so that he could not obtain his seven hundred and fifty acres; that he alleged the land was worth much more than he had given for it to Armstead, and that he would hold Armstead accountable to him for the difference. That the complainant, supposing this information to be correct, and being unwilling to engage in a law suit with Hundley, was induced to enter into another agreement, whereby, among other things, all the former contracts between them in relation to the sale and purchase of these lands were rescinded, and the complainant agreed to pay him 575 dollars, for the supposed injuries sustained by him in not getting the land. The bill sets out the agreement of the 25th of September 1833, and states that the 250 dollars appearing in the statement which preceded the agreement, was the supposed cost of locating, &c. 1400 acres of land; and that the charge of 2000 dollars appearing in that statement, included the 575 dollars before mentioned, agreed to be paid by Armstead to Hundley upon the cancelment of the former contracts.

The bill further stated, that immediately after the execution of this agreement Hundley went again to Mississippi, when complainant gave him a letter to Col.

Martin, explanatory of his object in giving the order upon him, and the nature and character of the several rights and transfers held by himself and his sons; which letter was suppressed by Hundley. That Hundley, after remaining some time in Mississippi upon this visit, again returned, and informed the complainant that Col. Martin declined paying the said order, or any part thereof, until the relinquishments which, by the last agreement, Armstead had bound himself to obtain, were procured, and that he then became quite clamorous on the subject, and urged, with much apparent earnestness, the propriety of immediately procuring them; giving, however, no other reason for his solicitude on the subject, than that they were essential to enable him to collect the proceeds of the sales, and that Col. Martin would not pay the order without them. That the complainant, having the utmost confidence in Hundley, and believing that what he stated was true, immediately procured the relinquishments to be made. And it being suggested that it would probably be more convenient to all concerned that Hundley, who was going to Mississippi, should have the legal title, it was agreed that conveyances should be made directly to him; and for the purpose of enabling Hundley to collect the proceeds of the land in the hands of Col. Martin or in the hands of the purchasers from him, and for no other whatsoever, the conveyances were, by the directions of the complainant, made directly to Hundley. These conveyances, duly authenticated, were delivered by the complainant to Hundley, and with these conveyances in his possession he went to Mississippi and returned again in 1835.

The bill further stated, that upon Hundley's return on this occasion, he pretended that he had been successful in obtaining from Colonel Martin the proceeds of said land, in pursuance of the order of the 25th of September 1833; but insisted that com-

61 plainant should pay interest upon the order from its date until the time *of his settlement with Colonel Martin, which the complainant, in order to avoid a law suit, agreed to do, and did pay him the sum of 200 dollars at different times, on account thereof.

The bill charged, that from the commencement to the conclusion of his transactions aforesaid with Hundley, the complainant was entirely ignorant of the true character of his rights, or the real condition of the land aforesaid. He knew he was interested in several shares therein, but as to its value, or whether it had been sold, he was wholly uninformed, except as he had received information from Hundley, who he supposed was familiar with it. That thinking the demand of interest as aforesaid unreasonable, and believing from some circumstances that had come to his knowledge that there was some mistake about the matter, he wrote to Colonel Martin for information on the subject, whose letter in reply gave him the first information that but a small portion of said land had been really sold.

The bill further charges that Hundley had made an improper use of the conveyances made to him; that when he received said conveyances he knew that the whole of the land had not been sold. That by suppressing complainant's letter to Col. Martin he had deceived him; and had thus obtained from him, not only the proportion of money in Martin's hands due to complainant, but also 857 acres of land, as Armstead's proportion of the land which remained unsold.

The prayer of the bill was, that Hundley might be compelled to reconvey to the complainant the 857 acres of land, and deliver him possession thereof, or that the value thereof might be ascertained and the same decreed to him; and for general relief.

Hundley answered the bill. The points on which the parties were at issue were, that Hundley insisted that by the contract of September 1833, it was the intention *of the parties that there should 62 be an absolute sale of the whole of Armstead's interest in the land; and that the form of the contract was adopted because, as Hundley had actually purchased of Kent sixteen hundred acres of land, and had given for the purchase money (except 800 dollars,) his bonds, at one and two years, the order of Armstead on Colonel Martin would enable Hundley to pay pro tanto the purchase money; and that being paid, he would receive a deed from Kent, his grantor, Kent receiving a deed from Col. Martin. That the precise interest of Armstead could not then be ascertained, because the cost of location, &c., was uncertain, and the intentions of the several legatees were unknown; and therefore the agreement was, that a deficiency under 2800 dollars, or an excess over that sum, should be the subject of an after settlement.

Hundley further stated, that on his return to Virginia in the fall of 1834, he called on Armstead, and shewed him Col. Martin's letter of the 5th of April 1834, and informed him, that before leaving Mississippi he had seen M'Craven, who would not take the land; and that the probability was, that Kent's contract, spoken of in Col. Martin's letter, would not be confirmed; and that in that event he, Hundley, would, on his next visit to Mississippi, buy all the remaining lands from Col. Martin. And that he then disclosed to Armstead the real condition of said land, so far as he knew it himself.

He further stated, that it then being pretty well ascertained that Kent and M'Craven would not take the lands, so that Kent could not convey to him the sixteen hundred acres for which he had contracted, he requested Armstead to carry out the true meaning and intent of the contract of the 25th of September 1833, by causing deeds in fee simple to be made to him for the 63 fourteen hundred acres of land; to which Armstead *readily consented, and procured the conveyances to be made.

He further stated, that he settled with Col. Martin, and received the money and land to which he was entitled under his contract with Armstead. That he then made a statement of his transactions with complainant, charging him according to the principles of the statement of the 25th of September 1833, on which account there was a balance in his favour of about 275 dollars, of which complainant had paid at different times about 200 dollars.

He denied that it was his purpose to surrender his rights under the contracts made in 1828 and 1831, for the seven hundred and fifty acres of land as such; but said that these contracts became part of the large contract for fourteen hundred acres of the 25th of September 1833; but were in no otherwise rescinded or intended to be rescinded. He denied that the deeds were made for the sole purpose of enabling him to collect more readily the proceeds of the land from Col. Martin or the purchasers, or for any other such purpose, but that they were made for the sole purpose of giving to him a fee simple absolute title to the land. And he said that the imputation that he had suppressed any letter delivered to him by the complainant for Col. Martin, was a wilful and malicious slander.

Evidence was introduced by the defendant to prove repeated declarations of Armstead that he had sold his Mississippi lands to Hundley. Armstead also introduced a witness, who stated that he was present when the contract of the 25th of September 1833 was made; that a compromise of the previous contracts between Armstead and Hundley was made, by which Armstead bought back all the titles he had before sold to Hundley, for which he gave him upwards of 500 dollars profit; and that Hundley agreed to take an order on Col. Martin for the amount, or so much as would pay the claim Hundley had against Armstead.

64 *The witness further stated that he understood from the parties, that the deeds were to be made to Hundley to enable him to collect the purchase money from Col. Martin.

There was no proof that Hundley had informed Armstead in the fall of 1834, that the sale to Kent would probably be rescinded; nor was there any evidence that Armstead had any information as to the condition of the lands, or the settlement with or sale to Hundley by Martin, until he received it from Col. Martin, by a letter bearing date the 15th of March 1837, in reply to one from Armstead written in the preceding January; and from that letter the probable inference is, that it gave to Armstead the first information he received on the subject.

In April 1842 the cause came on to be finally heard, when the Court below dismissed the bill, with costs. Whereupon Armstead applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Garland, for the appellant.

Cooke, for the appellee.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that the contract between the parties dated the 25th of September 1833, and made an exhibit in the cause, was entered into under a mutual mistake, produced by the belief of the appellee that Col. William Martin, the agent of the legatees of Gen. Joseph Martin, had sold the lands in Mississippi to a certain Elias D. Kent, and therefore that it was not in the power of the appellant to comply with the agreements previously made with the appellee to convey to him the 750 acres which had theretofore been sold to him.

That under the influence of said mistake, produced by the representations of the 65 appellee, who then believed *the same to be true, the appellant was induced to enter into the arrangement of the 25th September 1833, whereby compensation was to be allowed for the supposed loss of the land previously sold; and the appellee was invested with the power to settle with and receive from said Col. William Martin the proceeds arising from the sale of so much of said land as the appellant was entitled to.

That in entering into said arrangement, it appears from the terms of the agreement and of the order in favour of the appellee upon the said Col. William Martin, the parties did not contemplate a sale of the land. They both then supposed the land had been disposed of; and there would have been no motive on the part of the appellant to enter into the arrangement whereby compensation was made for the loss of the land, if at the time he had been apprised of the fact that there remained unsold a sufficient quantity of the land to which he was entitled to satisfy his original contract of sale.

The deeds subsequently executed by the appellant and others at his instance, vesting the legal title to the land in the appellee, were made by the appellant and others at his instance, to enable the appellee more easily to settle with and receive the proceeds of the sale from the agent, and on the part of the appellant to carry out and fulfil the arrangement of the 25th September 1833.

The appellee, when he received information that the contract alleged to have been entered into between Elias D. Kent and the agent, for the purchase of all the lands, had not been consummated, and that there remained a sufficient quantity of land unsold to which the appellant was entitled to satisfy his original purchase, was bound in good faith to communicate the fact to the appellant; but the suppression of that fact, and his treating the contract of 66 the 25th September *1833 as an absolute sale by the Armsteads to the appellee of their whole interest in the lands, was a fraud against which the appellant is entitled to be relieved.

The Court is further of opinion, that as the power of the agent at the time of the sale of the lands to the appellee was unrevoked, and his sale therefore valid; and as it furthermore appears that the lands were sold at their fair value and were purchased in connection with other lands of legatees, no partition having been made, and, as it is alleged, have been improved by the appellee; and the contract having moreover been fully executed by absolute conveyances to the appellee; and the appellant himself having been guilty of laches in failing to make proper enquiries, and in the prompt assertion of his claim; and the lands being situated in another State, the proper measure of relief under the circumstances of this case, will be compensation for the injury instead of a rescission of the contract.

In ascertaining the amount of such compensation, the appellant should be debited with the original price of the 750 acres of land, 1412 dollars 62 cents, (with interest thereon from the times of his sales to the appellee up to the date of the settlement made by the appellee with the agent,) and also with 693 dollars 54 cents, the amount of the debts in the account, with interest on the principal to the same period.

And the appellee should be debited with the sum received of the agent, Col. William Martin, on account of the lands previously sold; also with the price agreed upon between him and said agent for the proportion of the appellant in his own right, and in right of other legatees to which he was entitled, in the lands not previously sold by the agent, and then purchased of the agent by the appellee; also with 143 dollars 54 cents cash, paid on the 25th September 1833, the balance then ascertained, with interest to the date of the settlement with the agent, and also with the sum of 67 200 *dollars, alleged in the bill and admitted in the answer to have been paid to the appellee by the appellant, for interest on the amount of the order upon the agent, from the date thereof to the time of settlement with the agent, and deducting the amount so debited to the appellant from the amount so debited to the appellee, the balance so ascertained to be due from the appellee will be the sum for which, with interest, the appellant should have a decree. And leave should be reserved to the appellant to apply to the Court for a rescission of the contract, and a decree for the reconveyance of the land conveyed to the appellee, over and above the 750 acres, in the event of the personal decree for the balance, ascertained as aforesaid, proving unavailing.

The Court is therefore of opinion that the decree dismissing the bill is erroneous; and the same is reversed with costs; and the cause is remanded, to be proceeded in according to the principles of this opinion, in order to a final decree.

68 *M'Laughlin v. The Bank of Potomac & als.

April Term, 1850, Richmond.

Retrocession of County of Alexandria to Virginia*—Appeal Pending in Supreme Court of the United States from Circuit Court of District of Alexandria—Effect—Case at Bar.—A cause, on appeal from the decision of the Circuit court of the district of Alexandria, pending in the Supreme court of the United States at the time of the retrocession of the county of Alexandria to the State of Virginia, was properly heard and decided by that Court after the retrocession; and its decision was properly sent down to the Circuit Superior court of law and chancery for the county of Alexandria established by the Legislature of Virginia; and is to be enforced by that Court.

At the June term 1845, of the Circuit court of the United States for the District of Columbia, holden in and for the county of Alexandria, a decree was rendered in a cause therein depending, in which the Bank of Potomac and others were plaintiffs, and Bridget M'Laughlin and others were defendants, by which certain real estate in the possession of Bridget M'Laughlin was subjected to satisfy the claims of the plaintiffs against Edward M'Laughlin; and commissioners were appointed to make sale thereof. From this decree, Bridget M'Laughlin took an appeal to the Supreme court of the United States. Whilst the appeal was pending in the Supreme court, the county of Alexandria was retroceded by the government of the United States, to the State of Virginia, and the retrocession was accepted by the Legislature of Virginia. The acts of the General Assembly of Virginia and of Congress by which this was accomplished, are referred to in the opinion of the Court.

In December 1848, the decree of the Circuit court of Alexandria was affirmed by the Supreme court; and the decree was remanded in the usual form to the Judge of the Circuit Superior court of law and dria in the Commonwealth of Virginia. At the November term of the Circuit court, the mandate of the Supreme court was produced in Court by the plaintiffs, who moved the Court to receive and file the same, which motion was resisted by the defendants; but the Court sustained the motion, and ordered that the said mandate should be filed among the records of the Court, and obeyed. From this order, Bridget M'Laughlin applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

The cause was argued in this Court by John Y. Mason and Heath, for the appellant, and by Davis of Baltimore, and Macfarland, for the appellees.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The constitution of the United States gives to Congress exclusive legislation over such district, not exceeding ten miles square, as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of government of the United States. This provision recognizes the authority of States to make the cession, and of Congress to receive it; and carries with it the incidental powers of reciprocal legislation, adapted to the accomplishment of the purpose. And it thus became the duty of ceding States on the one hand, and of Congress on the other, so to provide, in the transfer of sovereignty and jurisdiction, that the rights of individuals and the incidental remedies, existing at the time, should receive no detriment.

Accordingly, we find that by the act of cession of the Virginia Legislature of December 1789, it was provided, that the jurisdiction of the laws of the State, over the persons and property of individuals residing within the limits of the cession, should not cease or determine, until Congress, having accepted the cession, should, by law, provide for the government thereof, 70 *under their jurisdiction. The act of cession of the Maryland Legislature contains the like provision in identical words. And the acts of acceptance of Congress, of July 1790, and March 1791, embrace a provision, that the operation of the laws of the ceding States, within such district, should not be affected by the acceptance until the time fixed for the removal of the seat of government. And the act of Congress of February 1801, for the government of the district, makes provision for obtaining executions on judgments and decrees which had been, or should be, obtained in the Courts of Maryland or Virginia, by filing exemplifications of the proceedings in the Court of the district.

In the case of Van Ness, &c. v. The Bank of the United States, 13 Peters' R. 17, a question arose as to the validity of a title to certain lots in the City of Washington, derived from a decree of the Chancery court of Maryland, rendered in October 1801, after Congress had assumed jurisdiction over the territory, though in a cause pending before. And it was held by the Supreme court of the United States, that it was not the intention of the parties to the cession, that suits pending at the time, should abate; and that without stopping to enquire what, upon general principles of law, would be the effect of a cession upon suits then pending in the ceding sovereignty, it was evident that the State and the United States both intended that the suits then pending in the Maryland tribunals, should be proceeded in, until the rights of the parties should be finally decided, and that the judgments and decrees there made, should be as valid and conclusive as if the sovereignty had not been transferred.

It is admitted on all hands, that Congress had the constitutional power of retroceding, and Virginia of accepting the retrocession of territory, ceded by the latter to the former as above mentioned; and it follows that *these parties had the like incidental powers of legislation, to give effect to the retrocession, as they possessed in regard to the original cession, and incurred the like obligations of duty in regard to the rights and remedies of individuals existing at the time of the retrocession.

The retrocession was accomplished by a series of legislative acts, beginning with the act of the Virginia Legislature of February 1846, which provided that, so soon as the Congress of the United States should recede to the Commonwealth of Virginia, the county of Alexandria, and relinquish their exclusive jurisdiction, as well of territory as of persons residing, or to reside therein, the same should be re-annexed to this Commonwealth, and constitute a portion thereof; and which declared that the jurisdiction and laws of the United States, as well as the rights and privileges of the citizens of said county, and bodies politic and corporate thereof, should continue in force and be exercised, in like manner, and to the same extent, as they then existed, until the General Assembly of Virginia should, by law, provide for the government of said county, under the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth.

The next step was taken by the Congress of the United States, by the act of July 1846; by which, when the assent of the people of the county and town of Alexandria should be ascertained as therein prescribed, all that portion of the District of Columbia ceded to the United States by the State of Virginia, and all the rights and jurisdiction therewith ceded over the same, were retroceded and forever relinquished to the State of Virginia, in full and absolute jurisdiction, as well of soil as of persons residing or to reside therein. But that the jurisdiction and laws then existing in the said territory, over the persons and property of individuals therein residing, should not cease or determine, until the State of Virginia should thereafter provide by law for the extension of her jurisdiction and judicial system over the territory so retroceded.

72 *This was followed by the act of the General Assembly of Virginia of March 1847, by which the laws and jurisdiction of this Commonwealth were extended over the retroceded territory, with certain exceptions for the preservation and protection of the rights and remedies of individuals. It was never contemplated by the high contracting parties to continue in existence for these purposes the Circuit and inferior courts of the District for Alexandria county; and therefore provision was made for the transfer to the appropriate Courts established by the act, of all original and record muniments of title, and of all judgments, decrees and orders in actions and suits which had been determined, and of all actions and suits depending. In regard to actions and suits on the docket of the Circuit court of the District for Alexandria county, which had been carried by appeal into the Supreme court of the United States, (which Congress had constituted the appellate Court of the District,) these were not in a condition to be transferred to the Superior court of law and chancery established by the act, without a transfer also of the pending appeals therein to an appellate forum in Virginia. The latter would have been inconvenient and inexpedient, for obvious reasons; and there was no necessity for the measure, inasmuch as the tribunal in which the appeals were pending continued in existence, with complete jurisdiction over them; unless, indeed, it should be deprived thereof by legislation or the want of legislation on the subject. The act, therefore, recognized the continued jurisdiction of the Supreme court in regard to the pending appeals; and inasmuch as its adjudications could not be transmitted to the Circuit court of the District for the county of Alexandria, by reason of the abrogation of the latter Court, provision was made for the transmission of them to, and the carrying of them into effect by, the Circuit Superior court of Virginia established by the act. The prescribed form of *such transmission, by mandate from the Supreme court, was a mere matter of form, inasmuch as the subsequent proceedings were to be had in, and by force of the jurisdiction of, the new tribunal, and subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme court of appeals of Virginia.

In conformity with this last act of the Legislature of Virginia, the supplemental act of Congress of July 1848, was passed, by which provision was made for the continued jurisdiction of the Supreme court of the United States, in causes pending therein from the Circuit court of the District for the county of Alexandria, at the time when the jurisdiction and laws of Virginia had been extended over the same; and for the transmission of its adjudications, in such appellate causes, to the proper tribunal in Virginia invested by her laws with jurisdiction to carry the same into effect.

We need not enter into any criticisms upon the phraseology of these several acts of Congress and of the General Assembly.

They must be treated, one and all, as parts of one entire legislative compact between the high contracting parties, upon the subject with which they dealt, and over which they had unquestioned constitutional power. That subject was, the retrocession of sovereignty and jurisdiction, and the provisions by which it was to be accomplished were matters of sound discretion and enlightened expediency. The very sovereignty and jurisdiction of which they treated, enabled the parties to reserve, temporarily, a portion thereof, for the more perfect and beneficial transfer of the whole. It was essential to provide for the disposal of the existing litigation in the Courts of the retroceded territory, and that could be done, in relation to actions and suits pending in the appellate Court, only by allowing them to be adjudicated in that forum, or by transferring them for adjudication to some other tribunal. The wild and mischievous result, if that could have 74 followed from naked *retrocession, of suffering the pending appeals to fall from the jurisdiction of the Supreme court, without care as to their future fate, or that of the judgments and decrees from which they sprang, was surely, at no period of the legislative treaty, for a moment contemplated. The wise and beneficent expedient has been adopted of retaining the jurisdiction of the Supreme court over such appeals; and we have no difficulty upon the question, whether this was done in due time and by competent authority.

As to the time. The compact was not to be evidenced by a deed to be signed and sealed by the high contracting parties or their agents; but by reciprocal acts of legislation, to be passed from time to time as the occasion should require, and resulting in their mutual consent to the several provisions, as expressed by both of the parties, or by either with the acquiescence of the other. The proper time for Virginia to introduce her stipulation for adjudication by the Supreme court, of the appeals depending at the time of the retrocession, was when she was accomplishing that retrocession, in conformity with the previous act of Congress, by extending her laws and jurisdiction over the retroceded territory. It was a modification of that extension of her jurisdiction, in order to render it more perfect and beneficial; to which the General Government could have had no possible objection, and which might have been regarded as tacitly assented to by Congress, in the absence of any further legislation by that party; but which was expressly concurred in and provided for by the subsequent act of Congress. And even if any blunder had occurred, of omission or commission, in the progress of the legislative treaty; what well founded objection could there have been to a return to the subject by the parties to the compact, at any time when the occasion should require it, for the purpose of supplying the defect or tional power over the subject, without limitation as to time; and that power could not be exhausted, until the retrocession, with its incidents, was rendered complete and perfect.

As to the competency of the authority. There could hardly be a cavil as to the competency of Congress to permit, or even prescribe, especially with the consent and for the benefit of Virginia, the exercise by the appellate Court of the district of that jurisdiction over causes pending therein, which that tribunal had lawfully acquired. And as to Virginia: when the judicial department of her government is called upon to pronounce that the legislative department has transcended its constitutional powers, the usurpation must be made manifest; and not the less so, when the question occurs in relation to a compact with another sovereignty, made under the authority of the federal constitution, and the effect of the adjudication is to be, if not an entire abrogation of the compact, a breach of good faith on the part of the State in regard to the other contracting party.

It is true that our State constitution declares the judicial power of Virginia shall be vested in certain tribunals of her own, whose jurisdiction is to be regulated by law. And if we could suppose that the Legislature of Virginia would ever undertake to submit the administration of her laws, between her own citizens and on her own soil, to the authority and control of foreign tribunals, we would imagine an invasion, not only of the constitutional province of her judiciary, but an act of treason against the sovereignty of her people. But in this case there has been no delegation of jurisdiction to the judicial department of another government. No Court of Virginia has ever had jurisdiction of the appeals depending in the Supreme court of the United States, at the time 76 of the retrocession of the territory *formerly ceded to the General Government. The jurisdiction over those appeals was reserved in the compact of retrocession to the tribunal which had intermediately acquired the same; and now to expunge those remedies would be an act of judicial violence scarcely less flagrant than the extirpation of the rights which they involve.

The Court is therefore of opinion that there is no error in the decretal order of the Circuit Superior court; and it is ordered and decreed that the same be affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

Reid's Adm'r v. Strider's Adm'r.

2. Same—Cause Pending in—Death of Party—Effect.†—

Where a party to a cause pending in the Supreme court of appeals dies pending the appeal, it is not necessary to revive the cause in the name of his representative; but the case may be revived when it goes back to the Court below.

This was a motion upon notice by Hunter, administrator of Reid, to set aside a decree of this Court made at the April term 1845. The case is reported in 2 Grattan 34. The ground of the motion was, that before the case was argued or decided, the appellee Strider had died. It appeared that Strider died in March 1845; and that the cause was argued in April and decided in May of that year, without a revival of the suit against his administrator, or a suggestion of his death upon the record.

77 *G. N. Johnson, for the motion.

The proceeding by notice, on motion, has in practice been substituted for a writ of error coram vobis. Eubank v. Ralls, 4 Leigh 308. But if the Court shall be of opinion that the proceeding should be by the writ, then this motion may be considered as an application for the writ.

On the merits. Strider and Reid's adm'r were the only parties to the appeal. Both were therefore necessary parties; because at common law the death of either party abates the suit. 3 Bl. Com. 302; and this law is only so far modified by statute as to authorize a revival by scire facias; but not to authorize a Court to make a decree when there are no parties. The statutes which authorize a revival of a suit, shew that the revival is necessary. Indeed, so necessary is it that there shall be the proper parties before the Court when the cause is decided, that if the Court has proceeded to decide the cause after the death of a party, this is an error of fact for which the common law gives the writ of error coram vobis. Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. R. 499; May v. State Bank of North Carolina, 2 Rob. R. 56. And our act of 1819, Sess. Acts 1819-20, p. 24, gives this writ.

former term. After its term has closed, its adjudications, right or wrong, must stand irreversible and final, and the controversies between the parties whose rights have been adjudicated are closed forever. This doctrine has been firmly established by this court, in the case of Reid v. Strider, 7 Gratt. 76; Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 50, 105. See, in accord, citing the principal case, Stuart v. Peyton, 97 Va. 813, 34 S. E. Rep. 696; Hall v. Bank of Va., 15 W. Va. 330; Campbell v. Hughes, 12 W. Va. 211, approving the principal case to somewhat the same point. See monographic note on "Decrees" appended to Evans v. Spurgin, 11 Gratt. 615; also, note to principal case in 54 Am. Dec. 120.

†Pleading—Parties—Death Pending Appeal.—If a party dies during the pendency of an appeal or writ of error, the court may proceed to judgment or decree, in certain cases under section 3307 of the Code, as if such death had not occurred. Booth v. Dotson, 93 Va. 237, 24 S. E. Rep. 935, citing the principal case. See also, Buckner v. Blair, 2 Munf. 836; Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. 499. But see Rider v. Union Factory, 7 Leigh 154.

The counsel on the other side may attempt to distinguish between cases in the inferior Courts and cases in this Court. But our statute gives the writ to this Court as well as to the inferior Courts. And as there is no restriction upon it in the statute, the extent of its use must be determined by the common law.

This writ is used by the Court of King's bench, which is an appellate Court; and that Court uses it in cases of appeal. Why then should it not be used in this Court? The same evil exists here. Parties in this Court die as in other Courts. If it is said they are represented by counsel here, the same may be said of parties in other Courts. But there can be no counsel

Although there is no decision of this Court sustaining the use of the writ here, yet there are opinions of the Judges in favour of it. Stanard's opinion in the Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. R. 499; Baldwin's opinion in May v. State Bank of North Carolina, 2 Rob. R. 56. The practice in this Court is not to hear a cause where a death in suggested until it is revived. And if the revival is not necessary, why has the statute given the writ of error coram vobis?

It may be said that although the administrator of the deceased party may ask to set aside the decree, that the party who was alive at the hearing and was represented by counsel cannot. But we do not ask to set aside the decree as a matter of convenience but of law. And was it ever heard of that there could be a judgment which bound one party but did not bind the other. On this point, however, the authority is express and decisive. Bac. Abr. title Error, letter J. § 6. And in Daniel v. Robinson, 1 Wash. 154, it was held that where one party is dead, the other party may consider the cause not ready for a hearing until there has been a scire facias to revive it.

Cooke, for Strider's adm'r.

We are willing to meet the case hypothetically as a petition for a writ of error coram vobis. This writ we say is inconsistent with the constitution of this Court. The fact that there is no precedent for it here, is conclusive against it. A writ in an inferior Court is intended not only to revive the case but to have it tried over again. The petitioner expects to be benefited by the new trial on which he may introduce new evidence. But no new evidence can be introduced in this Court.

Look to the class of cases in which this Court refuses to alter a decree once made though erroneous on its face. Campbell v. Price, 3 Munf. 227; Towner v. Lane, 9 Leigh 262. In this last case there had been a vacation of but eight days, and yet this Court refused to alter the decree.

The counsel on the other side asks why may not this Court issue the writ as well as the Court of King's bench, which is a Court of appeals. It is not feasible for this Supreme court to modify its rules of practice to accord with the practice of the King's bench, which though an appellate is an inferior Court. It is dangerous to take up one point of practice and conform to it without considering the antecedents and succedents.

It is supposed by the counsel on the other side, that the act of 1819, Sess. Acts 1819-20, p. 24, gives this Court authority to use the writ of error coram vobis. The intent of that act was to facilitate the obtaining the writ where it was legally obtainable before. The draftsman of the act seems to have supposed that this Court might issue the writ. In that he was mistaken, and the act does not authorize it.

BALDWIN, J. The case presented for our consideration is briefly this: Reid, the owner of a negro boy, on which he had given a deed of trust, agreed with Strider to place him in his possession till the 1st of January 1834, when Reid was to refund the money secured by the trust deed, (which Strider undertook to discharge,) and take back the boy, or receive the balance he should then be worth at a fair valuation, and make a good title for him. Reid failed to perform the condition, and afterwards his administrator brought a suit in equity to redeem the slave, upon the allegation that the transaction was a mortgage; and it was so held by the Circuit court. Reid's administrator was therefore charged with the money advanced, with interest from the 1st of January 1834, and credited by the 80 hires: and a small balance being found in his favour, Strider *was decreed to pay it, and to deliver the slave. From this decree Strider appealed, and this Court, in May 1845, held the contract to be not a mortgage, but a conditional sale, and the sale not having been abrogated, by performance of the condition, that he became Strider's property, without accountability for hires. The decree of the Circuit court was therefore reversed, and Strider decreed to pay the balance of the value of the boy on the 1st of January 1834, after deducting the money advanced, with interest from that date. See Reid's adm'r v. Strider, 2 Gratt. 34. And now, nearly five years after the decree of this Court, a motion is made here, either to set it aside, or to award a writ of error coram vobis; on the ground that at the time of its rendition, Strider had died, to wit, in the month of March previously, and consequently, that the case was prematurely and irregularly heard, inasmuch as Strider's death ought to have been suggested, and the appeal revived against his representative.

I need not consider how far this Court may amend its judgments and decrees, at a subsequent term, by correcting clerical misprisions in the entries thereof, the question here being of a quite different nature. We are called upon not to amend, but to reverse, annul, or set aside the decree, in order that the appeal may be replaced upon our docket, and heard de novo upon its merits, after a revival thereof against Strider's representative; and this, too, upon the application of the adverse party, who might have had the death suggested, and process of revival issued, before the hearing was had in this Court.

It is not the province of this Court to exercise appellate jurisdiction over its own adjudication, and it has no process adapted to such a purpose. It has no power to award writs of error to its own judgments, or allow appeals from, or bills of review to, its own decrees, for any error of law or of fact appearing upon the face of 81 *its records. Nor can it, for errors of fact not apparent upon its records, grant writs of error coram vobis, or entertain bills of review. It is the appellate forum in the last resort, for the revisal of the judgments and decrees of subordinate tribunals, which it may affirm or reverse, with power in case of reversal, to render such adjudication as the inferior Court ought to have rendered. During the same term, its decisions, like those of other Courts of record, are within its own breast, and may be modified or rescinded as a more matured consideration may dictate; but after the end of the term, the merits of its adjudications have passed beyond its control. This finality and irreversibility of the judgments and decrees of this Court is inherent in the very nature and constitution of the tribunal, and cannot be disturbed without deranging the administration of justice, and the introduction of intolerable evils in practice.

This Court occupies the like supreme and ultimate position in our judicial system that the House of Lords does in that of England. And in the House of Lords a writ of error coram vobis does not lie for error in fact; for which two reasons are assigned, one technical, and the other politic: the first is that the record itself is not removed thither, but only the transcript thereof, as with us: the other is, that it is below the dignity of the House of Lords, that being the supreme judicature, to examine matters of fact; the substantial meaning of which I take to be, that to do so, would be foreign to the nature and purposes of that tribunal. See 2 Tidd's Pract. 1057.

It is true, in relation to writs of error coram vobis, that by the act of the 24th of February 1820, Sess. Acts of 1819-20, it is provided, "that writs of error coram vobis, and all other writs of error, may be awarded in vacation, by any Judge of the Court of 82 appeals, or General court, or any Superior court of law, or by any *two justices of a County or Corporation court, in the same manner and upon the same conditions, as may be awarded by the same Courts respectively in term time; and that every such writ issued in pursuance of this act shall operate as a supersedeas." But this act was not designed to enlarge the powers of the Courts therein mentioned, but only to extend certain then existing powers thereof in term time to Judges thereof respectively in vacation; and must be construed rendendo singula singulis, by referring the comprehensive terms, which in the aggregate embrace writs of error of every description, distributively to the appropriate writs of error, of which the respective Courts already had cognizance.

The remedy therefore, for the supposed error or irregularity, by writ of error coram vobis, would be wholly unwarranted, and moreover utterly inappropriate, it being merely a common law writ, and unheard of in chancery proceedings.

And if we look to a bill of review, it is obvious that in a Supreme court merely appellate, there is no room for its cognizance, the only tribunal in which such a proceeding can originate, being the subordinate Court where the original decree was rendered: and even there jurisdiction of it is taken away by an appellate decree of this Court, after which a bill of review lies only on the ground of the discovery of new matter affecting the merits of the controversy. Campbell v. Price, &c., 3 Munf. 227. And matter of abatement is not capable of being shewn by bill of review, as error to reverse a decree. 3 Dan. Chan. Pract. 1728, n; Story's Eq. Plead. § 411; Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jery. 85.

If this Court has no process by which to reverse or annul its judgments and decrees of former terms upon the merits, still less can it do so for mere irregularities, and far less by the informal and summary proceeding by motion. Indeed, a final judgment or decree of any

83 cannot, without the authority of some statute, be rescinded or amended after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered. 3 Chit. Bl. 407; Bank of Virginia v. Craig, 6 Leigh 399. In the case just cited, this Court unanimously overruled a motion for a rehearing, on the ground, "that it could not set aside its decree entered at a former term, whether it was prematurely decided, or whether it was objectionable on the merits or not."

With that decision, the case of Wynn v. Wyatt's adm'r, 11 Leigh 584, cannot be regarded as in conflict. There, it is true, a judgment of this Court of one term was, at the next term thereafter, set aside and a rehearing directed; but the reporter suggests that the motion for it had been made at the previous term, and held under advisement. That this was so, may be inferred from the fact, that no question seems to have been made as to the power of the Court to re-examine its judgment of a former term; a question too grave to have been disregarded, especially after the solemn decision upon that point in the Bank of Virginia v. Craig. And this inference is strengthened by an order of the Court after the allowance of the rehearing, stating that before it was granted, the transcript of the judgment had been improvidently certified to the Court below, and therefore recalling the same.

What I have said is based upon the hypothesis, that there is error or irregularity in fact in the failure to suggest the death of the appellant Strider, and proceeding to the appellate hearing and decree, without a revival of the appeal against his representative; but I am far from entertaining that opinion.

At common law, actions abated by the death of the plaintiff or defendant, and were incapable of revival, though originally maintainable for or against the representative of the deceased. A suit in equity also abated by the death of either party; 84 but, if originally maintainable *for or against the representative of the deceased, could always be revived by bill of revivor, and now by statute may be revived by scire facias, 1 Rev. Code p. 497. The English statutes, and ours conforming to them, and extended to suits in equity, which authorize revival by scire facias, have no application to writs of error or appeals. These never abated by the death of either party, (with one exception,) for the reason, I presume, that there is no abatement of the original judgment or decree, and the reversal or affirmance thereof is the only matter involved in the appellate cause. The exception is in the case of the death of the plaintiff in error, before his assignment of errors, which probably rests upon the ground that the proceeding has not been perfected, and there must be a new writ of error. This exception prevails in the English practice, the assignment of errors being made there after the writ of error has been sued out, and is in the nature of a declaration, upon which an issue is made up usually by the plea of in nullo est erratum, which is in the nature of a demurrer. It is unknown, however, in our practice, where there are no pleadings in error, unless of a release or the like, and the death of the plaintiff cannot occur before the assignment of errors, which is always made in the petition for the writ.

According to the English practice, if the plaintiff in error dies after the assignment of errors, or the defendant in error dies, whether before or after such assignment, the case proceeds in the names of the original parties to hearing and judgment, and the original judgment, if affirmed, is revived in the Court below by scire facias. 2 Tidd's Pract. 1094. In equity, an appeal to the House of Lords is prayed for by petition to the House, and allowed by its order; to which petition an answer is put in, denying error in the decree and praying its affirmance; upon which issue, or an order of the House in case of default, 85 the appeal is appointed *to be heard.

If either party dies before hearing, the appeal is revived, upon petition, in the name of the representative of the deceased. 3 Daniel's Ch. Pract. 1634, &c.

With us, writs of error or supersedeas and appeals, allowed by this Court, or a Judge thereof in vacation, are prayed for by petition, in which the errors complained of are assigned or set forth; and process is issued and served upon the adverse party, and a hearing is had after appearance by counsel, or in case of default; without appellate pleadings unless of some extrinsic matter in bar.

And though there is no abatement of appellate causes in this Court, whether of law or equity, and our statutes for revival of actions or suits have no application to them; yet a practice prevails here, probably borrowed in substance from that of the English House of Lords, in equity, requiring in case of the death of either party a revival of the appeal or writ of error by consent or by scire facias. Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. R. 499. It is, however, a general rule of convenience and policy, applicable only where the death of the party is made known to the Court and suggested on its record; and there may be circumstances under which the suggestion itself will not be permitted by the Court. And if the appellate cause passes through this Court without such suggestion, there is no ground for the imputation of error or irregularity in the proceedings here; and the judgment or decree of this Court is remitted to the Court below, and entered upon the record there, and a revival then had there of the original judgment or decree in case of affirmance, or of that of this Court in case of reversal.

I think the motion made by Reid's adm'r ought to be overruled. To sustain it would introduce a practice fraught with incalculable mischief. Hundreds of causes pass through this Court without information on the *part of the Court, or of the counsel concerned, of deaths of parties; and much of our time would be most unprofitably employed, and to the great detriment of suitors, in setting aside our own adjudications, rendered upon mature consideration of the merits, for supposed irregularity in the proceedings.

1. Equity Practice—Partnerships—Final Settlement—Errors on Face—Partners.—Under the circumstances of the case, and after the time which had elapsed, the Court refused to enquire into errors which were alleged to appear upon the face of a final settlement of a partnership between the former partners.

2. Same—Same—Same—Case at Bar.—In a suit by the ex'or of one partner against the ex'or and his sureties of the other partner, under the circumstances, the sureties not allowed to set up a credit, which had been set up by the partner and again by his ex'or, and had been disallowed by the Court in both instances.

3. Compromise—Ignorance of Facts—Effect.—A party to a compromise entered into in ignorance of important facts connected therewith, not held bound by it.

4. Same—Same—Payment of More Than Bound to Pay—Recovery.—A party to a compromise entered into, in ignorance of important facts connected therewith, binds himself to pay, and does pay, more than he was originally bound to pay. He is entitled to recover back the amount he has overpaid, with interest thereon from the time of payment.

87 *5. Equity Practice—Bonds—Application of Payments.—A debtor by four bonds payable at successive periods, makes payments to his creditor, which upon a settlement after the death of the debtor, are ascertained to amount to more than is sufficient to discharge the first bond. The creditor will not be permitted to apply the amount remaining after discharging the first bond as a credit upon the fourth; but the Court will apply it to the second bond in relief of a party bound as surety for the amount of the second bond.

6. Same—Same—Same—Case at Bar.—A creditor by two judgments and a bond files a bill against the ex'or of his debtor, and obtains a personal decree against the ex'or for the whole amount. Upon an execution which issued upon this decree a part of the money is made. The judgments being debts of highest dignity, the money so made is to be applied as a credit upon them, in relief of a party who is bound as a surety for the judgments.

7. Same—Same—Same—Judgments.—In this case the ex'or sells lands of his testator, and pays the proceeds to the creditor. As the judgments were liens upon the lands, the payments are to be applied as credits upon the judgments.

In 1783 a partnership was entered into by David Ross and Duncan M'Lauchlan, for carrying on a country store at the Point of Forks, now Columbia, in the county of Fluvanna. In this partnership David Ross was to be interested two thirds, and M'Lauchlan one third; and M'Lauchlan was the acting partner in conducting the business. This partnership was renewed and continued until 1794, when it was finally dissolved. M'Lauchlan continued to carry on business at the same place on his own account, and was employed in winding up the affairs of the partnership.

In 1802, the partners not having had a final settlement, an accountant was employed by them to settle up the books, and when he had finished his task Ross sent up an agent for the purpose of finally adjusting the business; and he submitted in writing a scheme of settlement, which was accepted by M'Lauchlan, in June 1802. The only provisions of this scheme which it is necessary to state, are, that M'Lauchlan was to take all the debts of the concern, and was to be allowed $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon Ross's two thirds of the *good debts for the expense and trouble of collection. And having had the slaves belonging to the concern in his possession since the dissolution of the partnership in 1794, he was to be charged with two thirds of the hires, with interest upon them; and he was to take the slaves and to be charged with two thirds of their value. In March 1803, Ross and M'Lauchlan met in Columbia for the purpose of executing the agreement of June 1802, when a statement of the account was made. In this account the good debts are set down at £ 1098. 0. 6., and the interest up to the 1st of April 1802, at £ 467. 15. 9. = £ 1566. 1. 9.: but it does not appear on the face of the account, that the deduction of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on two thirds thereof was made, but M'Lauchlan is charged with the whole two thirds. In the same account the valuation of the slaves is stated at £ 1085.; the hires are stated at £ 590., and the interest thereon at £ 128. 0. 8.; and M'Lauchlan is credited with £ 30. for expenses of young negroes, and £ 558. 6. 8. for one third of the slaves, their hires and interest thereon.

Upon this account the amount for which M'Lauchlan was to be responsible to Ross was £ 2413. 18. 9., for which he executed to Ross his four bonds bearing date the 3d of March 1803, payable the 1st of April 1803, 1804, 1805 and 1806, each for the sum of £ 603. 9. $8\frac{1}{2}$., with interest from the 1st of April 1802. And at the foot of the statement of the account the parties agreed that if there was any error the same should be rectified on both sides.

In May 1806, Ross recovered judgments against M'Lauchlan in the County court of Fluvanna, on the two bonds due in 1804 and 1805; whereupon M'Lauchlan obtained from that Court an injunction to these judgments, and executed an injunction bond with John Quarles and Joseph Haden as his sureties. The grounds on which the injunction was asked, were first that there was an error in the settlement of 1803, made *by charging him with a large sum as cash on hand, when the books shewed that at a previous period there was a much larger balance in his favour which had not been carried forward; and second, that various credits to which M'Lauchlan was entitled had not been allowed him on that settlement; and he claimed to have them set off against the judgments. These credits are stated in an account annexed to the bill.

Ross answered the bill, and replied specially to the claims set up. Those which existed before the settlement he objected to as concluded by that settlement; and as to the most important of them, that they had either been passed upon in the settlement or were without any foundation of evidence or justice. He admitted certain credits arising out of payments made and claims bought up since the settlement, and said that to meet these he had held up the bond first due, upon which these credits would be allowed: And he admitted one payment of 200 dollars through Forbes, which had been directed to be applied to the second bond; and which he had so directed to be so applied before the judgment thereon was recovered.

M'Lauchlan having died soon after the injunction was obtained, John Quarles qualified as his executor; and the injunction was dissolved early in the year 1807.

In March 1807 Ross revived his judgments against Quarles as the executor of M'Lauchlan, but the executions thereon were returned "no effects;" and he, in February 1808, instituted a suit in the late Chancery court of the Richmond district against Quarles the executor, to have a settlement of his administration account, and the payment, not only of his judgments, but of the fourth bond.

In this suit Quarles set up the same offsets to the plaintiff's claims that were set up in the injunction suit in Fluvanna County court; but they were rejected; and when the bill was afterwards amended and his *sureties in his official bond were made parties, they also set up these offsets; and they also insisted that there was error in the settlement of March 1803, in not allowing M'Lauchlan credit for a commission of seven and a half per cent. upon the two thirds of the good debts, for collection, according to Ross' proposition in March 1802, which was accepted by M'Lauchlan, and which was the basis of the settlement of March 1803; and that there was error also in not allowing M'Lauchlan his full one third of the price, hires and interest thereon, of the slaves.

In 1808 the defendant was directed to settle his administration account; and in June 1810 there was a decree against him for £ 1509. 12. $7\frac{1}{2}$., with interest on £ 1206. 19. 5. from the 1st of February 1810 until paid; and he was allowed to go before the commissioner to establish his set-offs to the residue of the plaintiff's demand. In June 1812 there was another decree in the cause, in which the Court, approving so much of the report as rejected the defendant's discounts, decreed against him, in favour of the plaintiff, for the further sum of £ 302. 16. $9\frac{1}{4}$., with interest from the 8th day of May 1810 until paid. And in 1815 there was a further decree, recommitting the commissioner's reports previously made in the cause, on the grounds that they were made before the sureties of Quarles had been brought before the Court; and that these sureties should have an opportunity to shew that they were erroneous. Accordingly, two reports were subsequently made: one by commissioner Parsons and the other by commissioner Shore; but it is unnecessary to give the details of either.

The cause lingered on the docket until March 1842, when it was transferred to the Circuit court of Fluvanna: It having been in the meantime revived, first in the name of Thomas T. Bouldin, executor of Ross, and on his death, in the name of 91 Frederick A. Ross, as *executor of Ross, and Thomas Shores, late sheriff of Fluvanna county, and as such administrator de bonis non of M'Lauchlan, and Basil M. Jones, administrator of Quarles.

Whilst this cause was pending in the Chancery court at Richmond, David Ross, in 1815, instituted an action in the Circuit court of Fluvanna against Joseph Haden, upon the injunction bond executed by M'Lauchlan, with Quarles and Haden as his sureties, upon obtaining the injunction above mentioned in the County court of Fluvanna in 1806. Whilst this action was pending, Ross and Haden had a meeting in the City of Richmond, when Ross made a statement of the debt for which Haden was bound, making the amount due on the 23d of December 1815, £ 1888. 12. 4., after credit in the claim with £ 600. the price of a tract of land purchased from the executor Quarles by Jacob Myers, and settled with Ross; and they entered into an agreement under seal, by which Haden agreed to pay Ross this sum in two equal payments, the first on the 23d of December 1815, and the second on the 23d of December 1816. And to facilitate the payments, Ross agreed to take young negroes at valuation.

In February 1816 Haden paid to Ross in negroes 3800 dollars. Between that time and the fall of 1818 Ross died; and Haden not having paid the balance appearing due upon the settlement of 1815, the suit in the Circuit court of Fluvanna was revived in the name of Thomas T. Bouldin, the executor of Ross; and at the fall term of the Court a judgment was rendered against Haden for the whole amount of the two judgments enjoined, with interest and damages; but the judgment was to be subject to any equitable credits which the defendant might have against it. In November 1818 Haden obtained an injunction to this judgment. In his bill he stated the pendency of the suit of Ross against Quarles the executor of 92 M'Lauchlan, and that it was then believed *that there was but an inconsiderable amount due from M'Lauchlan to Ross. He insisted that he should not be subjected to pay the judgment recovered against him until the real balance due to Ross was ascertained. That he had probably overpaid Ross, and was entitled to have such overpayment refunded. That Ross, in one of his amended bills, admitted he had made upon the execution which issued on the decree of 1810 against Quarles, near 500 dollars; that there were other payments which appeared from the commissioner's reports; that Ross had received through Myers 2000 dollars, and that he himself had paid 3800 dollars; both of which sums should be credits upon the judgment. He does not allude at all in his bill to the settlement made by Ross and himself in 1815.

Bouldin, in his answer, stated that he had heard of the payment by Haden in slaves before the judgment was recovered, but was not informed of the amount; and expected that the defendant in the action would produce the receipt on the trial, which, however, he had not done; but that he could at any time have obtained the credit by applying either to the respondent or his counsel. He stated that Ross and M'Lauchlan had a full settlement of their accounts in 1803. That Haden and Ross had a final settlement in 1815 of the amount which Haden was to pay, after giving him credit for £ 600. paid by Myers; which amount was £ 1888. 12. 4.: And he exhibited that settlement and agreement with his answer.

This cause also slept upon the docket until March 1842, when it was transferred to the Circuit court of Fluvanna. In that Court the two causes came on to be heard together, and the Court set aside the report of commissioner Shore, and directed a special statement to be made according to the views of the Court. Of this statement A is intended to shew the state of the accounts as 93 between Ross's executor and the administrators *of M'Lauchlan and Quarles; and statement B is intended to shew the state of the accounts as between Ross's executor and Haden. In both these statements there is a credit to M'Lauchlan for 7½ per cent. upon the amount of two thirds of the good debts belonging to Duncan M'Lauchlan & Co. at the time of the settlement in March 1803; which by Ross's proposition was to be allowed M'Lauchlan for collecting them. This amounted to £ 78. 6. 1. There was also a credit on account of charges for slaves £ 42. 13. 6½.; it appearing on the face of the account stated in 1803, that the credit allowed M'Lauchlan was that much less than one third of the charge for the price and hires of slaves and interest thereon. These two sums amounting to £ 120. 19. 7½. deducted equally from the four bonds executed at the time of the settlement, reduced them from £ 603. 9. 8½. to £ 573. 4. 9¼. There was also a credit to M'Lauchlan for certain tobacco and wheat amounting to £ 84. 6. 5. This tobacco and wheat was alleged to have been delivered to Davis, the agent of Ross, the day after he completed his settlement with M'Lauchlan in 1802, and it did not appear in the settlement of March 1803. But the same credit had been set up by M'Lauchlan in his injunction suit in the County court of Fluvanna, and also by Quarles before the commissioner in 1810, and had been rejected by both Courts. There was also a credit for the costs in the actions at law on the second and third bonds.

Besides these credits, there were others about which there was no question that they were proper credits in statement A, which included a charge of the fourth bond as well as the second and third; but which the plaintiff insisted were not properly credited in statement B, in which only the second and third bonds were charged. These credits the plaintiff insisted he had a right to apply to the discharge of the fourth bond, first, because the debtor had directed ments; and, second, because by the settlement between Ross and Haden, the latter was concluded from insisting on these credits; especially as in that settlement Ross had allowed him a credit for the payment made by Myers, to which it was insisted he was not entitled. These credits were first £ 150. 18. 1. Upon a settlement made in 1810, it appeared M'Lauchlan had overpaid the first bond to this amount. Second, £ 149. 17. 10½. made under an execution issued on the decree of 1810. Third, the proceeds of a lot in the town of Columbia, which belonged to M'Lauchlan's estate, and was sold in 1810. There were other credits about which there was no dispute. The statement A, after crediting the amount paid by Haden, shewed still a balance due from M'Lauchlan's estate to Ross of £ 483. 15. 3¾.; and statement B shewed that Haden had overpaid on the 8th February 1816, the amount for which he was responsible to Ross £ 632. 17.

The two causes came on to be finally heard in April 1844, when the Court confirmed the statements A and B, and made a decree against the sureties of Quarles the executor of M'Lauchlan, for the sum of £ 483. 15. 3¾., with interest thereon from the 8th of February 1816 until paid; but declined to make a decree against the representatives of M'Lauchlan or Quarles for said sum with interest, because the decrees before rendered in the cause against Quarles exceeded the amount due as aforesaid.

And in the second suit the Court reinstated the injunction granted to the plaintiff Haden so far as it had been dissolved by previous orders in the cause, and made it perpetual, and further decreed that the plaintiff in this suit should recover of Ross's executor, to be paid out of the assets of his testator in his hands to be administered, his costs and the further sum of £ 632. 17., the amount overpaid by Haden to Ross, 95 with interest *thereon from the date of the decree until paid: the Court being of opinion that it was not competent to give interest on the same from the date of such overpayment. From the decree in both cases Ross's executor applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Cooke, for the appellant.

Irvine and Stanard & Bouldin, for the appellees.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that in the statement A, referred to and adopted as the basis of the decree in the first of said suits, the Circuit Superior court erred in allowing as credits to reduce the amount of the debt due from Duncan M'Lauchlan to David Ross, the sum of £ 78. 6. 1. for commissions on two thirds of good debts, and also the sum of £ 42. 13. 6½. short credit for interest on the hires of slaves: and, therefore, there was error in reducing the amount of each bond from the sum of £ 603. 9. 8½. to £ 573. 4. 9¼., and making such reduced amount of the bonds the basis of calculations. The Court is further of opinion, that after the decree dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill, and the decree against John Quarles, ex'or of D. M'Lauchlan, and the proceedings had in this cause, it is too late to set up the credit of £ 84. 6. 5. for tobacco and wheat, allowed in said statement A, and that said Court erred in allowing said credit, and also the credit of £ 4. 14. 10¼. costs at law on the second and third bonds. The court is further of opinion, that when the Circuit court properly set aside the report of commissioner Shore, and caused the statement A to be made out as exhibiting the true balance due to the estate of D. Ross, for which the securities of John Quarles, the executor of D. M'Lauchlan, were liable, they should also have been debited with the sum of 166 96 dollars 11½ cents, or £ 49. *17. 3., the amount of costs decreed to said Ross against said Quarles on the 20th of June 1812, it appearing on the face of said proceedings, that said costs were recovered by said Ross in a suit instituted to obtain an account of the assets, and charging a devastavit, and were, therefore, a proper charge against the securities. The Court is, therefore, of opinion, that the statement A, and decree based thereon, are erroneous in allowing the credits above designated, and in omitting the charge for £ 49. 17. 3. costs aforesaid; and as a consequence, that all the calculations of interest and damages in said statement A, based upon the allowance of such credits and omission of such charge, are also erroneous. It is therefore considered, that the decree in the first of the above cases be reversed with costs to the appellant, and the cause remanded to the Circuit court, with instructions to commit the accounts to a commissioner, who is to take the statement A above referred to, as the basis of his report, and correcting the same so far, and so far only, as it is herein before declared to be erroneous, and modifying the calculations of interest and damages so as to conform with the true sums after disallowing the credits so as aforesaid improperly allowed, and charging the sum improperly omitted, and rejecting all other claims for charges or credits on either side, other than those appearing on the face of said statement, or herein mentioned, the balance so appearing, will be the amount for which, with interest, the appellant in the first of said suits will be entitled to a decree.

And in the second of said suits of Ross's ex'or against the representative of Joseph Haden deceased, the Court is of opinion, that the statement B, made out and adopted as the basis of the decree rendered in the last suit, was erroneous in allowing as credits to reduce the bonds the sums of £ 87. 6. 1. and £ 42. 13. 6½., and therefore there was error in reducing the amount of each bond from £ 603. 9. 8½. to 97 £ 573. 4. 9¼. and, making *such reduced amount of the bonds the basis of calculation. The Court is further of opinion, that the security in the injunction bond was precluded by the decree dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill, from setting up credits passed upon by said decree between the creditor and his principal, and therefore the Court erred in allowing a credit for £ 84. 6. 5. for tobacco and wheat. The Court is therefore of opinion, that said statement B, and the decree based thereon, are erroneous in allowing the credits aforesaid, and as a consequence, that the calculations of interest and damages in the statement B, based on the allowance of such credits, are also erroneous. The Court is further of opinion, that notwithstanding the agreement of the 21st of October 1815, between said J. Haden and D. Ross, it was competent for the former or his representative, to shew that the same was entered into by him in ignorance of the true amount due on the judgments enjoined, and that by a proper application of the payments received by Ross out of the proceeds of his debtor's estate, the amount due on said judgments enjoined, was less than the sum set forth in the agreement of the 21st of October 1815. And the Court is further of opinion, that as the judgments constituted a lien on the real estate, and a debt of the highest dignity against the assets, it was the duty of said Ross to apply the payments received principally from the sale of the real estate to the credit of the judgments, and if, by his failure to do so, the security in the injunction bond, has been induced when ignorant of the misapplication of the payments by the creditor, to enter into a compromise by which he bound himself to pay, and did pay a larger sum than could rightfully have been demanded from him, such compromise and payment should not prevent the security from recovering back the money so overpaid by mistake; and upon sums so overpaid by mistake as aforesaid, the party is entitled to recover interest. The *Court is therefore of opinion, that said decree is also erroneous to the prejudice of the appellee in not allowing interest on the sum which it was ascertained he was entitled to recover back. It is therefore ordered and decreed, that the decree is erroneous, and the same is reversed; but as it is manifest the appellee, by the allowance of interest on the sum overpaid by him, will be the party substantially prevailing, as the sum, though reduced by the principles of this opinion, to which the appellee will be entitled, together with interest from the time when the same was paid to the period of rendering the decree, it is apparent, will exceed the amount of the decree appealed from, it is further ordered and decreed, that the appellee recover his costs to be levied, &c. And the cause is remanded, with instructions to commit the accounts to a commissioner, who is to take the statement B, above referred to, as the basis of his report, and correcting the same so far only as the same is herein declared to be erroneous, and modifying the calculations of interest and damages so as to conform to the said statement as corrected, and rejecting all other claims for credit or charges on either side, than such as appear on the face of the statement; for the balance ascertained by the statement so corrected, and calculations so modified, to have been overpaid by the said J. Haden, with interest thereon as aforesaid, the representative of said Haden will be entitled to a decree against the appellant, which is ordered to be certified.

April Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

1. Legatees—Division of Slaves among by Commissioner—Death of One of Slaves before Confirmation—Effect—Case at Bar.—Commissioners are appointed to divide slaves among legatees, and are directed to allot and deliver to each his share. They make the division, and deliver to each legatee the slaves allotted to him. The legatees are satisfied at the time, with the division and allotment; and each takes possession of the slaves allotted to him, and thenceforth exercises ownership over them. Before the report of the commissioners is confirmed a slave allotted to one of the legatees dies, and he therefore objects to the confirmation of the report. HELD: That under these circumstances each party would have been entitled to the benefit of any increase in the value of his allotment, from the time of such division and taking exclusive possession, and is also bound to bear the loss occasioned by the death of any one of the slaves thereafter; though at the time of such increase in value or loss the report may not have been formally confirmed.
2. Wills—Construction—Case at Bar.—Testator gives all his estate, real and personal, to his widow, until his youngest child comes of age; and directs that it shall then be divided, one third to his widow for her life, and subject to the widow's life estate, equally among his children; but he charges the interest of his daughter W. with £500, advanced to her on her marriage. W. and her husband convey for value all her interest in the real estate to M.; and the husband conveys to M., for value, all his wife's interest in the personal estate. The estate is divided according to the directions of the will, when the youngest child comes of age, when M. receives the share of W., abated by the whole charge of £500. After the division, and in the lifetime of the husband, M. purchases the life estate of the widow in one of the slaves allotted to her, and sells the slave. The husband dies in the lifetime of the widow, leaving his wife W. surviving him, and then the widow dies. HELD:
 1. Same—Same—Same.—M. is not entitled, under his purchase from the husband, to the interest of W. in the personal estate allotted to the widow for her life; but it survives to W.
 2. Same—Same—Same.—M. is not entitled to the share of W. in the slave, the life estate in which he purchased from the widow.
- 100 *3. Same—Same—Same.—M. must account for said slave at her value at the time of the widow's death; except as to those of the legatees who consented to the sale by him.
4. Same—Same—Same.—W. must bear her proportion of the charge of £500; and to ascertain that proportion M. is to be debited with the value of the estate real and personal allotted to him on the first division of the estate, at its value at that time, and the value of the real estate to which he is entitled at the death of the widow, at its value at the time of her death. And W. is to be debited with the value of the slaves to which she is entitled at the death of the widow, as of their value at that time; and the £500 is to be charged ratably to each.

Dr. Gustavus B. Horner, late of the county of Fauquier, died in 1815. By his will, which was admitted to probat in the County court of Fauquier, he directed that until his youngest daughter, Marianna, attained the age of fourteen years, his estate which might remain after the payment of his debts, should be kept undivided, and that the profits should be used by his executors for the maintenance of his widow and his unmarried children. And when the youngest daughter attained the age of fourteen years, his widow should receive such portion of his estate as she would be entitled to if he had died intestate; and the remainder thereof should be equally divided among his eight children; except that the share of his daughter Frances Whiting should be charged with the sum of £ 500., which he had advanced to her on her marriage with George B. Whiting.

In the year 1817 George B. Whiting and his wife Frances, by deed bearing date the 11th day of August of that year, in consideration of 1708 dollars 34 cents conveyed to Thomas L. Moore, the interest of Frances Whiting in the real estate of her father. And on the same day George B. Whiting, in consideration of 1000 dollars, conveyed to Moore the whole interest of his wife in the personal estate of Gustavus B. Horner.

In December 1826 the estate of Gustavus B. Horner was divided under a decree 101 of the late Chancery court *of Fredericksburg, when there were allotted to the widow slaves valued at 2375 dollars, and two tracts of land in the county of Fauquier, one of which was called Turkey run, and a house and lot in Warrenton; and the share of each of the children in the slaves amounted to 850 dollars. At this time Thomas L. Moore was entitled to two shares of the estate: one in right of his wife, who was one of the children of Dr. Horner, and the other by virtue of the conveyances from George B. Whiting and his wife to him; but the latter was subject to the charge of £ 500. under the will of Dr. Horner. In making the division the commissioners charged this £ 500. against his interest in the slaves, as well that which he held in right of his wife, as that of Mrs. Whiting; so that he only received, on account of his interest in the slaves, the sum of 33 dollars 34 cents; but he received the whole of Mrs. Whiting's interest in the real estate then divided.

Thomas B. Whiting died in 1835, in the lifetime of Mrs. Horner. She died in 1837, and Frances Whiting survived them.

In 1838 James B. Thornton and Marianna his wife, who was the youngest daughter of Dr. Horner, filed their bill in the Circuit court of Fauquier county, against Thomas L. Moore and his wife and others, the children of Dr. Horner, or persons claiming under them, in which they asked for a division of the property which had been assigned to Mrs. Horner for her life, and for an account of the rents of land and hires of slaves which had been received by any of the parties since the death of Mrs. Horner; and also for an account of any firewood, timber, building stone or any other profit which any of the parties had obtained from the land. This bill did not make Mrs.

Frances Whiting a party.

102 *Moore and wife answered the bill, and claimed that they were entitled to five eighths of the property, one eighth in right of Mrs. Moore, and the others by purchase; and of these one was the interest of Mrs. Whiting. The other defendants also answered; and in October 1838 the Court made a decree appointing commissioners to divide the tract of land called Turkey run among the parties, assigning five eighths thereof to John Glassell as trustee for Moore and wife; and also to divide the slaves, and assign five eighths thereof to Glassell on the same trust; and appointing other commissioners to sell the house and lot in Warrenton. And a commissioner was directed to take an account of the rents and hires of the property to which the parties were respectively entitled from the time of the death of Mrs. Horner until the 1st of January 1839. At the same term of the Court so much of this decree as directed a division of the slaves was set aside.

In December 1838, the plaintiffs filed an amended bill making Frances Whiting a party defendant: and she answered, and insisted that as her husband, George B. Whiting, had died in the lifetime of Mrs. Horner, before the slaves allotted to the widow were or were capable of being reduced into possession by Moore, she was entitled to them, notwithstanding the conveyance by her husband to Moore.

The commissioners appointed to divide the land, made their report; and the cause came on again to be heard in May 1839, when the Court confirmed the report; and that branch of the cause was then terminated. The Court further held that Frances Whiting was entitled to an equal division of the dower slaves of the widow of Gustavus B. Horner deceased, with the other legatees, notwithstanding the sale and assignment of her interest therein by her deceased husband, for valuable consideration to Thomas L. Moore; and made a decree, directing a commissioner of the 103 Court to ascertain *the value of the dower of the said widow at the time of its assignment to her, and at her death; the value of each child's interest in the same at both of these periods; the value of said Frances Whiting's interest, both real and personal, in the estate of Dr. Horner, which Moore received on the division thereof; and the value of the said Frances Whiting's interest in the real estate assigned to the said widow, both at the time of the assignment and at the death of the widow; and the value of her share of the dower slaves at said periods. And the Court not then deciding whether the interest of the said Frances in the dower slaves aforesaid, was subject to the £ 500. charged by the will of Dr. Horner on her share of his estate, directed the commissioner to report a scheme for division of said slaves, whereby the share of the said Frances in the dower slaves of the widow of Gustavus B. Horner would be subject to a portion of said charge of £ 500., estimating the value of said dower slaves at the period when the same were allotted to the widow; and also at the time of her death. And the Court further directed the commissioner to settle the accounts between the devisees and legatees of Dr. Horner, ascertaining the value of the stone and wood which either of them may have taken from the dower estate of the widow; and taking into the accounts the value at the time of the widow's death, of a slave named Celia, one of the dower slaves admitted by Thomas B. Moore to have been sold by him. And that the commissioner should take an account of the rents and hires which had accrued since the widow's death to the end of the current year; and to whom the same was chargeable.

In obedience to this decree, master commissioner Knox made a report which was returned on the 4th of April 1840. From this report, it appeared that the £ 500. charged by Dr. Horner on the share of his estate bequeathed to his daughter, Frances Whiting, had been *charged to Thomas L. Moore, as hereinbefore stated, upon the division of the estate in 1826. It also appeared from the report, that if the share of Mr. Whiting in the dower slaves was to bear an equal proportion of the charge of £ 500., then, if the whole interest was to be valued as at the time of the division in 1826, she should be charged with 126 dollars 81 cents; but if the whole share was to be valued as at the death of Mrs. Horner in 1837, Mrs. Whiting's proportion of the charge would be 203 dollars 70 cents. It also appeared, that the slave Celia was sold by Moore for 250 dollars, in 1827; and that she was worth at the death of Mrs. Horner, 350 dollars. And it further appeared, that Moore had obtained from the Turkey run land, during the lifetime of Mrs. Horner, a quantity of stone for the purpose of rebuilding his house, which had been burned; and had also obtained from the land twenty-five cart loads of wood.

Moore filed several exceptions to the report of commissioner Knox; the second of which was to the charge against him for the stone taken from the Turkey run land. This he insisted was not a proper charge; but if he was chargeable at all, that the commissioner had charged him with more than he had taken. And he introduced testimony which satisfied the Court below, that the second branch of the exception was properly taken.

In October 1840, the cause was removed to the Circuit court of Culpeper county; and came on there to be heard in November 1841, when the Court overruled some of the exceptions, sustained the second, and referred the case to a commissioner to correct the account by charging Moore with three hundred and fifty perches and five feet of stone at the price fixed by commissioner Knox. The Court further directed the commissioner to state an account between the devisees and legatees of Dr. Horner, shewing the balance due from *them to each other; in stating which account he was directed to charge Moore with the value of Celia, the dower slave sold by him, at the price of 350 dollars, except as to the shares of such of the legatees as had consented to the sale; and as to whom he was to be charged with the price of that slave at 250 dollars, after deducting therefrom the value of the dower interest of Mrs. Horner in the slave, which interest had been acquired by Moore previous to the sale, and in the lifetime of George B. Whiting. And the Court further held, that the charge of £ 500. upon Mrs. Whiting's share of Dr. Horner's estate should have been taken out of her share of the real and personal estate divided in 1826, the personal property being first set off against the said £ 500., and the balance of that sum being charged upon the land; that therefore Moore had a claim against George B. Whiting for so much as was chargeable upon the land under the warranty of his deed; and as it appeared that Whiting had conveyed property subject to the payment of his debts, in trust for Mrs. Whiting, the commissioner was directed to take an account shewing the value of all the property which came into Mrs. Whiting's possession since the death of her husband, under said deed. And commissioners were appointed to divide the dower slaves aforesaid, and deliver to the parties the slaves allotted to them respectively, except the slaves allotted to Mrs. Whiting, which were to be hired out by the commissioners.

The commissioner to whom the accounts were referred, made a report which was returned in October 1842. And the commissioners to divide and deliver the slaves, also made a report which was filed at the same time. From this report it appeared that they had proceeded in December 1841 to execute the decree of November 1841, and had divided the slaves, and delivered to the parties respectively, at the time of the division, the shares allotted to them; except that of Mrs. Whiting.

*Moore excepted to the report of the commissioner upon the accounts between the parties; but these exceptions do not refer to any question decided by this Court. He also excepted to the report of the commissioners appointed to divide the slaves, and to a confirmation of that report, on the ground that Mary, one of the slaves allotted to him by the commissioners, had died about the 9th of September 1842, after the division, but before the commissioners had made out, signed or returned their report. With his exception, he filed his own affidavit of the death of the slave Mary, and also the affidavit of the physician who attended her, with the consent in writing of the counsel for two of the parties in this suit, that compensation in money might be decreed to him for the loss of the slave, instead of another division; and the statement of another of the counsel in the cause that he had understood from John Marr, one of the parties to this suit, and had no doubt of the fact, that the said slave Mary was dead, and had died since the division of the slaves.

The cause came on again to be heard in November 1842, when the Court recommitted the accounts to the commissioner, and on the motion of the defendant John Marr, suspended action on the report of the commissioners for the division of the slaves; and allowed to the parties until the next term of the Court, to take evidence in relation to the subject of Moore's exception to this report.

It appeared from the evidence, that the commissioners proceeded in December 1841, to divide the slaves in pursuance of the decree of the previous November. That the slaves allotted to the parties respectively, except those allotted to Mrs. Whiting, were delivered to them. That a Mr. Wallace was requested to draw up their report, and consented to do it; and more than once applied for the papers to one of the commissioners with whom they were left, for the purpose of preparing the *report; but the commissioner having lent to Moore the copy of the decree under which they had acted, and he having mislaid it, for the want of that paper the report was not prepared in time to be returned to the spring term of the Court for 1842.

It further appeared, that all the parties were satisfied with the division when it was made. That Moore took possession of the slaves allotted to him; that he sold one of them; that he pledged the slave Mary, in April 1842, to indemnify his surety in certain forthcoming bonds. That several executions against him were levied upon her in May 1842; that at the June Court of Fauquier county, she was to have been sold, but the sale was postponed by the plaintiffs, as the sheriff understood, at the request of Moore. That at the July Court, when she was again to be sold, the sheriff applied to Moore for her, for the purpose of selling her, when he was informed by Moore that he had sent her to a Mr. M'Elhany in Loudoun county, for the purpose of selling her at private sale; and therefore she was not sold at that time by the sheriff. There was no evidence that she was dead, except that which was filed by Moore with his exception as before stated.

The commissioner returned his report upon the accounts between the parties in June 1843, to which Moore excepted. His first exception was to the charge against him, in favour of Mrs. Whiting, for her share of the value of the slave Celia. The ground of this exception was, that George B. Whiting had sold to him all the interest of his wife in the personal estate of her father; and that he had, in the lifetime of said Whiting, acquired the life estate of Mrs. Horner in this slave; and therefore that Mrs. Whiting, though she survived her husband, was not entitled to any interest in this slave.

The cause came on to be finally heard in June 1843, when the Court overruled the exception of the defendant *Moore, to the report of the commissioners for the division of the slaves; the said defendant having failed, though indulged with time for that purpose, to produce any satisfactory evidence of the alleged death of the slave Mary, and the material facts in relation thereto. And the said report and the division of the slaves therein mentioned was confirmed; and the decree was accordingly.

And the Court overruled the exceptions of Moore to the report of the commissioner returned in June 1843, and made a decree in accordance with the report.

At the term when this cause was decided, in the course of the argument, the counsel for some of the parties opposed in interest to Moore, suggested that the death of the slave Mary did not appear by any legal evidence, and would not be admitted, unless all other facts which he deemed material to the question, were also admitted to be true. Whereupon Moore moved the Court to continue the cause to afford him time to prove the fact of the death of said slave, if the Court regarded the proof of that fact already furnished, insufficient. And to sustain this motion, he relied on his own affidavit, and the other proofs before mentioned. But the Court deciding that the proof of the death of the slave and the material circumstances relating thereto, were not sufficient, and that ample time to obtain the said proof had been allowed, overruled the motion, and proceeded to confirm the said report, and to make a decree in the cause. To which opinion of the Court, Moore excepted. And the Court certified that at the previous term, the matter of Moore's exception in relation to the death of the slave Mary, was argued, and was not then decided on by the Court, because the facts in relation to her death, and such as the parties deemed material in deciding upon that exception, were not in proof, and therefore time was allowed the parties until the present term, to take their testimony in relation thereto.

*Moore applied to this Court for an appeal from the decrees in the cause, which was allowed.

Harrison for the appellant.
Lyons for the appellees.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that as it appears by the interlocutory decree of the 6th November 1841, the commissioners thereby appointed were directed to divide the dower slaves and allot the same to the parties respectively entitled, and to deliver over to the parties respectively the shares so allotted to them, except the share allotted to Frances Whiting, which the commissioners were to hire out; and the said commissioners having, in pursuance of such decree, divided said slaves, and the parties having drawn their shares respectively by lot, the same were delivered to them, and thereafter each exercised exclusive ownership over the share so allotted to each respectively; and no objection appearing to have been alleged against the fairness of the division when made, either at the time of the division or afterwards, under the circumstances so appearing, each party would have been entitled to the benefit of any increase in the value of his allotment from the time of such division and taking exclusive possession; and is also bound to bear the loss occasioned by the death of any one of the slaves thereafter, though at the time of such increase in value or loss, the report may not have been formally confirmed. The Court is therefore of opinion there was no error in overruling the exception on account of the death of the slave Mary, or in overruling the motion for a continuance to enable the party to take further evidence touching the time of her death.

The Court is further of opinion, that the £ 500. directed by the testator Gustavus B. Horner to be *charged against his daughter Frances Whiting, as having been advanced to her on her marriage, was a charge against her portion of the real and personal estate, to be distributed according to the will of the testator amongst his children. That it appears from the report of commissioner Knox, filed on the 4th of April 1840, that the appellant Thomas L. Moore, in his own right and as alienee of George B. Whiting and wife, and assignee of said George B. Whiting, received at the first distribution of said estate the whole of Mrs. Whiting's interest in the real estate, slaves and perishable property then divided and distributed, abated and diminished by the £ 500. charged as an advancement in the will, whereby the whole amount of said £ 500. was charged on the portion of Mrs. Whiting in said estate then assigned to and received by said Moore as alienee and assignee, whereby the reversion in the dower lands and slaves was wholly freed from any charge on account of said £ 500.; an arrangement calculated to promote the convenience of all concerned, if, as was then supposed, the assignment had operated to pass the interest of the said Frances Whiting in the reversion of the dower slaves. But in the contingency which has happened, of her surviving her husband, who died before the life-tenant, and becoming by such survivorship entitled to take her interest in such dower slaves on the death of the tenant for life, she should take them charged with a rateable portion of said £ 500.; otherwise the whole amount of the charge would be thrown upon the assignee and alienee of a portion of the estate, instead of being, what by the will it was intended to be, a charge on the whole of her portion. And the appellant, by allowing the whole abatement to be made from the share received by him at the first division and distribution, has, in the contingency which has happened, paid out and advanced so much as would have been the rateable proportion 111 *chargeable on the interest of said Frances Whiting in the dower slaves; and to that extent has a right to charge said interest. In ascertaining the amount so chargeable the appellant should be debited with the whole value of Mrs. Whiting's interest in the land at the time of the first division, and in the slaves and perishable estate; also the value of her interest in the dower land at the death of the widow; and Mrs. Whiting should be debited with the value of her interest in the dower slaves at the widow's death. And the amounts being so ascertained, the £ 500. should be charged rateably on each; and for the amount so chargeable to Mrs. Whiting on account of her interest in the dower slaves, the appellant will be entitled to a credit against her or a decree, as on an adjustment of the accounts between them may be proper. The Court is therefore of opinion, that the interlocutory and final decrees, so far as they conflict with the principles aforesaid, are erroneous; but that in all other respects the same be affirmed. The said decrees are therefore reversed, with costs against Frances Whiting, and are remanded, in order to be corrected in the particular hereinbefore declared to be erroneous as between the appellant and said Frances Whiting, and to be further proceeded in in order to a final decree.

DANIEL, J., dissented. He was of opinion that by the assignment of George B. Whiting, Mrs. Whiting's interest in the slaves passed to Moore. And he was of opinion that Moore was improperly charged with the slave Mary, who died before the report of the commissioners was confirmed.

mination of the controversy, and his adversary is exposed to the danger of injustice from loss of information and evidence, and means of recourse against others, occasioned by deaths, insolvencies and other untoward circumstances.

2. Same—Same—Discretion of Court.—The application of this equitable doctrine is for the sound discretion of the Court; and does not require the conviction of the Court against the original justice of the claim, or of any other specific ground of defence; but its belief that, under the circumstances of the case, it is too late to ascertain the merits of the controversy.

3. Same—Same—Case at Bar.—A case in which the Court refused relief on the ground of laches and lapse of time.

This was a suit in equity, instituted in September 1845 in the Circuit court of Louisa county, by the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed, and children, of Garland Thompson deceased, against the administrators de bonis non with the will annexed, of Nathaniel A. Smith deceased, his widow and children, and others. The case stated in the original, amended and supplemental bills, was substantially as follows: That in the year 1815, William Mitchell, jr., and Charles Thompson, jr., borrowed of Francis Jerdone the sum of 10,000 dollars, for which they gave their joint obligation with Thomas Price, jr., of Hanover county, and several other persons as their sureties. That in 1821 William Mitchell, jr., paid to Jerdone his moiety of the debt, and then took from 113 Charles Thompson, jr., a bond, with Nathaniel Thompson and Nathaniel A. Smith, as his sureties, to secure Mitchell and his heirs against the payment of Charles Thompson's half of the bond. That this bond, though it had been sought for in every place where it might be expected to be, had not been found, and they charged, therefore, that it was lost. That William Mitchell, jr., died in 1822; and by his will he gave one half of his estate to his mother Isabella Mitchell, and the other half to his sister Mrs. Garland Thompson; and that Garland Thompson qualified as his executor, with Charles Goodall and others as his sureties. That Isabella Mitchell afterwards died, and left her estate to Mrs. Garland Thompson. That thus a large part of the estate of William Mitchell, jr., had become the property of Garland Thompson; and that the complainants had inherited from him a considerable property. That Garland Thompson died in 1835; and Charles Thompson, jr., qualified as his executor, and also as administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of William Mitchell, jr. That he had been lately removed, and the plaintiff Philip M. Thompson had qualified on the estate of Garland Thompson, and that of William Mitchell had been committed to the sergeant of the City of Richmond. That until recently before the institution of the suit, Charles and Nathaniel Thompson were in prosperous circumstances, and fully able to pay the balance due upon the bond to Jerdone; but that they had then become irretrievably insolvent. That the administrators of Jerdone had recovered a judgment upon the bond against Thomas Price's representative, who had paid the amount, and had sued the sureties of Garland Thompson as executor of William Mitchell, jr., for the devastavit of the executor, and had recovered a judgment against them; and they, having discharged the judgment, had filed their bill against the complainants as the administrators de bonis non with the will annexed of Garland *Thompson and Isabella Mitchell, and the heirs at law and devisees of Garland Thompson and Isabella Mitchell, who were the residuary legatees of William Mitchell, to have satisfaction of the amount so paid by them, with interest and costs.

The parties defendants to the bill were the personal representative, widow and children of Smith, Charles Thompson, jr., and Nathaniel Thompson, the sureties of Garland Thompson as executor of Mitchell, and others; and the prayer of the bill was, that the representative, devisees and legatees of Smith might be compelled to indemnify and save the complainants harmless against all loss or injury on account of the debt of Jerdone, and particularly against the demand of the sureties of Garland Thompson as executor of Mitchell, and for general relief.

The complainants filed with their bill, the will of William Mitchell, in which he stated that he and Charles Thompson, jr., had borrowed of Jerdone 10,000 dollars; of which he had paid his moiety, and had taken of Charles Thompson, jr., his bond for 5000 dollars, with Nathaniel Thompson and Nathaniel Smith. But this will was specially excepted to by the Smiths as incompetent evidence against them.

The personal representative, heirs and legatees of Smith, demurred to the original and amended bills, and also answered them. It is unnecessary to state the grounds of demurrer. In their answer, they denied all knowledge of the bond to Jerdone; and alleged that they had never heard until 1843, of the bond which the complainants sought to set up against their testator. And they required the fullest proof that the bond ever existed; or if it once existed, that it had not been intentionally destroyed by Garland Thompson.

The only question of fact really in dispute in the cause, was as to the existence of the bond of indemnity to Mitchell. As to that, Charles Thompson, jr., 115 *was examined, and stated, that some time in the year 1814 or 1815, William Mitchell and himself borrowed of Francis Jerdone 10,000 dollars, and executed a bond for the same, with some three or more sureties. That about the year 1820 or 1821, Mitchell paid one half of this bond, 5000 dollars, to Jerdone, and required of Thompson to execute a bond to him as an indemnity for the other half, which he did, with Nathaniel Thompson and Nathaniel A. Smith as his sureties; the condition of which last mentioned bond was to indemnify and save harmless the said William Mitchell from all liability as co-obligor in the said bond of 10,000 dollars to Jerdone. That William Mitchell was living in Richmond at the time the bond was executed: that he wrote to Thompson on the subject, who, in his answer, mentioned Nathaniel Thompson and Nathaniel A. Smith as his sureties; to which Mitchell assented. He says further, "I think I drew the bond, and when it was executed, I expect William Mitchell was in Richmond. I procured the signatures of the sureties, and sent the bond, when executed, to William Mitchell." He had no recollection of ever seeing the bond afterwards.

The defendants, the Smiths, introduced evidence to impeach the accuracy of the statements of this witness, and one of the Judges of this Court was disposed to question whether the bond had ever been delivered to Mitchell; but the Court did not deem it necessary to decide that question. The other facts stated in the bill were made out by the proofs.

In the progress of the cause, a tract of land belonging to the heirs of Nathaniel A. Smith was sold by the consent of the parties, and the proceeds were held subject to the future order of the Court.

The cause came on to be finally heard in September 1849, when the Court was of opinion that the execution of the bond by Nathaniel A. Smith deceased, and others, was fully established by the testimony; and it appearing that the other parties to the said bond were insolvent, and that the parties had agreed that the proceeds of the land sold as aforesaid, should be devoted to the satisfaction of the liability created by said bond, if the Court should sustain the plaintiff's claim; and the Court being further of opinion, that Goodall and others, the sureties of Garland Thompson, as executor of William Mitchell deceased, upon the recovery of the judgment against them by Price's executors, became entitled to the benefit of said indemnifying bond, and to all the rights and remedies to which Garland Thompson, as the executor of William Mitchell, would have been entitled; and the Court being further of opinion, that all the parties being before the Court, the parties ultimately liable should be decreed at once to satisfy the claims of the sureties of Garland Thompson as executor of William Mitchell deceased, to the relief of the complainants who were the legatees of Garland Thompson: It was therefore decreed, that out of the proceeds of the land aforesaid, the costs of all the parties in the cause, except the representatives and distributees of Nathaniel A. Smith, and Charles Thompson, jr., and Nathaniel Thompson, should first be paid; and then, that there should be paid to the said Goodall and others, the sum of 6922 dollars 64 cents; that being the amount paid by them as the sureties of Garland Thompson as executor of William Mitchell, in satisfaction of the judgment of Price's executors against them; and also the sum of 109 dollars 29 cents; and to the plaintiffs the sum of 27 dollars 36 cents, that being the amount of the costs of the parties, plaintiffs and defendants, in the suit of Goodall and others against the devisees and legatees of Garland Thompson deceased. From this decree, the devisees and legatees of Smith applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

The plaintiffs in this case have shewn no original equity to set up and enforce the bond of indemnity in the proceedings mentioned, against the representatives of Nathaniel Smith, one of the sureties therein. According to their own pretensions, the plaintiffs are the representatives of Garland Thompson, and not of William Mitchell, to whom that bond is alleged to have been executed; and the condition thereof was not for the indemnity of the representatives of Thompson, but of Mitchell. Nor have the plaintiffs acquired any equity from the circumstance that the estate of Garland Thompson was derived in part from William Mitchell; the bond of indemnity not being a covenant running with the estate of Mitchell, whether real or personal, against others acquiring the same as purchasers, or as volunteers.

If the plaintiffs can derive any equity against the sureties in the bond of indemnity, it must be from a subrogation by anticipation to the successive remedies of others. These remedies are, the judgment of the administrators of Jerdone, upon the original bond which was the subject of the indemnity, against the executors of Price who was one of the sureties therein—the judgment on the relation of Price's executors against the sureties in the official bond of Garland Thompson, who had been executor of William Mitchell—the claim of those sureties to reimbursement against the representatives of Garland Thompson—the claim of those representatives to be reimbursed by Mitchell's representatives—and a consequent claim of the latter to the protection afforded by the bond of indemnity.

It is therefore only by treating their suit as a bill quia timet, and for subrogation against those who ought ultimately to be subjected to a burthen with which they are threatened, that the plaintiffs can be entitled, if at all, to the relief which they seek. In that aspect of their case, their claim is to a mere equity, which, like other equities, is open to the defence of laches and lapse of time.

The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, when applicable to a legal demand, as in the case of a debt secured by bond, may be repelled by satisfactory evidence that the debt in point of fact has not been paid. That presumption arose in regard to the original bond executed by

Mitchell and Charles Thompson and their sureties to Jerdone, which was payable in January 1815, and upon which the action of Jerdone's administrators was not brought until after the expiration of about 30 years. The judgment recovered by the plaintiffs in that action, is conclusive, as between the parties thereto, against the presumption of payment: but it does not conclude the representatives of Nathaniel A. Smith, who were neither parties nor privies, and the judgment was recovered by default, and without notice to them pending the action. The question therefore arising upon the legal presumption of payment, and the evidence relied upon to repel it, is still open in the present suit: but upon that question, the Court deems it unnecessary to express an opinion. Nor is it necessary to decide another question presented by the pleadings and evidence, to wit, whether the alleged bond of indemnity was ever executed by Nathaniel Smith.

The plaintiffs in the present suit are not seeking the aid of a Court of equity to enforce a legal demand on their part against the representatives of Nathaniel Smith. They never had any cause of action upon the bond of indemnity alleged to have been executed by Charles Thompson and his sureties to Mitchell. They have at most, as above indicated, a mere equity to be subrogated to the place of Mitchell's representative, upon the supposition that the latter may be coerced to pay the balance asserted to have been in arrear upon 119 the original *bond, and the fear that the plaintiffs may consequently be subjected to the loss. Without deciding upon the original merits of the case in that aspect, the Court is of opinion that the plaintiffs are debarred in a Court of equity, under the circumstances of laches and lapse of time disclosed by the record, from the relief which they seek.

This suit was not brought until August 1845, more than 34 years after the original bond to Jerdone was payable, and more than 23 years after the date of the bond of indemnity. In the mean time, Garland Thompson was the executor of Mitchell, from December 1822 until he died in May 1835, a period of nearly 13 years; and it was his duty to make payment of the debt to Jerdone, or require it to be paid by Charles Thompson; and Charles Thompson himself was administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Mitchell, from May 1836, and also the executor of Garland Thompson, from June 1835, until the revocation of his powers as such in April 1844; and was bound to see to the discharge of the debt, in his representative, as well as his individual character. And yet, the debt to Jerdone, and the claim of Mitchell's estate to indemnify were suffered to sleep until after Charles Thompson, the original debtor, became, within a few years before the institution of this suit, utterly insolvent. And now after such great lapse of time, and laches on the part of the plaintiffs, and those through whom they derive their supposed equity, they seek by a bill quia timet to set up the bond of indemnity against the representatives of a deceased surety, upon the supposition of its accidental loss, because it cannot be found, and does not appear ever to have been seen by any one since the time of its alleged execution and delivery to Mitchell.

The pretensions of the plaintiffs against the representatives of Smith, are at war with the sound and well settled doctrine of equity, derived not merely from the 120 *presumptions and bars which prevail at law, but still more comprehensive, and founded upon considerations of policy and justice that require those who invoke its jurisdiction, to do so within a reasonable time, instead of lying by until by their supineness and negligence, there can no longer be a safe determination of the controversy, and their adversaries are exposed to the danger of injustice from loss of information and evidence and means of recourse against others, occasioned by deaths, insolvencies and other untoward circumstances. The application of this equitable doctrine is for the sound discretion of the equitable forum, and does not require the conviction of the Court against the original justice of the claim, or of any other specific ground of defence, but its belief that under the circumstances of the case, it is too late to ascertain the merits of the controversy.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief which they seek, and that the defendants, whose property has been sequestrated and sold in the progress of the cause, must be restored to the proceeds thereof.

Decree reversed with costs, and bill dismissed with costs.

DANIEL, J., dissented. He was for affirming the decree.

*Prestons v. M'Call.

July Term, 1850, Lewisburg.

(Absent BROOKE, J.)

Lease of Salt Mines—Case at Bar.—The Ps leased to O & S their salt works, &c., upon a rent of two thirds of the salt manufactured; and O & S bound themselves to manufacture at least 60,000 bushels of salt per annum, so that the rent should not be less than 40,000 bushels for each year: and the salt was to be considered delivered to the lessors when measured to them at the salt works. If the water was not sufficient to make 100,000 bushels per annum, the lessees might give up the lease on six months notice: And the lessees bound themselves not to assign their lease without the consent of the lessors. The Ps further leased to O & S their plantation, &c., on consideration that O & S should sell the salt accruing to the Ps for rent, and collect and pay over the same to the Ps; and it was agreed that all the salt sold should be considered as sold, two thirds for the Ps and one third for O & S, and so to be accounted for by O & S. And if the lessees failed to comply with their contract the lessors might enter upon them and avoid the contract upon two months notice. A few weeks before the end of the first year O & S, with the consent of the Ps, assigned their lease to M & K, and transferred to them their stock of every kind; and M & K bound themselves to assume and pay all the contracts, debts and liabilities, relating to the salt making business, not therefore paid by O & S. On the next day M & K took another lease of the same property from the Ps upon a rent reserved in money. O & S whilst they held their lease purchased horses to be paid for in salt, some of which salt was not delivered when they assigned the lease to M & K, who afterwards delivered it. O & S did not make the 60,000 bushels of salt whilst they held the lease. M & K manufactured salt under their second lease for a number of years, and made many payments to and for the Ps during the time, but no settlement was ever made between them of the matters growing out of the lease to O & S and its assignment to M & K; and they could not agree as to the rights and liabilities of the parties. The Ps thereupon sued M & K in equity for a settlement of all the matters, and called for a discovery, and for the production of books and papers. HELD:

122 1. Same—Rent—Governed by Amount of Salt Made—The rent to be distrained for or recovered by the Ps from O & S, in any one year, was to be governed by the quantity of salt actually manufactured.

2. Same—Same—Failure to Make Prescribed Quantity—Liability.—For the failure of O & S to manufacture 60,000 bushels of salt in one year, the proper action would be for the damages occasioned thereby, and to the extent of such failure, and not for a specific rent of 40,000 bushels of salt.

3. Same—Assignment of Lease—Effect—Case at Bar.—The taking the new lease by M & K from the Ps operated as a surrender of the first, and extinguished the liabilities of M & K as assignees of the first prospectively; and as assignees they were not liable for prior breaches of contract by their assignors.

4. Same—Same—Same—Same.—But the contract between O & S and M & K embraced the arrears of salt rent then on hand, and the proceeds of such as had been sold and was unaccounted for by O & S; for which M & K were bound to account to the Ps.

5. Same—Covenant—Assignment of Lease—Effect—Case at Bar.—There could be no breach of the covenant to O & S to manufacture 60,000 bushels of salt per annum, until the end of the year; and as the surrender of that lease and the taking the new one was within the year, the breach of that covenant became impossible; and therefore M & K were not bound by their contract with O & S to comply with that covenant.

6. Same—Same—Same—Rights of Lessors—Case at Bar.—Though the Ps were not parties to the contract between O & S and M & K, yet as it was made in part for their benefit, and a consideration therefor moved from them, and the whole change of tenancy was an arrangement in which they participated, and which could not be made without their consent, they have a right so far as they are concerned, to enforce the undertaking of M & K to pay the debts and liabilities of O & S.

7. Same—Assignment of Lease—Case at Bar.—The contract between O & S and M & K was not for an indemnity to O & S against the debts and contracts contemplated, but for their complete exoneration by the engagement of M & K to relieve them therefrom, and to become debtors and paymasters in their stead.

8. Same—Same—Same.—The Ps are not liable to M & K for debts paid by them to other creditors of O & S for horses or anything else, contracted to be paid for in salt, the contract between the Ps and O & S for the sale of the salt not constituting a partnership between them.

9. Same—Equity Jurisdiction.—This is a proper case for equity jurisdiction.

By an agreement bearing date the 14th of September 1832, John S. Preston & Co. leased to Overly & Sanders 123 *their salt works and salt manufactory in the county of Smith, reserving a rent of two thirds of all the salt to be manufactured at the works. All the houses, furnaces, kettles and implements necessary to the manufacture of salt, were included in the lease; Overly & Sanders stipulating to return them at the end of the lease in the same condition they then were, except the necessary wear and decay of the houses. It was stipulated by the lessors that the salt water should continue as good as it then was, and be of sufficient quantity to manufacture one hundred thousand bushels per annum; or that the lease should be void upon the lessees giving six months notice thereof. The lessees bound themselves to manufacture at least sixty thousand bushels of merchantable salt per annum, so that the rent should be for each year not less than forty thousand bushels; and the portion of salt accruing to the lessors as rent was to be considered as delivered to them when measured to them at the salt house. And the lessees further bound themselves not to lease, assign, or in any manner dispose of their lease, but with the consent in writing of the lessors. The lease was to continue in force for a number of years from the 1st of the next October.

It was further agreed that Preston & Co. should lease to Overly & Sanders their salt works plantation, with its appurtenances, mills, plaister banks, &c. on the consideration that Overly & Sanders should sell and dispose of the salt accruing to Preston & Co. for the rent reserved as aforesaid, and collect and pay over the same to Preston & Co. as rapidly as collections could be made. And it was agreed that all salt sold or disposed of was to be considered as sold or disposed of two thirds for the lessors and one third for the lessees; and was to be so accounted for by Overly & Sanders. The account of the salt manufactured was to be kept by a clerk agreed upon by the 124 parties, and whose salary *was to be paid by them according to their respective interest in the salt. And if the lessees became unable or failed to comply with their contract, the lessors were entitled to enter upon and avoid the contract, upon two months notice.

By an agreement bearing date the 1st day of September 1833, between Overly &

Sanders and A. M'Call and William King, Overly & Sanders, reciting their possession of the property mentioned in their agreement with Preston & Co., for the consideration thereafter expressed, relinquished and conveyed to M'Call & King all their rights and interest under the lease, in all the premises demised to them by the said lease, in as ample a manner as the same was then enjoyed by them. And they further agreed to deliver to M'Call & King, on the next day, along with the leased premises, all their stock of every kind not bought by them originally, including all their purchases of stock, all grain, &c., growing or purchased by them from any person whatever, for the purpose of carrying on the salt making business, all goods, wagons, horses or other live stock, or other property purchased with the proceeds of the salt works, and also the proportions of the said Overly & Sanders of any salt then on hand at the salt works or elsewhere. And M'Call & King bound themselves to assume and pay all the contracts, debts and liabilities relating to the salt making business, not theretofore discharged and performed by Overly & Sanders. And they agreed further to pay to Overly & Sanders the sum of 7500 dollars in three equal annual instalments from that day, and also twenty-five hundred bushels of salt.

On the 2d of September 1833 an agreement was entered into by William C. Preston, John S. Preston in his own right and as administrator of Charles H. C. Preston deceased, and Thomas L. Preston, with 125 M'Call & King, whereby they leased to M'Call & King their *salt works in the county of Smyth, with all their appurtenances of lands, mills, plaister banks, houses and plantations adjoining, for and during the life of Mrs. Smith the wife of Francis Smith. And M'Call & King bound themselves to pay in consideration of the said lease, on the 1st day of September in each year, the sum of 15,000 dollars per annum for the three first years of the lease, and the sum of 16,000 per annum on the 1st day of September in each year thereafter, during the continuance of the lease. They further agreed to pay to the Prestons thirty-five hundred bushels of salt, to be drawn by them at their pleasure during the first three years of the lease. And it was further agreed between the parties that the lease should continue for the term of Mrs. Smith's life, and one year thereafter, and for ten years longer, if M'Call & King should so elect. And they did so elect.

There were some other provisions as to the cutting of wood on the demised premises, and the return of the property on the termination of the lease, which it is not necessary to state.

In 1841 the Prestons instituted a suit in chancery in the Circuit court of Smith county against M'Call & King, for the purpose of having a settlement of the transactions growing out of the assignment by Overly & Sanders of their lease to M'Call &

King, and also of the rents arising upon the lease by themselves to these parties. In their original and amended bills they state the leases and the assignment by Overly & Sanders to M'Call & King; and say that the salt works plantation, &c., were worth not less than 200 dollars a year, and were given to Overly & Sanders as compensation for selling as the agents of the plaintiffs their proportion of the salt. That Overly & Sanders continued in possession of the leased premises for nearly a year, and did not during the time manufacture the sixty thousand bushels of 126 salt as stipulated in their *contract; nor did they pay to the plaintiffs forty thousand bushels, which was the least quantity they were bound to pay to them; nor did they sell for the plaintiffs the quantity they were bound to sell as a minimum of sales for the use of the farms, &c., as mentioned in the contract.

They further stated that M'Call & King purchased out the lease of Overly & Sanders upon an agreement between them and the plaintiffs that the lease was to be annulled and a new lease granted by which the rent was to be paid in money instead of the reservation in kind, and upon the further agreement insisted on by the plaintiffs, that M'Call & King should become responsible to them for the fulfilment of all the liabilities which Overly & Sanders had incurred to them. That the stipulation in the contract between Overly & Sanders and M'Call & King, that the latter were to discharge all the liabilities of the former, growing out of the salt making business, was not inserted to secure alone the purchase of the lease, but as the only terms on which the plaintiffs would consent to the sale, and this undertaking by M'Call & King in their contract with Overly & Sanders was an essential inducement to the plaintiffs to enter into their contract with M'Call & King, and that it was upon these conditions, and these alone, that the plaintiffs would have consented to the sale by Overly & Sanders.

They further charge that M'Call & King took possession of all the assets of Overly & Sanders by virtue of their contract with them, but had failed to account to the plaintiffs for the liabilities Overly & Sanders were under to them. That after procrastinating the settlement for many years, M'Call & King had at length presented an account which was wholly inadmissible. That at the time of their purchase, M'Call & King knew that Overly & Sanders were justly indebted to the plaintiffs for 40,000 127 bushels of salt, and a fair compensation *for the use of the plantation, &c., which had been enjoyed by them for executing the agency of selling plaintiffs' salt, and which they knew that Overly & Sanders had wholly failed to perform. That in the account rendered by M'Call & King, they had failed to give the plaintiffs credit either for the salt due, or for the use of the plantation, which last was worth 2000 dollars. That they had endeavoured to counterbalance the paltry credits allowed to the plaintiffs by charges for horses purchased by Overly & Sanders, with which the plaintiffs had no concern. That Overly & Sanders had purchased several droves of horses, some of which were on hand when they sold their lease to M'Call & King, and were delivered to them with the other property of Overly & Sanders, and the attempt seemed to be to make the plaintiffs partners in these purchases with Overly & Sanders, and to hold them responsible for two thirds of the losses upon them. And the plaintiffs proceed to point out other errors in the account rendered by M'Call & King.

They further charge, that after M'Call & King had purchased from Overly & Sanders, as before stated, they took possession of all the books, papers, accounts and property belonging to Overly & Sanders, and proceeded to settle, assume and pay their debts and liabilities, and to all intents and purposes substituted themselves for Overly & Sanders; and the plaintiffs, relying upon their agreement to liquidate their claim upon those parties, never thought of attempting to coerce payment from them; and they had since left the Commonwealth, and, as plaintiffs understood, had become utterly insolvent. That M'Call & King had made many payments to the plaintiffs on account of rent, but that the plaintiffs, being either non-residents of Virginia, or having been frequently absent, they had kept no account of the transactions between them and M'Call & King, but have 128 been compelled to rely upon *them.

That no serious obstacle to a settlement existed with respect to the direct relation of the parties; but the difficulty arising out of the earlier charges in the account of M'Call & King against the plaintiffs, had rendered it impossible to ascertain the true balance at any time since its commencement. And they call upon M'Call & King to say whether they did not agree to discharge the liabilities of Overly & Sanders to the plaintiffs, if the plaintiffs would consent to the sale and make a new lease to them; and that they make a full and fair statement and discovery of all the transactions mentioned in the bill.

The prayer of the bill was for an account, and for a decree for the amount which might be found due thereon; and for general relief.

M'Call & King answered the bills. They admitted the execution of the leases referred to by the plaintiffs; but denied the construction put upon them. They concurred with the plaintiffs that there was no difficulty in adjusting the accounts arising out of the lease from the plaintiffs to themselves; but that the difficulties arose out of the contract between the plaintiffs and Overly & Sanders, and the claim of the plaintiffs to pass by them and to look directly to the defendants for the fulfilment of the stipulations of that contract, and to hold them responsible for the breach thereof. They insisted that they were only responsible to Overly & Sanders under their contract with them, and that they were not responsible to the plaintiffs; and they insisted that these parties were necessary parties in the cause; and that the defendants were entitled to the benefit of all defences they would have against Overly & Sanders upon that contract. They denied that the plaintiffs were entitled to be regarded as parties to that contract. They say it is true that this contract and their lease from the plaintiffs, were so far dependent that they would not have made 129 the one without the other; and *that the plaintiffs knew of the negotiation of the contract with Overly & Sanders, and were informed of its terms; and to this extent only was there any dependence or connection in the contracts. They insist that if the plaintiffs are entitled to sue upon that contract, which they deny, that they can only be substituted to the rights of Overly & Sanders; and they say that they have already gone far beyond anything which could be properly required of them in the payments which they have made on account of the contracts of Overly & Sanders. They deny their liability for the forty thousand bushels of salt as rent for the time Overly & Sanders held the property. And they insist that under the contract between the plaintiffs and Overly & Sanders, the plaintiffs were liable for the losses upon the horses purchased by them, as they were purchased for salt disposed of by the plaintiffs' agents, and for their mutual benefit. And they insist that they are entitled to charge the plaintiffs with two thirds of the salt so disposed of, which not having been delivered before the defendants came into possession of the works, had been since paid by them; and also for two thirds of the charges of transportation paid by them upon salt transported during the period of the agency of the said firm for the plaintiffs.

In October 1844, an order was made by consent, referring the accounts between the parties to a commissioner; who returned his report in October 1845, with exceptions thereto by both the plaintiffs and defendants; and with special statements made by the direction of M'Call & King, presenting their views of the accounts.

In 1845, the plaintiffs, by the direction of the Court, amended their bill, and made Overly & Sanders parties defendants in the cause; and one of these defendants answered, and there was an order of publication as to the others. But it does not appear that this amended bill, and the answer thereto, were regularly filed;
130 *though in the final decree, it is said that the cause came on upon the answer and the order of publication.

The cause came on to be finally heard in May 1847, when the death of the defendant King was suggested, and the Court set aside the order of account as having been improvidently made, and dismissed the bill as to the defendant M'Call, with costs. As to the other defendants, the Court expressed his willingness to retain the cause to enable the plaintiffs to proceed against them, but they declining to do so, the bill was also dismissed as to them. From this decree, the Prestons applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Stuart, for the appellants.

B. Johnston and Patton, for the appellees.

By the contract of lease between the Prestons and Overly & Sanders, the rent thereby reserved of two thirds of the salt to be manufactured by the lessees at the salt works, accrued as the same was made, and in a condition for delivery; but the lessees, in consideration of the lease embracing the salt and plaister plantations, agreed to make sales of the rent salt, with their own, and pay over the due proportions of the lessors as the moneys could be collected. The quantity of the rent salt was therefore dependent upon the amount which should be manufactured. But to insure to the lessees an adequate profit, the lessors contracted that the salt water should continue as good as at the date of the lease, and of sufficient quantity to manufacture 100,000 bushels per annum; and on the other hand, to ensure to the lessors an adequate rent, the lessees contracted to manufacture at least 60,000 bushels of merchantable salt per annum. And in aid of the stipulations of the contract, it was provided, that in the event of a failure as to the quality or 131 quantity of the water, the lessees might avoid the lease, on giving the lessors six months notice; and that in case of the inability or the failure of the lessees to perform their part of the contract, the lessors, upon giving two months notice, might enter and avoid the lease: these provisions, however, did not exclude the parties from resorting, at their election, to their respective remedies by action or suit for non-performance of the contract. The rent, therefore, to be distrained for, or recovered by the lessors, in any one year, was to be governed by the quantity of salt actually manufactured, and in the event of the failure of the lessees to manufacture 60,000 bushels in such year, the proper action would be for the damages occasioned by, and to the extent of, such failure, and not for a specific rent of 40,000 bushels; the reservation of rent being out of the salt as manufactured; or the proceeds thereof.

The contract of Overly & Sanders with M'Call & King, operated as an assignment of this lease; and if it had stood alone, the rights of the Prestons to exact performance from M'Call & King of the stipulations of the lease, would have been governed by the law regulating the relation of lessors and the assignees of their lessees. But the contract between the Prestons and Overly & Sanders expressly provided that the latter should not underlet, or assign, or in any manner dispose of the lease, without the consent in writing of the former; and therefore the lessees could not have parted from their estate to M'Call & King without such consent, which was obtained, and is evidenced by the cotemporaneous contract between the Prestons and M'Call & King.

The effect of the last mentioned contract was to terminate the lease so made by the Prestons, and so transferred by the latter to M'Call & King, and to create a new lease from the Prestons to M'Call & King, for an extended term, and with the reservation of an annual *rent, not in kind, but in money at a fixed amount.

132 The new lease commenced some weeks before the expiration of the first year of the former lease, and operated as a surrender thereof. It extinguished the liabilities of M'Call & King as assignees of the first lease prospectively, inasmuch as it was the substitution of another tenancy; and retrospectively there could be no liability on their part as mere assignees for prior breaches of contract on the part of their assignors.

M'Call & King, however, by their contract with Overly & Sanders, "bound themselves to assume and pay all the contracts, debts and liabilities relating to the salt making business, not therefore discharged and performed by Overly & Sanders." This undertaking obviously embraced the arrears of salt rent then on hand, or which had been transported and sold, and the proceeds unaccounted for by Overly & Sanders. Nothing is plainer than that the contracts, debts and liabilities of the latter, "relating to the salt making business," included the rents of the very property out of which the salt was manufactured. And if M'Call & King had merely succeeded to the tenancy of Overly & Sanders for the residue of their term, such an undertaking might have embraced the covenant of Overly & Sanders to manufacture at least 60,000 bushels of salt per annum. But that covenant assumed the continuance of the tenancy of Overly & Sanders, and there could be no breach of it until the end of a year; and such breach was of course rendered impracticable by the surrender of the lease before that time, and the substitution of a new lease thenceforth, with the reservation of a pecuniary rent. The undertaking, therefore, of M'Call & King to perform the contracts of Overly & Sanders in relation to the salt making business, could not have contemplated a covenant on the part of the latter which had not then been, and never could be broken.

133 *Although the Prestons were not formal parties to the covenant of M'Call & King to assume the liabilities which had been incurred by Overly & Sanders, yet it was made in part for their benefit, and a consideration therefor moved from them, as well as from Overly & Sanders. That consideration consisted of their consent to the assignment to M'Call & King, their acceptance from those assignees of the surrender of the old term, and their granting to them a new term of longer duration and upon different reservations. Indeed, the whole change of tenancy was an arrangement in which the Prestons participated, and which could not have been accomplished without their concurrence. They have, therefore, a right, so far as they are concerned, to enforce this undertaking of M'Call & King; and the effect of their doing so, is to accomplish its true spirit and meaning so far as concerns Overly & Sanders; which was not merely for their indemnity against the debts and contracts contemplated, but for their complete exoneration, by the engagement of M'Call & King to relieve them therefrom, and become the debtors and paymasters in their stead.

M'Call & King were therefore bound to account with the Prestons for the salt manufactured at the salt works by Overly & Sanders, and chargeable with two thirds of the proceeds, after deducting the costs of transportation of so much thereof as was transported and sold by them, and with that proportion of the proceeds of so much thereof as was sold by them at the salt works, and with the same proportion of the value there of so much thereof as there remained unsold.

But inasmuch as the undertaking of M'Call & King for the contracts, debts and liabilities of Overly & Sanders in relation to the salt making business, extended only to those which had not theretofore been discharged and performed, M'Call & King are entitled against the salt rents claimed by the Prestons, to all proper credits

134 *of Overly & Sanders at the time of that undertaking, as well for set offs as for actual payments.

There is no foundation, however, for the pretension of M'Call & King of a liability to them on the part of the Prestons for debts assumed and paid by them to other creditors of Overly & Sanders. If the alleged partnership of the Prestons with Overly & Sanders in the sales of salt could give any colour to such a pretension, there was in truth no such partnership. The sales of the rent salt which Overly & Sanders contracted to effect as the agents of the Prestons, together with their own, constituted no partnership, but rendered them accountable for the proceeds thereof; and if they chose to contract debts payable in salt for horses or any thing else, the Prestons were in no wise liable therefor; but had a right, notwithstanding, to require payment from Overly & Sanders of the proceeds of the actual sales, in money.

The accountability of M'Call & King to the Prestons on the head of the salt rents, or the proceeds thereof, assumed for Overly & Sanders, was a proper subject for the jurisdiction of a Court of equity, involving, as it did, mutual items of account, growing out of an agency and connected with a trust, and complicated as it was by conflicting pretensions, and requiring a discovery, the production of books and papers, and adjustment by a commissioner. And though in relation to the money rents reserved in the lease to M'Call & King, and the numerous payments and set offs connected therewith, there seems to have been no actual dispute between the parties, yet the adjustment of that matter was delayed and prevented by the controversy in regard to the salt rents, without the adjudication of which, the ultimate balance between the parties could not be ascertained. The whole matters of account existing between them, constituted, indeed, but one subject, and grew out of the same transaction

135 —the substitution of M'Call & *King as the tenants of the Prestons in the stead of Overly & Sanders, their assumption of the salt rents which had theretofore accrued from Overly & Sanders, and their engagement for money rents from themselves thereafter. Under the circumstances, and after the whole accounts between the parties had, by a consent order, been referred to a commissioner, and reported by him, with special statements at the request of M'Call & King of their pretensions, embracing the money, as well as the salt rents, and indicating a balance in their favour upon the whole accounting; the entire merits of the case ought to have been ascertained, and the balance resulting therefrom, whether in favour of the one party or the other, decreed by the Court below.

The cause is, however, not in a condition to do justice between the parties without further enquiry. The commissioner has omitted in various respects to state, explain and report the grounds and evidence upon which he proceeded; and the consequence is, that his views of the accounts are in a great measure obscure and unintelligible.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that the Circuit court erred in dismissing the bill of the appellants, instead of recommending the report of the commissioner, with the exceptions thereto, for reconsideration and readjustment of the accounts between the parties, upon the principles above indicated, and such proper evidence as should be adduced before him; with such proper directions from the Court as either of the parties should request, for the examination of other parties on oath, and the discovery and production of books and papers.

It is therefore adjudged; ordered and decreed, that the decree of the Circuit court be reversed and annulled, with costs to the appellants; and that the cause be remanded to the Circuit court, to be proceeded in upon the principles, and in the mode indicated in the foregoing opinion and decree.

Executors and Administrators—Collection of Assets—Liability.*—An administrator or executor is not

Executors and Administrators—Liability.—An administrator is not bound to sue for a debt due the estate, when it is apparent that the debtor is unable to pay. Lovett v. Thomas, 81 Va. 245, citing the principal case. See also, citing and approving the principal case, Anderson v. Piercy, 20 W. Va. 327; foot-note to Tanner v. Bennett, 83 Gratt. 252. bound to sue for the recovery of a debt due the estate, where it is apparent the debtor is not able to pay it.

This was a suit in equity in the Circuit court of Brunswick county, by Thomas R. Trotter and wife against Benjamin Wilkinson, administrator of Clement Mitchell deceased, the father of the female plaintiff, for a settlement of his administration account, and for a decree for the amount which might be ascertained to be due to the plaintiff. The accounts were referred to a commissioner, who reported thereon; and there was a single question of controversy between the parties. The commissioner disallowed a credit for the sum of 263 dollars, paid by the administrator in 1834 on a judgment recovered against him upon a bond executed by his intestate as the surety of Robinson Ezell, on the ground that the administrator might have recovered the money from Ezell, and had failed to bring suit against him. The evidence on the subject was returned by the commissioner with his report.

The Court below seems to have concurred with the commissioner in his view of the evidence, but was of opinion that it was proper to credit the administrator with the amount paid at the time of payment, and to charge him with it at the end of the account for his neglect to collect it. This correction in the account was made, and the Court, in April 1843, made a decree against the administrator for the amount ascertained to be due by the corrected statement. And from this decree 137 *Wilkinson applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

The evidence in the cause was conflicting; but this Court differed in opinion with the commissioner and the Court below, upon the question of Ezell's ability to pay.

Gholson and Jones, for the appellant, and Gholson, for the appellees, submitted the case.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that the evidence in the record does not establish such a degree of negligence on the part of the appellant, as to subject him to a personal responsibility for his failure to institute legal proceedings against Robinson Ezell for the debt he, as administrator, had been compelled to pay on account of his intestate having been surety for said Ezell; that on the contrary, the testimony shews that Ezell was unable to pay the debt, and that with a knowledge of the facts established by the evidence, the administrator was not required, in the prudent discharge of his duty, to incur the costs of a suit against Ezell. And as the commissioner, by his special report of the payment and all the testimony bearing on it, submitted the question directly to the Court, whether the claim was properly disallowed, the Court, instead of a partial correction of the report in relation to said claim, should have allowed the administrator credit for the amount thereof.

The Court is therefore of opinion that said decree is erroneous; and the same is reversed with costs; and the cause is remanded, with instructions to recommit the report to a commissioner, to have the same corrected in the particular above mentioned, and for a final decree.

138 *Smith's Adm'r v. Lamberts.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent BROOKE, J.)

1. Attorney and Client—Authority to Accept Payment of Debt—Case at Bar.—An attorney at law receives a claim for collection, and he brings suit upon it, and obtains a judgment. The debtor then puts into his hands the bond of a third person for about the amount that is due on the judgment; and the attorney gives him a receipt by which he says he has received the bond on which he is to bring suit, and after paying himself his fee and commission, is to apply the balance to the credit of the judgment. The attorney receives the money on the bond, but does not pay it over to the creditor. HELD: This is a valid payment by the judgment debtor.

2. Attorneys—Powers in Collection of Claims.—The powers of an attorney at law in the prosecution and collection of claims put into his hands for collection, considered and stated.

So much of this case as is necessary to present the question considered and decided by this Court is as follows:

James D. Dishman of the county of King George, died in 1813, being indebted to S. & J. Lambert in the sum of 265 dollars 95 cents, with interest from the 4th of August 1812; and Austin Smith and George White, jr., qualified as his executors. The Lamberts placed their claim in the hands of William Brooke, an attorney at law, for collection, and he instituted an action thereon against the executors in the Circuit court of King George county, and re-

Attorney and Client—Powers of Attorney in Collection of Claims.—In Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 221, it is said: "An attorney at law employed to collect a debt may receive payment in money, but has no right to accept any thing else in satisfaction, without express authority. Wilkinson & Co. v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277; Wright v. Daily, 26 Tex. 730; Gullett v. Lewis, 3 Stew. 23; Kent v. Ricards, 8 Md. Ch. 308; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 639; Smith's Adm'r v. Lamberts, 7 Gratt. 138; Harper, Adm'r, v. Harvey et al., 4 W. Va. 539." See also, citing and approving the principal case on the above point, Higginbotham v. May, 90 Va. 238, 17 S. E. Rep. 941; Crotty v. Eagle, 35 W. Va. 151, 18 S. E. Rep. 62; Chalfants v. Martin, 25 W. Va. 398. But in this last case it is held that a payment to an attorney is not a payment of or on a debt, unless made in good faith; and if the payment was made to the attorney by the principal debtor under a fraudulent combination between the attorney and the debtor for the purpose of defrauding the creditor, then it cannot be regarded as a payment on the debt. See monographic note on "Attorney and Client" appended to Johnson v. Gibbons, 27 Gratt. 632; also, monographic note on "Bonds" appended to Ward v. Churn, 18 Gratt. 801.

covered a judgment in April 1819. Soon after this judgment was obtained, the executor White put into the hands of Brooke a note due from William Coakley to Dishman's executors, and took from him the following receipt:

"Received June 10th, 1819, of Mr. George White, jr., one of the executors of 139 James D. Dishman's estate, *William Coakley's note for 396 dollars 21 cents, due 1st March 1819, on which I am to bring suit; and after paying myself my fee and commission, I am to apply the balance to the credit of S. & J. Lambert's judgment against Dishman's executors.

"William Brooke."

Brooke proceeded to collect the debt due from Coakley, and received from him on the 6th of January 1820 the sum of 80 dollars, and on the 2d of March following he received the further sum of 344 dollars; which two sums, after deducting the legal fee and writ tax, and five per cent. commission, amounted to a few cents more than the debt due from Dishman to the Lamberts, principal, interest and costs.

It appears further, that on the 2d of September 1819, Brooke gave a receipt to Austin Smith, the other executor of Dishman, for a bond of William Brent for 260 dollars, due 1st of January 1819, which he was to collect and apply, as far as it would go, to the payment of Lambert's debt, and also to a debt due from Dishman to Ann Waddy. But the testimony by which his receipt of the money from Brent was proved, was excepted to, and the exception was sustained.

In 1825 Austin Smith instituted a suit in the late Chancery court of Fredericksburg against his co-executor White, for the purpose of compelling him to settle his executorial account and discharge the debts of the estate; and in this suit the Lamberts were made defendants, and their judgment was enjoined on the ground that it had been paid by means of Coakley's debt. The Lamberts answered the bill. They say that they have no knowledge of what their attorney Brooke did in their case, except that they have been informed that he obtained a judgment for the amount of their claim. But they never heard he had received payment from the executors; and they 140 aver that they *have never received from Brooke, the executors, or any other person, any part of their debt.

The cause lingered on the docket, and was revived in the name of Smith's and Dishman's administrators. It was finally removed to the Circuit court of Spotsylvania, where it came on to be heard in 1843, when the Court decreed that the Lamberts should recover of Smith's administrator the sum of 265 dollars 95 cents, with interest thereon from the 14th day of August 1812 until paid, and their costs. From this decree Smith's administrator applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

*Morson, for the appellant, insisted, that Brooke did not receive Coakley's note in payment of the debt of the Lamberts, but as a security by which to obtain payment.

And as he received the money upon that note whilst he continued to be the attorney of the Lamberts, the effect was precisely the same as if he had received payment from the executors of Dishman. And he insisted that he was fully sustained in this proposition by the case of Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 639; which, though a case decided by the General court, had been subsequently approved by this Court in Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277.

Moncure, for the appellee, insisted, that upon the principles decided in Smock v. Dade and Wilkinson v. Holloway, the transfer of Coakley's note to Brooke was not a payment of the debt due to the Lamberts. That these cases expressly held that an attorney at law was not authorized to commute the debt of his client. He insisted further that an attorney at law is a special agent, who must pursue his powers strictly; and that he is authorized to receive payment of his client's debt in money only; and that payment to him in money only, or what is current as money, will discharge 141 *the debt. And he referred to the cases of Todd v. Reid, 6 Eng. C. L. R. 404; Russell v. Bangley, Id. 459; Bartlett v. Pentland, 21 Id. 163; and Scott v. Irving, 20 Id. 453.

He insisted further, that in receiving Coakley's note Brooke was the agent, not of the Lamberts, but of Dishman's executors, and therefore the receipt of the money on that note was a receipt of it for them and not for the Lamberts. But if he could be considered as the agent of both parties, yet he must first have received the money as the agent of the executors; and he must, therefore, have done some act indicating an intention to hold it for the Lamberts, before it could be considered as having been received by him for them. And he referred to Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason's R. 95; Myers v. Wade, 6 Rand. 444; Broadus v. Rosson, 3 Leigh 12; Alston v. Munford, 1 Brock. R. 266; Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. R. 496; Wallace v. Taliaferro, 2 Call 447.

DANIEL, J. The only question brought before the Court for its decision in this case, is, whether the claim of S. & J. Lambert against the representatives of Dishman has been paid; and its solution depends on the extent of power with which an attorney at law is clothed, who, in the ordinary course, is entrusted by a creditor with a bond, note or other evidence of debt, for suit and collection. Practitioners of the law in this country are generally regarded by the Courts as vested with a larger authority in the control and disposition of demands placed in their hands for collection, than has been usually attributed by the common law to an attorney at law in England. Here the characters of attorney and barrister or counsellor at law, are in most instances blended, and the powers pertaining to this double capacity, are held to be of a wider scope than those belonging to the office of an attorney merely.

tion of client and attorney has been held to confer upon the latter the authority even to compromise, compound or commute demands of the former confided to him for collection. The general doctrine, however, so far as I have had it in my power to collect it from a review of the decisions, is, that the attorney has no right to commute the debt of his client, to release the person of the debtor when in prison by virtue of a ca. sa., or to enter a retraxit in a suit, to execute a release, or to do any other act which destroys the cause of action without receiving payment. But, on the other hand, that he has an extensive control over the remedy, and is vested with a liberal discretion in the use of the means he may deem best adapted to procuring the payment of his client's debt.

He may accept payment of the debtor, if voluntarily made to him, at any time whilst his powers continue; or he may take such steps as he may think best calculated to procure payment. In the honest exercise of a sound discretion, unless otherwise instructed by his client, he may delay bringing suit, he may consent to continuances of it, after it is brought, during its progress to judgment, and after judgment he may postpone issuing execution; he may elect whether to take one against the person or the lands or goods of the debtor; and if he issues one against the lands or goods, he may direct on what property of the debtor it shall be levied; and after levy he may control the proceedings of the sheriff or other officer having charge of the execution, and may from time to time postpone a sale of the property levied upon.

It has been decided by the Supreme court of the United States, in the case of the Union Bank of Georgetown v. Geary, 5 Peters' R. 99, that an agreement made by an attorney, in whose hands a promissory note was placed for collection, with an endorser, that if the latter would confess 143 judgment and not dispute *his liability, the attorney would immediately proceed to make the money by execution against the drawer, was within the general scope of the attorney's powers, and binding upon the creditor. And in Silvis v. Ely, 3 Watts & Serg. 420, it was held to be within the power and authority of an attorney to stay the execution upon a judgment in consideration of the promise of a third person to pay the debt; and that such promise was binding though not made to the plaintiff nor assented to by him at the time.

The subject has been before this Court in several cases. In Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 10, and Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147, it was decided that, in general, payment to an attorney at law of a debt which he is employed to recover, is good on the custom of the country, particularly if he have possession of the evidence of debt. In the case of Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 639, it is asserted by the General court as well settled doctrine, that whilst the authority of an attorney does not extend to the commutation of a debt without the client's assent, his receipt of actual payment is complete protection to the debtor. In that case the attorney received a portion of the debt in money, a draft at ten days sight, and a bond at four months; and the receipt given by the attorney stipulates that the draft and bond when paid should be, together with the sum paid in money, in full of the executions of the creditor against the debtor. The amount of the draft was paid to the attorney, but there was no evidence to shew that he had ever realized any thing on the bond. In this state of things the Court held that the amount produced by the draft constituted to that extent a good payment, but that the creditor ought not to be charged with the bond; that the Court below ought not therefore to quash an execution which the creditor had issued to enforce collection, "although it would 144 have been entirely proper if *such motion had been submitted, for the Court to have entered satisfaction" to the extent of the payment made in money and the amount received on the draft.

The decision in Smock v. Dade has been approved by this Court in the case of Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277. In the last mentioned case it was decided that it was not competent for an attorney employed to collect a debt, to discount from it a debt he himself owes the debtor, or to take as an absolute payment or satisfaction the debtor's assignment of a bond of a third person. But the Court at the same time recognize it as well settled doctrine that an attorney at law who has possession of the evidence of debt, or has obtained a judgment for his client, may receive from the debtor payment of the debt; and that the creditor having confided in him, not only to sue, but also to collect and receive the money, is bound by the payment.

I do not see how we can approve the decision in Smock v. Dade, in regard to so much of the creditor's demand as was held to be paid by the proceeds of the draft, and yet consistently decide that the debt in this case has not been satisfied by Brooke's receipt in actual money of the amount of Coakley's note.

It is true there is a difference in the wording of the written receipts given by the attorneys in the two cases, but I cannot perceive any such marked variance in their phraseology as would justify us in saying that the coming of the proceeds of the collateral debts into the hands of the attorney should in one case constitute a payment; but that, in the other, payment could not be predicated of the transaction till such proceeds were handed over by the attorney to his client, the original creditor.

The receipts vary from each other in two particulars. In Stock v. Dade the signature of the attorney's name is followed by the addition of the word "attorney." In 145 *the case before us there is no such addition. The receipt in Smock v. Dade recites that the draft and bond are, when paid, to be together with the money paid down, "in full of the executions."

Here the attorney stipulates that after paying himself his fee and commission, he is to apply the balance of the proceeds of Coakley's note to the credit of S. & J. Lambert's judgment. I do not think that Banks by affixing the word attorney to his signature to the receipt in Smock v. Dade, gave any plainer indication that in making the arrangement he was acting as the attorney of the original creditor, than he would have done by simply signing his name without the addition. The character in which he treated was to be gathered from the transaction. He was known to the debtor to be the attorney of the creditor, and the debtor in making the arrangement believed he was negotiating and intended to negotiate with one who had a right to receive the proceeds of the draft and bond when collected, in full of the executions. So in this case the relation in which Brooke stood to the Lamberts was well known to the executors of Dishman. The addition of attorney to his signature upon executing the receipt would not have made it more manifest.

And I cannot perceive how any more extensive control over the rights and interests of his client is asserted by an attorney in the undertaking that certain collateral securities placed in his hands for collection shall, when paid, be applied as a credit to his client's demand, than in undertaking that, when paid, the proceeds shall be in full of the original debt. The relations of the several parties, each to the other and to the subject matter of the contract, and the purposes sought to be accomplished by the attorneys and the debtors by the arrangements made between them, in the two cases, were essentially the same.

146 *There is nothing in the receipt given by Brooke, nothing in the intrinsic character of the transactions, nothing in any of the evidences existing in the case, upon which to base the belief, that the executors of Dishman, in placing the claims in the hands of Brooke to be collected and applied to the credit of the debt, or that Brooke in accepting them with the agreement to collect and so apply them, designed any fraud on the Lamberts. There is nothing to shew that the transaction did not grow out of an honest desire and purpose on the part of all the parties, to provide a new security and furnish a new, safe and speedy means of satisfying the debt.

Any argument, by way of analogy, to be drawn from the law regulating the property in a fund which has come into the hands of one holding towards it the double relation of executor and legatee, or of executor and guardian, furnishes, I think, no aid to the pretensions of the appellees. In such cases, the party coming into the possession of the fund, is considered as taking possession in the first instance, in the character of executor, because he cannot in the first instance, according to law, take possession in any other character, and he will be presumed to have possessed himself rightfully, and not wrongfully. Being originally so possessed, he will be presumed to continue to hold in the same character until some act is done, indicating decisively a purpose to hold in his other character. Generally, in such cases, there are others having claims upon the fund, whose rights and interests are to be adjusted and settled before the executor can legally elect to hold it in his other character of legatee or guardian. Here by the very terms of the agreement, the fund, when received, was to be applied as a credit to the claim of the Lamberts. There were no rights or interests of other persons to be looked to and adjusted before the attorney might lawfully hold the fund as the money of his original 147 *clients. Even in the case of one combining the two offices of executor and guardian, very slight acts are often regarded by the Courts, as legal indications of an election to hold the fund in the character of guardian: and I know of no rule of law that confines the evidences of such election to acts or declarations cotemporaneous with, or subsequent to the receipt of the fund. If an executor upon receiving a collateral security to be collected and applied to the discharge of a debt due to his testator, should set forth in a written receipt, or otherwise declare, that all debts were now paid and the estate fully distributed, with the exception of the fund about to be collected, and that he designed upon receiving it, to hold the balance after deducting his commission, as the guardian of a ward, I am not prepared to say that such a receipt accompanied by proof that he had really qualified as guardian, and that his declarations with regard to the situation of the estate were true, would not amount, without any further act, other than the subsequent receipt of the fund, to an election, so as to charge him and his sureties with it in his character of guardian. If then, the analogies supposed to exist between this and the cases of the double fiduciary relations above referred to, can be properly consulted as furnishing any guide to the solution of the question under discussion, it seems to me that they tend strongly to support, rather than to defeat the views of the appellant.

It is urged, that if an attorney, entrusted with the collection of a debt, may thus treat with the debtor, and accept from him claims on third persons to be collected, and credited to the debt, he has it in his power to subject the creditor to several settlements with him, instead of one. The fact that a creditor may be thus occasionally subjected to inconvenience, furnishes, it seems to me, no argument against the legal 148 existence of such a power: for the inconvenience is one which may *as well flow from direct payments to the attorney, as from payments effected indirectly through collateral securities; and I presume it is well settled, that an attorney employed to collect a debt, is not limited to a receipt of the debt in one sum, but is fully empowered also to receive partial payments from time to time, till the debt is satisfied.

It is also urged, that the executors had a right at any time previous to the collection of Coakley's note, to withdraw it from the hands of the attorney; and that even after the collection, they had a right to revoke the directions given as to the application of the proceeds. Even if the first branch of the proposition were law, it would, by no means, follow that the second was also: for according to this hypothesis, so soon as the note was collected, it was converted into something belonging to the debtor, to wit, money, which the attorney had a right to receive in payment of his client's demand, and which, by the express agreement between him and the executors, it was stipulated should be applied as a credit to said demand. But I do not think that either branch of the proposition is true. It is true, that this Court, in the case of Beers &c. v. Spooner, 9 Leigh 153, decided that a verbal direction given by a person having claims in the hands of an attorney for collection, to pay part of the money when collected, to another in satisfaction of a debt due to the latter from a third person, was revocable by the person giving the directions in his lifetime, or by his administrator after his death. Judge Tucker, however, in assigning the reasons of the Court, asserted principles, and approved of a decision furnishing ample authority for treating the transaction now under consideration, as an irrevocable dedication by the debtor of a fund for the payment of his debt. He says, "If Dudley (who was the person giving the directions) had been bound for the 149 debt, and had directed Spooner (the attorney) to pay, there would *be more reason to regard the direction as irrevocable; particularly if Spooner had promised payment to the creditor. Then it would have resembled the case of Sharpless v. Welsh, 4 Dall. R. 279. There the person giving the direction was the actual debtor, and the person receiving it, made an express promise to apply the fund as directed: here, the party was no debtor, and there was no promise. There, the Court held, that the debtor had made an appropriation of his funds to pay his debts to his creditors, which appropriation he could not revoke: here, he directs an appropriation, without consideration, to pay the debt of another, over which direction, he had a complete power of revocation, until the money was actually paid."

Upon the authority of the principles declared in the foregoing case, I think we would be well justified in treating the transaction between White, the executor, and Brooke, as an irrevocable appropriation by the former of the fund arising from the collection of Coakley's note to the payment of the demand due the Lamberts. The fact that Brooke would, in this aspect of the case, be acting as the attorney, agent or trustee of both creditor and debtor, in the prosecution and collection of the collateral security, does in no wise impair or detract from his original right and duty as attorney of the Lamberts, to receive money of the debtor, whenever realized, in payment of the demand, and grant him an acquittance for it. So viewing the case, were it not for the fact that the attorney stipulates in the receipt for deducting his fee and commissions from the fund, and the want of proof that such deduction was in truth ever made, it would seem to me that the collection of the money, its coming into the hands of one authorized to receive it, and the acquittance of the debtor, would be, necessarily, in legal contemplation, simultaneous acts, or rather one and the same act. Does the fact, that the attorney was only to apply the balance of the proceeds, 150 *after deducting his fee and commissions, make the receipt of the money, so far as that balance is concerned, any less a payment of the debt. I think not. In the absence of any proof, as to what the fee and commissions were to be, the law adjusts them, and it was not necessary that the attorney should do any further act for the purpose of ascertaining what the balance would be. That is a matter of simple calculation, which could as well be done, (as it has been done,) by the officer of the law, as by the attorney. Upon the collection of the money, no one had to be further consulted as to its application. The rights of all who had ever had, or could have any interest in the fund, had been foredesigned and predetermined by the agreements between the parties having the lawful control over it.

A decision which would deny to such a transaction the force of a payment, would, it seems to me, be at war with the general practice and understanding of the country, and operate much to the detriment of creditors. An attorney is generally employed in the collection of a debt, not merely because of a belief on the part of the creditor, in his skill, in the use of the ordinary legal means used for the enforcement of claims, and his promptness in paying over his collections, but also, because of his knowledge of the means, situation and relations of the debtor, and his talent in making and availing himself of such treaties and negotiations, as will be likely, without in any measure jeopardizing the rights of the client, or resorting to legal coercion, to procure payment of the demand. To say that the receipt of money by the attorney in such a case, shall not constitute a payment by the debtor, is to strip the former of a power, which, to the honour of the profession, is very rarely used except to promote faithfully, the best interests of the client; and to subject an absent creditor who has not given special instructions to his attorney, 151 to a very great disadvantage in a struggle for the effects *of a failing debtor. By the use of mild and persuasive means, having some regard to the feelings and credit of the debtor, by indulgences which do not jeopard the rights of the creditor, and the acceptance of securities which do not, until realized, discharge the demands, claims are now often made which would be lost, if the attorney was in all instances to be confined to the use of legal process, or the receipt of direct payments by the debtor.

I am therefore of opinion, that so much of the decree appealed from, as relates to the demand of the Lamberts, ought to be reversed with costs, and the enforcement of the same against the representatives of Dishman perpetually enjoined.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Judge Daniel.

Decree reversed.

152 *Williamson v. Gayle & als.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent BROOKE, J.)

1. Foreign Attachments—Property in Possession of Home Defendant Who Has Claim against Priority.*—

In a proceeding by foreign attachment, the home defendant having property of the absent defendant in his possession, for the keeping of which the absent defendant is indebted to him, is entitled to have his claim first satisfied out of the property, as against the attaching creditor.

2. Same—Debt Established—Personal Decree.†—The attaching creditor having established his debt, is entitled to a personal decree against the absent debtor, though the whole property attached is exhausted in paying the debt of the home defendant.

This was a proceeding by foreign attachment, commenced in 1839, in the Circuit court of chancery for the county of Henrico, by Robert C. Williamson against Levin Gayle, an absent defendant, and John Minor Botts. The bill charged that Gayle was indebted to the complainant in the sum of 273 dollars 40 cents, with interest; that he resided out of the State of Virginia, and that John M. Botts of the county of Henrico had in his possession a blooded mare, the property of Gayle; and making Gayle and Botts defendants, the complainant asked that the mare in the possession of Botts might be subjected to the payment of his debt.

The complainant proceeded regularly against Gayle as an absent defendant, and proved his debt. Botts answered the bill. He admitted he had the mare and a colt in his possession, the property of Gayle; but he stated that in 1835 he had sold the mare

*Attachments—Priorities.—In Gregg v. Sloan, 76 Va. 409, it is said: "The attaching creditor takes his debtor's estate or interest only, and in the same plight and condition in which the debtor holds it when the attachment takes effect as a lien. Williamson v. Gayle and Others, 7 Gratt. 152, 154." See also, note in 1 Va. Law Reg. 180.

†Same—Personal Decree.—For the proposition that where the attaching creditor having established his debt is entitled to a personal decree against the defendant, the principal case is cited and followed in Schofield v. Cox, 8 Gratt. 588. See monographic note on "Attachments" appended to Lancaster v. Wilson, 27 Gratt. 624.

to Gayle, who had left her with him to be taken to the best horses in Virginia; Gayle desiring to raise colts from her. That the mare had remained in his possession, 153 *and had been put to Gohanna in 1836, and he had settled for that charge, which was 75 dollars. That he had taken good care of the mare; that for the keep of the mare for a part of the year 1835, and for the years 1836–37–38–39, due at the end of each year, and also for the season of 1836 to Gohanna, Gayle was indebted to him; and that he also held Gayle's bond for 100 dollars, with interest from March 1837. That his claims against Gayle amounted to 814 dollars 10 cents, for which he claimed to have a lien on the said mare and colt. And he prayed that they might be subjected first to the payment of his claim.

In the progress of the cause the mare and three colts, two foaled since the commencement of the suit, were sold under an order of the Court, and were purchased by the defendant Botts at the price of 350 dollars. This was considerably less than the witnesses examined estimated as the cost of keeping the mare and colts whilst they were kept by Botts.

The cause came on to be finally heard in March 1842, when the Court held that the claim of Botts to the attached effects had priority to that of the plaintiff; and that as the proceeds of the sale did not amount to enough to satisfy his claim, the whole proceeds, after paying the expenses, should be applied in part discharge of the debt due to him from the defendant Gayle. And the plaintiff's bill was dismissed, with costs to the defendant Botts. From this decree Williamson applied for and obtained an appeal to this Court.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellant.

Philip and Walter Harrison, for the appellee Botts.

BALDWIN, J. I deem it unnecessary in this case to consider whether the defendant Botts has a common law lien upon the attached property, such as that of an 154 *innkeeper upon the horse of his guest, of a carrier upon goods bailed to him for transportation, or of an artizan in whose hands an article has been enhanced by his skill and labour. However that may be, I think that for so much of his account as has been proved, he is entitled to priority of satisfaction over the plaintiff.

A creditor proceeding by foreign attachment can stand upon no better footing than his absent debtor, whose moneys, goods or effects he seeks to subject; and his claim to satisfaction therefrom is subordinate to the rights and equities of the garnishee. Glassell v. Thomas, 3 Leigh 113.

There are obviously cases of stoppage, retainer or set off on the part of a debtor founded in natural justice, and which Courts of equity ought to recognize and enforce. These were admitted to a very limited extent by the common law, which did not even allow mutual debts to be discounted or set off against each other; the effect of which would have been to blend substantially cross actions, by permitting a matter of demand to be made a ground of defence. This narrowness often drove defendants at law into equity, where mutual debts were, to a great extent, applied to the reduction or extinguishment of each other, under the name of mutual credits, upon the fact or intendment of a reciprocal trusting by the parties on account of their respective debts. At length the English statutes of set off, which ours has followed, authorized set offs at law in cases of mutual debts, though of a different nature, and in no wise connected; and to these statutes Courts of equity have conformed, and in general to the rules derived from the construction of them by the Courts of law. But the inherent powers of equity, founded in natural justice, have been in no wise abridged by the statutes. 2 Story's Eq. § 1432. On the contrary, they have been to some extent enlarged; for now, in cases falling within equitable jurisdiction, *set offs are allowed of mutual debts, legal and equitable, however independent of each other, and of course without the necessity of resorting to the principle of mutual credits. Nor does equity always follow the express provision of the statutes, but extends them to cases falling within the principles of justice and policy which led to their enactment. Thus, though at law the debts must be strictly mutual, or in the same right, and so excluding set off between individual and representative debts, or individual and partnership or joint debts, and though the debts sought to be set against each other must be actually due at the time; yet there are cases of hardship, or oppression, or irreparable loss, or mutual trusting, which are allowed in equity as exceptions to these rules.

And although Courts of equity, no more than Courts of law, will, without agreement of the parties, enlarge a pledge or custody of goods, beyond the original purpose, into a security for an independent demand; yet there may be cases of gross injustice and irretrievable loss, in which the right of stoppage of goods so situated would be recognized and enforced in an equitable forum. As, if a person entrusting goods to the care and protection of one, then or afterwards becoming his creditor, should abscond or remove from the Commonwealth, and seek to withdraw and elude them, without discharging or securing his indebtedness, I presume it would be a case proper for redress in a Court of equity, and especially if its aid were sought to accomplish the design.

It cannot, I think, be doubted, that a creditor who has no remedy at law, and comes into a Court of equity, where alone he can obtain relief, is subject to the application of the rule, that he who seeks equity must do it. Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. R. 188.

In Shish v. Foster, 1 Ves. sen. 88, Lord Hardwicke, in commenting upon the rule that he who will *have, must do equity, said, "That rule does not hold throughout, so as to tack things together independent in their own nature; but wherever the Court can do it, they will lay hold of any circumstance for it. And here there is danger of the plaintiff's losing his demand, if the estate should be taken from him, the defendant having frequently absconded; which makes the case very like the case of Jacobson v. Hans Towns, (or merchants of Almain,) of part of whose estate the plaintiff Jacobson and his family had been lessees, and negotiated it for them. They brought an ejectment to recover, when the leasehold estate was expired. Jacobson objected that he was a creditor in a long account for negotiating, &c., and brought a bill that they should not take the estate from him till he received satisfaction of his demand; and an injunction was granted by Lord Macclesfield and continued by Lord King; not that he had any real lien on the estate, but from the difficulty of his getting satisfaction, if this estate was taken from him, as they were a corporation residing beyond sea; therefore they were restrained from recovering. The same reason weighs here as there."

There is no judicial proceeding to which the maxim we are noticing can be applied with more propriety than a foreign attachment. It is a suit in equity, in which the equitable rights of the parties are recognized, and enforced or protected, as the case may require; in which the plaintiff creditor seeking the aid of the Court, is without any remedy whatever at law; and in which the garnishee creditor, if overruled in his defence, is deprived of all means of redress, whether at law or in equity. He cannot sue himself, and therefore his very possession and care of the attached effects expose him, in the event mentioned, not only to the priority of the plaintiff, but of all other creditors who may have levied their attachments. His case is unlike *that of a creditor petitioning in bankruptcy for priority, and who, if he fails in that, comes into participation with the other creditors.

It can hardly be denied in this case, that if the fund attached consisted of money belonging to the absent defendant, or of a debt due to him from the garnishee, that the latter would have a right to set off against it a debt due to him from the absentee, or a liability which he had incurred as his surety. Ross v. M'Kinny, 3 Rawle's R. 227. And what is to prevent goods attached and sold under the authority of the Court from being governed by those principles of equity which go beyond the express provisions of the statutes of set off, when required by natural justice, and to prevent it from being defeated?

It is unnecessary in this case to decide whether a garnishee who, with the consent of the absent owner, is the lawful custodian of goods attached, and has at the same time an independent demand against that owner, is entitled to priority of satisfaction over the attaching creditor. Throwing that out of view, a connection of mutual demands may be properly regarded as a controlling circumstance upon questions of equitable set off or stoppage, 2 Story's Eq. § 1434; and here there is a connection between the asserted ownership of the absent defendant and the claim against him on the part of the garnishee. In fact they arise out of the same transaction, and neither could exist without the other. The mare attached was left by Gayle with Botts for care, protection and subsistence, until a contemplated period, and then to be taken away by the former; and the claim of Botts is chiefly for that very care, protection and subsistence, without which there would have been no subject for the attachment.

This connection is strengthened by what in the nature of things must have been the tacit understanding *between those parties. The mare was purchased by Gayle, a resident of Alabama, from Botts, and left with the latter to be kept till sent for, and he was to be paid for his expense and trouble in keeping her; and if she should not recover from a lameness which unfitted her for the turf, to be put to a horse, in order that a colt might be obtained from her for the benefit of Gayle. And Bott's demand against Gayle is for the keep of the mare and her colt; a sum advanced for a season of the mare to a horse; and a due bill for some other consideration, executed to him by Gayle. Now it could hardly have been otherwise contemplated than that Gayle, when he should resume the possession of the property to remove it from the Commonwealth, was to discharge his indebtedness to Botts, especially for the keep of the mare and her increase.

The attached property having been sold by the authority of the Court, and purchased by the defendant Botts, and the proceeds of sale being less than the amount appearing from the evidence to be due to Botts (even if the items of his demand other than for the keep of the mare and colt be excluded), I think there is no error as regards the defendant Botts, in the decree of the Chancellor dismissing the plaintiff's bill, after adopting suitable provisions for securing the rights of the absent defendant, if he should appear and shew cause against the decree within the time prescribed by law. But the decree is wrong to the prejudice of the plaintiff in regard to the absent defendant, in dismissing the bill as to him also, instead of giving the plaintiff a personal decree against him; the demand for which the attachment was sued out having been established by sufficient evidence, and the Court having jurisdiction of the subject by reason of the levy of the attachment upon the property of the absent defendant in the hands of the garnishee, which jurisdiction has not been defeated by the exhaustion of the proceeds of *sale in the application thereof to the equitable priority of the garnishee.

The other judges concurred in the opinion of Judge Baldwin.

The following is the decree of the Court. The Court is of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the Chancellor as between the appellant and the appellee Botts. It is therefore adjudged, ordered and decreed, that so much of the said decree be affirmed, with costs to the appellee Botts. And the Court is further of opinion, that there is error in the said decree as between the appellant and the appellee Gayle, in dismissing his bill as to the said Gayle, instead of giving him a personal decree against that defendant, for the amount of his demand, and his costs in the Chancery court. It is therefore adjudged and ordered, that so much of the said decree of the Chancellor as is above declared to be erroneous, be reversed and annulled, with costs to the appellant against the appellee Gayle. And this Court proceeding to render such decree as the Chancellor ought to have rendered, in lieu of so much of his decree as is above declared to be erroneous, it is further adjudged, ordered and decreed, that the appellant do recover against the appellee Gayle the sum of 273 dollars 40 cents, with interest on 197 dollars 40 cents, part thereof, from the 1st day of July 1837, till paid, and on 76 dollars, the residue thereof, from the 1st day of July 1839, till paid, and his costs by him expended in the prosecution of his suit in the Chancery court.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL,* P., and BROOKE, J.)

1. Executors and Administrators—Suit by Residuary Legatees—Parties.†—In a suit by residuary legatees against the executor, for a distribution of the estate, the specific legatees should be parties, unless it satisfactorily appears that their legacies have been satisfied.
2. Same—Liability‡—Case at Bar.—Under the circumstances, the executor held not to be responsible for a debt due to the estate, and lost by the insolvency of the debtor, occurring after the testator's death.

*JUDGE CABELL sat during the arguments of all the causes heard at this term, but he was not present at the decision of this or any of the following cases, owing to severe indisposition.

†Executors and Administrators—Chancery Practice—Legatees—Parties.—Where there are assets sufficient to pay all, one entitled to her legacy to an amount certain, may maintain a suit for such legacy, without making the other legatees parties; but it is otherwise, in case of residuary legatees, unless it appears that all prior legatees have been satisfied. Sharpe v. Rockwood, 78 Va. 84, citing 1 Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 154; Nelson v. Page, 7 Gratt. 160.

‡Same—Liability.—Upon the question of the liability of a personal representative for the collection of assets of his decedent's estate, see the principal case cited in foot-note to *Tanner v. 3. Same—Overpayment to Legatees—Commissions.—

Partial payments made by an executor to legatees, from time to time, on account, though upon a settlement of accounts thereafter, it appears that such payments exceed the amount to which some of the legatees were entitled, does not constitute such a settlement of the executor's accounts as to take the demand for commissions out of the operation of the statute.

Charles C. Page, of the county of King William, died in 1822, leaving a widow and four children. By his will, after providing for Mrs. Page, and giving small legacies to his two youngest sons, he gave to his son Robert Carter Page 3000 dollars, and to his grand daughter, Sally Page Welford, a slave by name and 1000 dollars, if she should live to be married or come to the age of twenty-one years; and the residue of his estate he gave to his four children. Thomas C. Nelson, one of the executors appointed by the will, qualified as such, and proceeded to administer the estate until 1828, when he was removed. He did not settle his accounts whilst he acted as executor, but seems to have made a settlement of them before the commissioners of the Court of probat in 1837.

161 *In 1838 Robert Carter Page, in his own right and as administrator of John Camm Pollard, who married a daughter of Charles C. Page, and the other residuary legatees of Charles C. Page, filed their bill in the Circuit court of King William against Thomas C. Nelson the executor, for an account of his administration; and on the death of Nelson, the suit was revived against his executor. The bill was afterwards amended, and Mrs. Page, then Mrs. Atkinson, was made a party. The accounts were referred to a commissioner, who made his report, in which no notice was taken of the special legacies to Robert Carter Page and Sally Page Welford and the two younger sons, but the whole personal estate, after payment of debts, was divided amongst the widow and the four children. The only questions of contest in the Circuit court were the executor's right to commissions; and his liability for the balance of a debt due from Benjamin Dabney to Charles C. Page in his lifetime, and a large portion of which was lost by the insolvency of Dabney's estate.

On the first question it was insisted by the plaintiff, that the executor had forfeited his commissions by his failure to settle his accounts. On the other hand, the executor relied on the fact established by the report of the commissioner, that he was largely in advance to the widow and Robert Carter Page and Pollard, by payments made to the during his administration of the estate; and that as to the other two plaintiffs, the amounts found to be due to them were very small; and therefore, though he had not settled his accounts before the Court of probat, he had in fact settled with the parties.

Upon the other question it was charged in the bill, that the debt of Dabney had been lost by the negligence of the executor, and that he, sensible of his neglect, had repeatedly admitted his liability for it. The executor, in his answer, denied that he 162 was liable for *the debt, or that he had ever admitted his liability. The facts appear to be, that in the year 1817, Charles C. Page sold to Benjamin Dabney a tract of land in the county of King William, called Toler's, for 5266 dollars, one third of which was paid in cash, and the balance was to be paid on the 1st of January 1819 and 1820. Page seems to have taken no security or even bonds or notes, from Dabney, for these deferred payments, until April 1820, when they were secured by a deed of trust on the land. Neither principal or interest was paid by Dabney during the life of Page. In 1824, a payment of 210 dollars 64 cents was made by Dabney to Nelson; and in 1825, there was another payment of 150 dollars. In 1824, Nelson procured from Dabney another deed of trust to secure this debt, upon seven slaves. In 1826, Dabney died, having continued to be in good credit up to time of his death. In 1827, the slaves were sold for 1371 dollars 80 cents; and in 1828, the land was sold for 490 dollars 74 cents: thus leaving unpaid on the 31st of December 1828, of this debt, the sum of 3278 dollars 66 cents.

Mrs. Atkinson released to her children her interest in this debt, and was examined as a witness; though she was objected to as incompetent by the executor. She stated that she had frequently conversed with the executor about the collection of this debt from Dabney, and that he had admitted his negligence, and that he had thereby made the debt his own. She said, too, that the circumstances of Dabney grew worse between the death of Charles C. Page and his own death. Another witness also stated that he had heard the executor say in 1824, when the deed of trust was taken on the slaves, that he had indulged Mr. Dabney so long in relation to that debt, that Mr. Page's estate should not suffer, and that he would take the responsibility on himself. Other witnesses who lived near to Dabney, and were well acquainted with him, say that his property was not diminished 163 *after the death of Page; that his personal estate amounted, at that time, to about four or five thousand dollars; that he owned a tract of six hundred and twenty-five acres of land beside Toler's; and that this land had been divided after his death among his widow and children, and was still in their possession. That he was considered solvent up to the period of his death, and they should have considered the debt safe.

The cause came on to be finally heard in May 1843, when the Court below held, that the executor was responsible for the loss of the debt due from Dabney; and that he was not entitled to commissions; and there being no exceptions to the commissioner's report, in which alternate statements were made, the Court adopting the statement disallowing commissions, made a decree in favour of the executor against Mrs. Atkinson, and the plaintiffs Robert Carter Page and John Camm Pollard's estate, for the sums which the executor had overpaid them, and in favour of the two other children for the sums found due to them by the report of the commissioner. From this decree, Nelson's executor applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Griswold and Lyons, for the appellant, objected,

1st. That the legatee, Sally P. Welford, was not a party. That this being a bill by the residuary legatees, they were only entitled to the residue after the payment of the specific legacies; and it was necessary they should be before the Court, in order that they might be paid, or that the executor might be protected by the decree. And this objection they insisted, might be made in this Court, though not made in the Court below. Richardson v. Hunt, 2 Munf. 148; Sheppard v. Starke, 3 Id. 29; Bland v. Wyatt, 1 Hen. & Munf. 543; Clarke v. Long, 4 Rand. 451.

164 *2d. That there was error in decreeing in favour of the residuary legatees until the special pecuniary legacies were paid. And that it did not appear by the report, that either the legacy to Robert Carter Page or to Sally P. Welford had been satisfied.

3d. That there were errors in calculations, &c., appearing on the face of the report, and which therefore might be objected to and corrected here, though no exception had been taken to the report in the Court below on that account; and they proceeded to point them out.

4th. That the statute forfeiting an executor's commissions for his failure to settle his accounts every two years before the Court of probat, did not apply to this case, because the executor had in fact settled with the parties entitled to the estate, and was largely in advance to the widow and to Robert Carter Page and Pollard's estate.

5th. That the executor was not liable under the circumstances of this case, for the debt due from Dabney to the estate. That the bill charged and the answer denied that the executor admitted his negligence and liability for this debt, and it was therefore necessary to be proved by two witnesses. That Mrs. Atkinson was not a competent witness, because although she might release her interest in the debt, she was still liable to the executor for the amount he had overpaid her, and that amount must necessarily be affected by the liability of the executor for this debt. That without her testimony, there was but one witness to the fact of his admissions. That even if the admission was proved, it did not render him liable; and that the facts of the case did not constitute a liability for the debt on the part of the executor. And on this point, they referred to Churchill v. Lady Hobson, 1 P. Wms. 141; Toller's Executors 427-8, citing Brown v. Litton; 2 Fonb. Equ. 178, § 4, to 186, § 6; M'Call

165 v. Peachy, 3 *Munf. 288; Moseley v. Ward, 11 Ves. R. 581; Kee's ex'or v. Kee's creditors, 3 Gratt. 116; Cavendish v. Fleming, 3 Munf. 198; Tibbs v. Carpenter, 1 Madd. 298; 2 Lomax Ex'ors 290 to 293.

Joynes and R. T. Daniel, for the appellees, insisted,

1st. That in a bill by residuary legatees against the executor a specific legatee is not a necessary, or even a proper party, and that therefore it was not necessary that Sally P. Welford should have been brought before the Court. Story's Equ. Pl. § 149, § 89, in note, § 230.

2d. That in the whole proceedings below, no suggestion had been made by the executor, that the specific legacies were unpaid. That the whole estate remaining in the executor's hands had been distributed among the residuary legatees by the report in this case, and in the account settled by the executor in the Court of probat, without the slightest intimation that the specific legacies remained unpaid. That the legacy to Sally P. Welford was contingent, and it did not appear that the contingency had occurred; and that Robert Carter Page was a party in the cause, and the executor had taken a decree against him to which he certainly was not entitled if his legacy was unpaid. That it therefore did not lie in the mouth of the executor to insist that the legacy was still due.

3d. That if there were errors of calculation, &c., appearing on the face of the report, against the executor, there were much greater errors in his favour; and they proceeded to point them out.

4th. That the executor was not entitled to commissions. Wood v. Garnett, 5 Leigh 271; Turner v. Turner, 1 Gratt. 12.

5th. That the executor was liable for the loss of Dabney's debt. That Mrs. Atkinson was a competent witness, the question not being one in which the estate 166 *of Charles C. Page was interested; and the testimony relating to facts occurring after the termination of the coverture. Robin v. King, 2 Leigh 140; 1 Greenleaf's Evi. § 337-8. Nor was she interested to swell the amount of the estate in order to prevent a decree against her, as the executor was not entitled to such a decree although he may have overpaid her. Davis v. Newman, 2 Rob. R. 664. That the proofs made out a case against the executor of such negligence as subjected him for not collecting the debt. 3 Paige's R. 182; Shultz v. Pulver, 11 Wend. R. 361; Powell v. Evans, 5 Ves. R. 839.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that partial payments made by the executor to legatees from time to time on account, though upon a settlement and adjustment of accounts thereafter, it should appear that such advances may exceed the amount to which some of the legatees were entitled, does not constitute such an actual settlement of the executor's account, as to take the demand for commissions out of the operation of the statute. The Court is therefore of opinion, that there is no error in so much of said decree as disallowed the claim for commissions.

But the Court is of opinion, that there is error in so much of said decree as charges the executor with the debt due from Benjamin Dabney deceased, to the testator of the appellant, for the purchase of the farm called Toler's. The testator, in his lifetime, had rested upon the security of the deed of trust on the land; the executor had acquired additional security on slaves, and it does not satisfactorily appear that by any degree of diligence, he could have more to secure the payment of the whole debt. The loss would seem to have been incurred from the extraordinary depreciation in the value of the property covered by the deed of trust, *rather than from any culpable neglect on the part of the executor.

And as to other errors alleged in argument by the counsel of the appellant to be apparent on the face of the account, which, if they exist, it is contended by the counsel of the appellees, are more than counter balanced by other errors apparent on the face of the account to their prejudice, this Court deems it unnecessary to express any opinion. As the case must go back to a commissioner, such errors of calculation or of improper credits, or charges of interest, or any other errors alleged to exist on the face of the account, can be considered and corrected, and the conclusions of the commissioner brought to the notice of the Court by specific exceptions directed to the particular matters objected to. And in respect to the specific legacies bequeathed, it will be competent for the executor upon such recommitment to shew, if he can, that he is entitled to any additional credits for payments on account thereof. And an enquiry should be directed to ascertain, if said legacies are still unpaid, whether in the condition of the estate, distribution should be decreed among the residuary legatees, of the funds in the hands of the executor, or the same should be retained for the payment of specific legatees; and for this purpose, the appellees should be required to make the legatee, Sally P. Welford, a party, unless it should appear she died unmarried before attaining the age of 21 years.

The Court, therefore, without pronouncing any opinion upon the errors alleged on both sides to be apparent on the face of the account, but leaving them to be corrected, if they exist, upon a restatement of the account, is of opinion, that the decree is erroneous in charging the executor with the debt due from B. Dabney deceased, as aforesaid.

Reversed, with costs to the appellant, and remanded, with leave to make the legatee, S. P. Welford, or her representatives, *a party or parties if necessary, and with instructions to recommit the account to a commissioner, to restate the same; in which the executor is not to be charged with the uncollected balance of said Dabney's debt; and to correct any other errors if discovered, apparent on the face of the account; for the proper enquiries in regard to the specific legacies; and for further proceedings in order to a final decree.

Columbian College v. Clopton's Adm'r &c.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

1. Bonds—Obligation to Pay a Certain Amount on College Debt on Condition That Rest of Debt Is Raised—Death of Obligor before Debt Paid.—A executes a bond, by which he binds himself to pay a sum certain for the purpose of discharging the debts of C. college, upon condition that like pledges shall be obtained to the whole amount of the college debts; and that this fact shall be announced by a committee constituted of persons named, of whom he was one. A dies before the announcement that the pledges have been obtained; but they are obtained, and the announcement is made by the other members of the committee and another person appointed in his place; and the whole of the college debt is afterwards discharged. Held: The bond having been given for the purpose of paying the debts of the college, and they having been paid, a Court of equity will not enforce the payment of the bond against A's estate.

2. Same—Same—Recognition of Obligation in Will of Obligor—Payment of Debt—Liability of Obligor's Estate.—A by his will says he is bound and willing to pay his bond, provided the pledges given shall appear to be indubitably valid, and the whole amount pledged shall be first paid. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same—Effect.—The will does not contemplate the payment of the bond for any other object than for the discharge of the college debts, but adds another condition to the payment, and therefore does not give any additional force to the bond.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same.—The provision of the will is not a bequest of the amount of the bond to the college.

169 *3. Same—Same—Same—Bequest by Implication.—A by his will says, "If C. college should fail, I will that the sum pledged to that shall be given to N. institution." Held: This is not a bequest by implication to C. college.

4. Same—Same—Same—Equity Practice.—Quære: If a Court of equity will relieve against a condition precedent, where the subject admits of compensation, or the parties can be placed in the same condition in which they would have been if the condition had been performed, and there has been a substantial performance of the condition.

The Columbian College in the District of Columbia was chartered by Congress in 1821. In 1832 the college had become deeply involved in debt; and on the 10th of December of that year, the board of trustees appointed a committee, of which the Rev. Abner W. Clopton was one, to report on the state of the college debt, and their means of paying it. This committee made a report, shewing the amount of the debts, with interest thereon to the 1st of January 1833, to be 31,413 dollars 6 cents; and thereupon Mr. Clopton was appointed by the board of trustees their general agent to obtain bonds, pledging the sums therein named, with interest from the 1st of January 1833, for the purpose of securing the payment of the said debt of 31,413 dollars 6 cents.

To aid in carrying into effect the objects of the trustees, Mr. Clopton executed the following bond:

"Whereas at a meeting of the board of trustees of the Columbian College, held in the City of Washington, December 11th, 1832, it was ascertained that the debts against the college, with interest till the 1st of January 1833, amounted to 31,413 dollars 6 cents: And whereas, in making provision for the certain and speedy payment of said debts, regard must be had also to the interest accruing upon the principal from the 1st of January 1833, till both principal and interest shall be paid: I do hereby promise to raise, by voluntary contributions or out of my own funds, and to pay to Enoch Reynolds, treasurer of the college, towards the payment of the said amount of 31,413 dollars 6 cents, *the sum of 2413 dollars 6 cents, with the interest accruing thereon from the 1st of January 1833, until principal and interest shall be paid: Provided, however, that the whole amount of 31,413 dollars 6 cents shall be pledged on the same condition. And provided, moreover, that this fact of the whole amount being thus pledged shall be distinctly announced by a committee consisting of the Rev. S. Cornelius, Enoch Reynolds, George Wood and A. W. Clopton, before the obligation shall be binding. Witness my hand and seal, this 24th day of January 1833.

Abner W. Clopton, [Seal.]"

Very soon after the execution of this bond, Mr. Clopton was taken sick; and he died in April 1833. By his will which bore date the 12th of March 1833, and which was duly admitted to probat, he provided: "First, I am bound and willing to pay my bond placed in the hands of the treasurer of the Columbian College, provided the whole amount pledged shall first appear indubitably valid. And, as I am under such peculiar circumstances, provided further, that the whole amount thus pledged shall have been first paid." He then proceeded to make bequests to different relations; and towards the conclusion of his will he says: "If the Columbian College should fail, I will that the sum pledged to that shall be given to the Newton Institution, in the State of Massachusetts."

The whole amount necessary to discharge the college debt was pledged by the execution of bonds similar to that executed by Clopton; but before the announcement of the fact was made by the committee, not only Clopton but Enoch Reynolds, another member of it, had died. On the 27th of December 1833, the board of trustees appointed two other persons members of this committee, in the place of Clopton and Reynolds; *and in 1834 the committee so constituted did announce the fact that the whole amount was pledged and that the pledges were indubitably valid; and prior to March 1842 the entire debt of the college, the payment whereof was intended to be secured by the said bonds and pledges, had been fully discharged and paid.

In November 1843, the Columbian College filed its bill in the Circuit court of Charlotte county, in which the foregoing facts were stated; and having made the administrator de bonis non of Clopton and the administrator of Daniel Terry, the first administrator, parties defendants, it was claimed that either under the bond or the will of Clopton, the college was entitled to have the amount which he had pledged himself to pay towards the discharge of the college debt.

The administrator de bonis non answered, submitting the question to the Court. But the administrator of Daniel Terry, who was one of the residuary legatees of Clopton, in his answer contested the claim, on the ground that the provisos in the bond were conditions precedent, and by the death of the parties who were to perform them, had not been and could not be complied with. And he insisted that the will, instead of dispensing with the necessity of performing these precedent conditions, added another; and that, therefore, for the same reason, the college had no title under the will.

The cause came on to be finally heard in November 1843, when the Court below dismissed the bill. Whereupon the plaintiff applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellant, contended,

1st. That though at law a condition precedent must be strictly performed, yet equity will relieve where compensation can be made, or where the parties can be put in the same condition as they would have been in *if the condition had been complied with. And they insisted that in this case the first condition of the bond of Clopton had been fully complied with; and that there had been a substantial compliance with the second. On this point they referred to Holtham v. Ryland, 1 Equ. Cas. Abr. 18; Neal v. Logan, 1 Gratt. 14; Hayard v. Angell, 1 Vern. R. 222; Ld. Falkland v. Bertie, 2 Vern. R. 333, 343; Simpson v. Vickers, 14 Ves. R. 341; Roper Leg. 771, 773; Hollinrake v. Lister, 1 Russ. R. 500; City Bank of Baltimore v. Smith, 3 Gill & John. 265. And they further insisted, that if the Court would refuse relief upon the bond if it stood alone, yet that the first clause of the will dispensed with the condition contained in the second proviso of the bond, and taking the bond and will together the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

2d. That by the first clause of the will of Abner Clopton, there was a bequest of the amount of the bond to the college, upon the conditions specified in the will; and that these conditions had been fully performed. And they further insisted, that if the will was to be considered as imposing the condition embraced in the second proviso of the bond, then it was an impossible condition, and therefore void. And on this point they referred to Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 711; Lowther v. Cavendish, 1 Eden's R. 99; 1 Roper Leg. 755; 2 Williams' Ex'ors 786; 2 Story's Equ. Jur. § 1307.

3d. That the bequest over to the Newton Institution, if the Columbian College should fail, was a bequest by implication to the college. On this point they referred to 2 Roper Leg. 1439, 1441; Crowder v. Clowes, 2 Ves. jr. 449; Waineright v. Waineright, 3 Ves. R. 558.

Robinson, for the appellee, insisted,

1st. That a condition precedent must be strictly performed; and that the condition contained in the *second proviso of Clopton's bond had not been and could not now be complied with. He referred to Platt on Cov. 104; 1 Jarm. on Wills 797; Maryon v. Carter, 19 Eng. C. L. R. 392; Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 711; Popham v. Bampfild, 1 Vern. R. 79, 83; Bertie v. Ld. Falkland, 2 Freeman 220, 3 Ch. Cas. 129, 2 Vern. 333; Harvey v. Aston, 1 Atk. R. 361; Whitmel v. Farrel, 1 Ves. sr. 256; Hargrave's argument in Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 456 to 463; Knight v. Cameron, 14 Ves. R. 389; Clarke v. Parker, 19 Id. 1; Long v. Ricketts, 1 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 405; Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price's Exch. R. 200; White v. Warner, 2 Meriv. R. 459; 1 Jarm. on Wills, 805, 836; 4 Kent's Com. 125; 1 Maddox Ch. 41; City Bank of Baltimore v. Smith, 3 Gill & John. 265.

2d. He referred to the fact that the bond of Clopton was executed for the purpose of paying the college debt, and that the proofs shewed that the whole debt was paid, and therefore if Clopton's estate was compelled to pay the bond it must be applied to some other purpose than that for which it was intended; it was not, therefore, a case which commended itself to the favour of the Court. And he then insisted that it was not the purpose of Clopton, by the first clause of his will, to make a bequest to the college, but to recognize his existing obligation. Nor was it his purpose to dispense with the conditions of his bond, but to add another.

3d. He insisted that the bequest to Newton Institution upon the failure of the Columbian College, was not upon the failure of the latter to pay its debt, but upon its failure to become entitled to demand the payment of the bond. It was a question, therefore, between the two institutions, and presented a case in which a condition precedent must be strictly performed. And he referred to Simpson v. Vickers, 14 Ves. R. 341; Lister v. Garland, 15 Id. 248.

174 *ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion that it distinctly appears from the recital in the bond executed by the testator of the appellee, that the sole purpose of the obligor in giving said obligation, was to aid in raising funds to pay the debts then pressing upon the college. After reciting that at a meeting of the board of trustees of the Columbian College, held in the City of Washington, December 11, 1832, it was ascertained that the debts against the college, with interest till the 1st of January 1833, amounted to 31,413 dollars 6 cents, and that in making provision for the certain and speedy payment of said debts regard should be had also to the interest accruing on the principal from the 1st January 1833, till both principal and interest should be paid; the obligor promised to raise by voluntary contributions or out of his own funds, and to pay to the treasurer towards the payment of the said amount of 31,413 dollars 6 cents, the sum of 2413 dollars 6 cents, with the interest accruing thereon from the 1st January 1833 until principal and interest should be paid; provided, however, the whole amount of 31,413, dollars 6 cents should be pledged on the same condition; and provided moreover, that the fact of the whole amount being thus pledged should be distinctly announced by a committee consisting of persons named, before the obligation should be binding.

The recital shews that the testator of the appellee was looking solely to the release of the college from its embarrassments; that in entering into the obligation, he did not contemplate a mere gift or benevolence to the college, to be used by it for any ulterior purpose consistent with the general objects of the institution. Accordingly, and in conformity with this general intent, he bound himself to raise by voluntary contributions or out of his own funds the sum stipulated, not for the general purposes of the college, but towards the *payment of the debt designated. But as that sum would still leave a heavy debt unpaid under which the institution might sink, and so his contribution fail in effecting his object, the whole sum was to be pledged and the fact announced. Whatever might have been the rights of the parties in a Court of law, if the condition precedent had been strictly complied with, here the appellant is seeking the aid of a Court of equity, upon the ground of a substantial performance of the condition; and to make out a case for relief, has proved that the whole debt of 31,413 dollars 6 cents, principal and interest, has been paid, and the college relieved from difficulty. The object therefore which the testator of the appellee had in view when he gave his obligation, has been attained otherwise: the liabilities have been discharged towards the payment of which alone he bound himself to raise a stipulated sum. If the creditors of the college, prompted by the same motives which actuated the obligor, had immediately after the execution of the obligation, released the debts, there would have been no obligation, at least in equity, to raise and pay over the money. The Court is therefore of opinion, that upon the bond alone the appellant is not, upon the facts disclosed by the record, entitled to any relief.

And the Court is further of opinion, that the appellant's claim to relief is not aided by considering the bond in connection with the will of the appellees' testator. The first clause of the will recognizes his obligation and willingness to pay, provided the whole amount pledged should first appear indubitably valid; and provided the whole amount thus pledged should have been first paid. This recognition of his bond, and expression of a willingness to pay on certain conditions, does not change the nature of the obligation so far as respected the purpose for which it was given;

it superadds conditions to those contained in the bond, *but did not contemplate a payment for any other object than the one specified in the bond, the discharge of the debt due by the college.

And the Court is further of opinion, that neither the clause referred to, nor the clause in which he directs that if the Columbian College should fail, the sum pledged to that should be given to the Newton Institution in the State of Massachusetts, constitutes, under the circumstances of this case, a direct legacy or a legacy by implication to the college of the sum specified in the bond; because there is no bequest of the amount of the bond, but a mere recognition of the bond as an existing obligation, and an expression of a willingness to pay on certain conditions; but the purposes for which payment was to be made is still to be gathered from the bond itself, the discharge of the liabilities of the college; and this is made clear by the second clause, from which it would seem he looked to the contingency of the college failing in being relieved from its embarrassments, in which event he directed the amount pledged to that should be given to another institution. He does not speak of the amount as given to or bequeathed to the college for its general purposes, but as pledged to it; and a reference to the bond referred to discloses that the sole object of the pledge was to pay a specified debt; and it appearing that the debt intended to be provided for has been otherwise paid, the college cannot assert a claim to the fund to be applied to any ulterior object.

The circumstances shew that the arrangement was made for the purpose of discharging the college debts by means of voluntary contributions, and not to contract a debt to the college to be paid in any event. The pledge was entered into to give weight to the appeal expected to be made to the members of his religious society, his personal friends, and the friends of the institution, for liberal contributions.

Prevented by *the approach of death from soliciting voluntary contributions, he felt himself, under the peculiar circumstances alluded to in his will, bound to pay the amount out of his own estate, to be applied to the college debts, provided the whole debt should be thereby extinguished; but he did not thereby recognize himself as a debtor, or intend a gift or bequest to the college for any other purpose than that for which the pledge had been given; and the object having been accomplished in some other mode, the obligation incurred by the pledge originally, and the recognition of it in the will, is at an end.

West's Adm'r & als. v. Thornton & als.

October Term. 1850. Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

Equity Practice—Laches and Lapse of Time—Bill Set Aside.*—Bill dismissed on the ground of lapse of time and the laches of the plaintiffs, and the danger of doing injustice by attempting to settle the accounts between the parties.

This was a suit by the administrator de bonis non and the distributees of Meaux Thornton deceased, against the administrator de bonis non of Robert West deceased, and the administrator and legatees of the surety of Robert West as administrator of Meaux Thornton, and the administrator de bonis non, widow, devisees and legatees of George M. West deceased, originally brought in the Circuit court of King William, and removed from thence to the Circuit court of Hanover county. The object of the suit was to redeem certain slaves which the plaintiffs alleged had been mortgaged by Meaux Thornton to Robert West to secure *a debt due from Thornton to West, and to have a settlement of Robert West's administration upon the estate of Meaux Thornton. The pleadings and proofs make the following case:

Meaux Thornton by a deed bearing date the 17th of January 1807, conveyed to Robert West seven slaves by name, and also his interest in a suit pending in the County court of Gloucester against the administrator of John Perrin, to secure to West the sum of £102. 10. 6., with interest from 1804, with power to sell as many of the slaves as should be sufficient to pay the debt, upon ten days notice, provided he was not paid within six months out of the proceeds of the suit against Perrin's administrator.

Meaux Thornton seems to have died prior to February 1809, as on the 6th of that month Robert West qualified as his administrator, in the County court of Gloucester, as appeared from the certificate of the clerk of the General court. It does not appear whether West had possession of the slaves mentioned in the mortgage before his qualification as administrator; but it is certain that he removed from the county of Gloucester to the county of Buckingham, taking these slaves with him; and that he held them until his death in 1816. In January 1817, George M. West qualified in the County court of Buckingham, as the executor of Robert West; and these slaves were inventoried by him as the property of his testator's estate; and were so held until 1824, when he died. The unadministered estate of Robert West was then committed to Price Perkins, sheriff of Buckingham county, and these slaves were held by him until 1829, when they were levied on and sold by the marshal of the Richmond Chancery court, under a decree of that Court made in a case therein depending, of Lyons, administrator of Robinson against Perkins, administrator de bonis non of Robert West.

179 *The present suit was commenced in June 1832. The plaintiffs alleged in their bill the execution of the mortgage, and exhibited a copy thereof certified by John Robinson, clerk of the Circuit court of Henrico. They alleged that Meaux Thornton continued in possession of the slaves until his death in 1809. That West qualified as his administrator and took possession of the slaves, and held them until his death. And they state as the ground of the delay which had occurred in the institution of their suit, that a suit had been brought by John W. Perrin and others against Meaux Thornton in his lifetime, for the recovery of these slaves; that this suit was revived against Robert West as administrator of Thornton, and having been removed from the County court of Gloucester to the Chancery court at Richmond, it had been recently decided in favour of the administrator of Meaux Thornton.

A copy of the record in the case of Perrins against West's administrator and others, was made a part of this case. That was a suit brought in 1803, by the distributees of John Perrin deceased, some of them infants who sued by their next friend, against Meaux Thornton, to recover certain slaves, Mary and her children, which the plaintiffs alleged belonged to the estate of John Perrin; and of which Mary went into the possession of his widow, who afterwards married Meaux Thornton. Thornton answered the bill, and insisted that John Perrin, in his lifetime, never claimed the slave Mary, who had been the property of his wife before her marriage, and that after his death in 1791, Mrs. Perrin held her as her own property, and the slave and her increase had remained in the possession of Mrs. Perrin and of himself since his intermarriage with her, ever since, without any question of his title until this suit was brought.

180 *In April 1809, the death of the defendant, Meaux Thornton, was suggested, and the suit was revived by consent against Robert West as his administrator.

He does not appear to have filed an answer, or to have set up any other defence than that set up by Thornton. In 1817, the suit abated as to Robert West, by his death, and was revived against George M. West, as his executor. He filed an answer, in which, after insisting that the plaintiffs had no title to the slaves, he says, that Meaux Thornton, in his lifetime, sold said slaves to Robert West for a full consideration; or that being indebted to Robert West, he mortgaged the slaves to West to secure the payment of the debt. That he was not then acquainted with the precise character of the transaction, but expected to be able at the hearing to explain and prove it to the satisfaction of the Court. That he was then in possession of the slaves as a part of his testator's estate, and in that character claimed them as his property. That if the slaves ever did belong to the estate of John Perrin, the title was lost by lapse of time, and the adverse possession held by Thornton vested the title in him; and that Robert West having purchased them of Thornton, had a just title to them.

The mortgage executed by Meaux Thornton to Robert West in 1808, was filed in that suit. All the other evidence in the cause was upon the question of Mrs. Thornton's title to the slave Mary, who was the mother of the others.

The cause came on to be heard in March 1820, when there was a decree dismissing the bill with costs; and from this decree, there was an appeal to this Court. Whilst the cause was here, George M. West died, and the appeal was revived against Price Perkins, administrator de bonis non, &c., of Robert West; and in 1831, the decree was affirmed.

181 *Jane West, the widow of George M. West, and Perkins the administrator de bonis non of Robert West, in their answers, denied all knowledge of the plaintiffs' claim; and Perkins expressly relied upon the lapse of time, the death of all the parties who had any knowledge of the transaction, the fact that the clerk's office of the County court of Gloucester, with all its records, had been burned, and the other circumstances of the case, as a bar to the recovery sought by the plaintiffs.

The Court below directed various accounts, which were taken; and the commissioner reported that there was due from Robert West to Meaux Thornton, after satisfying the mortgage debt, on the 31st of December 1816, 490 dollars 61 cents. That there was due from George M. West, on the 1st of January 1825, for the hires of the mortgaged slaves, 2165 dollars 45 cents of principal, and 431 dollars 5 cents of interest; and that there was due from Perkins, for the hires of these same slaves up to the time they were sold by the marshal, 1000 dollars of principal, and 90 dollars of interest; and that the slaves sold for 1758 dollars.

The cause came on to be finally heard in April 1842, when the Court made a decree in conformity to the report of the commissioner, holding Perkins liable personally, for the hires of the slaves whilst in his possession; and also for the price for which they were sold by the marshal. From this decree, the defendants applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

The case was elaborately argued in this Court by R. T. Daniel, Taylor, Patton and the Attorney General, for the appellants, and Lyons for the appellees, upon various questions presented on the record; but the Court considered but the question of lapse of time.

182 *ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that under any aspect of the appellees' claim, they are not entitled to the relief prayed for. The alleged mortgage by Meaux Thornton to Robert West, was executed on the 17th January 1807. When Robert West acquired possession of the slaves, does not distinctly appear. Meaux Thornton having died, Robert West administered on his estate in the County court of Gloucester, in February 1809. It is alleged he took possession of the slaves as administrator, not as mortgagee; but of this allegation, there is no proof. The records of Gloucester County court having been destroyed by fire, no account of his administration appears; and none after such a lapse of time, and the death of the original parties and their immediate representatives, can now be looked for. In the mean time, the slaves were removed by Robert West to another county, where he died. In 1817, his executor, George M. West, administered on his estate, took possession of the slaves as the assets thereof, and died in 1824; and his administratrix, Jane West, having been removed, administration of his estate has been committed to the sheriff. After the death of George M. West, administration de bonis non of the estate of Robert West, was committed to Price Perkins, sheriff of Buckingham, in November 1824. He took possession of the slaves as part of the unadministered assets of the estate of Robert West, and held them until February 1829, when they were sold as assets of that estate, at the suit of the creditors thereof. On the 13th of June 1832, this suit was instituted, 25 years after the execution of the mortgage, 23 years after the death of Meaux Thornton and administration on his estate, 15 years after the death of Robert West and administration on his estate, 8 years after the death of his executor, and 3 years after the sale of the negroes, as assets of Robert West's estate found in the hands of 183 the sheriff, his administrator *de bonis non. The long delay and laches of the appellees in asserting their claim, is not satisfactorily accounted for. The suit of Perrin asserting an adverse claim to the property against Meaux Thornton, does not furnish a sufficient apology. If they had notice of the suit at all, they would have perceived that as early as 1817, George M. West, the executor of Robert West, asserted by his answer, that his testator, Robert

West, had a clear and just title to the property; thus setting up, and insisting upon a title adverse to the claim of the appellees. This assertion of an adverse claim should have led to enquiry. Had such enquiry been made, they would have perceived that the executor had made the allegation in good faith; that he had inventoried the slaves as part of the assets of his testator; thus making himself responsible to creditors and distributees for their hires and value. It does not appear when administration de bonis non upon the estate of Meaux Thornton was taken out, or how long it remained unrepresented after the death of Robert West; the fact, if material, should have been shewn by the appellees. But so far as the record discloses, they were all competent to act for themselves at the death of Meaux Thornton; no disability is alleged or shewn. As distributees of Meaux Thornton, they were the proper parties to have sued the administrator for a settlement and distribution; and that is one aspect of their bill. And though the personal representative was the proper party to file the bill to redeem, yet those who claim through him are not relieved from the consequences of their gross laches, if without any valid excuse, they fail to take the proper steps to procure a representative for such a length of time, and until after such a change of parties and circumstances, as to render it doubtful whether any decree can be pronounced without the hazard of injustice. In this case, the assertion of their claim involves the settlement of the administration account of Robert West *on 184 Meaux Thornton's estate, 15 years after the death of the administrator, and after the destruction of the records of the Court by which administration was granted; a settlement of the administration account of George M. West, executor of Robert West, 8 years after his death; an account of the hires and profits of the slaves from 1809, after the death of all the original parties and their immediate representatives, and after the property itself has passed into the hands of bona fide purchasers, and the proceeds arising from the sale have been applied to the payment of the creditors of Robert West's estate.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that upon the ground of adverse claim asserted upon the part of the estate of Robert West, and so long uncontroverted, the laches of the appellees in asserting their claim, and the hazard of injustice to others in going into settlements of estates, and calling for accounts of hires and profits of slaves under the circumstances of this case, the bill of the appellees should have been dismissed.

BALDWIN, J., concurred in so much of the decree as dismissed the bill as to Price Perkins individually, beyond the hires of the slaves whilst in his hands, but dissented from the residue; being of opinion, that the appellees are not precluded from relief by the statute of limitations or lapse of time.

Decree reversed, and bill dismissed.

1. Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances—Grantor Continuing in Possession—Presumption—Burden of Proof of Fairness.—The grantor in an absolute conveyance of personal property, continuing in possession thereof, such continued possession raises the legal presumption that the sale was fraudulent as regards the creditors of the grantor; which presumption throws imperatively upon the grantee the whole burthen of proving the fairness and good faith of the transaction; and that cannot be done without sufficient evidence that the pretended sale was for a fair and valuable consideration; and in the absence of such evidence, the prima facie presumption becomes absolutely and irresistibly conclusive.

2. Same—Judgment against Grantor and Surety—Right of Surety.—A judgment having been obtained against the grantor and his surety, the surety may direct the execution to be levied upon the property so conveyed, and set up the fraud in the conveyance.

This was a suit by William Miller in the Circuit court of Goochland, to enjoin the sale of a slave named Hezekiah, levied on by the sheriff under an execution which issued upon a judgment recovered by John Guerrant against William Lewis and Thomas Curd, upon a bond in which Lewis was principal and Curd was his surety. Miller, who was the father in law of Lewis, claimed the sale under a deed bearing date the 27th of November 1835, and admitted to record in the clerk's office of the County court of Goochland, by which Lewis, in consideration, as stated in the deed, of his having sold several negro slaves which he received by his wife, and of William Miller having paid and advanced for him at various times the sum of 1084 dollars 93 cents in cash, and of his the said Miller's having loaned to him for two years past a young negro man about twenty years
186 old, named James, granted, *bargained and sold to said William Miller nine slaves by name, one of whom was the

Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances—Grantor Continues in Possession—Presumption.—The retaining possession of personal property by the vendor, after an absolute sale, is prima facie fraudulent; but the presumption may be rebutted by proof. Davis v. Turner, 4 Gratt. 422. For this proposition the principal case is cited and approved in Livesay v. Beard, 22 W. Va. 594; Bindley v. Martin, 28 W. Va. 793; In re Benford, 3 Fed. Cas. 292.

In Dally v. Warren, 80 Va. 523, the principal case is distinguished, the court saying that an assignee of a chose in action is not required to do more than to take possession of the thing or evidence of debt assigned. After a careful and critical comparison of the facts of this case with facts of the cases cited by appellant, Davis v. Turner, 4 Gratt. 422, Curd v. Miller, 7 Gratt. 185, Twyne's Case, 3 Coke 80, we find no analogy or proper application to the case under review. See generally, monographic note on "Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances" appended to Cochran v. Paris, 11 Gratt. 348.

slave Hezekiah, and all his household and kitchen furniture. And the deed concluded as follows: "The possession of whom and all which property I do hereby acknowledge is to be taken, and hereby do authorize to be taken by the said William Miller, his executors or administrators or assigns, whenever he or they may think proper. In witness whereof," &c.

Lewis lived on a farm of Miller at the time of the execution of this deed, and continued to live there until the execution was levied. And he retained in his possession all the property mentioned in the deed until after the bill was filed in this case. The slave Hezekiah was employed by him on a boat which he ran upon the James River and Kanawha canal, at the time the execution was levied; and the levy was made by the directions of Thomas Curd, who indemnified the sheriff.

Miller, in his bill, after setting out his title under the deed of the 27th of November 1835, charged that he had purchased the slave from Lewis for a valuable consideration, and paid for him, and that he was his property without any condition; and having made the sheriff, and Guerrant, Curd and Lewis, defendants, he asked for an injunction to restrain the sale; which was granted.

Curd, in his answer, said, that he was a surety of Lewis in the debt on which the execution issued; that Lewis had ever held possession of the slave Hezekiah, and was in possession and with him at the time of the levy. That he did not admit that Miller had purchased the slave from Lewis and given valuable consideration for him, but he insisted that the deed upon its face shewed that no valid and bona fide sale of the property mentioned in said deed was made by Lewis to Miller; but the con-
187 siderations therein mentioned *were in all the instances considerations executed, and were not at all valuable considerations and given for the property therein conveyed. And that Lewis having retained possession of the slave, the sale to Miller, even if fair in other respects, was fraudulent in law as to the creditors of Lewis.

No evidence other than the deed, as to the considerations therein mentioned, was introduced by either party.

The cause came on to be heard in June 1844, when the Court below perpetuated the injunction. Whereupon Curd applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed. Whilst the cause was pending in this Court, Miller died, and it was revived against his executors.

Grattan, for the appellant.

Lyons and Taylor, for the appellees.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

Lewis, the grantor in the bill of sale to the appellee of the 27th of November 1835, in the proceedings mentioned, having, notwithstanding his alleged absolute sale of the slave Hezekiah thereby conveyed, continued in the possession of the said slave, such continued possession raises the legal presumption that the sale was fraudulent as regards the creditors of Lewis; which presumption throws imperatively upon the appellee the whole burthen of proving the fairness and good faith of the transaction; and that cannot be done without sufficient evidence that the pretended sale was for a fair and valuable consideration; and in the absence of such evidence, the prima facie presumption becomes absolutely and irresistibly conclusive.

No such evidence has been furnished by the appellee; on the contrary, the bill of sale itself contains no acknowledgment of a consideration actually paid by 188 *the grantee to the grantor, or of an equivalent existing indebtedness from the latter to the former, but serves to shew upon its face mere gratuities and voluntary advancements, entirely compatible with the relation of father in law and son in law existing between the parties.

The registration of the bill of sale is an immaterial circumstance, as in this case it throws no light upon the question whether the alleged sale was fair and honest, or a fraudulent contrivance to defeat the creditors of the grantor. And the authority given to the grantee by the bill of sale to take possession of the property at pleasure amounts to nothing, it being no more than that which results from the absolute conveyance itself.

Nor is it material, the property being that of Lewis, the principal debtor, that the execution was levied thereupon at the instance of the appellant Curd the surety, instead of Guerrant the creditor; for the question still recurs, whether the sale was fair or fraudulent as regards the creditors of the grantor; and it cannot be doubted that the surety has a right to avail himself of the fraudulent character of the transaction, and in truth is, within the spirit of the statute, at least in a Court of equity, a creditor himself. There is no pretence on the part of the appellee that, as between him and the appellant, the latter is primarily bound for the debt, or that he stands in any other relation to it than that of a mere surety.

Decree reversed with costs; injunction dissolved, and bill dismissed with costs.

189 *Orrick v. Colston.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

1. Promissory Notes—Endorser in Blank—Liability.*—

A paper signed in blank and endorsed in blank, may be filled up either as a common promissory note or a negotiable note; and the person who

Promissory Notes—Endorser in Blank—Liability—Rights of Holder.—In Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. 828, it is said: "From these and other cases to the same effect. I deduce that if a third party put his name in blank upon the back of a negotiable promissory note endorsed it in blank will be liable on his endorsement to a holder for value.

2. Same—Same—Same.—In such a case, if the paper is filled up as a common promissory note to a third person, who advances the money for it to the makers, he may treat the endorser as an original security, or as a guarantor of the note.

3. Same—Same—Right of Holder.—If, after the note is filled up and delivered to the payee, the holder fills up the blank endorsement with a guaranty, he may afterwards erase it and proceed against the endorser as an original security.

4. Same—Same—Case Agreed—Judgment in Court of Appeals.—In this case the endorsement was filled up after suit brought thereon; and the declaration charged the endorser both as original surety and as guarantor. On the trial the parties agreed a case, on which the Court below gave a judgment for the defendant. On appeal, this Court, without deciding whether the filling up of the endorsement constituted a guaranty or an original security, reversed the judgment, and entered a judgment against the defendant as an original surety, without sending the case back to have the filling up of the endorsement erased, and to have it filled up as an original promise.

Starbuck and Forman were partners and millers in the county of Berkeley; and Edward Colston of the same county was in the habit of endorsing their notes for their accommodation, and also of becoming their security where the evidence of debt was not negotiable. In August 1839 he was their endorser on a note discounted at bank, and a short time previous had given his blank made payable to another party, and to which he is a stranger, while the same remains in the hands of the maker, he will be presumed, in the absence of controlling proof to the contrary, to have intended to give the note credit and currency; and if the endorsement was at the time of the making of the note, he may be treated by the payee as an original promiser or joint maker of the note. If the endorsement were after the date of the note, however long, the payee may treat him as a guarantor, and may write over the signature a guaranty consistent with the nature of the case. And the fair and reasonable, if not necessary inference from cases which have occurred in this court, will bring us to the same result. See Douglass v. Scott, 8 Leigh 48; Watson v. Hurt, 6 Gratt. 683; Orrick v. Colston, 7 Gratt. 189." See, in accord, citing the principal case, Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Gratt. 496; Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. 828; Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 80; Broun v. Hull, 33 Gratt. 36; Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Gratt. 385, 391; Welsh v. Ebersole, 75 Va. 659; First Nat. Bank v. Lockstitch Fence Co., 24 Fed. Lafferty*, 42 W. Va. 789, 26 S. E. Rep. 264.

In First Nat. Bank v. Lockstitch Fence Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 225, it is said: "Shortly stated, the controversy between the parties involves this question: What liability is assumed by a third party who places his name upon the back of a negotiable promissory note at the time of its execution by the maker, and before its delivery to the payee; and must liability in such case be determined in this court according to the course of judicial decision in the state where endorsement to the partner Starbuck, for the purpose of renewing said note.

190 *On the 12th of August 1839 the plaintiff Orrick, who lived in the county of Morgan, about twenty-five or thirty miles from the residence of Starbuck and Forman, and about fifteen miles from Colston, received from Starbuck the following note: "Dear Sir:—I have for you a blank note at eight months, which I wish you to fill up with as much as you can spare me, and if convenient, enclose a check for the amount to-morrow to Charlestown, where I shall be till Thursday morning. Should you want it at the expiration of the time, I can give it you, but would prefer extending it longer, leaving the matter at your option. Yours,

"C. C. Starbuck."

In this note was enclosed a paper signed in blank with the name of Starbuck and Forman, and endorsed in blank by Edward Colston, both the signatures being genuine. On the next day the plaintiff did, in pursuance of this application, advance and pay over to Starbuck and Forman one thousand dollars as a loan, and wrote over their signature the following note: "Eight months after date we promise and bind ourselves, our heirs and assigns, to pay to Cromwell Orrick, his heirs or assigns, the sum of one thousand dollars, with interest from the date hereof, for value received; as witness our hand and seal this 13th day of August 1839.

"Starbuck & Forman."

And after this action was brought he wrote over the blank signature of Colston the following: "In consideration of the loan of 1000 dollars by Cromwell Orrick, I hereby guaranty the payment of the within sum of money.

"Edw'd Colston."

Between March and June 1840, executions amounting to about 5000 dollars, issued on judgments recovered against Starbuck and Forman, went into the hands of the sheriff of Berkeley county, and were levied upon the obligation was incurred? Whether, in the cases stated, the liability is that of original promisor, indorser, or guarantor, has been a question upon which great diversity of opinion has existed in many of the courts of the states. But the growing current of authority, even before Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 90, seemed to tend towards the view that the liability assumed by a third party who thus indorsed a note in blank was that of original promisor, although a different rule was, and is yet, adhered to in some of the states. In New York it has been held in a long line of cases, of which Haviland v. Haviland, 14 Hun 627; Phelps v. Vischer, 50 N. Y. 60, and Coulter v. Richmond, 59 N. Y. 478, are examples, that presumptively such a party stands to the paper in the relation of indorser, but that this presumption may be rebutted by parol proof that the indorsement was made to give the maker credit with the payee. The same rule of liability prevails in Wisconsin. Cady v. Shepard, 12 Wis. 718. In Massachusetts it is held in a series of cases too extended for citation that if a third person place his name in blank on the back of a note before its delivery to the payee, the whole of their personal property, 191 which was not *sufficient to satisfy them. They absconded from the State in the early part of June, when they were ascertained to be insolvent; though when they absconded they held in possession a considerable real estate in the county of Berkeley, which was attached by some of their creditors, but was claimed by others, of whom Colston was one, under a deed of trust bearing date the 27th of June 1840, executed by Starbuck in the City of New York.

No communication took place between Orrick and Colston in relation to this transaction before the loan was made and the blank signature used as before stated; indeed, Colston had been absent from the Commonwealth, in the State of Kentucky, for more than a month prior to the 12th of August 1839. And about the time this loan was made Starbuck had, in one or more cases, fraudulently used certain blank endorsements furnished him by persons other than Colston.

In June 1841, Orrick brought an action against Colston in the Circuit court of Berkeley, upon the endorsement aforesaid, and charged him in his declaration both as an original surety and also as a guarantor of the debt. The issue was made up on the plea of non assumpsit; and on the trial, the parties agreed the facts as they have been stated, and submitted the questions arising thereon to the Court. Whereupon the Court gave a judgment for the defendant; and the plaintiff applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was granted.

Johnson & Johnston, for the appellant, considered first, the question whether Colston was liable to Orrick upon his endorsement. On this point they stated the general principle to be that the delivery of a blank signature binds the deliverer for whatever is written over it consistent with the face of the paper; and that this principle applied to paper that was not negotiable as he is an original promisor, and the presumption is, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the names on the back and on the face of the note were written at the same time. To the same effect are 1 Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) 248; Irish v. Cutter, 31 Me. 536; Schneider v. Schiffman, 20 Mo. 571; Orrick v. Colston, 7 Gratt. 189; Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 485; Sylvester v. Downer, 20 Vt. 355; Lewis v. Harvey, 18 Mo. 74.

"In this state (Illinois) it appears to be the established rule that a blank indorsement by a third party, made under the circumstances heretofore stated, is prima facie evidence of a liability in the capacity of a guarantor. In most of the cases wherein it has been so held, the holder sought to enforce against such third party the liability of guarantor, and the contention of the latter was that he could only be made liable as indorser. Camden v. McKoy, 3 Scam. 487; Cushman v. Dement, 3 Scam. 497; Carroll v. Weld, 13 Ill. 683; Klein v. Currier, 14 Ill. 237; Webster v. Cobb, 17 Ill. 459; Heintz v. Cahn, 29 Ill. 308; Glickauf v. Kaufmann, 78 Ill. 378; Boynton v. Pierce, 79 Ill. 145; Stowell v. Raymond, 83 Ill. 120; Wallace v. Goold, 91 Ill. 15."

192 *well as to paper that was. And they referred to Russel v. Langstaffe, Doug. R. 514; Schultz v. Astley, 29 Eng. C. L. R. 414; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; Putnam v. Sullivan, 4 Mass. R. 53; Violett v. Patton, 5 Cranch's R. 142; Douglass v. Scott & Fry, 8 Leigh 43.

They insisted, that when Colston endorsed the blank paper he authorized Starbuck and Forman to write upon it either a common promissory note or a negotiable note, and that his blank endorsement bound him for either in the character appropriate to the note written. And for this they referred to the cases of Russel v. Langstaffe; Schultz v. Astley; and Violett v. Patton, supra.

They insisted further, that Colston was liable either as an original surety or as a guarantor of the note. That whether as the one or the other, the loan of the money to the makers of the note was a sufficient consideration to bind him; and that he was not released by the failure to prove a demand of payment of the makers and notice of their failure to pay. And they cited Nelson v. Dubois, 13 John. R. 175; Campbell v. Butler, 14 Id. 349; Ulen v. Kittredge, 7 Mass. R. 233; Moies v. Bird, 11 Id. 436; Violett v. Patton, supra; Watson v. Hurt, 6 Gratt. 633; Russel v. Langstaffe, supra; Schultz v. Astley, supra; Josselyn v. Ames, 3 Mass. R. 274; Austin v. Boyd, 24 Pick. R. 64; Oxford Bank v. Haynes, 8 Id. 423.

They insisted further, that if Colston was strictly and only a guarantor of the note, in order to release him there must have been not only negligence on the part of Orrick in pursuing his remedies against Starbuck and Forman, but that Colston must have suffered loss by such negligence. For this they cited Allen v. Rightmire, 20 John. R. 365; Fell on Commercial Guaranties, 200, 201, 203, and the notes; Reynolds v. Douglass, 12 Peters' R. 497.

193 And they referred to *the facts to shew that it was impossible to have made the money out of Starbuck and Forman after the note fell due.

Robinson, for the appellee, admitted that if Starbuck, to whom Colston had entrusted his blank endorsement, had written on the paper a negotiable note, and Orrick had discounted it, Colston would, in that case, have been liable; his name in that case, would have bound him for the amount for which Orrick trusted Starbuck and Forman. But he insisted that Orrick had no authority from Colston to fill up the paper at all; and that Starbuck had only authority to fill it up with a negotiable note, so as to make Colston liable as endorser; and that he had no authority to subject him as guarantor. And he referred to Jordan v. Neilson, 2 Wash. 164; Tillman v. Wheeler, 17 John. R. 326; Seaberry v. Hungerford, 2 Hill's R. 80; Id. 194; Prosser v. Luqueer, 4 Hill's R. 420.

He insisted further, that if Colston's contract was a contract of guaranty, it was such a contract as that he would be discharged by the neglect of the holder of the note to give Colston notice of the sum advanced on it, or by his neglect to demand payment of the maker and to give the guarantor notice of non-payment. And for this he referred to Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Peters' R. 113; Lee v. Dick, 10 Peters' R. 482; Oxford Bank v. Haynes, 8 Pick. R. 423; Whiton v. Mears, 11 Metcalf's R. 563. And he referred to the facts to shew that when this note fell due Starbuck and Forman had property from which it might have been paid.

He insisted further, that if Colston was to be held liable as guarantor of a note which was not commercial paper, that there was no consideration for his guaranty, and that he therefore was not bound. Britten v. Webb, 9 Eng. C. L. R. 154; Fitzhugh v. Love, 6 Call 5.

194 *DANIEL, J. Upon the case agreed and submitted to the Court below, and now brought under revision here, two questions arise which have been very elaborately discussed at the bar: 1. Whether the appellee, Colston, by his endorsement, subjected himself to any liability; and 2. If so, whether he is liable in the form of contract and mode in which the appellant seeks to charge him.

It is well settled, that a blank endorsement on a negotiable instrument, blank as to date or amount at the time of the endorsement, if made for the purpose of giving a credit to the drawer, is as effectual to bind the endorser for any amount with which the instrument may be filled up by the drawer, or an innocent holder for value, as if the instrument had been complete at the time of the endorsement. In the case of Russel v. Langstaffe, Doug. R. 514, the Court of King's bench held, in the language of Lord Mansfield, that such an endorsement "is a letter of credit for an indefinite sum"—that the endorser, in effect said, "trust the drawer to any amount, and I will be his security." So in Schultz v. Astley, 29 Eng. C. L. R. 414, which was the case of an acceptance written on a paper, before entirely blank, it was held, that the blank acceptance was an acceptance of the bill afterwards put upon it; and that there is no distinction in principle, when the bill has passed into the hands of third persons, between holding the acceptor liable to a given amount, when the bill is afterwards drawn in the name of the party who has obtained the acceptance, and when it is drawn by a stranger who becomes the drawer at the instance of the party to whom the acceptance is given. And in the case of Douglass v. Scott & Fry, decided by this Court, 8 Leigh 43, where the paper was signed in blank, and endorsed in blank, and delivered to another to be filled up and used as a negotiable instrument to raise money on, the decision was to the same extent as if the maker had signed, and the endorsers endorsed, the paper in its perfect form.

Of a promissory note which is not in its form negotiable, and which has never been placed by our statutes on the footing of bills of exchange, there cannot, technically speaking, be an endorser. Yet no reason is perceived why one who endorses a paper in blank, and delivers it to another, with authority to fill up the paper with an ordinary promissory note, and then to use it for the purpose of raising money, should not be precluded from escaping liability by objecting the incompleteness of the instrument at the time of endorsement, equally with one who conducts himself in the like manner with respect to a paper which is delivered with the understanding that it is to be perfected into a negotiable note. The same policy would seem to govern both transactions, and to require that the endorsers should, in each case, be subjected to the same liabilities, whatever they may be, that they would have incurred, respectively, had the drawing out and perfecting of the notes, in each case, immediately preceded the execution of the endorsements.

The questions whether such an endorsement should not be held to be without consideration, whether it was not void because of its preceding the making of the note, and because of there being no memorandum of the agreement in writing, were all considered in the case of Violett v. Patton, 5 Cranch's R. 142, and decided in favour of the validity of the endorsement.

I do not therefore perceive, that the legal force of the endorsement in this case, is in any measure impaired by the consideration that it preceded, in order of time, the filling up of the note drawn upon the face of the paper. Nor do I discover any thing 196 in the facts and circumstances* of the case agreed, which would justify us in so restricting the authority of the payee, as to confine it to the drawing of a note, negotiable and payable at some one of our banks, over the signatures of the drawers, rather than the note now before us. The signature and the endorsement were both in blank at the time the paper passed into the hands of the payee, and the terms of the letter in which it was enclosed, "I have for you a blank note at eight months, which I wish you to fill up with as much as you can spare me," &c., would be equally as well satisfied by filling up the blank with the note that was made, as with one negotiable at bank. We are therefore warranted in treating the case before us as if the perfecting of the note on the face of the paper, and the endorsing of it by Colston had been contemporaneous acts, and had both preceded the delivery of the instrument to the payee.

What is the legal force of such an endorsement? No case is recollected in which the precise question has been directly before this Court for its adjudication; but extensive reference has been made by counsel to cases settled in the Courts of some of our sister States, in which questions of a like character were the subjects of decision. The decisions of some of these States, are so much in conflict with those of others, and indeed, the decision of the Courts of the same State, have, in some instances, been found to fluctuate so much at different periods, that it is difficult to educe from their examination any well settled doctrine on the subject.

In Connecticut, the cases are numerous, and not without apparent conflict, but I think it may be stated as the result of the current of the later decisions of its Supreme court—that endorsements in blank on promissory notes not negotiable, and on negotiable notes by one not a party to them, in order to warrant the maker's responsibility, are treated as possessing the same 197 *legal effect; and as binding the endorser to the undertaking that the money shall be obtained from the promiser when it falls due, by the endorsee, he using due diligence, and taking the remedies which the law has provided; but if the endorsee suffers it to lie without taking legal steps to secure or recover it, the endorser will be exonerated in case of a loss, unless the promisor was absolutely insolvent when the note fell due. Perkins v. Catlin, 11 Conn. R. 213; Laffin v. Pomeroy, Id. 440; Castle v. Candee, 16 Conn. R. 223.

In Massachusetts, it is held, that where the note is made payable to the party sought to be charged, and negotiable in its form, the holder should be restricted to such an engagement over the signature endorsed in blank as will conform to the nature of the instrument. In such case, the party placing his signature in blank on the back of the note, is liable as endorser, and in no other form. But where the note was not payable to the defendant, or from its form was not negotiable by his endorsement, the nature and extent of his liability has been determined by the circumstances under which the endorsement has been made: if made after the note has been given, and under circumstances shewing that the endorser had no concern in the original contract, parol proof has been resorted to for the purpose of shewing what was the true character of this promise or engagement; and his undertaking has been treated either as a collateral or direct promise, according to such proof. If on the other hand, such endorsement is made at the same time with the execution of the note, the holder has been allowed to treat the endorser at his election, either as a direct or collateral promisor, without any proof of consideration, or of any actual promise to pay, except what is derived from his signature on the back of the note. Josselyn v. Ames, 3 Mass. R. 274; Hunt v. Adams, 5 Id. 358; Moies v. Bird, 11 Id. 436; Austin v. Boyd, 24 Pick. R. 64; Baker v. Briggs, 8 Pick. R. 122; Oxford Bank v. Haynes, Id. 423.

gotiable, the inference to be drawn from a third party's placing his name on the back of it, is that he intends to give credit to the maker, by becoming answerable as endorser; and that where he can be made liable as endorser, he cannot be charged in any other character. If, however, by reason of the note not being negotiable, he is not chargeable as endorser, and he made the endorsement under an agreement, and with the intent to bind himself in some other form, the payee may write over the blank endorsement such a promise or guaranty as will carry into effect the intention of the parties. Nelson v. Dubois, 13 John. R. 175; Tillman v. Wheeler, 17 John. R. 326; Seabury v. Hungerford, 2 Hill's R. 80; Prosser v. Luqueer, 4 Hill's R. 420. The reasonable inference which one about to accept a promissory note filled up as the one before us, and endorsed in blank in the ordinary course of business transactions, would draw from a mere inspection of the instrument is, that the endorsement was made with the intent to give strength and credit to the paper. He would perceive that the person putting his name on the back of the paper, had not, from the nature of the instrument, subjected himself to the liabilities, or entitled himself to the privileges, which attach to the endorser of paper strictly commercial. And as, of the only other contracts, having reference to the note on the face of the paper, which could be fairly predicated of the blank signature on the back, viz: an absolute and direct promise to pay, or a collateral guaranty, it would be just as fair to presume the one as the other; it would, I think, be reasonable further to infer, that the person so endorsing in blank intended to leave it in the power of the payee to elect in which of the two aspects he would hold him bound.

199 *I regard the weight of authorities above referred to, as in favour of these views; the decisions in Connecticut being opposed by those of New York and Massachusetts; and I do not think that there is any thing in the decision of this Court in the case of Watson v. Hurt, 6 Gratt. 633, in conflict with them. In the last mentioned case, the blank endorsement being construed in reference to the note on the face, and the latter being barred by the statute of limitations, it was not necessary to decide whether the endorsement imported an absolute suretyship for the maker, or a collateral undertaking for the payment of the note; as, whether the action was to be treated as founded on the one form of contract or the other, it would in either case have been barred by the statute.

I have hitherto considered the case as if the endorsement were still in blank, as it was when it passed into the hands of the payee. Since then, nothing has occurred to impair the right of the payee to treat the endorsement as still in blank. I do not deem it necessary, therefore, to express any opinion, as to what would have been the construction to be given to the terms of the writing over the signature of the endorser, had they been filled out before the paper passed to the payee, or upon the questions of diligence, which might have arisen had we regarded the undertaking of Colston as a collateral guaranty.

It was competent for the appellant, in my view of the case, as before stated, to have charged Colston either as a collateral promisor, or as a direct and absolute surety. The filling up of the endorsement has not destroyed the right of the appellant to hold the appellee bound to him in either character. It was made after the institution of the suit; and might have been erased or altered in any way, at or before the trial, so as to conform to any of the counts in which the plaintiff had a right, upon the state of facts, to recover. *Tenny v. 200 Prince, 4 Pick. R. 385; Josselyn v. Ames, 3 Mass. R. 274. Even then, if we were to hold that according to the terms of the endorsement as they now stand, Colston would be a collateral promisor, and as such, not bound because of the alleged want of proper diligence on the part of the payee against the maker, I do not think it would be necessary to send the case back for the formal erasure of the filling up of the endorsement, and its alteration so as to make Colston, by the express written terms of the endorsement, a direct promisor. No change in the declaration or other pleadings, in such a state of things being necessary to the recovery. I feel the less reluctance in coming to this conclusion, as from the facts agreed, it is highly probable that no measure of diligence would have resulted in procuring payment of the note from the makers. I think that there is error in the judgment of the Court below; that it ought to be reversed with costs, and one rendered in favour of the appellant for the amount of the note and its interest.

The other Judges concurred in the opinion of Judge Daniel.

Judgment reversed, and entered for the appellant.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

Appellate Jurisdiction—Criminal Cases—Writ of Error—Habeas Corpus.—The Court of appeals has no jurisdiction to grant a writ of error in a criminal case, or to a judgment upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

Bell being confined in the jail of the county of Buckingham under a charge of larceny, applied to the Judge of the Circuit court of that county for a habeas corpus, and asked for his discharge, on the ground that he had not been brought to trial for three terms of the Court after he had been sent on for trial by the examining Court. The Circuit Judge upon a hearing of the case, refused to discharge the prisoner; and he thereupon applied to this Court for a writ of error to the judgment of the Court below.

Irvine for the applicant.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that as by the act concerning the writ of habeas corpus, ch. 156, page 613, Code of 1850, no provision is made giving to this Court jurisdiction to grant a writ of error to a judgment upon an application for a habeas corpus, and as by the act concerning appeals and writs of error and supersedeas, Code of 1850, p. 682, the jurisdiction to grant a writ of error or supersedeas is confined to judgments in civil cases, this Court has no jurisdiction to grant a writ of error in a criminal case.

202 *Williamson v. Crawford.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

1. Scire Facias—Statutes—Case at Bar.—The act, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 65, p. 505, in relation to a scire facias to revive a judgment, is not repealed by the act of 29th March, Supp. Rev. Code, ch. 197, § 2, on the same subject.*

2. Pleading and Practice—Scire Facias.†—Upon a scire facias to revive a judgment, neither a declaration nor a rule to plead is necessary. And if the writ is made returnable to the rules, and the defendant makes default, there should be an award of execution, which, if not set aside at the next term, becomes a final judgment as of the last day of the term.

At the May term for 1837 of the Circuit court of Henrico county, James Crawford

*Act of 1819. "On writs of scire facias for the renewal of judgments, no judgment shall be rendered on the return of two nihilis, unless the defendant resides in the county, or unless he be absent from the Commonwealth, and have no known attorney therein. But such scire facias may be directed to the sheriff of any county of the Commonwealth, wherein the defendant or his attorney shall reside or be found, which being returned served, the Court may proceed to judgment thereupon, as if the defendant had resided in the county."

Act of 1831. "That all writs of scire facias which shall issue to revive either a pending suit, or a judgment or decree in any of the Courts of this Commonwealth, where it shall appear by affidavit of the plaintiff or other person, filed with the clerk, that the defendant is out of the Commonwealth, may be served on the defendant's agent or attorney in fact, if any he have within the Commonwealth, or if he have no such agent or attorney known, by publication for four weeks successively previous to the return day of such Court, in some newspaper published in this Commonwealth."

†Pleading and Practice—Scire Facias.—In McVeigh v. Bank of Old Dominion, 76 Va. 208, it is said: "Upon the authority of Williamson v. Crawford, 7 Gratt. 202, which is recognized in a later case—Bolanz & al. v. Commonwealth, 24 Gratt. 88—as accurately expounding the law of this state, the court is of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the court below. Upon a scire facias to revive a judgment, neither a declaration nor rule to plead is necessary."

recovered a judgment, in an action of detinue against William Williamson, for two slaves, each valued at 700 dollars, and also for 100 dollars damages for detention of the slaves, and his *costs. No proceedings seem to have been taken upon this judgment until March 1843, when the plaintiff sued out a scire facias to revive it, returnable to the April rules. On this writ the sheriff returned that the defendant did not reside in his county, nor was found in his bailiwick; but as he was informed he was absent from the Commonwealth, and had no known attorney therein.

At the April rules the plaintiff sued out an alias writ of scire facias against the defendant, returnable to the May rules; and upon this writ the sheriff made the same return as on the first.

At the May rules, the alias writ having been returned, the clerk entered up a judgment by default against the defendant, according to the writ: and at the next term of the Court, which commenced in the same month, this office judgment was confirmed, and there was a judgment as of the last day of the term, against the defendant, for the two slaves or their alternative value, with the damages and costs of the original action, and also the costs of this proceeding. To this judgment, Williamson obtained a supersedeas from this Court.

The case was elaborately argued here by Patton and Cooke, for the appellant, and A. Johnston and Cabell, for the appellee. The questions discussed were, first, whether the act of 29th of March 1831, Supp. Rev. Code 258, in relation to proceedings upon a scire facias to revive a judgment or decree, repealed the act of 1819, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 65, p. 505, on the same subject; and second, whether, when the scire facias was returned to the rules, the defendant was entitled to a rule to plead.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The practice of the English courts, in relation to writs of scire facias for the renewal of judgments, as *well as other matters of practice, came to us on the settlement of the country, and has prevailed here, so far as adapted to the organization of our Courts, and compatible with our own legislation. By that practice, execution was awarded on the return of two nihilis, and it was recognized by our act of 1792, (1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 65, p. 505,) but was restricted by that act to cases where the defendant resided in the county, or where he was absent from the Commonwealth, and had no known attorney therein. By the act of 1831, (Supp. Rev. Code, p. 258,) upon the affidavit therein prescribed being made and filed, service of the scire facias was authorized, where the defendant was out of the Commonwealth, upon his agent or attorney in fact, or by publication in some newspaper as therein provided for. But this last mentioned act is permissive only, and in no wise abolishes the previously existing practice. The purpose of the writ of scire facias is to give notice to the defendant of an application for award of execution, which cannot be had without an order to that effect, where execution had not been sued out upon the judgment within a year and a day: and the order is made in Court, or at the rules, upon due return of the process, unless good cause can be shewn to the contrary; and it is not a proceeding which requires a declaration or a rule to plead. The default of the defendant in not appearing to shew cause, is a sufficient foundation for award of execution, which if made at the rules, and not set aside at the next succeeding term, becomes a final judgment of the last day of the term. The provisions of the 6th section of ch. 170 of the New Code, are not applicable to the present case, which occurred before the same took effect.

It seems, therefore, to the Court, that there is no error in the judgment of the Circuit court: and it is considered that the same be affirmed, with costs to the defendant in error.

Somerville v. Wimbish.

October Term, 1850, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., BROOKE, J.)

1. Judicial Notice—Private Acts—Relied Upon in Lower Court—Statute.—The Code, ch. 51, § 1, p. 660, provides that an appellate Court shall take judicial notice of private or local acts, that appear to have been relied on in the Court below. The judicial notice to be taken of such a law, is the same that is to be given to the laws of a general or public nature, and has reference to the hearing of the cause in the appellate forum, whether decided in the Courts below, before or after the commencement of the revised statute.

Judicial Notice—Private Acts—Relied Upon in Lower Court—Statute.—In Groves v. County Court, 42 W. Va. 502, 26 S. E. Rep. 461, it is said: "The Acts of 1872 show that the county seat of no other county was relocated during the period from the 1st day of January, 1872, to the 22d day of August, 1872, the day when the constitution went into effect. The act of 1872, and all acts of the legislature from the 1st day of January, 1872, to the 4th day of February, 1895, were relied on in the court below as showing that no county seat save that of Grant county was relocated by special act of the legislature, and therefore this court must take judicial notice thereof. See section 1 of chapter 130 of the Code. This act took effect for the first time on the 1st day of July, 1850. See Code 1849, tit. 51, p. 660, § 1. See effect thereof as shown in Somerville v. Wimbish, 7 Gratt. 205, 226; Hart v. Railroad Co., 6 W. Va. 336, 350; State v. Railroad Co., 15 W. Va. 392; Beasley v. Town of Beckley, 28 W. Va. 81; Ross v. Austill, 2 Cal. 183. Therefore we judicially know that when the act of 14th day of February, 1895, now in question, was passed, Grant county stood alone as the one county having this peculiarity in its history, and no other county could have it when the act of 1895 was enacted." See, in accord, citing the principal case, Hart v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 6 W. Va. 350.

The principal case is cited in James River & K. Co. v. Littlejohn, 18 Gratt. 76, where it is held that the bill having alleged that the order was drawn by one

2. Ferry Franchise—Rights of Owner—Statute.—A ferry franchise in Virginia is the creature of the statute law; and the rights of the owner of the franchise are to be measured by the statute.

3. Same—Right of Legislature to Establish Another from Opposite Side.—Though a ferry has been established for any length of time across a river, it is competent for the Legislature to establish another ferry from the opposite side of the river, to pass along the same line used by the first: and this is no invasion of the franchise of the owner of the first ferry.

4. Same—Rights of Owner—Case at Bar.—The establishment of such a ferry confers upon the owner no title to any portion of the soil on the other side of the stream, and no easement there, beyond the incidental delegation of such as has been theretofore, or may thereafter be, acquired by the public as a highway.

5. Same—Right to Use Public Road on Opposite Side.—Quare: If in such a case, the ferry franchise will carry with it the privilege of using any public roads on the opposite land, for the purpose of landing or taking in passengers.

6. Ferry Cases—Summoning Justices to Consider Verdict—Notice.—The order of the County court directing the justices to be summoned to consider of the verdict of the jury, in ferry cases, may be executed by leaving a notice in the mode directed in the general law in relation to notices.

7. Same—Jurors—Competency.—A person who signed a memorial to the Legislature for the establishment of a ferry is not thereby rendered incompetent to act on the jury.

In 1762, a public ferry across the Roanoke river, was established from the lands of William Harwood in the then county of Lunenburg, to the lands of William Royster in the same county. This ferry was subsequently the property of David Ross; and at present belongs to James Somerville. It has been kept up for many years, except perhaps for a short period, between 1794 and 1804, whilst it was in the hands of Ross. It is located on the north side of the river on the lands of Somerville, through whose lands a road runs to the ferry landing; and it passes to the land formerly belonging to Royster, at the town of Clarksville, in the county of Mecklenburg.

of the defendants, section 38, ch. 171, Code 1860, applies, and no proof of the signature is necessary.

+Ferry Franchise—Power of Legislature over.—In Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 17 W. Va. 413, it is said: "The legislature in this state in the case of ferries has never in any instance, as far as I am advised, attempted to surrender its power over the subject. See Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe R. R. Co., 11 Leigh 42; Somerville v. Wimbish, 7 Gratt. 205; Turnpike v. State, 3 Wall. 210." See also, citing the principal case, Wheeling Bridge Co. v. Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co., 34 W. Va. 164, 11 S. E. Rep. 1012; Christie v. Malden, 23 W. Va. 672; Roper v. McWhorter, 77 Va. 219, where the principal case is cited as authority for the proposition that in the construction of grants by the legislature to a corporation an ambiguity or doubt arising out of the terms used by the legislature must be resolved in the favor of the public.

There seems also to have been a ferry as early as 1770, from the lands of William Royster, on the south side of the Roanoke river, to the landing which is now Somerville's on the north side of the river. This ferry seems to have been kept up, except for a time when Clarke Royster lost his ferryman, until about 1825, when it was rented by Somerville, and permitted to go down. He continued to rent Royster's landing until 1847, when Clarke Royster died.

In December 1847, William Townes, the executor of Clarke Royster, sold, and in July 1848 conveyed, to John and Lewis W. Wimbish, the lot of land described in the deed as "lying on the south bank of Roanoke river, adjoining the town of Clarksville," "and containing between one and two acres, on which is located the ferry landing known as Somerville's ferry." And in March 1848, the General Assembly of Virginia, upon the petition of the Wimbishs and of a large number of the citizens of Mecklenburg, passed an act entitled, "an act to revive the ferry at Clarksville, in the county of Mecklenburg, formerly known as Royster's ferry across Roanoke river." This act authorized the Wimbishs, upon giving twenty days notice at the door of the courthouse, and also giving reasonable notice in writing, to the owners of all lands which would be affected by the establishment of said ferry, to apply to the County court of Mecklenburg, which was directed 207 *to have a jury empaneled to enquire and report whether public convenience would result from the establishment of the ferry; and upon their report, as well as any other evidence which might be offered, the Court was authorized to establish it. And the act further provided, that all the acting magistrates of the county should be summoned to consider of the verdict of the jury and the application; and if a majority of the justices, being duly summoned, should fail to attend, the Court then present, or any subsequent Court, should have power to act on the application. This act was not copied into the record; nor does it appear to have been made a part thereof, unless by reference to it in the first order of the Court.

At the June term 1848, of the County court of Mecklenburg, an order was made, which said, on motion of John and Lewis W. Wimbish, who desire to establish a ferry in this county across Roanoke river, from their lands on the south side of said river, in the town of Clarksville, to the lands of James Somerville, on the north side of the said river. And it appearing to the satisfaction of the Court, that the said John and Lewis W. Wimbish have complied with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly entitled, "an act to revive the ferry at Clarksville, in the county of Mecklenburg, formerly known as Royster's ferry, across Roanoke river," passed March 23, 1848, and given notice to James Somerville, and posted notice, &c. The order then proceeded to direct the sheriff to empanel a jury for the purposes directed in the act, and also, to direct the sheriff to summon all of the acting justices to attend at the next term of the Court, to consider of the verdict of the jury, and of the application to establish the said ferry. The notice to Somerville, described the route of the ferry, as going from their landing on the Roanoke river, at Clarksburg, formerly known as Royster's landing, to the opposite side of the river, at Somerville's landing or ferry.

208 *The sheriff proceeded to empanel the jury, and they rendered their verdict, that in their opinion public convenience would result from the establishment of the ferry; and this verdict was returned by the sheriff to the July term of the Court. All the justices of the county not having been summoned to this term of the Court, another order was made directing them to be summoned to the next term.

On the return of the summons of the justices, James Somerville made himself a party defendant to the motion, and opposed the application for the ferry; and the case having been continued until the October term of the Court, came on then to be tried, when Somerville moved to quash the verdict of the jury in the case, on the ground that the Wimbishs in their application to the Court, did not set out that a public road had been established through their lands, or any other lands to the place where the said ferry was sought to be established. But the Court overruled the motion, and Somerville excepted.

Somerville further moved to quash the proceedings in the cause, on the ground that all the acting justices of the county had not been summoned to consider of the verdict. The ground of this objection was that as to two of the justices, the return of the sheriff was that copies of the summons had been left for them; and the proof by the sheriff was that copies were left at their respective places of abode more than ten days before the Court to which the summons was returnable, they being from home, and the sheriff not being able to find them. The Court overruled this motion, and Somerville again excepted.

Somerville further moved the Court to quash the verdict, on the ground that two of the jurors had signed the petition which had been presented to the General Assembly for the establishment of the ferry then applied for by the Wimbishs. But the Court refused *to quash the verdict, and Somerville again excepted.

209 Upon hearing the evidence the Court established the ferry; and upon this judgment Somerville appealed to the Circuit court of Mecklenburg.

At the October term of the Circuit court the cause came on to be heard, when a large mass of testimony was taken as to the mode in which Somerville's ferry had been kept; and upon the question whether the public convenience would be promoted by the establishment of the ferry asked for by John and Lewis W. Wimbish. On this point the Court below and this court concurred in the opinion that the establishment of the ferry would promote the convenience of the public: And at the May term 1850, the Circuit court affirmed the judgment of the County court. Whereupon Somerville applied to this court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Stanard and Macfarland, for the appellant.

1 Hen. St. 156, shews that the ferry from the lands of Ross to that of Royster was then established. There has been some effort to prove that there was a ferry from the land of Royster to that of Ross; but the proof of the existence of such a ferry is very meagre; and it is certain that if Royster ever did use such a ferry he had no authority for it: No statute or any other act by any power authorized to grant it can be produced; and if it was used it must be presumed to have been used in subordination to the rights of the owners of Ross's ferry. But further, it appears that the ferry ceased to be used in the lifetime of William Royster, and by the act 2 Rev. Code, ch. 237, § 23, p. 260, even a legally established ferry under the circumstances proved in this case, would have been discontinued. That act fixes two years as a discontinu-

Here then is a case in which the appellant is the owner of the only legally established ferry at the place, and in which there has been no other ferry there for many years: and the question is, what are the rights of a ferry owner by the common law; and what were his rights under our statutes when this new ferry was established? In considering this question, we shall treat the act of 1848 as a public act, or as a private act which has been given in evidence on the hearing of the cause.

What then, under these circumstances, were the rights of Somerville? He was entitled to a ferry franchise. And this franchise was not limited to the mere right of transporting passengers and freight across the river; but it was exclusive within such reasonable limits as would protect him from ruinous competition. Charles river bridge v. Warren bridge, 11 Peters' R. 420, 620; Huzzy v. Field, 2 Crompt. Mees. & Ros. 432. In the first of these cases these principles of the common law in relation to ferries are recognized in their full extent by Judges Story, Thompson and M'Lean. The majority of the Court did not controvert the doctrines of the dissenting Judges as to the common law; but held that the Charles river bridge had not acquired any ferry rights; and if the Charles river bridge had acquired the rights, the act establishing the second ferry, though it took away vested rights, did not impair the obligation of contracts; and therefore the Supreme court of the United States had no jurisdiction to decide upon it.

In Virginia, then, a party owning a ferry has the common law rights appertaining thereto, except so far as they are modified by our statutes. The two acts 2 Rev. Code, p. 241 and 261, are the only general statutes on the subject: And the act of 1840, 211 Sess. Acts *1839-40, is the only other act which it is necessary to notice.

This act prohibits a ferry within a mile of an established ferry. These statutes certainly do not impair the common law rights of the ferry owner; but confirm and protect them against the establishment by the County court of another ferry within the prescribed distance, even with compensation to the owner of the existing ferry.

It may be said that our legislation recognizes the right to establish ferries opposite to existing ferries. It is true that there was such a provision in the act of 1792; but there was no such provision in the act of 1819; and the act of 1840 so far from giving to the County court the authority to establish such a ferry, expressly prohibits it.

There is nothing then in our legislation to impair the common law rights of the ferry owner. And if we are correct in this conclusion, it follows as a consequence, that if it was the intent of the act of 1848 to withdraw from the owner of this ferry the rights he had so long held under the common and statute law; and to authorize these appellees to appropriate his property without compensation, then it was unconstitutional. This, however, was not the intent of the act of 1848, as is obvious from the language and provisions of the statute. The language is permissive, not imperative, and all parties interested are to have notice of the application, obviously to enable the owners of the land in question to shew to what extent the value of their lands will be affected by the establishment of the ferry, and to obtain compensation for the injury. No compensation however has been given to Somerville; and the case must therefore turn upon the question whether the rights conferred upon the appellees by the judgment of the Court below, does so injure Somerville as to entitle him to compensation therefor.

212 *The judgment of the Court below gives in the most general and comprehensive terms a ferry from the landing of the Wimbishs to the lands of Somerville; and under this order the Wimbishs are entitled to land anywhere on the lands of Somerville. If it be said that this was not intended by the Court, we can only say that their rights are only to be ascertained by the judgment itself. It may be that they asked for the ferry to a certain point and that the Court has given them more than they asked for; but they have not had the judgment corrected, and must therefore be considered to have accepted all that is given by it. The judgment then must be regarded as establishing a ferry to any or every point on the lands of Somerville; and the question is whether such a judgment can be sustained.

A ferry right includes the right to pass from the boat to the land. If this right to land from the boat is not included in the ferry right, a ferry must be rather a means of diversion or exercise than of expediting the public travel. If the ferry right is merely aquatic and stops with the water, it may be used to disappoint the hopes and expectations of the traveller. Looking to the origin of the term we will find that a ferry takes its definition from the land, not from the water: and so, that is not a ferry at all which does not subserve the purposes of travel. Our idea of a ferry is the legislative idea; and that is, that a ferry includes the right to land. The statute imposes a penalty on the ferry keeper for not setting over any person applying. 3 St. at large, N. S., ch. 25, § 7. Then most incontestibly the ferry included the right to set over, to carry across the stream from land to land. And this is the idea of a ferry in Patrick v. Ruffners, 2 Rob. R. 209; Charles river bridge v. Warren bridge, 1 Pick. R. 344.

The privilege of landing is so necessary to the idea of a ferry, that it was at one time thought that the owner of a ferry must own the land on both sides of 213 *the river. It is true this was an error; but it does include the idea of some ownership in the soil or license to use it from the owner. This is the doctrine of Patrick v. Ruffners, 2 Rob. R. 209.

We beg leave to call the attention of the Court to the fact that whatever is necessary to the convenient use of the ferry passes by the grant of the ferry. In Crenshaw v. The Slate river Co., 6 Rand. 245, Judge Green says: The conferring a right to build a mill gives the right to build a dam if necessary. The right to fish carries the right to enter on the land. The right to carry water across land carries with it the right to enter upon and dig the necessary canal.

If we are right in our views as to the extent of a ferry franchise, then by the judgment of the Court in this case, the Wimbishs have acquired a right of dominion over the land of Somerville which authorizes them to repel him if he attempts to keep them off his property: And if this be so, then clearly the judgment is erroneous. If the judgment of the Court gives the appellees the right to go upon the lands of Somerville, however small the injury may be in fact, he is entitled to the protection of the Court. Nor was it necessary to shew to the Court below the amount of injury he would sustain. We take it, the presumption is that an entry on the land of another is an injury, and he is not bound to prove the injury or its extent; but the party claiming to go upon it must shew there is no injury. The right to go upon the land of another implies injury; and it implies a franchise in the lands. The statute too makes the same implication. It gives to any person, though not a party to the proceeding, the right to appeal from a judgment establishing a ferry; and it is only necessary to suggest injury.

It may be said that the judgment will not prevent an action for damages by Somerville if he sustains injury by the establishment of the ferry. This argument 214 *was advanced in Crenshaw v. The Slate river Co., 6 Rand. 245, but it was scouted by the Court; and it was held that compensation must be made eo instanti that property is taken for public use. And this was affirmed in Perry v. Wilson, 7 Mass. R. 395; Stevens v. Middlesex canal, 12 Id. 468; Vanhorne's lessee v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. R. 304; Gardner v. Trustees of Newburgh, 2 John. Ch. R. 166.

It may be said that as there was formerly a ferry at the same place, it is to be presumed that the right to land on Somerville's land had been acquired at that time; and that this ferry has been revived, and is entitled to the same right.

Our controversy is not with Royster, but with the Wimbishs. They are not the successors of Royster, nor has his ferry been transferred to them. And they did not go into the County court to establish Royster's ferry. All the Wimbishs did was to buy a slip of ground from which Royster's ferry started. The only circumstance which indicates the title of Wimbish to Royster's ferry is the title of the act of 1848, which is an act to revive Royster's ferry. But the Legislature had no right to revive Royster's ferry for the benefit of Wimbish. And the fact that the Roysters may apply to have their ferry revived for themselves is another objection to the proceeding in favour of Wimbish. If, then, the Wimbishs had not the rights of the Roysters, it cannot aid the argument in their favour that the Roysters have their rights.

But let us suppose that the Legislature had the right to revive Royster's ferry, and transfer it to John and Lewis W. Wimbish. This is not what has been done by the County court. The Royster ferry went to the road on the north side of the river. The ferry of the Wimbishs is to go to the lands of Somerville. Though Royster was restricted to a landing at the road, no one can doubt that the Wimbishs may 215 land anywhere on *the lands of Somerville if this judgment is affirmed. Then it cannot be said that this is a revival of Royster's ferry which was restricted to a landing at a particular spot, when this ferry is not thus limited.

We will now proceed to enquire whether the Wimbishs can sustain their claim if it is confined to the road on the lands of Somerville. It would seem to be useless to consider this question unless it appears that this road has been legally established. Of that fact there is no evidence in this record. For aught that appears, the public may have been permitted to use the road for the benefit of the ferry; and it may have been opened contemporaneously with the establishment of the ferry by the owner of the ferry. All we know on the subject is, that there has been a road in existence for a number of years; but whether it was opened by the owner of the ferry, or was legally established, does not appear. Can this Court say then how it was established? The burden of proof is upon the Wimbishs. They claim to enter upon Somerville's land, and they must shew their right to do so. Somerville may stand upon the defensive. It is certainly possible that the predecessors of Somerville opened the road to increase the profits of the ferry. The Wimbishs claim that it shall now be used to destroy the ferry. Must they not, then, shew the grounds of their claim? If they claim by prescription, it is incumbent upon them to shew that the prescription originated not in the consent, but against the consent of Somerville's predecessors; and the Court below should have required the Wimbishs to shew that the road originated in a manner which entitles them to use it.

But if this is a public road, the Wimbishs are not entitled to use it for their landing. For this, we have the authority of one of the Judges of this Court; Allen, J., in Patrick v. Ruffners, 2 Rob. R. 209. The act for establishing landings has no relation to this question. *That relates to landings on navigable streams, to carry produce there to be carried down the river.

The road, though wide enough for a road, may not be wide enough for a ferry landing. Then are they to be restricted to the ground taken up by the road? When they get there, they may find the boat of Somerville filling up the road. Can they not then go above or below the road? They are subjected to a penalty if they do not set over whatever is offered to them in reasonable time. Can they not do what they are punishable for not doing? If they are sued for not setting over as required, could they defend themselves by alleging a deficiency of landing privileges under this order? We have already shewn that, by the grant, all that is necessary to the convenient use of the grant passes; and, therefore, if more ground than is covered by the road is necessary, it passes by the grant of the ferry.

In establishing a road a jury is required to ascertain the damages. There may be damages when the road may be used as a landing, which would not exist if it is only to be used as a road. It may be said this is a small injury. But it involves the right to use the soil; and however small the injury, the party subjected to it is entitled to compensation. It was, therefore, the duty of the County court to have directed an enquiry whether the use of the public road as a landing would not enhance the damages of the owners of the land. It is true that the Legislature has established many ferries by its own action; but we must presume that the proper enquiries were made through its committees. Or it may be, that the Legislature acted on the idea, at one time existing, that the banks of rivers were in the public. But that idea has been long since exploded; and now it is clear that there is not a foot of ground on rivers or bays which may be taken for public uses without compensation; and, therefore an enquiry of damages was necessary.

*A public road is for the use of the public generally; one and all have the same rights and interest in it. But when you confer on a ferry owner a right to use it, you give him a right and interest which is exclusive and peculiar. And thus a person who has contributed no more than others for the establishment of the road is to have a peculiar right in it. Are you to take the land of one subjected to a public road, and confer it on another, and thus give him a peculiar property in it?

But not only is Somerville's rights of property invaded by this order, but his franchise is invaded; and if the judgment is sustained, it will be ruined. It is unnecessary to enquire into the extent of the franchise on either side; whether it extends to half a mile, or more or less, though, at common law, it clearly extended on each side. If limited in extent, it is nevertheless property, entitled to be held as sacred and inviolate as any other property. A franchise is property, and the title to it is as sacred as that to any other property. Has the public a right to divide the property of Somerville, and say that another shall share with him the right to carry at this place? The case of The Charles river bridge v. The Warren bridge, 1 Pick. R. 344, and the same case in 11 Peters' R. 420, shews clearly that the public has no such right.

We say, then, that the establishment of the ferry of the Wimbishs was a plain violation of Somerville's rights, and, of necessity, injurious to him. These rights have been acquired under the law, and are vested in him by statute. It may be said these statutes may be repealed, and that is true; but the repeal of a statute does not annihilate the rights which have been acquired under it. Crenshaw v. Slate river Co., 6 Rand. 209; Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe Railroad Co., 11 Leigh 42.

The act of 1848 recites that the Wimbishs own the land on the south side of the river. This is no proof *of that fact.

There is in the record the deed of Townes, the ex'or of Royster; and the testimony shews that Royster owned land there; but is his title vested in the Wimbishs? This depends upon another question, and that is, whether Royster made a will which authorized Townes to sell? This the Wimbishs must shew, and they have failed to do it. And, on this ground, there is error in the judgment. Henry v. Underwood, 1 Dana's R. 247.

There are other formal errors for which the proceedings should have been quashed. 1st. The petition does not set out that the Wimbishs owned land, and that there was a road through it. 2d. All the justices were not legally summoned. 3d. The inquest is defective, because it does not state what route the Wimbishs proposed to use, or the jury estimated.

Robinson and Patton, for the appellees.

The statute by which the ferry now owned by Somerville was originally established, provided in terms that, "where a ferry is by this act appointed on one side of a river, and none on the other side answerable thereto, it shall be lawful for the respective County courts to appoint an opposite ferry." 7 Hen. St. p. 558. Accordingly we find that certainly as early as 1770, Royster's ferry was in existence; and with the exception of a short interval when his ferryman was killed, the ferry continued to be in existence until 1826, when it was rented by Somerville, who continued to rent it until Clarke Royster's death in 1847, and permitted it to go down in his hands. It was therefore no further nor otherwise discontinued, than was Ross's ferry, which was not used at one period for several years; and if the act 2 Rev. Code, ch. 237, § 23, p. 260, discontinued the ferry of Royster, it equally discontinued the ferry of Ross. But the mere fact of not using a privilege, or of violating a charter, does not produce a 219 forfeiture. *The forfeiture must be enforced by the public by some legal proceeding. The law is too well settled on this point to be argued. We insist then that the Wimbishs had a right to set up a ferry from the Royster ferry landing without any authority from the Legislature or the Court.

We shall not stop to make an argument to prove that the act of 1848 is a public act, of which the Court is bound to take notice. Such we must consider it, whether we look to the objects or subject or provisions of the law; and so we will treat it. The act was intended to release to the appellees the Commonwealth's right to enforce the forfeiture. There was also another object. The act of 1840 had forbid the County court to establish a ferry within a mile of another ferry: And as this ferry had not been used for some time, the appellees have preferred to avoid the penalties of that act by asking the Legislature for authority to establish the ferry. And the act of 1848 only removed a restriction upon the general power of the County court.

The counsel for the appellants, in order to sustain their claim as to the extent of their franchise, are obliged to insist that a new ferry cannot be set up to the prejudice of an old one, notwithstanding the new ferry be authorized by the king's license. On this point, we refer to Tapp v. French, 4 T. R. 666, as recognized in Huzzy v. Field, cited by the counsel for the appellant. The case of Huzzy v. Field sustains no such position. This case is cited in 11 Peters' R. 420; and it goes no further than to recognize the doctrine that if a new ferry be set up without the king's license, to the prejudice of an old one, an action will lie: And it also recognizes the doctrine that a new ferry may be set up with the king's license, though it does injure an old one. It was not deemed necessary by the majority of the Court in the case in 11 Peters

220 to go into this subject; but it was *gone into in the case of Day v. Stetson, 8 Greenl. R. 365. And in the case of the Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. The Tuckahoe Railroad Co., 11 Leigh 42, it was held that the Legislature had full power and authority to authorize a second road between the same points to carry the same tonnage and travel.

In Virginia a ferry is a privilege derived under a statute, and it exists to the extent authorized by the statute, and no further. Derived not from the common law, but the statute, the rights and remedies of the ferry owner are to be ascertained, not from the common law, but the statute. Almy v. Harris, 5 John. R. 175; Johnson v. Hitchcock, 15 John. R. 185; Trent v. Cartersville Bridge Co., 11 Leigh 521. We are then to look to the statute, and that alone, to ascertain the nature and extent of the grant to Somerville and to those under whom he claims. Is it a grant precluding the Legislature, or a Court acting under its authority, from granting another ferry at any other point on the same river? Surely not. Is it a grant precluding the Legislature, or a Court acting under its authority, from authorizing a ferry from the opposite side of the same river? We submit not. The argument on the other side is wholly incompatible with the entire legislation of Virginia on the subject of ferries.

The establishment of ferries in Virginia has been very uniformly from one bank to the other; the statutes shewing on their face, that the right remained in the Legislature or the County court to establish another ferry from the opposite bank of the same river. Look to the general act of 1648, which was in force when the ferries in question were originally established. 6 Hen. Stat., p. 20, § 11. So 7 Id., p. 403, § 4, and p. 588, § 1; 8 Id. p. 45, § 3, p. 370, § 1, p. 555, § 2; 9 Id. p. 238. These references might be multiplied.

221 *So far from the statutes establishing ferries, giving any exclusive right of ferriage from each side of the river, there was a doubt even whether it was lawful to make such a grant until the act of 1769. 8 Hen. Stat. p. 371, § 5. That is now the general policy, but it is at times departed from; as has been done in relation to the Kanawha river. Where, then, is the foundation for the idea, that there is any such exclusive right as is contended for on the other side.

It is argued, that by the judgment in this case, we have taken the land of Somerville without compensation. We admit that the right to a ferry does not authorize the use of the land of any other person; but we do not admit that it appears in this record, we have taken the land of Somerville. If there is a public road on the north side of the river, the ferryman may take passengers to it. Every one may pass along the road to the edge of the river; and the ferry is only a continuation of the public road.

If, indeed, the Wimbishs cannot find a public landing, they will be obliged to get one in the legal mode. But here we are discussing a ferry right; and when this question is settled, then the other question may come up, whether the Wimbishs have a landing; or if it is necessary to get a landing, how compensation is to be made. The law provides for condemning a public landing; and we apprehend that when it is condemned, it is for all the purposes for which a public landing may be used.

There is not in this record, an intimation that Somerville's rights, as owner of land, or a landing was involved in the cause. The proposition of the other side is, that the effect of the grant of the ferry right, invests the Wimbishs with the right to use the landing of Somerville, though it has not, or shall not be granted. If the consequence of the grant of this ferry right is proprio vigore, to entitle the Wimbishs to use the landing *of Somerville, then clearly it is an invasion of his right. But there is no claim even, in this record, of Somerville, that his right to his landing would be invaded; and no proof that it would be injured. All that the proofs do shew, is, that Somerville's land lies on the north side of the river; and that the road runs to his landing. When such an objection as this is made, it should be made on the record, and it should be sustained by proof. Here, there is neither. There is proof of a landing; but no proof that it was a private landing. There is an established road; but no proof that it was only a road to Somerville's landing. Was it condemned only to get to his landing, or for all the purposes for which the public may use a public road? Was it intended for the accommodation of Royster's ferry rather than Ross's? We know that no ferry is established except where there is a public road. Royster's ferry has been established for more than a century; and has been used and kept up, and recognized by Somerville himself, as late as 1826.

Conceding, then, that as a general proposition, the right to the ferry does not give the right to use the landing or road on the opposite side of the river, is it not too late now, to say that the landing was not condemned and paid for, for this purpose, as well as others; especially as no question was made on this point until this case came to this Court. Would the Wimbishs be allowed to controvert Somerville's right to use their landing through which the public road runs? And would not the more than thirty or fifty years use by each of the landing of the other, conclude both of them from claiming some reserved right in their landings inconsistent with their use of them as they had been thus long enjoyed.

The proofs shew that Somerville recognized the right of Royster to use his landing just as he had a right to use Royster's landing, down to 1826, when he having 223 *possession of it as the tenant of Royster, sunk both ferries in his own; and we are now gravely told that the ferry right of Royster is lost as against Somerville by this discontinuance. There was in fact, no discontinuance as to Somerville. As to the public, it was never enforced, and has been, in fact, released by the act of 1848. And we, therefore, say that Somerville cannot, at this day, under the circumstances of this case, insist that he is entitled to the constitutional protection that his private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

We have thought, and think, that whatever may be the rights of a party as owner of the soil, those rights cannot be determined in a proceeding for the establishment of a ferry. What is a ferry right? It is a right to carry passengers over the water, not to put them on shore. They have a right, when a party comes to the water, to take him in their boat and carry him over the water. That is the ferry right. We grant this would be of no value, unless the owner of the ferry either owned the soil or had a right to use it, so as that people might get to and from his boat. Our law does not permit the County court to grant the ferry right except where the grantee owns the land on one or both sides of the river, and there is a road leading to it; but the Legislature might grant such a ferry right, if the circumstances made it advisable. Of course, a grant of a ferry would not be made, except with reference to the public convenience; and, therefore, there must generally be a public road to and from the ferry.

None of our ferry acts provided for the condemnation of the landing or road. Then are all these acts unconstitutional and void; the act establishing the ferry owned by Somerville with the rest? The Legislature has always recognized the right of the owner of the land on one side of a river to have a ferry. It must, therefore, be intended that he would obtain the right 224 to *use the land on the other side; or that he was entitled to use the road down to the river. Can there be any difference, so far as the rights of the owner of the road are concerned, between the use of the road by a carriage fording the river, or where it goes into a ferry boat from the road.

It has been universally acquiesced in in Virginia, that where there was a public road, a ferry might be used in connexion with the road, so as to carry over the persons travelling on the road. What is a public road, but a road for the public to travel on; and what is a ferry but a road. Affirm this judgment, and the Wimbishs carry a wagon over in their boat; if the other side are right, Somerville may say the wagon shall not land; that the road was only condemned to be used with his ferry; and then this judgment does not affect his rights.

What, then, are the rights of the public in respect to a road condemned for the use of the public? We have supposed there could be no doubt, that when a road was condemned for a public road, the public had a right to use it for the purposes of travel and transportation, through its whole extent. Whatever might be the original object in establishing the road, whether to accommodate one ferry, or two ferries, or whether both ferries went down, and the road was only used to get to a landing on the river, for the purpose of transporting on the river, whatever the object originally, we had supposed there could be no doubt about the right of the public to use the road until it was discontinued in some legal mode. But we find great conflict of judicial opinion on the question, and one of the Court has referred us to Patrick v. Ruffners, 2 Rob. R. 209. That case in fact, raised no enquiry as to the extent of the ferry rights; but the whole question was, whether, as the landings did not belong to the ferry owner, an obstruction to the landing was a special injury to him as the owner of the ferry, for which he could sustain an action.

225 *The case has no bearing upon or relation to the question we are considering. So far as the questions before us were incidentally considered in that case, Judge Stanard concurred with Judge Baldwin. There is in the opinions of the Judges an apparent conflict on these questions; and the cases there cited, were somewhat in conflict; but there is not one of the cases which impairs our ground, that the right of the ferry is good, and that the want of the right to use the landing does not affect the right to the ferry. The question obviously did not arise in the case of Chambers v. Furey, 1 Yates' R. 167, and what is said there is wholly extrajudicial. The case of Cooper v. Smith, 9 Serg. & Rawle 26, is an authority for our proposition, that the ferry right is distinct from the right to the landing; and that the landing was to be acquired by another proceeding. And we have the decision in the case of Peter v. Kendal, 6 Barn. & Cress. 703, cited by Judge Baldwin in Patrick v. Ruffners.

All we can say then, is, that it is a question not settled by decisions; but must be decided upon principle. We cannot say more upon it than we have said.

As to the formal objections stated to the proceedings, the first is answered by the act of 1848, authorizing the Wimbishs to make the application. The second is answered by the act 2 Rev. Code, ch. 238, § 12, p. 263. And the third is unfounded in fact.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The proceedings in this case are founded upon the act of the 23d of March 1848, Sess. Acts 1848-9, p. 240, ch. 223; as appears from the order made on the application of the appellees to the County court and other parts of the record. That act must have been inspected by the Court, or relied on and conceded; as it is referred to by its title in said order, which states that the applicants had 226 complied with its provisions requiring *the notice thereby prescribed.

The existence of the act was in no wise controverted in any part of the proceedings, either in the County or the Circuit court, nor any objection taken to its due authentication. It appears upon the printed statute book, published by Legislative authority, which was doubtless the reason why it was not spread at large upon the record, as it might have been from the printed statute book, that being legitimate proof of the statute. And now, by the New Code, p. 660, ch. 51, § 1, it is provided that an appellate Court shall take judicial notice of private or local acts that appear to have been relied on in the Court below. In this case, the act was not only relied upon, but made the foundation of the whole proceedings, and its inadvertent omission from the bills of exception stating the evidence, is therefore immaterial. The judicial notice we are to take of it, is the same with that which we give to laws of a general and public nature, and has reference to the hearing of the cause in the appellate forum, whether decided in the Courts below before or after the commencement of the revised statute. And this renders it unnecessary to consider whether the act in question is to be regarded as a public or private act, and dispenses with any formal amendment of the record.

The purpose of the act was to establish a ferry upon the lands of John and Lewis W. Wimbish, on the south side of the Roanoke river, in the town of Clarksville, to the lands of James Somerville, on the north side of the river, provided the public interest required it, and that matter was referred to the decision of the County court, which was directed to proceed upon the application of the Wimbishs, to cause a jury to be empaneled to view the place proposed, and to say whether, in their opinion, public convenience would result from the establishment of the ferry; and, upon such opinion, 227 and any other evidence that should be offered, *the Court was authorized to establish the ferry, and fix the rates for passing the same.

No one doubts that it is within the legitimate province of legislation to establish highways, whether by land or water, or ferries or bridges across water courses, for the convenience and use of the public; and that there is no limitation of this power, other than the regard due to the rights of private property, which cannot be invaded or taken from the owner without just compensation. Such eminent domain may be exercised by the legislative department, either directly or through the instrumentality of judicial, or other tribunals, or agents; and the expenses of construction, reparation and other charges, may be defrayed out of the public treasury, or by means of franchises, granted to companies or individuals, or attached when appropriate, to the ownership or use of the soil.

The power of the Legislature to establish particular ferries by direct and special enactments has been freely exercised, from an early period of our colonial history, down to the present time; and our statute book is full of such laws. This eminent authority never has been, and never could have been, surrendered by the delegation of it to any extent, whether limited or unlimited, to judicial or other tribunals; and has continued to be exercised, notwithstanding the power given by the act of 1705 (2 Hen. St. 475), and of 1792 (1 St. L., N. S. p. 152), to the County courts, in general terms, to appoint such ferries over rivers and creeks, in their respective counties, as should be deemed convenient and necessary, and the act of 1806, (3 Id. p. 301,) and the revised act of 1819, (2 Rev. Code, p. 261, 267,) prescribing the limits and providing for the exercise of their jurisdiction on that subject.

The last mentioned act is a general law providing for the establishment of ferries, on the application of the owner of land on both sides, or one side only, of any 228 *water course, through which a public road passes. The ownership of the land, and the existence of the public road are, under this general law, essential to the jurisdiction of the Court. The degree or evidence of ownership required by it, we need not consider here. In the present case, the application is not founded upon it, but upon the special act of the 23d of March 1848, passed upon the representation, "to the General Assembly that the establishment of a ferry from the lands of John and Lewis W. Wimbish, on the south side of Roanoke river, in the town of Clarksville, in the county of Mecklenburg, to the lands of James Somerville on the north side of the said river, would very much promote the convenience of the people and facilitate their intercourse;" and its provisions are full and complete for that object, without reference to or deriving any aid from the general law above mentioned.

This special act designates the place where, and the persons on whose application, the ferry should be established; and the designation is satisfied by the possession and enjoyment of the Wimbishs, under a bona fide and undisputed claim of title. It could not have been in the contemplation of the Legislature to submit to the jury or the Court the question, whether any flaw could be found in the title of the appellant, which by possibility might at some future day give rise to an adverse claim to the property. The Legislature doubtless proceeded upon the assumption and belief of the fact, that the Wimbishs were the owners of the land which they held and claimed and enjoyed, and to which no one else asserted a title; and there was no necessity for any further enquiry upon that subject. The public interest could be in no wise affected by a recovery of the land from them thereafter upon a paramount claim of title, nor could the establishment of the ferry in any degree rebound to the prejudice of the future claimant. It could not affect his title to the subject, inasmuch as 229 *he would not be bound by a collateral adjudication of a collateral question, in which moreover he might not know at the time that he had any interest. The notice required by the act, to the owners of all lands which would be affected by the establishment of the ferry, did not embrace the case of persons who had no existing ownership or even claim to the locus in quo; but had reference to other lands, and was properly applicable to the appellant Somerville, whose land on the opposite shore was the seat of a conflicting ferry.

We need not therefore consider whether there is any defect in the derivation by the appellees of their title. The merits of the case turn upon different questions, one bearing upon the public interests, and the other upon the individual rights of Somerville. The first is simply whether, in the language of the statute, "public convenience will result from the establishment of the ferry;" the affirmative of which we consider abundantly proved by the evidence in the record, which we think requires no comment. The second has a double aspect, one looking to the appellant's right of property in his land, the other to his right of property in his ferry.

A ferry franchise is with us the creature of our statute law: and the instances are extremely rare of a grant of it to individuals personally. By the course of our legislation since 1748, and under our existing laws, the owner of the ferry seat is incidentally the owner of the franchise. In establishing a ferry, the usual form of its designation is from the lands of an individual on one side of the water course, to the lands of another or the same individual on the opposite side; and the place of departure is always regarded as the seat of the ferry. There is no necessity for requiring a more precise description of the ferry ways on either side; and it would be extremely inconvenient to do so, both as regards the public and 230 the ferry keeper; for that would *render an exact description on both sides by metes and bounds indispensable, and make every departure from them unlawful, however immaterial, and whatever the urgency of the occasion, and though attended with no invasion whatever of the rights of others. And hence it probably is that no provision has ever been made in all our legislation on the subject, whether general or special, for the condemnation of a landing on the opposite side from the ferry seat. The Commonwealth confers, by her grant of the franchise, such right in regard to landing on the opposite shore as she may lawfully impart, and no more. The very object of the grant carries with it whatever privilege the public then has, or may thereafter acquire, to the use of a highway there for that purpose; and if the grantee claims any thing more, he must shew a title to it by private contract. It is not to be supposed for a moment that the Commonwealth contemplates by the creation of the franchise what is beyond her power to grant, the invasion of the property of others without compensation.

As to the alleged invasion of the appellant's right of property in his ferry, we need not require how far such a franchise is protected from competition by the doctrines of the common law. The question here is how far it is exclusive under the provisions of our statute law. The ferry seat, as we have seen, is on one side of the water course. It is there only that the ferry keeper is bound to keep his boats and his hands; there are no such obligations in regard to the opposite side: his right to take in passengers on that side has frequently been questioned; and hence the often repeated provision in our legislation authorizing him to do so. The establishment of an opposite ferry may often be demanded by the public interest and convenience; the power has been repeatedly exercised by direct legislation, and often conferred upon the County courts; and prior to the revised act of 1792 (1 St. L., 231 N. S. 152,) *their general jurisdiction to establish ferries embraced such only. And that act, by which the appellant's ferry, amongst many others, was established, contains an express provision that wherever there was no ferry corresponding to any one thereby appointed, it should be lawful for the County court to constitute and appoint an opposite ferry, with the same rates. It is true that by the act of 1840, (Sess. Acts 1839-40, ch. 79, § 1, p. 58,) in order to prevent injurious competition, the Courts are prohibited from granting leave thereafter to establish a ferry over any water course within one half mile, in a direct line, of any ferry legally established over the same water course: But if that prohibition embraces opposite ferries, as to which we express no opinion, it was no surrender of the legislative power thereafter to establish such opposite ferries, whether directly or through the agency of the Courts.

The right of the owner of the opposite ferry to participate in the use of the ferry way on the other side of the stream, depends upon the correctness of the views already presented. The establishment of his ferry confers upon him no title to any portion of the soil on the other side, and no easement there beyond the incidental delegation of such as has been theretofore, or may thereafter be, acquired by the public as a highway, or derived from the consent or contract of the owner of the land, or those under whom he claims.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the establishment of the ferry in question will be no invasion of the appellant's right of property in his land, nor of his right of property in his ferry. The effect of it will be the grant of a franchise as incidental to the apparent ownership of the ferry seat, with the enjoyment of tolls and other appurtenant privileges. Such franchise will prevail against all wrongdoers who may invade it in any respect. But it cannot prevail in favour of the apparent owner

232 against any adverse claimant of the *ferry seat who shall establish a paramount title. Nor will it confer any right to use the opposite land of the appellant for a ferry way, except as above mentioned. Whether it will carry with it the privilege of using any public roads on the opposite land, for the purpose of landing or taking passengers, &c., is a question which we deem it unnecessary to determine. That is a question which does not properly arise in this controversy about the establishment of the franchise, though it may in future controversies with the appellant, or others claiming under him, in regard to the extent of the franchise so established.

As to the evidence in the record in relation to the existence, the antiquity, the user or non-user, the abandonment by the owners, the recognition by the appellant, or the acquisition by the appellees, of Royster's ferry—whether it may have any bearing or not upon future controversies—it has none that we can perceive upon the one before us, unless perhaps it may tend to throw some light upon the question, whether the ferry now sought to be established will be of convenience to the public. The title, it is true, of the act of 1848, upon which the present application is founded, is "to revive the ferry at Clarksville, in the county of Mecklenburg, formerly known as Royster's ferry, across Roanoke river;" but that title is inappropriate to the enacting clauses, which look to the establishment de novo of a ferry upon the application of the appellees.

The formal objections taken in the argument to the proceedings in the Courts below, we think not well founded, for reasons to be deduced from the remarks already made upon the merits.

The Court is of opinion, that there is no error in the judgment of the Circuit court affirming that of the County court; and it is considered that the same be affirmed, with costs to the appellees.

Judgment affirmed.

Court of Appeals—Statute Regulating Jurisdictional Amount—Retrospective Effect.*—The act in the Code limiting appeals to the Court of appeals to $200, applies to cases decided before the act went into effect, where the application for an appeal is made since.

This was an application for an appeal from a decree of the Circuit court of Albemarle county. The decree was rendered prior to the 1st of July 1850, when the new Code went into operation; and it was for a less sum than 200 dollars.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The words are general, and as they merely apply to the remedy, they extend to and comprehend all petitions to this Court, or a Judge thereof in vacation, for an appeal, writ of error or supersedeas, whether the judgment, decree or order was prior to or after the 1st July 1850, when the new Code took effect. The 18th sec., ch. 16, p. 101, and 2d sec., ch. 216, p. 800, of the Code, providing that the repeal of previous acts should not affect any right established, accrued or accruing before the 1st July 1850; or any prosecution, suit or proceeding pending on that day, do not operate so as to save to the party a remedy by way of appeal, writ of error or supersedeas, to this Court, allowed by previous acts, but taken away by the law now in force. The Court is therefore of opinion, that this Court has no jurisdiction to grant an appeal, writ of error or supersedeas to a judgment, decree or order rendered or made before the 1st July 1850, where the matter in controversy is merely pecuniary, and not of greater amount than 200 dollars, exclusive of costs, unless the petition had been presented to the Court, or some Judge thereof in vacation, previous to that day.

trustee to sell, selling such property, and such title only, as is vested in him, according to the terms prescribed, and without warranty of fraud, incurs no responsibility to the purchaser.

3. Same—Same—Mistake in Estimated Quantity.—The object of the trust being to sell for what the property will bring, and there being no warranty by the grantor of either title or quantity, the purchaser is not entitled to relief for a mistake in the estimated quantity of land.

By deed bearing date the 14th of December 1823, Richard Hoomes and Hannah his wife conveyed to *Norborne E. Sutton a tract of land in the county of Caroline, containing one hundred and thirty-two acres, more or less, in trust, to be sold, first, to pay off certain debts therein mentioned, and to indemnify Samuel Chiles as the surety of Hoomes in certain bonds; and then to pay over the balance of the purchase money, if any should remain, to Hannah Hoomes, in consideration of her relinquishing her right to dower in the land. The deed contained no warranty of title; and though signed by Hannah Hoomes, she was not privily examined.

The trustee seems to have sold the land at public auction, about the 1st of January 1824, when John Sutton became the purchaser at the price of 726 dollars, and was put in possession; and the trustee executed to him a transfer endorsed on the trust deed, in the following terms, viz:

"I assign, transfer, convey and deliver all that right, title and interest to John Sutton, jr., which was conveyed to me as trustee, by Richard Hoomes and Hannah his wife, for the purposes mentioned in the within deed; which land was purchased by the said John Sutton, jr. of me as trustee aforesaid, on the 15th of January 1824, and duly delivered on that day.

"Norborne E. Sutton, Trustee."

In September 1836, John Sutton, jr. filed his bill in the Circuit court of Caroline county, in which, after stating the conveyance by Hoomes and wife, and the sale by the trustee to him, he stated that eighty acres of the land so purchased by him, was claimed and held by a certain William W. Dickinson. That Richard Hoomes was dead, and his estate insolvent. That the debts secured by the deed were discharged, and that there was a considerable proportion of the purchase money in the hands of the trustee. And making the trustee Norborne E. Sutton, and Benjamin Gatewood *and Hannah his wife, who was Hannah Hoomes, and the administrator and heirs of Richard Hoomes deceased, parties defendants, he asked that the trustee might be restrained from paying over any part of the purchase money in his hands; and that he might be compelled to pay to the complainant so much thereof as would satisfy him for the land which he had lost; and for general relief.

The injunction was granted; and none of the parties having answered, the Court in April 1841, made a decree directing a commissioner to take an account of the purchase money paid by the plaintiff to the trustee; and also to enquire into and report the quantity and relative value of the land to which the title was defective; and the nature of the adverse title set up to it by Dickinson.

Before the commissioner made his report, the trustee filed among the papers in the cause, his answer to the bill, in which he says, that he sold only such title as was vested in him by the deed from Richard Hoomes and wife to him. That he did not know whether it was a life estate or a fee; and that he never heard the least complaint until long after the whole matter had been paid and settled by John Sutton, jr.

The commissioner reported that for thirty-seven acres of the land, Richard Hoomes held but a life estate, which had expired; though it did not appear whether the life estate had terminated before or after the conveyance by Hoomes to the trustee. These thirty-seven acres he estimated at 203 dollars 62 cents. And he reported that the trustee had in his hands, 308 dollars 6 cents of the purchase money, which he had held since the 6th day of June 1826.

In March 1844, Mrs. Gatewood filed her answer, in which she said she had never relinquished her right of dower in the land; but that she was willing to unite in the conveyance to the purchaser, provided the trust in her favour was complied with.

237 *In September 1844 the cause came on to be finally heard, when the Court made a decree, perpetuating the injunction as to the sum of 203 dollars 62 cents, with interest thereon from the 13th of January 1825, and such further sum as would be equal to the costs expended by the plaintiff in this suit, and dissolving it as to the residue; without prejudice to any claims which Gatewood and wife, or the said Hannah, might have against the trustee, or against the lands, for her dower. And the decree further directed the trustee Norborne E. Sutton to pay to the plaintiff the said sum of 203 dollars 62 cents, with interest as aforesaid, and his costs, out of the proceeds of said lands. From this decree, Norborne E. Sutton applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Patton and Lyons, for the appellant, insisted that there was no warranty in Hoomes' deed, and therefore the purchaser could have no relief as against his estate. And further, that in sales by a trustee, the rule caveat emptor strictly applies. Petermans v. Lawes, 6 Leigh 523; Findley v. Hickman, 10 Id. 354; Grantland v. Wight, 5 Munf. 295.

Robinson, for the appellee, insisted that the purchaser was entitled to relief on the ground of mistake. He referred to 2 Rob. Pr. 32, and the cases there cited; Id. 192; Chinn v. Heale, 1 Munf. 63.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The appellant incurred no responsibility to the appellee by his sale as trustee, under the deed of trust in the proceedings mentioned, of the land thereby conveyed. Acting as trustee, he sold at public auction, such property and such title only as were vested in him by the deed, according to the terms therein prescribed, without any warranty; and it is not pretended that in 238 *conducting and accomplishing the sale, he was guilty of any fraudulent act or misrepresentation, or even fell into any error or irregularity whatever. Nor does the appellee in his bill seek relief against him upon any other ground than the allegation, that a part of the proceeds of the trust sale remain in his hands, and ought to be subjected to the equity asserted against the other defendants.

The equity asserted by the appellee is founded upon an alleged deficiency in the tract of land conveyed by the trust deed, arising out of an alleged defect in the title of Richard Hoomes, the grantor therein, to a part of the land embraced within the boundaries thereof. And if that equity can be established, it must be upon the supposition that the grantor and cestuis que trust in the deed are to be affected by such defect of title.

In this case, the question does not occur whether the purchaser at such a sale by the trustee, is entitled to the benefit of a clause or covenant of warranty in the conveyance from the grantor to the trustee. Here there is no clause or covenant of warranty in the deed: And if the purchaser is entitled to relief, it must be upon the ground of a mistake in regard to the subject-matter of the contract.

We need not consider whether there may not be cases of mistake, in respect to the identity of land sold by the trustee with that conveyed by the grantor, which would be proper for relief in a Court of equity. Here if there was any mistake, it was not of that nature. The property sold was the identical property conveyed by the deed; and there was no room for any mistake, unless in regard to the validity of the grantor's title. A mistake in respect to that matter, is no ground for relief to a purchaser, where he takes upon himself the risk as to the title, as he does when he purchases land without agreement, express or implied, for a conveyance with warranty of the title.

239 *The principle upon which equity relieves against a mistake in the estimated quantity of land sold, has no application to a case like this. The foundation of such relief is, that the price agreed upon by the parties must be presumed to have been influenced by the estimated quantity, unless it appears that they intended a contract of hazard; and the mistake is corrected not only in cases of deficiency, but also in cases of excess. Here there was no estimate of the quantity as between the trustee and the purchaser, but a mere statement thereof in the grantor's conveyance to the trustee. That statement was mere matter of description, and was no element of the contract between the grantor and the trustee, for which the consideration enured not from the trustee, but the cestuis que trust, and was in no wise dependent upon the supposed quantity of the land. The purpose of the conveyance was, that the property should be sold by the trustee, at all events, for whatever it would bring, and the grantor undertook no responsibility either as to title or quantity. If the quantity had turned out after the sale by the trustee to be greater than that mentioned in the deed, neither he, nor the grantor, nor the cestuis que trust, could have exacted from the purchaser compensation for the excess; and by parity of reason, they are not responsible for a deficiency.

There is no principle, therefore, whether of defective title or deficient quantity, upon which the appellee is entitled to relief; and it is unnecessary to consider the other questions of law and fact which have been discussed at the bar. And the Court is of opinion, that the decree of the Circuit court is erroneous.

Decree reversed with costs, restraining order set aside, and bill dismissed with costs.

During the year the factory of M is burned, and in it is burned fifty hogsheads of these stems, which had not been weighed or marked, though they had been put aside for D. HELD:

Sales—Where Something Remains to Be Done by Seller—When Title Passes.—The proposition laid down in the principal case, that where a contract is made for the purchase of an article hereafter to be delivered and paid for, so long as any act remains to be done by the vendor in order to put it in a state of readiness for delivery, or the amount of the purchase money remains yet to be ascertained, by the enumeration, measurement or weighing of the article, the general rule is, that the property does not pass to the buyer, but remains at the risk of the seller, is approved in Morgan v. King, 28 W. Va. 7; Hood v. Bloch, 20 W. Va. 251, 11 S. E. Rep. 912; Haxall v. Willis, 15 Gratt. 448. See foot-note to Chapman v. Campbell, 13 Gratt. 105; 2 Va. Law Reg. 58.

The property in the stems had not passed to D, and they remained at the risk of M.

This was a proceeding by foreign attachment instituted in March 1833, in the Circuit court of law and chancery for the county of Henrico and City of Richmond, by Samuel S. Myers & Co., against Thomas Dixon, an absent defendant, and John and Samuel Cosby. The pleadings and proofs make out the following case:

Samuel S. Myers & Co. were manufacturers of tobacco in the City of Richmond; and in the beginning of the year 1832, they made a contract with Thomas Dixon of the City of Boston, through his agent Charles Palmer, a commission merchant in the City of Richmond, by which they agreed 241 to sell to Palmer for *Dixon all the stems they should prize during that year, at 1 dollar 75 cents per 100 pounds, and 75 cents per hogshead storage; they reserving the right to send to their father in Baltimore fifteen or twenty hogsheads. Myers & Co. proceeded from time to time, as the stems were on hand, and the weather was suitable, to prize the stems in hogsheads averaging about 1300 pounds net; and they stored them in a separate part of their extensive factory, until such time as it was convenient for Palmer to ship them; and when he was about to remove them, they were weighed and marked.

It appears that according to the custom in Richmond, it was the right of the manufacturer to weigh and mark the hogsheads directly they were taken from the press, and then to present the bill for payment; but for the convenience of the shipper the large manufacturers seem not to have weighed or marked the hogsheads until he was ready to remove them; and in the mean time to consider them as on storage from the time the stems were prized.

Myers & Co. carrying on a large business, and being possessed of a large capital, seem to have permitted Palmer to consult his convenience as to the removal of the stems; and he removed them when an opportunity to ship them occurred. But reciprocating the spirit in which they dealt with him, he sometimes made advances to them on account of the stems prized, before they were weighed and marked, and therefore before they presented a bill; whilst on the other hand a bill was sometimes not presented until the stems were shipped. Both these acts were, however, a departure from what was understood to be the rule: That was, that the bill for the price of the stems and the storage might be presented at any time after the stems were prized; but the purchaser was not bound to pay until the bill was presented; and that necessarily involved the weighing and marking the hogsheads.

242 *On the 24th of November 1832, the factory of Myers & Co., with its contents, was consumed by fire. At that time there were in the factory fifty-six hogsheads of stems, besides seventeen hogsheads which had been set aside for Mr. Myers of Baltimore. These fifty-six hogsheads had been stored away in the part of the factory building appropriated to storage; and a few days before the fire occurred Palmer was at the factory, and had, with one of the superintendents in the establishment, counted them; and then urged this superintendent to press on the work of prizing the stems, so that he might have one hundred hogsheads ready by the approaching Christmas: But these fifty-six hogsheads were not weighed or marked.

The plaintiffs in their bill stated that these hogsheads were of the average weight; and this was sustained by the proofs. They claimed that the sale to Palmer for Dixon had been perfected; that the stems were Dixon's stems, in their hands on storage; and that he was their debtor for the price of the fifty-six hogsheads of stems and the storage, amounting to 1266 dollars; for satisfaction of which they attached the effects of Dixon in the hands of the defendants John and Samuel Cosby. Dixon in his answer denied that the sale had been perfected, or that the stems were his property; and that was the only question in the cause.

The cause came on to be heard in June 1844, when the Court held that the sale of the fifty-six hogsheads of stems was complete so soon as the stems were prized and turned from under the screws; and were thenceforth, and when burned, at the hazard and risk of the defendant Dixon; and that he should bear the loss arising from their destruction: And taking the value of the stems upon the evidence, to be at least 1266 dollars, the Court gave the plaintiffs a decree against Dixon for that amount, with legal interest thereon from the 5th 243 day of February 1833, until paid, and their costs. *Whereupon Dixon applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Lyons, Meredith and Young, for the appellant.

Myers and Morson, for the appellees.

DANIEL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

Where a contract is made for the purchase of an article hereafter to be delivered and paid for, so long as any act remains to be done by the vendor in order to put it in a state of readiness for delivery, or the amount of the purchase money remains yet to be ascertained, by the enumeration, measurement, or weighing of the article, the general rule is, that the property does not pass to the buyer, but still remains at the risk of the seller.

It does not seem to the Court that there is anything in the case before us to exempt it from the influence of this rule.

Here the contract was for the purchase of an article yet to be prepared. The appellant by his agent Palmer, contracted with the appellees, for the purchase of all the tobacco stems they might prize during the year 1832, (with the exception of a number of hogsheads not exceeding twenty, which the appellees reserved to themselves the right to send to their father in Baltimore,) at one dollar and seventy-five cents per hundred pounds, and seventy-five cents per hogshead storage. There was nothing in the terms of the contract to bind the appellees to prepare any given quantity of stems, and had they at any time after the contract was made, consulting their own interests alone, discontinued the manufacture of tobacco and thus failed to have any stems prepared, the appellant, however much disappointed thereby, would have had no legal ground of complaint against them. And though it appears that Palmer

244 was in the habit of occasionally *advancing to the appellees money on account of stems before the bills were presented, there is nothing in the terms of the contract to shew that he was bound to do so, or could be called upon to make any payment, until notified in some way that stems were prepared, prized, weighed and ready for his acceptance.

At the time when the fire occurred fifty-six hogsheads of stems had been prepared, prized, and set apart in the storing room of the appellees attached to their factory, as stems designed for the appellant; and they had been pointed out to Palmer, as such, when on a visit to the factory a short time before the fire, which he made with a view to ascertain how far the preparation of the stems had progressed. The hogsheads however had not been marked as the stems of the appellant, nor had the stems been weighed.

What was the state of the accounts between the parties at the date of the fire does not appear. As, however, the demand is asserted only for the price of the fifty-six hogsheads, estimating them at a supposed average weight, and their storage, and there is no other reference in the pleadings and proofs to the state of accounts, the inference is, there was not any balance on account of the previous dealings in the stems on either side.

It appears that the wishes of Palmer were consulted, and the benefit of his principal to some extent promoted by the habit which seems to have prevailed with the appellees, of deferring the weighing of the hogsheads till Palmer might be ready to ship them. But there is nothing to shew that such habit originated in any obligation imposed by the terms of the contract, or that the appellees did not have a perfect right to have weighed the stems as soon as they were prized, and to have then demanded their price.

It thus seems to the Court that there is no feature in the case to distinguish it favourably for the pretensions 245 *of the appellees from the ordinary case of a contract for the purchase by weight of goods to be thereafter prepared and delivered and paid for on delivery, in which the weighing had not taken place at the period to which the questions of property and of consequent risk are to be referred.

The Court is therefore of opinion that at the date of the fire the stems in question were not the property of the appellant, remaining with the appellees on account of and at the risk of the appellant, but were still the property of the appellees; and consequently that the Circuit court erred in rendering a decree in favour of the appellees for the price.

Decree reversed with costs, and bill dismissed.

Holland v. Helm's Adm'r.

Three Cases.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

January Term, 1851, Richmond.

Sheriffs—Deputies—Liability of Sheriff for Default of Deputy—Case at Bar.—M, a high sheriff, farmed the sheriffalty to S and T, and contracted with them that they were to have the management of the office, to perform or have performed the duties of it, to select and employ deputies, to control and have power to dismiss them. S and T qualified as deputies, and employed others who also qualified as deputies of the high sheriff; and by the directions of S and T, these other deputies paid over all moneys collected on executions to them. H, one of these deputies, collected money on executions in his hands, and paid it to S, but S did not pay it to the plaintiffs in the executions; and they proceeded against the high sheriff and obtained satisfaction from him; whereupon he proceeded against H. HOLD:

246 *1. Same—Same—Right of Sheriff to Dismiss.—

This contract did not and could not divest the high sheriff of his power to dismiss any of said deputies; or of his right to refuse to permit any person selected by S and T to qualify as a deputy.

2. Same—Same—Powers of.—But subject to this power, the contract constituted S and T the general agents of the high sheriff, with full authority to control the persons selected by them to the same extent he himself might have done.

3. Same—Deputy—Liability to Sheriff.—S and T having required the other deputies to pay over the moneys collected on executions to them, and H having done so, though he might in some cases be liable to the creditor in the execution, he is not liable to the high sheriff.

These were motions in the Circuit court of Franklin county, by the administrator of Samuel Helm, deceased, late high sheriff of that county, against Ebenezer M. Holland as one of his deputies, for the purpose of recovering certain sums of money which Samuel Helm had been compelled to pay for the alleged default of his said deputy in failing to pay over money which he had collected on executions which came into his hands; and for his failure to return the executions.

The first case was for the failure by Holland to pay over to the plaintiff money which he had collected on an execution; and for which a judgment had been recovered against Helm, upon his official bond, to the amount of 92 dollars 19 cents, with interest on 88 dollars 79 cents, a part thereof, from the 20th day of July 1843 till paid, and 23 dollars 54 cents costs.

The second was for the like failure to pay to the plaintiff money which he had collected on the execution, and for failing to return it. And there had been a judgment against the high sheriff for 133 dollars 37 cents, with interest thereon at the rate of fifteen per cent. per annum, from the 7th day of August 1843 till paid, and 12 dollars 78 cents costs.

The third case was for the amount of a fine of 189 dollars 12 cents, which had 247 been imposed upon the *high sheriff for the failure of the deputy Holland to return an execution; which fine the plaintiff in the execution accepted in full satisfaction thereof.

It was proved by the plaintiff, in all the cases, that Samuel Helm was the high sheriff of Franklin county from March 1842 to March 1844; and that Holland qualified as one of his deputies. That during this period the executions went into the hands of Holland. That he collected the money on the two first; and that the third went into his hands; and that he did not return the two last to the office.

The defendant then proved that Helm farmed his office of sheriff to William A. Street and Stephen Turnbull, by a verbal agreement, by which they undertook to pay him 1650 dollars for the office. That they were to have the management of the sheriffalty; and to perform or have performed the duties of said office; to select and employ deputies, to control and to have power to dismiss them. And that they were to give bond and security to indemnify Helm; but never executed the bond. That Street and Turnbull qualified as the deputies of Helm; that they selected and employed all the deputies, one of whom was the defendant Holland; that they conducted by themselves, and by deputies employed and paid by them, the business of the sheriffalty during the term of office of Helm; who never concerned himself with the business of any deputy. That the deputies employed by Street and Turnbull were required by them to bring all process which came to their hands to them; to conform to their directions, and to pay over to and account with Street and Turnbull for all moneys collected by said deputies. That the said deputies did not pay out money to persons for whom it was collected, except when particularly directed by Street and Turnbull. That the defendant Holland paid over to 248 William A. Street the money he collected on the two *first executions.

That the third execution, for the failure to return which a judgment had been rendered against Helm, was given up by Holland to Street, before the return day thereof. That the property levied on was sold under said execution by Street, and the money collected by him. That the creditor in the execution agreed to look to Street for the amount of the execution, and wait with him for the money. That besides this there were other transactions between

Street and this creditor, and no settlement had been made between them; but upon a settlement Street would be debtor to him in a sum as large as the amount of the execution. That no bond was executed by Holland when he qualified as deputy of Helm.

The Court gave judgment against Holland in all of the cases; and he thereupon applied to this Court for a supersedeas to each of the judgments; which was awarded.

Grattan, for the appellant.

By the common law the high sheriff alone is responsible to creditors for the mode in which his office is administered, or for the money made upon the executions which go into the hands of his deputies; and it is only by virtue of some statute, and to the extent to which the statute authorizes it, that creditors have any remedies against the deputies. Watson on Sheriffs 33, 7 Law Lib. 24; Cameron v. Reynolds, Cowp. R. 403; White v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 159. Our statute gives the creditor a remedy against the deputy sheriff, in but a single case; and that is where the deputy has made a return upon the execution, which upon the face of the return, shews that the deputy is responsible for the money either made, or which he ought to have made, upon the execution. 1 Rev. Code, ch. 134, § 48, p. 542. In all other cases, the only remedy of the creditor is against the high sheriff; and in this case the statute is 249 *intended not for the benefit of the creditor, but for the relief of the high sheriff; and it is still at the option of the creditor whether he will adopt it.

The high sheriff being the officer responsible to creditors, and having, by virtue of his office and of the relations which he sustains to his deputies, full authority and control over them, he of necessity has the right to require, and the power to compel them to discharge their duties according to his instructions; and to pay over to him all money made or received by them on executions which are placed in their hands. So far from its being the duty of the deputy to withhold from the high sheriff the money thus received by him, and to pay it to the creditor, formerly, at common law, a payment to the creditor by the sheriff, was not a satisfaction of the execution; but it was the duty of the sheriff to obey the writ and bring the money into Court, that the Court might direct the disposition of it. Gilbert Ex. 16; Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch 117, 136.

If indeed the creditor can have a right to proceed against the deputy who had received money on an execution, and paid it over to the high sheriff, (which it is not necessary to consider in this case,) there certainly can be no doubt that there is no liability to the high sheriff in such a case. 1 Rev. Code, ch. 78, § 30, p. 283; Fletcher v. Chapman, 2 Leigh 560; Drew v. Anderson, 1 Call 44. And the question is whether in these cases Holland has not in legal contemplation paid over the money which he collected on these executions to Helm.

It is true that Holland was the deputy of Helm, subject to be controlled by him in the execution of his office, or dismissed at his pleasure; and responsible to him for the faithful discharge of his duties. But it is equally true, we think, that Helm had the right to exercise this control in person, or by his agents, as to him was most agreeable; and that he did appoint Street

250 and *Turnbull his agents, with full authority to exercise this control over all the other deputies of Helm. Holland was a deputy of Helm with all the authority, and subject to all the responsibilities pertaining to the office of deputy sheriff, and none other. But Street and Turnbull were not only the deputies of Helm, with this same authority and responsibility; but they were also the agents of Helm for the management of his office of sheriff, with no other restraint upon their power but that which arose out of the duties pertaining to the office of high sheriff; the duty of seeing that they selected proper deputies, and that the duties of the office were faithfully executed. It is true that Helm could not, if he had tried, divest himself of the power to turn out an unfaithful deputy; that is a power inherent in the office of high sheriff. It is also true that he had the power to turn out all his deputies whether unfaithful or not, and to supersede his agents; and either manage the office himself or appoint other agents to manage it; and that their only remedy in such case, would have been by any action against him for a violation of his agreement. But within these limits the authority of these agents was ample. They were to manage the office. They were to select and control, and pay and dismiss the deputies. By virtue of this authority they did select and control the deputies. So far as these records shew, the selection of Holland was judicious, and no obligations of his office required the high sheriff to displace him. Nor was there anything in the control which these agents exercised over the other deputies, in requiring them to settle with the agents, and pay the money collected to them, which required the interposition of the high sheriff. It was a wise arrangement to enable them to supervise the action of their deputies, and to relieve themselves and their principal from responsibility by settling with the creditors in the executions themselves.

251 *I shall not cite authority to prove that payment to an agent who is authorized to receive it is as valid as a payment to the principal. We have already seen that a payment by a deputy to the high sheriff is proper; at least it is good against the claim of the high sheriff. Then the only remaining enquiry is, Can a deputy act as the agent of the high sheriff in the management of the office? The persons who are incapable of acting as agents are few indeed. A wife may be the agent of her husband. An infant may be an agent. A servant may be an agent. There are numerous cases in which it has been held that a deputy sheriff may be the agent of the creditor in the execution placed in his hands to be served, so as to release the high sheriff from all responsibility for the acts of his deputy in relation to the execution. Hamilton v. Dalziel, 2 Wm. Bl. 952; Corning v. Southland, 3 Hill's R. 552; Gorham v. Gale, 7 Cow. R. 739; Walters v. Sykes, 22 Wend. R. 556; Ford v. Leche, 33 Eng. C. L. R. 184; Fletcher v. Beadley, 12 Verm. R. 22; Downer v. Bowen, Id. 452; Strong v. Beadley, 13 Id. 9; Gwin v. Buchanan, 4 How. Sup. Ct. R. 1. But if he may be the agent of the creditor the argument is a fortiori that he may be the agent of the high sheriff. Indeed in England he is regularly appointed the agent of the high sheriff. Watson on Sheriffs, p. 374, Law Libr.

In the case of Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh 42, the sub-deputy Salling was held responsible to the high sheriff for moneys he had paid over to the deputy who farmed the sheriffalty. But Salling had executed a bond to the high sheriff for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office; and he was held responsible by virtue of his bond. The case shews that if he had not executed the bond he would not have been liable.

252 *Patton, for the appellee.

The question in these causes is, whether Holland the deputy sheriff is liable to pay the high sheriff for money collected by him upon executions which went into his hands, and which he failed to pay over to the creditors in the executions; and to the payment of which the high sheriff has been subjected on account of his default.

It is true that Holland was selected by Street and Turnbull, but he qualified as one of the deputies of Helm. He took the oaths of office, and bound himself to perform the duties pertaining to that office. He was in fact a deputy of the high sheriff, and derived his authority to act as deputy from the high sheriff alone: And the high sheriff entered into no agreement, either with Street and Turnbull or the deputies, that the deputies should not be responsible to him.

The contract between Helm and Street and Turnbull must be construed with reference to the office which was the subject of the contract. The office imposes on the sheriff duties both to the public and individuals; duties of which he cannot divest himself. One of these duties is to provide proper deputies for the execution of the office. Another is to take care that these deputies do faithfully execute the office. If the contract between Helm and Street and Turnbull is to be construed to deny to the high sheriff the right and the duty to see that the deputy is a suitable person; if under it he is to have no control over the officer, to turn him out of office if necessary, then the contract is null and void, as contrary to the policy of the law, and violative of the duties and obligations of the sheriff.

But this is not the true construction of the contract. By that contract, according to its true intent and meaning, the high sheriff said to Street and Turnbull, "I will sanction your choice of deputies, and 253 allow them *to qualify as such, provided they are proper persons: but I must be entitled to turn them out if the circumstances demand it, and to hold them responsible to me." In truth there is not in this contract a word which imports that the deputies are absolved from liability to the high sheriff for their misconduct; and it may as well be said that they are not responsible to creditors. If a deputy at all, he must perform all the duties and incur all the liabilities of the office.

If indeed the high sheriff had covenanted to release the deputy from liability for a consideration, then no doubt the deputy would be released: but this could only be by express contract. The high sheriff is responsible for the acts or the failures of the deputy, and the deputy must therefore be liable to him, unless by the express contract of the parties he is released. This is the principle decided in Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh 42. And on the principle involved in that case, Holland is liable to the high sheriff. The bond given by Salling did not create or import any new liability; but only a security: the liability existed before, and arose out of his office.

No man can become a deputy sheriff, whether by contract with the high sheriff or another deputy, except by authority of law. And by law too every deputy is subject at all times to be removed from office by the high sheriff. These are guards intended for the security of the public; and of which the public cannot be deprived by any act or contract of the high sheriff. These principles are sustained and illustrated by the case of Orear v. Kiger, 10 Leigh 622.

We say then that every contract for farming the sheriffalty must be taken subject to the right of the high sheriff to displace a deputy, and to hold every deputy responsible to him: And therefore, when Street and Turnbull selected a deputy and he was appointed, he became responsible to the high sheriff. As deputy sheriff

254 *Holland had no right or authority to make his returns to Street and Turnbull, or to pay over money collected by him upon executions to them: And if he did so, it was upon his own responsibility. Neither had Street and Turnbull any right to require the deputies to pay over the money to them: but the deputy might have insisted upon his right, as it was his duty, to pay the money to the plaintiffs in the executions. If this was not the right of the deputy, then he cannot be responsible either to the creditor or the sheriff. What right indeed has the high sheriff to require the deputy to pay money to him? The deputy is directly responsible to the creditor; and a payment to the high sheriff cannot relieve him of that responsibility. It is true that if he paid the money to the high sheriff he could not be further liable to him, but it would not relieve him from his liability to the creditor. Nor can his payment to Street and Turnbull relieve him from his liability to the creditor and the high sheriff. Our statutes on this subject will be found in 1 Rev. Code, ch. 78, § 15, p. 279; § 33, p. 283; and ch. 134, § 47, 48, p. 541.

The statutes referred to prescribe the liabilities of the deputy, and give the remedies of the creditor and the high sheriff. In the cases now under consideration the remedies provided for creditors against the high sheriff have been pursued; and he has been subjected for the default of this deputy. That default has been proved, and his only excuse is, that he paid the money to Street, another deputy. Now what contract Holland had with Street which required the payment of the money to him, does not appear. But the high sheriff was not privy to any such contract, and cannot be affected by it. But if there was such a contract it is obnoxious to the objection before stated. The deputy is a sworn public officer, with defined duties to be performed by him; and he can make no contract

255 which *will absolve him from the performance of these duties, as to third parties not cognizant of the contract.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion that the responsibility of the plaintiff in error in this case is to be ascertained and determined by the contract between the high sheriff and Street and Turnbull, to whom he farmed the sheriffalty; in pursuance of which contract the plaintiff in error was selected and employed as a deputy by the said Street and Turnbull, and permitted to qualify as a deputy sheriff by the high sheriff.

That by the terms of the contract referred to, the said Street and Turnbull were to have the management of the sheriffalty, to perform or have performed the duties of the office, to select and employ deputies, to control and have power to dismiss them. This contract construed with reference to the subject matter thereof, did not and could not divest the high sheriff of his power to dismiss any of said deputies, or of his right to refuse to permit any person so selected and employed by Street and Turnbull to qualify as a deputy: But subject to such power, the contract constituted Street and Turnbull his general agents, with full authority to control the persons selected by them to the same extent he himself might have done. If the sheriff requires his deputy to return process or pay over money collected to him, though in certain cases provided for by statute, the creditor might have a remedy against the deputy, notwithstanding such payment to the high sheriff, the latter if made responsible, could on no ground claim to subject the deputy to a liability, when so far as respected the sheriff, he had been guilty of no default. In accordance with the agreement and understanding of the parties, the plaintiff in error was selected and employed by Street and Turnbull, and was permitted by 256 the high sheriff to *qualify as his deputy without executing any bond to indemnify the high sheriff; and in pursuance of the directions of Street and Turnbull delivered to them or one of them process, and paid over the money collected by him; thus doing what the high sheriff had agreed he should do when he constituted Street and Turnbull his general agents in relation to the office, with power to select and employ, to control and dismiss, the deputies. In the case of Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh 42, it was agreed that the sub-deputy was to be accountable to the deputy who had farmed a particular bailiwick of the county to him, but the sheriff was not privy to such agreement, and permitted the sub-deputy to qualify at the instance of the deputy; the sub-deputy giving to the sheriff a bond to indemnify him against any loss arising from his acts. In the present case the sheriff must be treated as privy to the arrangements between Street and Turnbull and their sub-deputies, for it grew out of the contract which he had made. He looked to Street and Turnbull as the parties responsible to him, and therefore required no bond from the plaintiff in error when he qualified as deputy.

Reversed with costs, and this Court proceeding to render such judgment as the Court below ought to have rendered—Judgment for defendant, with costs.

*Gaines' Adm'r v. Alexander.

January Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

Executors and Administrators—Evidence—Paper Executed by Administrator before Qualification—Case at Bar.—In an action of debt against an administrator on a bond alleged to be the bond of his intestate, the issue was upon the plea of non est factum; and on the trial the plaintiff, after calling the attesting witness, to corroborate him, offered in evidence a paper signed by the defendant, in which the bond was referred to. This paper was executed by the defendant in the lifetime of his intestate, and did not purport on its face to have been executed by the defendant as the agent of his intestate, nor was there any proof of such agency. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Admissibility.—The paper having been executed by the defendant before he qualified as administrator, it is not competent evidence as the admission of a party on the record.

2. Same—Same—Agency—Proof of.—The paper not purporting to be executed as agent of his intestate, is not of itself evidence of agency so as to render it competent evidence.

This was an action of debt in the Circuit court of Fauquier county, brought in 1839, by John Alexander against Richard H. Gaines, as administrator of Seth Gaines deceased, upon the bond of Seth Gaines for 135 dollars, bearing date the 16th of May 1823, and payable the 25th September following. The defendant filed the plea of payment and several pleas of non est factum.

Upon the trial of the cause the defendant took a bill of exceptions to an opinion of the Court, which is as follows:

Upon the trial of this cause the plaintiff's counsel, in his opening remarks, read in evidence to the jury, without objection, a paper in these words:

Whereas Seth Gaines, of Stafford county, became indebted to John Alexander, 258 of Frederick, by bond, for *the sum of one hundred and thirty-five dollars, bearing date the 16th May 1823, and due the 25th September of the same year; and whereas the said Alexander hath agreed to take a certain mare which said Seth purchased of said Alexander, and the said Alexander agrees to sell said mare for the best price that he can, and credit the above named bond by the proceeds of such sale. And by mutual agreement between the said Alexander and Richard H. Gaines, the surviving executor of William Gaines, of Stafford, the said Richard Gaines agrees to give Mr. J. Alexander notice (before he relinquishes his claim on the property as executor, of said Seth's proportion of his father's estate,) to make the balance of the bond that may be unpaid, and that the said Richard H. Gaines will not put in any plea to prevent the said Alexander from making the balance on said bond, after the estate of his father is settled up and debts paid. In witness whereof, we have — set our hands and seals, this 25th day of December 1823.

John Alexander, [Seal.]

Richard H. Gaines, [Seal.]

Teste, James Wigginton,

Samuel Botts.

And the defendant's counsel, in his opening statement to the jury, also read the said paper and commented upon it; whereupon one of the plaintiff's counsel remarked audibly, that he (the defendant's counsel) had made the said paper evidence by reading it to the jury and commenting upon it. The counsel for the defendant then remarked, that the said paper was not evidence. The plaintiff then examined the subscribing witness to the bond in the declaration mentioned, who proved the execution thereof by the obligor, the intestate of the defendant. The plaintiff's counsel proceeded to read the paper before men-

259 tioned, *and the defendant's counsel then moved the Court to exclude it, upon the ground that it was not competent evidence upon the issues joined in this cause; but the Court being of opinion that it was evidence upon the issue of non est factum, in corroboration of the testimony of the subscribing witness, refused to exclude it. It was admitted that the paper first mentioned was executed in the lifetime of Seth Gaines, but the Court instructed the jury, that the said paper was not to be regarded as evidence on any question in the cause but the sealing and delivery, by the intestate of the defendant, of the bond, the execution of which had been previously proved by the subscribing witness. It was admitted that the paper was executed by the defendant.

There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for 122 dollars 16 cents, with interest thereon from the 25th September 1823 until paid, and his costs. And thereupon the administrator Gaines applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellant.

Morson, for the appellee.

DANIEL, J. It appears from the bill of exceptions, that the counsel for the defendant in error, in opening his case, read to the jury, without objection, and commented on, a certain paper which is set out in the said bill. This paper which purports to be executed by the plaintiff and defendant, recognizes as the bond of the intestate the instrument, the execution of which was the matter in issue. It also appears that the counsel of the plaintiff in error, in his opening statement likewise read and commented on the paper; whereupon it was remarked by the counsel of the defendant in error that the said paper was thereby made evidence in the cause. This claim was however denied by the counsel of the plaintiff in error, who insisted that 260 the *said paper was not evidence.

Subsequently the counsel of the defendant in error, having first introduced the subscribing witness to the bond in the declaration mentioned, who proved its execution by the obligor the intestate of the plaintiff in error, proceeded to read the paper first above mentioned. The counsel of the plaintiff in error then moved the Court to exclude said paper upon the ground that it was not competent evidence upon the issues joined in the cause; but the Judge of the Circuit court being of opinion that it was evidence on the issue of non est factum, in corroboration of the testimony of the subscribing witness, refused to exclude it. It was admitted that the said paper was executed by the plaintiff in error; but it was also further admitted that it was executed by him in the lifetime of his intestate.

It is, I think, quite clear from the bill of exceptions, that whilst the Judge of the Circuit court regarded the course of the counsel in regard to the paper as a part of the history of the proceedings in the cause proper to be certified, he did not intend to rest the correctness of his decision in any measure on that ground; but simply on the ground that the paper was, of itself, legal and competent evidence in corroboration of the testimony of the subscribing witness. For what purpose the counsel of the plaintiff in error referred to the paper does not appear; but it is seen that so soon as warned by the opposing counsel that it would be relied on as evidence in the cause, he promptly resisted the pretension. And even if, through inadvertence, the paper had been permitted to go to the jury without any show of opposition, it would, I apprehend, have been the duty of the Court, on the motion of the plaintiff in error, to have instructed the jury to disregard it, if the Court was of opinion that it was not legal testimony.

261 *The question of law involved in the refusal of the Court to exclude the paper, is I think, therefore fairly presented, unembarrassed by any considerations arising out of the conduct of the counsel of the plaintiff in error in regard to it previous to his motion to the Court to exclude it.

In Phillips on Evidence, vol. 1st, page 90, it is announced in general terms, that admissions are evidence in favour of the other side, whether made by the real party on the record, or by a nominal party who sues as a trustee for the benefit of another, or whether made by the party who is really interested in the suit, though not named on the record. The universality of expression used by the Judges in delivering their opinions, in the cases referred to as authority for the rule, might seem at first view to sanction such a doctrine. If we look however to the reasons upon which the rule is founded, it becomes very obvious that as so announced it must be subject to very important qualifications. In the case of the King v. The Inhabitants of Hardwick, 11 East. R. 578, Lord Ellenborough sets forth as the foundation of the rule, "the reasonable presumption that no person will make any declaration against his interest unless it be founded in truth." This rule of evidence was one of the matters of consideration in the case of Burton v. Scott, 3 Rand. 399. The case was one of probat, and the question turned upon the capacity of the testator. The wife of the testator was one of the legatees and interested in establishing his will, and it was sought by those who contested its validity, to rely on her declarations, as to the incapacity of her husband to make a will, made by her in his lifetime and before the date of the will. It was decided by this Court that the reason of the rule did not reach the case of such declarations; and that the rule did not extend to admissions and declarations made by *parties before their interest in the subject matter of controversy arose.

The reasons for denying the extension of the rule to the admissions and declarations of representatives, made before they are clothed with their representative rights and duties, would seem to be equally obvious: And all the cases which I have been able to find deny the competency of such evidence. Thus in Webb v. Smith, 21 Eng. C. L. R. 392, the declarations of a prochein amie made before the institution of the suit, were decided to be not admissible for the defendant. And in Fenwick and others v. Thornton, 22 Eng. C. L. R. 246, which was the case of a suit by the assignees of a bankrupt, it was decided that the defendant could not rely on the admissions of one of the plaintiffs made before he was appointed assignee. The precise question before us arose in the case of Plant v. M'Ewen, 4 Conn. R. 544, and under circumstances very similar to those in which it is presented here.

That was a suit against William M'Ewen as the executor of his father. The plaintiffs in their declaration alleged that the testator had in his lifetime, for a valuable consideration, assigned to the plaintiffs, and warranted as due and owing, a note on one William Walker; whereas the defendant, before the said assignment, acting for and as the agent of his father, had received of Walker a note on one Hawley, payable to said Walker under an agreement, as agent of his father, to endorse said last mentioned note as a credit on the first:—that there had been a failure to comply with the agreement, in consequence of which the estate of the father in the hands of the defendant as executor had become liable to the plaintiffs for the amount of the note from Hawley to Walker. On the trial the Judge admitted evidence proving that the defendant did receive the note against 263 Hawley, and that he agreed to *endorse it on the note of his father against Walker. No other evidence was offered to shew that the defendant was in the transaction the authorized agent of his father. In the Supreme court the effort was made by counsel to vindicate the correctness of the decision of the Judge on two grounds. 1st. That the act of the defendant in receiving the note against Hawley, and his agreement to credit it on the note against Walker, were admissible as the acts and declarations of a party to the record. And 2d. That his conduct in the matter was competent evidence as tending to shew that he was acting in the transaction as the agent of his father. But the Court decided that on neither ground could the legality of the evidence be sustained. The Judge delivering the opinion of the Court said, that whilst it was true as a general rule, that the declarations of a party to the record were evidence against him, there was no principle which would authorize the proof of an act or contract of the defendant, antecedent to his acceptance of the trust of executor, to affect the estate committed to his care: And that the naked act and engagement of the defendant, without the exhibition or actual pretence of any authority, implied no proof of agency; nor did they constitute premises from which any such inference could be deduced. To apply these remarks, with slight modification, as I think we may properly do, to the case before us, is to decide its fate. The certificate of the Judge negatives the existence of any proof in the cause, except what is to be inferred from the paper heretofore mentioned, tending to shew that the plaintiff in error was the agent of his intestate Seth Gaines: And the paper on its face shews no claim or assertion on the part of the plaintiff in error that he was acting in the matter under any authority derived from the said Seth.

264 *I am therefore of opinion, that the Circuit court erred in refusing to exclude the paper last mentioned; and that the judgment ought to be reversed.

The other judges concurred in Judge Daniel's opinion.

Judgment reversed.

Sheldon & als. v. Armstead's Adm'r & als.

January Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

Executors and Administrators†—Case at Bar.—G died in 1762, making W his executor. In 1784 bill by legatees of G against administrators of W for an account. The administrators having turned over the estate of W to D the husband of S the only child of W, he attends to the settlement of the account before the commissioner, which is returned in 1798. After the death of D, S the executrix of D, and her second husband, in 1804, upon a rule for counter security, surrender the office, and L another ex'or of D qualifies, to whom S and her husband pay over the assets in their hands. In 1805 bill amended, and S and her husband and L executor of D made parties, and they answer contesting the claim of plaintiffs, and except to the report. After the revival of the suit against L, he pays over to the legatees of D a large amount of the assets in his hands; and in 1814 he dies, when the suit is revived against the administrator de bonis non of D; and in 1816 there is a decree against him based upon the report of 1798. He takes an appeal, and in 1821 the decree is reversed for a matter of form, but affirmed in other respects, and the Court below is directed to enter a decree accordingly. In 1822 the Court below enters the decree in favor of all the legatees of G except B, as to whom her marriage is suggested, and the entry of the decree is postponed until the husband is made a party. Afterwards B's husband dies;

265 and then in 1826 all the legatees *of G, including B, file their bill against the administratrix of the administrator de bonis non of D and his legatees, and the representative of L, to have satisfaction of the decrees of 1816 and 1822. In 1829 the bill is dismissed as to the administratrix of the administrator de bonis non and the representative of L, which on appeal, is reversed in 1836. In 1838 the plaintiffs make the sureties of the administrator de bonis non of D and the legatees of L parties. Held:

1. Same—Decrees—Conclusiveness.—That the decrees of 1816, 1821 and 1822, taken in connexion with the decree of the court of appeals of 1836, conclusively establish against D and all his representatives, the indebtedness of W's estate to the legatees of G; that they had a right to follow the assets in the hands of D; that a sufficiency of such assets had come to his hands; and that his representatives who have received his assets are accountable to said legatees for the assets so received.

*For monographic note on Multifariousness (in Equity), see end of case.

†See monographic note on "Executors and Administrators."

2. Same—Judgment against Administrator d. b. n.†—Effect.—QUÆRE: What would be the effect generally of a judgment against an administrator de bonis non in establishing a debt against the estate, so as to conclude a former executor or administrator, and thereby subject him to a devastavit?

3. Same—Same—Same—Case at Bar.—Under the circumstances of this case, the decree against the administrator de bonis non of D in 1822, in pursuance of the decree of the Court of appeals of 1821, and substantially affirming the decree of 1816, must be held as conclusive upon L the prior executor of D, upon the question of the indebtedness of the estate of W; the right to follow his assets in the hands of D; the receipt of sufficient assets by D for the payment thereof; and the liability of his estate for the amount.

4. Same—Devastavit—What Constitutes.—That L having paid over to the legatees of D the assets, with full notice of the claim of G's legatees, and after the suit was revived against him, such payment constituted a devastavit.

5. Same—Credits—Case at Bar.—A part of the assets of D's estate having been retained by L, and recovered by suit from his executor after his death, by the administrator de bonis non of D, L is to be credited for the amount so recovered.

6. Chancery Practice—Multifariousness—Case at Bar.—As the legatees of G claimed by force of the same decrees ascertaining the rights of all; and having a common interest, are seeking satisfaction out of a common fund, it was proper to unite in one suit to get the benefit of the former decrees in their favor; and the bill is not multifarious.

7. Same—Same—Same.—The right of the plaintiff B to prosecute the suit to enforce the previous decrees, is not to be distinguished from that of the other plaintiffs.

266 *8. Fiduciaries—Statute Limiting Actions against—Effect on Case at Bar.—As the decree of 1816 was suspended by the appeal, and no definite decree establishing the debt against the estate of D, was made until 1822, and as until then the claimants had no right to proceed against the representative of L for his devastavit, the statute of 1826 was no bar to the suit commenced in that year; nor was the suit barred by the delay of the plaintiffs.

9. Executors and Administrators—Liability—Case at Bar.—The personal representative of L having paid over the assets to the devisees and legatees of L, without notice of the plaintiffs' claim, it was proper to subject them in the first instance, instead of the personal representative.

10. Same—Credits—Case at Bar.—That the amount paid over by the administrator of L to the administrator de bonis non of D, under the decree of the Court, should be applied as a credit to L, to the principal of the debt due from D to G, for which L was held responsible.

11. Case at Bar.—That some of the legatees of G having abandoned the prosecution of their claim, the liabilities of the parties who are responsible for W are diminished to the amount of the shares of these legatees.

†Death of Executor—Administrator d. b. n.—Revival of Suit.—See principal case cited in foot-note to Braxton v. Harrison, 11 Gratt. 30.

12. Same.—The wife of the personal representative of L, was a legatee for life of L, and had died, and the property had been transferred to those entitled in remainder, before any recovery in the case. B having no assets of his wife, cannot be held responsible on account of such life estate which had previously terminated; and the assets of L which the claimants were entitled to follow, had passed into the hands of those entitled in remainder.

13. Same.—Under the circumstances of this case, the plaintiffs should proceed first against the legatees of D for the recovery of the amount due them; and should only recover from the legatees of L so much of their claims as cannot be recovered from the legatees of D.

14. Same.—Statute Limiting Actions against Fiduciaries.—As the decree of 1822 ascertained the right of the plaintiffs to proceed against the sureties of the administrator de bonis non of D, and they were not made parties until 1838, the act of 1826 is a good defence for them against the claim of the plaintiffs.

Gill Armstead and William Armstead were brothers and partners in business, residing in the county of New Kent. Gill Armstead died in the year seventeen hundred and sixty-two, having first made his will which was duly admitted to record, by which he gave his slaves and personal estate to be equally divided among his six children as they should come of age or marry; and he appointed his wife Betty, his brothers William and John Armstead, and his friends Richard Allen, sen., Richmond Allen, and Dudley Williams, sen., his executrix and executors; all of whom qualified.

Previous to April 1784, Betty Armstead the widow and executrix of Gill Armstead, had married John Lewis, and William and John Armstead and Richard Allen, sen., the executors of Gill, had died. On the 7th of that month a bill was exhibited in the high Court of chancery at Richmond, by William Armstead, Miles Seldon, jr., and Betty his wife, John Cary and Susanna his wife, Mary Burwell, John Ambler and Frances his wife, and Martha Armstead, the said William Armstead and the female plaintiffs being the children and legatees of Gill Armstead, against Dudley Williams and Richmond Allen surviving executors of Gill Armstead, William Clayton, administrator, and Mary Armstead, administratrix of William Armstead the brother and executor of Gill, and William Armstead administrator of John Armstead, who was also a brother and executor of Gill Armstead, the object of which suit was to procure a settlement and distribution of the estate of Gill Armstead in the hands of his executors.

Dudley Williams and Richmond Allen, the surviving executors, filed their answer, stating that the management of the estate had been wholly left to William and John Armstead and the widow Betty, and that the respondents never interfered with the estate until after the death of William and John Armstead, when they possessed themselves of such of the testator's books and papers as they could find; and although the books shewed large balances in some instances, due the testator, yet they could collect none of them; they having been paid either to Gill Armstead in his lifetime, or to their co-executors William and John Armstead, after his death. The bill was also answered by Clayton and 268 *Mary Armstead, executor and executrix of William Armstead, stating their willingness to account as the Court should direct: And John Armstead's administrator answered, claiming that his intestate was in advance to the estate of his testator; and saying that he was ready to account.

In 1786, Betty Lewis the executrix of Gill Armstead, was made a defendant, and filed her answer: and in November of the same year a decree was made directing, 1st. That Betty Lewis, Dudley Williams and Richmond Allen, render an account of the administration of their testator's estate. 2d. That William Clayton and Mary Armstead render an account of their intestate William Armstead's administration on Gill Armstead's estate. 3d. That William Armstead, administrator of John Armstead, render an account of the administration of said John upon the estate of Gill Armstead.

Under the foregoing decree commissioner Hay made a report in March 1798, shewing due from the estate of William Armstead the executor, to the estate of Gill Armstead, the sum of £ 2168. 18. 6¼.; and from the estate of John Armstead the sum of £ 422. 9. 3½. The commissioner then proceeded to state accounts between the executors and the legatees of Gill Armstead, based on these balances, shewing the amount due to each legatee.

The balance found against William Armstead seems to have arisen out of the transactions of the partnership which had existed between himself and Gill Armstead; of which partnership no mention was made in the bill or in any of previous proceedings.

In June 1799, all the defendants being dead, subpoenas to revive the suit against the representatives of William and John Armstead, were awarded; and leave was given the plaintiffs to amend their bill by making William Dandridge a defendant. William Dandridge was the husband of Susanna, the only child of William Armstead the executor of Gill Armstead; and 269 although *not a party in the cause when the accounts were taken, was in fact the party principally interested, and was the party who attended to the settlement of the accounts. Although he seems to have acknowledged the service of a subpoena upon him, he was not made a party by an amended bill during his lifetime. In the early part of the year 1803 he died, having by his will appointed his wife Susanna and William Langborne and John Bassett his executrix and executors; and Susanna Dandridge alone qualified, in June 1803.

In 1804 or 1805, Susanna Dandridge having intermarried with David Dorrington, the plaintiffs filed a bill of revivor and supplement, in which were recited the previous proceedings in the cause, the leave to amend the bill by making William Dandridge a defendant, granted in 1799, the issuing of subpoenas to revive under that order, the death of William Dandridge, the qualification of his widow as executrix and her intermarriage with Dorrington, and the appointment of William Langborne and John Bassett as executors of Dandridge. The bill charged the existence of the partnership between Gill and William Armstead; that at the death of Gill, William was indebted to the concern; and that after Gill's death, he possessed himself of the partnership effects to a considerable amount, and took upon himself the entire management of the said Gill's personal estate, as executor. That he kept open the partnership store for twelve months after Gill Armstead's death, receiving the profits; at the end of which time he sold off the stock, and took into his possession all the books, papers, bonds, &c., of the partnership, and of Gill Armstead. That after the marriage of William Dandridge with Susanna, the only child of said William Armstead, the administrators paid over and delivered up to Dandridge, in right of his wife, all the property of William Armstead, and whatever 270 was due from them as his administrators, before they had accounted *for any of said William Armstead's transactions either as surviving partner or as executor of Gill Armstead. That there was then no personal representative of the estate of William Armstead; and that under these circumstances the complainants had a right to follow the personal assets of William Armstead in the hands of William Dandridge and his representatives, for satisfaction of their claims against him as surviving partner and executor of Gill Armstead. They therefore made Dorrington and wife, Bassett and Langborne defendants, and asked for satisfaction out of the estate of William Dandridge.

On the 12th of May 1804, on the motion of the sureties of Mrs. Dorrington as executrix of Dandridge, the Court made an order on Dorrington and wife for counter security; and on the 3d of June 1805, Dorrington appeared, and for himself and his wife consented that the estate of William Dandridge should be delivered to the sureties; and the same was ordered accordingly: whereupon William Langborne qualified as executor of William Dandridge.

Dorrington and wife answered the amended and supplemental bill, resisting the pretensions of the plaintiffs on various grounds. There was also a subpoena to answer the bill, issued in November 1805, and returned served on Langborne; and an attachment was issued against him in July 1806, the service of which he acknowledged; and in October 1806, he filed his answer, in which he relied on the great lapse of time since the death of Gill Armstead as furnishing a presumption that all matters of the partnership had been duly settled, and the plaintiffs satisfied all proper demands; and in aid of this presumption he relied on the facts that the plaintiffs had many years before received their proportions of Gill Armstead's estate without any reservation as to the partnership; that several of the plaintiffs afterwards gave their bonds to William Armstead, which they 271 *would not have done if there had been no settlement; and that John Armstead, the acting executor, actually received a large portion of the goods, from which a settlement of the partnership should be inferred. He further denied the right of the plaintiffs to call the defendant, or the estate of his testator, to account concerning the matters mentioned in the bill; and he pleaded the statute of limitations.

It appears that on the 29th of December 1806, Dorrington and wife paid over to Langborne assets of the estate of William Dandridge to the amount of 20,698 dollars 17 cents; and on the same day he paid to the legatees of Dandridge 20,529 dollars 48 cents: and it also appears that he received other assets, amounting to upwards of 10,000 dollars; and that his payments to the legatees amounted to upwards of 27,000 dollars of principal.

In 1815 William Langborne died, and John Bassett having refused to qualify as executor of William Dandridge, the estate was committed to Thomas H. Prosser, high sheriff of the county of Henrico. The cause came on to be heard on the 1st day of June 1816, when it was revived in the name of Abraham A. Green and Elizabeth A. A. Cocke, children of Martha Green, who was Martha Armstead, and by consent of the plaintiffs was dismissed as to the representatives of John Armstead; the plaintiffs not wishing to prosecute their claim against his estate: And the Court, holding that it was not necessary to bring the representatives of the deceased executors of Gill Armstead, or of the deceased administrators of William Dandridge, before the Court, and reciting that it appeared that William Armstead, whose representatives, Mary Armstead and William Clayton, were originally parties to this suit, was the principal acting executor of Gill Armstead, and surviving partner of said Gill and William; and that he received the greater part of the debts of said partnership, as well as

272 *those of said Gill in his individual right, and that after his death all the estate of the said William Armstead, as well as the books, papers and evidences of debts, belonging as well to the said partners as to the said Gill Armstead, came into the hands of William Dandridge, formerly a party in this cause, who intermarried with Susanna, the only child of said William Armstead, now the wife of David Dorrington, both of whom are defendants; and overruling all the exceptions of the defendants, was of opinion that the plaintiffs had a right to follow the estate of William Armstead which came to the hands of William Dandridge, who it appears possessed himself of a sufficiency of that estate, as well as of the debts due to Gill Armstead's estate, to pay the claims of the plaintiffs found to be due to them respectively. It was therefore adjudged, ordered and decreed, that the defendant Thomas H. Prosser, committee of the estate of William Dandridge, out of the estate of the said William which had or might come to his hands to be administered, should pay to the plaintiff William Armstead, £ 490. 4. 8½., with interest at five per cent. per annum on £ 361. 9. 9., part thereof, from the 11th day of May 1778, till paid; to the plaintiff Betty Selden, in her own right, £ 245. 7. 10¼., with like interest on £ 243. 10. 11. from the 29th of October 1774, till paid; to the plaintiff Susanna Cary, in her own right, £ 348. 13. 8., with like interest from the 16th of March 1777; to the plaintiff William Selden, administrator de bonis non of Joseph Selden, £ 188. 6. 7½., with like interest from the 26th November 1774, in right of his deceased wife Mary; to John Ambler, surviving husband of his deceased wife Frances, £ 361. 9. 9., with like interest from the 25th October 1767; to Abraham A. Green and Elizabeth A. A. Cocke, children of Martha Green, who survived her husband, £ 361. 9. 9., with like interest from the 25th of October 1767; and their costs.

273 *On the 3d of June 1816, administration de bonis non on the estate of William Dandridge, was granted to Bartholomew Dandridge his son, who executed a bond in the penalty of £ 20,000., with Thomas H. Terrill and three others as his sureties; and thereupon took an appeal from the foregoing decree of the 1st of June 1816. On the 11th of December 1821, the cause was decided in the Court of appeals, when the Court, for reasons stated in the decree, approved the decree of the Court of chancery affirming the report of the commissioner, and overruling the exceptions thereto; notwithstanding some of the plaintiffs had not strictly entitled themselves to a decree by taking administration on the estates to which they were so respectively entitled; and it was held that under the circumstances of the case the Chancellor would have been justified in decreeing payment to these appellees respectively, of the sums mentioned in the decree, on their giving bond with security to the satisfaction of the Court, to the appellant to indemnify him from any claim which might be made by any legal representative of the person in whose right such payment was decreed. The decree was therefore reversed, with costs, and the cause was remanded to the Court of chancery to have a decree entered according to the foregoing principles; and in case of a failure to give such bonds, to have the suit revived in the name of the legal representative of the party in whose right the claim is, and proceeded in to a final decree.

On the 18th of July 1822, a decree was made in the Chancery court in conformity with the decree of the Court of appeals, in favour of the plaintiffs respectively, against Bartholomew Dandridge, administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, for the sums mentioned in the decree of the 1st of June 1816, except as to Elizabeth A. A. Cocke. As to her, the decree was, that "it being suggested that Elizabeth A. A. Cocke, one of the plaintiffs, hath intermarried with — Booth, this cause 274 *is retained for further proceedings as to that plaintiff; and leave is given the said Booth and wife to file a bill of revivor and supplemental bill. At the time this decree was entered Bartholomew Dandridge's powers as administrator had been revoked, and David Dorrington and his wife had been allowed, at the September term of the County court of Henrico, in 1821, to give the counter security required in 1805, and to resume the administration of William Dandridge's estate. And thus terminated this suit of Armstead v. Armstead.

In the month of September 1826, the bill in the present suit of Armstead v. Dandridge was exhibited in the District Court of chancery then held in Williamsburg, by Gill Armstead and Thomas B. Allen, administrators of William Armstead deceased, one of the children of Gill Armstead deceased, and one of the plaintiffs in the former suit of Armstead v. Armstead, Betty Selden, Susanna Cary, William Selden, administrator of Joseph Selden, John Ambler and Abram A. Green, being the same plaintiffs as in the former suit (except Elizabeth A. A. Booth, who had obtained no decree, but as to whom the cause was retained and leave to amend the bill given,) against David Dorrington and his wife Susanna, executrix of William Dandridge deceased, William Duval, the administrators of John Pendleton, and the committee and administrator of John Adams, securities of said Susanna as executrix aforesaid, Burwell Bassett administrator of William Langborne, who was one of the executors of William Dandridge, Bartholomew Dandridge administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge deceased, and in his own right as heir and devisee of said William Dandridge, John Williams and Scianna his wife, Eleanor Dandridge, John B. Richardson and Lavinia his wife, and Robert F. Dandridge, heirs and devisees of the said William Dandridge. The object of this bill is to carry into effect the decree obtained in the same Court by the plaintiffs 275 against Bartholomew *Dandridge, as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge; to which decree and to all the proceedings on which it is founded, reference is made by the bill as part thereof.

The bill avers, that the said decree has been unavailing, because the estate of William Dandridge has been all wasted or sold, so that no execution can reach it, although his estate is fully able to pay all the demands against it; that Susanna Dandridge, the widow of William, qualified as his executrix, and soon thereafter intermarried with Dorrington, who received considerable estate of said William into their hands, which they wasted and converted to their own use; that William Langborne also qualified as executor of said William Dandridge, on the 3d of June 1805, and received a large estate into his possession, which he also wasted or misapplied; that Bartholomew Dandridge qualified as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, and received a large estate into his hands of the said William Dandridge, which he also wasted and misapplied; that the said William Dandridge left a large real estate, which is in the hands of his heirs and devisees, and which may be liable to the plaintiffs' demands, in the event that the personal estate was expended in the payment of specialty debts, or to the extent that it was so consumed; that some or all of the defendants are liable for the plaintiffs' said decree, and relief is accordingly prayed against them.

The administrators of John Pendleton, one of the sureties of Susanna Dorrington as executrix of William Dandridge, answered, averring their ignorance of the matters charged, and calling for proof of them, and insisting that the claims of the plaintiffs should be regarded as stale demands, their intestate Pendleton having been dead more than twenty years, and no demands ever before made.

276 *William Duval, another surety of Mrs. Dorrington, answered the bill to the same effect.

Burwell Bassett, administrator of William Langborne, also answered the bill, admitting that Langborne was executor of William Dandridge, and calling for proper and legal proof of the plaintiffs' demands. He denies that Langborne ever wasted the estate of William Dandridge, or any part thereof, and avers that the said estate was duly and fully administered by Langborne in his life, and his administration duly settled by the respondent, since his death, under an order of the Richmond Chancery court; upon which settlement the balance, and divers bonds, &c., for the payment of money found among the papers of Langborne, and appearing to be due to William Dandridge's estate, were paid and handed over to Bartholomew Dandridge, the administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, under the decree of said Court; that since the death of Langborne, the heirs or devisees of William Dandridge had divided among themselves, by sale under a decree of said Court, a large real estate, amounting to about 60,000 dollars; that the complainants had prosecuted their claims against Langborne, in his lifetime, and failed to establish them against him, and should not now be permitted to disturb the respondent. He exhibits with his answer, Bartholomew Dandridge's receipt for sundry bonds, certificates of stock, &c., handed over to him.

In 1827 the death of Susanna Dorrington was suggested, and the cause was revived against Mosby Sheppard, sheriff of Henrico and committee of her estate, and of the estate of William Dandridge; also the death of Bartholomew Dandridge was suggested, and the cause revived against Catharine Dandridge, his administratrix.

At the January term 1828, a decree was rendered for the settlement of the following accounts, viz: 1st. An account of Bartholomew Dandridge's administration 277 of *William Dandridge's estate. 2d.

Of Catharine Dandridge's administration of Bartholomew Dandridge's estate.

3d. Of William Langborne's administration of William Dandridge's estate, taking as prima facie true, liable to be surcharged and falsified by the plaintiffs, the account settled under the decree of the Richmond Chancery court, and relied on in the answer of the defendant Bassett; and in taking this account the commissioner was directed "to separate the payments made to the heirs and legatees of William Dandridge deceased, and the credits arising from rents."

4th. An account of Burwell Bassett's administration of Langborne's estate, unless he shall admit assets, &c. 5th. An account of all the real estate in the possession of the heirs or devisees of William Dandridge, derived by devise or descent from him, and if aliened, to whom, at what time, and for what price. 6th. An account of all the specialty debts, if any, of William Dandridge, paid out of his personal estate.

In January 1829, the commissioner, Anderson, returned his report under the said decree:

First. An account of Bartholomew Dandridge's administration of William Dandridge's estate, shewing due to the estate of William Dandridge the sum of 2095 dollars 12 cents, on 14th February 1821, interest added to the 31st December 1828, 989 dollars 93 cents, total 31st December 1828, 3085 dollars 5 cents. This account is settled from an audit of Henrico County court, returned in the lifetime of Bartholomew Dandridge.

Secondly. An account of Catharine Dandridge's administration of Bartholomew

Dandridge's estate, shewing due to the estate of Bartholomew Dandridge, on 31st

December 1828, the sum of 1244 dollars 84 cents.

Thirdly. An account of payments by Langborne to William Dandridge's devisees and legatees, and rents received, shewing principal paid over to William Dan-

278 dridge's *children and widow, 23,249 dollars 57 cents, over and above the rents credited in said account. This account is taken from the account rendered under the order of the Richmond Chancery court before referred to, of Langborne's administration of William Dandridge's estate, by separating the items of payment to the legatees, and rents of real estate therein contained.

The commissioner reports, that Bassett had settled no account of his administration of Langborne's estate, nor had he admitted assets, and that none of the defendants, heirs and devisees of William Dandridge, had rendered the accounts required of them as to the real estate devised or descended.

Various exceptions are filed to the said report by the plaintiffs and the defendant Bassett, administrator of Langborne.

These exceptions of Bassett were for failing to credit the estate of William Dandridge and to charge Bartholomew Dandridge's estate with various sums of money which it was alleged Bassett, as administrator of Langborne, had paid over to Bartholomew Dandridge, as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, under a decree of the Chancery court. After the death of Langborne and qualification of Bartholomew Dandridge, the latter filed a bill in the Chancery court at Richmond against Burwell Bassett, as the administrator of William Langborne, to compel Bassett to pay over to him the assets of William Dandridge's estate which were in the hands of Langborne at the time of his death. The commissioner to whom the accounts were referred reported the sum of 2872 dollars 66 cents as in the hands of Langborne, as executor of William Dandridge; and this sum was paid over to Bartholomew Dandridge under the decree of the Court. Of this sum 777 dollars 54 cents was expended in a due course of administration, leaving a balance in the 279 hands of Bartholomew *Dandridge of 2095 dollars 12 cents, as due the 14th of February 1821. The commissioner also reported two bonds given by Bartholomew Dandridge to Langborne, one for purchases at a sale of the personal estate of William Dandridge made by Langborne, for 2087 dollars 50 cents, due 15th January 1807, and the other for 2000 dollars, for money of William Dandridge's estate loaned by Langborne to Bartholomew Dandridge the 15th of July 1814. There was also 2228 dollars due from Dorrington for purchases at the sale, with interest, also 600 dollars for rent of real estate, and some other bonds of third persons due to William Dandridge's estate and held by Langborne, the obligors in which the commissioner reported to be insolvent. These debts were charged to Bartholomew Dandridge, administrator of William Dandridge, in the commissioner's report; and the Court, approving the report, decreed in his favour against Bassett, as administrator of Langborne, for the balance so ascertained to be due, and he paid over the amount and transferred the bonds to Bartholomew Dandridge.

At the July term, 1829, the cause, which was then dismissed as to Betty and William Selden, came on to be heard on the said report, &c., when the Court of chancery, being of opinion that the powers of Susanna Dorrington, as executrix of William Dandridge, never were revoked or annulled in her lifetime, and that the grant of administration de bonis non to Bartholomew Dandridge was a nullity, and that the estate of William Langborne was not bound by the decree against Bartholomew Dandridge, the administrator de bonis non, being no party or privy thereto, adjudged and decreed, that the plaintiffs' bill be dismissed as to the defendants Catharine Dandridge, administratrix of Bartholomew Dandridge, and Burwell Bassett, administrator of William Langborne, without prejudice to any other or further claim which the plaintiffs in any other suit may *properly assert against said estates. And it was then further ordered and decreed, that the defendant Mosby Sheppard render before one of the commissioners of the Court an account of Susanna Dorrington's administration of William Dandridge's estate, and an account of his own transactions as committee of said Susanna Dorrington; and that the defendant David Dorrington render an account of his actings as husband of said Susanna Dorrington, and thereby executor of said William Dandridge.

From so much of this decree as dismissed the bill as to the defendants Dandridge and Bassett, the plaintiffs obtained an appeal; and on the 16th February 1836, the decree was reversed and annulled, and the cause remanded to the Court of chancery for further proceedings to be had. The opinions delivered by the Judges, copies of which are in the record, shew the grounds of reversal. As to Bartholomew Dandridge they say, that whether his appointment as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge was legal or illegal, neither he nor those representing him could be received to deny that he was such administrator; that as such he had instituted a suit against the administrator of Langborne, the former executor, and had received a large amount of assets which he should be held liable for; he and his sureties being alone responsible therefor. As to Langborne's estate, they say it was error to dismiss the bill as to him, merely because he was no party to the decree.

The cause came back from the Court of appeals in 1836, when the plaintiffs, Gill Armstead and Thomas B. Allen, administrators of William Armstead, being dead, it was revived in the name of John Tabb, sheriff, and committee of William Armstead's estate, and in the name of Gill A. Cary, administrator of Susanna Cary, who had also died.

281 *On the 3d July 1837, and the 24th November 1837, the complainants, together with Elizabeth A. A. Booth, (who had obtained no decree,) filed two amended bills, without having obtained the leave of the Court to do so; and on the 14th May 1838, the said amended bills, and all the proceedings thereon were ordered to be set aside. And thereupon leave was granted the plaintiffs to file a supplemental and amended bill, and to make new parties defendants.

In pursuance of the leave thus given, the plaintiffs in the bill of 1826, (except Betty Selden and William Selden, as to whom the suit was dismissed in 1829,) together with Elizabeth A. A. Booth, exhibited their supplemental and amended bill, on the 14th of May 1838, reciting the decree of the 1st June 1816, (as a decree rendered against Bartholomew Dandridge, as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge,) the decree of the Court of appeals of the 11th

December 1821, and the decree of the Chancery court of the 18th July 1822, and charges that the same has been unavailing; that the complainant Elizabeth A. A. Booth, when under age, intermarried in 1813, with Josiah H. Cocke, who soon thereafter died, she surviving, and in 1817 she intermarried with William Booth, and soon after removed to the state of Tennessee, where she has remained ever since under coverture, until the 23d October 1833, having no knowledge of said decree and the pendency of this suit, until very recently, &c. This bill charges that Bartholomew Dandridge received a very large amount of assets, and wasted and converted the same to his own use, having given bond in the penalty of £ 20,000 with security; that Burwell Bassett received a large estate of William Langborne, which he delivered over to his only son and distributee, William Langborne, junior, who soon died, leaving a will, by which he gave his whole estate to certain persons named in the bill, and made Burwell Bassett his *executor, who distributed the estate amongst the legatees; that these assets of William Langborne, the elder, thus distributed to the legatees of the younger Langborne, are liable to the payment of the plaintiffs' demands. To this bill are made defendants Burwell Bassett, executor of William Langborne, the younger, Robert M'Candlish, administrator de bonis non of William Langborne, the elder, Catharine Dandridge, administratrix of Bartholomew Dandridge, the representatives of the deceased sureties of Bartholomew Dandridge, as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, Thomas H. Terrell, the surviving security of said Bartholomew Dandridge, and all the legatees of William Langborne, the younger, deceased.

To this supplemental and amended bill Burwell Bassett, in his lifetime, filed his answer, setting up the following grounds of defence, viz:—1st. He calls for proof of the decrees referred to in the bill, especially the decree which the bill seeks to enforce. 2dly. He calls for proof of the execution of the bonds required by the decree of 1822. 3dly. He insists that the said decrees and proceedings are not binding on him, or the estate of his intestate William Langborne, they being neither parties nor privies thereto, and cannot be used even as evidence against them. 4thly. If the suit shall be entertained, he denies that the plaintiffs have any just claim or right to recover against the estate of William Armstead, or William Dandridge, and insists that they be held to proof of such claim, and that the accounts be referred anew to be re-taken upon legal evidence. 5thly. That he is advised there is great doubt whether William Langborne was ever the true legal executor of William Dandridge, and calls for the proof. 6thly. He denies the right of John Ambler to recover choses in action due to the wife, not being the personal representative of the wife. 7thly. Denies that William Langborne wasted or misapplied the assets

he retained in his hands assets sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' demands, if established, which assets, being in Langborne's hands at his death, came to the hands of said Bassett, as his administrator, and were subsequently delivered and paid over to Bartholomew Dandridge, as administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, under a decree pronounced by the Chancery court of Richmond, in a suit brought against him by the said Bartholomew Dandridge, as administrator de bonis non afore-said; that to the extent of the assets thus paid over the complainants can never look to the estate of Langborne, or to the defendant Bassett, but must resort to Bartholomew Dandridge and his sureties. 8thly. That he has been informed refunding bonds were required by Langborne, and given when he made payments to the legatees of Dandridge and wife. He insists that the plaintiffs be compelled to resort to them. 9thly. That William Dandridge left a large real estate, and as his heirs and devisees are before the Court on the bill of 1826, he insists that resort should be compelled to them. 10thly. That he, the said Bassett, has no assets of William Langborne in his hands, having legally and fully administered all that ever came to his hands as administrator of said Langborne, and paid over the balance to William Langborne, junior, the sole distributee, before he had notice of this suit, or the claims of the plaintiffs; that the same estate subsequently came to his hands as executor of the younger Langborne, and was distributed according to his will, by decree rendered in the suits of "Taliaferro v. Bassett," depending in this Court, which are referred to as part of the answer, together with the refunding bonds executed on such distribution; that if the plaintiffs have any claim against him as representative of Langborne, they should be compelled to resort to the legatees of the younger Langborne. 11thly.

284 He denies *the right of Elizabeth A. A. Booth, to unite with the plaintiffs in this cause in filing the supplemental bill referred to, and insists that the bill be dismissed as to her; but if the bill should be entertained as to her, he requires proof of the allegations touching her infancy, coverture, non-residence, and ignorance of her rights and the decree in her favour. 12thly. Pleads the act of limitations against the claim of Elizabeth A. A. Booth. 13thly. Insists that the said claim of Elizabeth A. A. Booth should be presumed to be settled, and regarded as a stale demand. 14thly. That all the claims of the plaintiffs should be regarded as stale demands. 15thly. That the complainants, if entitled to recover, should first resort to the assets in the hands of Bartholomew Dandridge, and pursue him and his sureties therefor; and if their claims exceed the assets paid over to him, for the excess they should resort to the legatees and devisees of William Dandridge; and if they prove insufficient, then to the legatees of Langborne, unless the Court shall be of opinion that Langborne is not responsible at all for the payment over of the assets of Dandridge. And lastly. Bassett claims the benefit of any and every act of limitations applicable to the circumstances of the case.

The legatees of William Langborne, the younger, all answered the bill, relying upon the same matters set forth in the answer of the defendant Burwell Bassett, except that they were not, under any circumstances, to be made liable for any part of the plaintiffs' demands. And especially they insist, that if any question shall arise involving liability for the assets paid over by Burwell Bassett under the decree of the Richmond Chancery court to Bartholomew Dandridge, they are not to be held responsible therefor, but the said Bassett personally should be held liable, if that payment shall not be held good.

285 *The defendant Thomas H. Terrill demurred and answered. The demurrer was overruled. His answer denies the justice of the plaintiffs' demands, and calls for proof of them. He pleads the act of limitations of 1826, in his defence; also avers that the powers of Bartholomew Dandridge were revoked in September 1821, before the rendition of the decree of the Court of appeals; denies that Bartholomew Dandridge ever was legally the administrator of William Dandridge, or that he ever received any assets as such; says that the receipt filed with the answer of Bassett was executed after his powers as administrator were revoked, and that the bonds, &c., received were worthless.

On the 10th day of November 1843, several of the parties having died, there were revivals entered against certain of their representatives, and the case was argued and time taken for consideration.

Afterwards, on the 17th of November 1845, a decree was pronounced, ordering these, among other enquiries, before a commissioner, to wit:—1st. As to the value of the property, real and personal, of William Langborne, deceased, received by his devisees and legatees, and whether it was sufficient to pay the demands of the plaintiffs. 2d. As to the proportions in which such devisees and legatees should make payment to the plaintiffs; ascertaining also the contribution from Burwell Bassett's estate, on account of the life estate of his wife in one fourth of the property of William Langborne, junior. 3d. As to the amount of the demands of the plaintiffs; taking the decree of 1822 as a guide—but deducting, as of the 14th of February 1821, 2095 dollars 12 cents, as the sum for which Bartholomew Dandridge's estate would be responsible, in case Burwell Bassett's exceptions (which were left undecided) should be overruled. The same decree dismissed the bill as to the defendant Terrill, but 286 without costs; but did not pass upon the claim of *the plaintiff Elizabeth A. A. Booth. Under this decree, the commissioner returned a report, to which exceptions were taken by Bassett and by Langborne's devisees and legatees. Afterwards the devisees and legatees of Langborne filed exceptions to the report of commissioner Anderson, filed in 1828, similar to the above mentioned exceptions of Burwell Bassett, as to which the above mentioned decree gave no decision.

The exceptions to the report of 1828 have been already stated. The exceptions to the last report, which it is material to notice, are 1st. For applying the amount due from the estate of Bartholomew Dandridge to the interest of the debt due from the estate of William Dandridge, instead of applying it to the principal. 2d. For diminishing the portion of that sum applicable as a credit upon the amounts due to the respective plaintiffs, by dividing it among not only the plaintiffs, but Betty Selden and Joseph Selden, as to whose claims the bill had been dismissed. 3d. For charging the defendants with the sum of 2762 dollars 60 cents as due Elizabeth A. A. Booth; she not having obtained a decree for any amount in the decree of the 18th of July 1822. 4th. For charging the defendants, the legatees of William Langborne, jr., with interest upon the appraised value of the slaves received by them from the time they were received. 5th. For charging them with interest upon the value of land received by them from the time received.

When the cause came on to be finally heard in May 1847, the Court directed a special statement to be made, which was adopted as the basis of the decree, and is referred to in the decree of this Court as marked XX. This statement disregards the exceptions of the defendants to the report of 1828; but is conformed to the first and second exceptions above mentioned. It retains the charge in favour of Mrs. Booth;

287 and the fourth and fifth exceptions are not passed upon, as the *principal of the estate of William Langborne, jr., received by the defendants, his legatees and distributees, was more than the amount of the decrees against them respectively, except Mrs. Burwell Bassett, to whom he gave the one fourth of his estate for her life. The commissioner in his report charged her with interest on the personal estate received by her, 2922 dollars 70 cents, and on real estate, 1173 dollars 15 cents, = 4095 dollars 85 cents, and charged her with a proportionate share of the debt imposed upon the legatees and devisees of William Langborne, jr. In the statement "XX" she is charged with one fourth of the debt. Mrs. Bassett died in the year 1834; and in the same year the legatees and devisees in remainder of William Langborne, jr., filed their bill against Burwell Bassett for a division and distribution of the estate of their testator which had been allotted to her for life; and in that suit the property was sold, and the proceeds were divided among the complainants in 1835 and 1836.

Statement XX ascertained the amount due from the estate of Bartholomew Dandridge on the 1st day of June 1846, to be 5400 dollars 50 cents, of which 2095 dollars 12 cents was principal. It ascertained that there was due to the plaintiff, William Armstead's representative, 5795 dollars 39 cents, of which Bartholomew Dandridge's estate was charged with 1348 dollars 69 cents, leaving 4446 dollars 70 cents to be paid by the legatees of Langborne; and it was apportioned among them. The statement ascertained the debt due to Susanna Cary's estate to be 5395 dollars 21 cents, of which Bartholomew Dandridge's estate was charged with 1255 dollars 56 cents, leaving 4139 dollars 65 cents to be paid by Langborne's legatees; and which was apportioned among them. The debt due John Ambler's estate was 6007 dollars 78 cents, of which Bartholomew Dandridge's estate was charged with 1398 dollars 12 cents, leaving 4609 dollars 66 cents to be paid by *Langborne's legatees; which was also apportioned among them. The debt due Abraham A. Green was 3003 dollars 89 cents, of which Bartholomew Dandridge's estate was charged with 699 dollars 6 cents, leaving 2304 dollars 83 cents to be paid by the legatees of Langborne. And the debt due Elizabeth A. A. Booth was the same in all respects with that of Abraham A. Green.

The decree of the Court overruled in terms the exceptions filed by the defendants to the report of 1828, and adopting the statement XX, decreed in favour of the respective plaintiffs against Bartholomew Dandridge's administrator, for the sums above mentioned, as applied to their respective debts in statement XX. The Court also decreed in favour of the respective plaintiffs, against each of the legatees of Langborne, jr., separately for his proportion of the debt due to each plaintiff according to said statement, holding Burwell Bassett as the husband of Mrs. Bassett, liable for one fourth of the amount for which the estate of William Langborne was subjected. And the decree required Ambler's administrator, Abraham A. Green and E. A. A. Booth to execute bonds to indemnify the defendants against the claim of the personal representative of the party under whom they claimed. From this decree the legatees and devisees of William Langborne applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

The case was elaborately argued by Morson and Southall for the appellants, by Griawold and R. T. Daniel for Bassett, and by Harrison and Robinson for the other appellees, but the reporter was absent during a part of the argument, and therefore cannot give it.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that the amount and validity of the claim of Gill Armstead's legatees against *the estate of William Armstead deceased, were ascertained and adjudged by the decree of the Chancery court of the 1st of June 1816. That although the said decree was reversed by the decree of this Court, pronounced on the 11th of December 1821, for formal errors, yet the mode of settling the accounts between said William Armstead and the estate of Gill Armstead was directly passed upon by the Court of appeals, and so much of the decree of the 1st June 1816, as ascertained the amount of the debt and adjudged it to be due by William Armstead's estate, was substantially affirmed, and the Court of chancery was instructed to enter a decree according to the principles so settled by the decree of the Court of appeals; in pursuance whereof the said Chancery court did, on the 18th July 1822, enter up a decree for the amount of the debt so ascertained to be due from William Armstead's estate to the legatees of Gill Armstead.

The Court is further of opinion, that said decrees did in effect adjudge and establish that as William Dandridge, who intermarried with the only daughter of William Armstead, being best acquainted with, and having laboriously attended to the taking of the accounts, being de facto administrator of William Armstead, had possessed himself of the assets and credits of the estate, the payment of the debt so ascertained and established against William Armstead's estate must ultimately fall on said Dandridge. The Court is therefore of opinion, that said decrees taken in connection with the decree of the Court of appeals of the 16th February 1836, reversing a decree of the Chancery court pronounced on the 3d of August 1829, dismissing the bill as to the representatives of Bartholomew Dandridge and William Langborne, conclusively establish against said William Dandridge and all his representatives the indebtedness of William Armstead's estate to the legatees of Gill Armstead; that they had a right to follow *the assets in William Dandridge's hands; that a sufficiency of such assets had come to his hands, and that his representatives, who have received his assets, are accountable to said legatees for the assets so received.

And the Court, without deciding what would be the effect in all cases of a judgment against an administrator de bonis non in establishing a debt against the estate so as to conclude a former executor or administrator, and thereby subject him to a devastavit, is of opinion, that under the circumstances disclosed in this case, the decree pronounced against Bartholomew Dandridge, administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge deceased, on the 18th of July 1822, in pursuance of the decree of the Court of appeals of the 11th December 1821, substantially affirming the decree of the 1st June 1816, should be treated and held as conclusive upon the said William Langborne, the prior executor of said William Dandridge deceased, upon the question of the indebtedness of William Armstead's estate, the right to follow his assets in the hands of William Dandridge, the receipt of sufficient assets by William Dandridge for the payment thereof, and the liability of his estate for the amount: It sufficiently appearing that said claim was controverted by said William Dandridge in his lifetime, who, according to the decree of the Court of appeals, was best acquainted with and laboriously attended to the taking of the accounts; and it furthermore appearing that after the death of said William Dandridge, the suit was regularly revived against Susanna Dorrington and David Dorrington her husband, the said Susanna having qualified as executrix of William Dandridge, and against John Bassett and William Langborne who were named as executors; that the said Dorrington and wife filed their answer making full defence, and that after the order of the County court of June 3d, 1805, treated by the Court of appeals by the decree of the 16th February 1836, as a 291 revocation of her authority *as executrix, the said William Langborne qualified as executor, and thereafter filed his answer controverting the justness of the claim; that exceptions were taken to the report of the commissioners, and the case matured for a decision on the merits during his lifetime. Under such a state of facts where the claim was controverted by the party sought to be charged in his lifetime, the suit revived against his executor who made a vigorous and full defence, and the case was ready for a decision on the merits when he died, and the cause was revived against the administrator de bonis non, against whom the decree was pronounced, there can be no hazard of injustice to the executor in treating the decree against the administrator de bonis non, as conclusively establishing the debt against the estate, both as regards the administrator de bonis non and the previous executor; and Langborne is properly responsible for the assets he paid over to the legatees of William Dandridge to the prejudice of Gill Armstead's legatees who were creditors of the estate as ascertained and adjudged by the decrees hereinbefore referred to.

The Court is further of opinion, that as it appears said William Langborne, executor of William Dandridge, paid over to his legatees the assets, with full notice of said claim, and after the suit to assert and establish the same against the estate of his testator, had been duly revived against him; and as the decree establishing said claim is, under the circumstances aforesaid, conclusive as it respects him, in establishing the validity of the debt against his testator's estate, such payment constituted a devastavit, and the liability arising from such devastavit resting on him at his death, in equity and by virtue of the official bond, created a debt which his representative was bound to discharge before making distribution of his estate; to be credited, however, by the amount of assets he retained in his hands, and which were 292 afterwards paid over in invitum, by the *decree of the Chancery court to Bartholomew Dandridge, the administrator de bonis non.

The Court is further of opinion, that as the legatees of said Gill Armstead claimed by force of the same decrees ascertaining the rights of all, and having a common interest, are seeking satisfaction out of a common fund, it was proper to unite in one suit to get the benefit of the former decrees in their favour; and the bill filed is not liable to the objection of being multifarious.

The Court is further of opinion, that there is nothing to distinguish the case of E. A. Booth from that of the other claimants. She was a party in whose favour the decree of 1st of June 1816, was pronounced, which as to her right to recover, was substantially affirmed by the decree of the Court of appeals of the 11th of December 1821. And though by the decree of the 18th of July 1822, there was an omission to enter a decree in her favour in consequence of the suggestion of her intermarriage with — Booth, yet, by the principles of that decree, purporting to be entered in conformity with the decree of the Court of appeals, her right to recover, which was a joint and common one with the other legatees, was in effect established; and the decree for her proportion was merely suspended to bring in a formal party in whose name the same could be entered; and the suit never having abated as to her, and she having survived her husband, she stands in the same position with the other claimants, with a decree establishing their rights jointly, and entitled equally with them to carry it into effect.

And the Court is further of opinion, that as the decree of the 1st June 1816, was suspended by the appeal, and no definitive decree establishing the debt was rendered until the decree of the Chancery court of the 18th July 1822, was entered in conformity with the instructions contained in the decree of the Court of appeals of the 11th December 1821; and as the claimants

293 *had no right to proceed against the representatives of William Langborne for his devastavit until their debt was established against the estate of said William Dandridge, their bill filed in February 1826, against the representative of said Langborne and the representatives and legatees of said William Dandridge, to get the benefit of said decrees, and charge the estate of said Langborne for his devastavit, was not barred by any statute limiting actions against fiduciaries; nor was there any such delay as to require a Court of equity to refuse relief upon the ground of laches.

The Court is further of opinion, that as it appears that Burwell Bassett, the representative of William Langborne the elder and of William Langborne, jr., had passed over the assets of said estates before he had notice of the claim now in controversy, as he alleges in his answer, to the proper distributees and legatees of said Langbornes, it was proper to throw the burthen on the distributees and legatees instead of the personal representative; they having the fund out of which the claim should be satisfied, and which in any event, must be held as being ultimately subject to the claim sought to be enforced, unless the same can be otherwise satisfied.

The Court is further of opinion, that as it respects the security of Bartholomew Dandridge, administrator de bonis non, the cause of action arose against him from the rendition of the decree of the 18th July 1822; as it would have been competent for the claimants, upon the return of nulla bona on said decree, to have proceeded against said administrator de bonis non and his securities in his official bond for his devastavit; and no proceeding having been commenced against such securities until they were made defendants by the amended bill filed on the 14th May 1838, the act of March 8th, 1826, relied on 294 by the security Thomas H. *Terrill in his answer, barred a recovery against the securities.

The Court is further of opinion, that the statement XX referred to in the decree now appealed from, correctly ascertained the sums for which the representatives of B. Dandridge's estate, and the representatives of Langborne's estate were respectively responsible; that all exceptions inconsistent with said special statement XX were properly overruled, and all exceptions consistent therewith properly sustained; and said statement so confirmed and constituting a part of said decree, definitively ascertains the amount for which Bartholomew Dandridge's estate is liable, and for which a decree was properly rendered in favour of the claimants respectively, against Philemon Jones, committee and administrator of his estate; and the same also definitively ascertains the amount for which the estate of William Langborne is ultimately responsible and may be compelled to pay eventually unless otherwise discharged.

The Court is further of opinion, that as Mrs. B. Bassett was, under the will of William Langborne, jr., a legatee for life, and it appears that before any recovery she had departed this life, and the part held by her for life was passed over to those entitled in remainder, the surviving husband having no assets of his wife, could not be held responsible on account of such life estate which had previously terminated; and the assets of William Langborne which the claimants were entitled to follow had passed into the hands of those entitled thereto in remainder; and the decree subjecting said B. Bassett, on account of said life estate, to a portion of the amount for which the estate of Langborne was responsible was erroneous.

And the Court is further of opinion, that although as a general rule a creditor of an estate is not bound to look beyond the personal representative, who is immediately 295 *responsible to him, yet under peculiar circumstances it is proper that a Court of equity should throw the burthen upon those ultimately liable, and that more especially when by the acts and conduct of the creditor the party who might in strictness have been primarily liable, may have been misled and induced to believe he was not looked to as responsible. In this case it is manifest that the representatives of Langborne have received no part of William Dandridge's estate, the assets of which should properly have been applied to the payment of this claim. The same have all been duly accounted for and passed over by Langborne and his representative to the legatees and administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge. On the death of Langborne the claimants revived their suit against the administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, and dropped the representatives of Langborne from the cause; thus indicating an intention to look to and pursue the estate of William Dandridge. In the meantime the representative of Langborne turned over to the administrator de bonis non of William Dandridge, in obedience to a decree of Court, the assets of William Dandridge remaining in the hands of Langborne at his death; and thereafter without any notice, as he alleges in his answer, of the claim now sought to be enforced, he proceeded to distribute the estate of Langborne in the mode disclosed by the record. The claimants, by their bill of 1826, still looking to the estate of Dandridge for satisfaction, made the legatees and representative of that estate parties; and the Court having them before it, was bound in the exercise of a sound discretion under the circumstances aforesaid, to have required the claimants to proceed in the first place against the legatees of William Dandridge, holding Langborne's estate ultimately responsible for the sum so as aforesaid ascer-

296 tained to be a proper charge against it, or for so much thereof *as could not be made by proceeding against the legatees of William Dandridge; and it was error to dismiss the bill as against the representatives and legatees of William Dandridge, or any of them, and to decree against the representatives of Langborne until such effort had been made to procure satisfaction out of the assets of William Dandridge's estate in the hands of his representatives.

It is therefore ordered and decreed, that said decree in the particulars in which it is herein declared to be erroneous, be reversed with costs; and that the same, so far as it conforms to the principles above declared, and is not herein declared to be erroneous, be and the same is hereby affirmed. And the cause is remanded with instructions to require the plaintiffs in the Court below to revive, if necessary, against the legatees, and also the devisees, if so advised, of William Dandridge, and for all proper accounts, in order to a final decree according to the principles above declared, which is ordered to be certified.

his estate for the amount: It sufficiently appearing that said claim was controverted by said William Dandridge in his lifetime, who, according to the decree of the Court of appeals, was best acquainted with and laboriously attended to the taking of the accounts; and it furthermore appearing that after the death of said William Dandridge, the suit was regularly revived against Susanna Dorrington and David Dorrington her husband, the said Susanna having qualified as executrix of William Dandridge, and against John Bassett and William Langborne who were named as executors; that the said Dorrington and wife filed their answer making full defence, and that after the order of the County court of June 3d, 1805, treated by the Court of appeals by the decree of the 16th February 1836, as a 291 revocation of her authority *as executrix, the said William Langborne qualified as executor, and thereafter filed his answer controverting the justness of the claim; that exceptions were taken to the report of the commissioners, and the case matured for a decision on the merits during his lifetime. Under such a state of facts where the claim was controverted by the party sought to be charged in his lifetime, the suit revived against his executor who made a vigorous and full defence, and the case was ready for a decision on the merits when he died, and the cause was revived against the administrator de bonis non, against whom the decree was pronounced, there can be no hazard of injustice to the executor in treating the decree against the administrator de bonis non, as conclusively establishing the debt against the estate, both as regards the administrator de bonis non and the previous executor; and Langborne is properly responsible for the assets he paid over to the legatees of William Dandridge to the prejudice of Gill Armstead's legatees who were creditors of the estate as ascertained and adjudged by the decrees hereinbefore referred to.

The Court is further of opinion, that as it appears said William Langborne, executor of William Dandridge, paid over to his legatees the assets, with full notice of said claim, and after the suit to assert and establish the same against the estate of his testator, had been duly revived against him; and as the decree establishing said claim is, under the circumstances aforesaid, conclusive as it respects him, in establishing the validity of the debt against his testator's estate, such payment constituted a devastavit, and the liability arising from such devastavit resting on him at his death, in equity and by virtue of the official bond, created a debt which his representative was bound to discharge before making distribution of his estate; to be credited, however, by the amount of assets he retained in his hands, and which were afterwards paid over in invitum, by 292 the *decree of the Chancery court to Bartholomew Dandridge, the administrator de bonis non.

The Court is further of opinion, that as the legatees of said Gill Armstead claimed by force of the same decrees ascertaining the rights of all, and having a common interest, are seeking satisfaction out of a common fund, it was proper to unite in one suit to get the benefit of the former decrees in their favour; and the bill filed is not liable to the objection of being multifarious.

293 *had no right to proceed against the representatives of William Langborne for his devastavit until their debt was established against the estate of said William Dandridge, their bill filed in February 1826, against the representative of said Langborne and the representatives and legatees of said William Dandridge, to get the benefit of said decrees, and charge the estate of said Langborne for his devastavit, was not barred by any statute limiting actions against fiduciaries; nor was there any such delay as to require a Court of equity to refuse relief upon the ground of laches.

Bill to Enforce Judgment against Administrator, to Sell Land, Establish a Devastavit, Convene Heirs and Creditors, and Give Various Other Specified Relief.—A bill which seeks to enforce payment of a small judgment for costs against an administrator d. b. n. out of funds in his hands; to sell the real estate of the decedent to pay such judgment; to establish a devastavit against the administrator, and surcharge and falsify his accounts; to convene the heirs and creditors of said administrator, now deceased; to settle the accounts of his administrator, and sell his real estate; to convene the heirs, settle the accounts of the administrator, and distribute the estate of the third decedent; to convene the devisees, settle the accounts of the executor, and distribute the estate of a fourth decedent,—is multifarious and inequitable. Crickard v. Crouch, 41 W. Va. 503, 23 S. E. Rep. 727.

Bill to Establish a Trust, Recover Rents, Profits, and Purchase Money, and Assess Dower.—A bill to establish a trust in certain lands, and to recover rents and profits, and to assess dower, and to recover purchase money alleged to be due, is held in Bailey v. Calfee (W. Va. 1901), 30 S. E. Rep. 642, to be multifarious.

Asking Specific Performance, Damages for False Representations, for Receiver, and Other Specified Relief.—A bill is filed (1) against one defendant, for specific performance of a contract; (2) in default of this, to obtain a decree against other defendants, for damages for breach of warranty; (3) against some of the defendants last referred to, for damages for false representations in regard to the title; (4) against one of the defendants last referred to, for breach of his promises to save plaintiff harmless in case the defendant referred to in first clause refused specific performance; (5) for a receiver; (6) for a decree against one of the defendants for payment of his subscription to the stock of the defendant company; (7) to have the assets of the company administered for the benefit of its creditors. To say nothing of the demand for damages and for administration of the assets, as not constituting good grounds for a suit in equity, there remained several other demands against several other defendants which cannot be properly joined in the same suit. The bill is multifarious, and was rightly dismissed on demurrer. Wells v. Sewell's Point Guano Co., 89 Va. 708, 17 S. E. Rep. 2.

Bill against Grantor of One Heir, and Other Heirs, to Set Aside Deed, and Establish Resulting Trust as an Alternative.—And a chancery suit, brought by one heir of a decedent against the person to whom heirs of the decedent had voluntarily conveyed all his real estate, and the other heirs of the decedent, to set aside the deed as fraudulent and void because procured by undue influence, and because the grantor was non compos mentis, and, if this should not be proven, then to set up a resulting trust to a portion of this real estate, because the plaintiff had paid a certain amount of the purchase money when the land was conveyed to the decedent, is multifarious. Shaffer v. Fetty, 30 W. Va. 248, 4 S. E. Rep. 278.

Bill by Heirs—Settlement of Decedent's Partnership Affairs, Appointment of Receiver, Accounts, etc.—In Porter v. Robinson (Va.), 22 S. E. Rep. 843, a bill by heirs alleged their heirship; partnership of their decedent in a firm; sale of all the assets of the firm to a corporation in consideration that the vendee paid all the debts of the firm; completion of the sale by themselves, as heirs, and the surviving partners; sale by the vendee of the same property to a second corporation, in which the purchase price was partly secured by bonds, for the payment of which a vendor's lien was reserved, and subsequently cancelled by the president of the first corporation without authority; execution of a trust deed of all the property by the last vendee to secure a fraudulent issue of bonds; the assumption and nonpayment of the debts of the partnership by the first vendee; stock taken by plaintiffs in the second corporation on representations of the president of the first corporation, also a promoter of the second corporation that the lands would be sold to the latter company for $300,000, whereas they were sold at $330,000. The bill asked for the appointment of a receiver, and settlement of the accounts of the partnership; cancellation of the stock taken in the second corporation; a decree against it and its promoters for the full value of the stock, and against the president of the first corporation for the $30,000 profits made by him for the sale of the land; for the restoration of the vendor's lien, and the cancellation of the trust deed. It was held, that the bill was multifarious.

PARTIES NOT CONNECTED IN INTEREST.

Charges against Officers of Company, Individual Officers, Groups of Officers, and President and Directors.—A bill which charges various acts of maladministration against the officers of a company, some of which are attributable to individual officers, some to different groups of officers, and some to the president and directors as a whole, would seem to present a combination of causes of action so hopelessly diverse as to be incapable of adjustment in one suit. Brown v. Bedford City L. & I. Co., 91 Va. 31, 20 S. E. Rep. 968.

II. FORMS OF MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

1. IN GENERAL.—Multifariousness may appear in two general forms. It may be a joinder of claims of such different characters, that the court will not permit them to be litigated in one record; or it may be where a party is brought as a defendant upon a record, with a large portion of which and of the case made by which he has no connection whatever. Brown v. Buckner, 86 Va. 612, 10 S. E. Rep. 882; Washington City Sav. Bank v. Thornton, 83 Va. 157, 2 S. E. Rep. 193; Oney v. Ferguson, 41 W. Va. 563, 23 S. E. Rep. 710.

2. AS TO MATTER.—Thus, where debts are assigned to a party who sues for an accounting between the assignor and his several debtors, plea by and of the latter, that the former had made other and conflicting assignments of the same debts, is bad for multifariousness and uncertainty. Porter v. Young, 85 Va. 49, 6 S. E. Rep. 803.

But it is not multifarious for a bill to seek to subject a judgment debtor's interest in lands, chattels, etc., to the payment of plaintiff's debt. Thomas v. Sellman, 87 Va. 683, 18 S. E. Rep. 146. For illustrations, see cases throughout this note.

3. AS TO PARTIES.—In Carey v. Coffee Stemming Mach. Co., 1 Va. Dec. 863, 20 S. E. Rep. 778, it is held that a bill by a number of stockholders against a corporation, alleging fraud in obtaining subscriptions, etc., is not multifarious because each complaint sets forth a different claim. See Hutchison v. Mershon, 89 Va. 624, 16 S. E. Rep. 874; Rader v. Bristol Land Co., 94 Va. 766, 27 S. E. Rep. 590.

III. TERMINOLOGY.

The word "multifariousness" is more generally applied to chancery proceedings, although it is sometimes used as applicable to actions at law. Thus, in Va. F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Saunders, 86 Va. 909, 11 S. E. Rep. 794, the term is used in an action at law in discussing the rule against duplicity.

The word most applicable to actions at law is "misjoinder," though this word is also used to designate an error of form in equitable proceedings. Thus, the court in Brown v. Buckner, 86 Va. 615, 10 S. E. Rep. 882, in the course of its opinion remarks, that, "Although the books speak generally of demurrers for multifariousness, such demurrers may be divided into two kinds. (1) The objection raised to a bill, which though termed 'multifariousness,' is, in fact, properly speaking, a misjoinder of causes of suit; that is to say, the cases or claims asserted in the bill are of so different a character that the court will not permit them to be litigated in one record. Story, Eq. Pl. sec. 271, 284. It may be that the plaintiffs and the defendants are parties to the whole transactions which form the subject of the suit, but nevertheless those transactions may be so dissimilar that the court will not permit them to be joined together, but will require distinct records. (2) But what is more familiarly understood by 'multifariousness,' as applied to a bill, is where a party is brought as a defendant upon a record, with a large portion of which, and of the case made by which, he has no connection whatsoever. * * * And the objection for misjoinder does not apply when all the parties plaintiff have an interest in the suit, although it is not a coextensive interest."

IV. REASON FOR RULE.

Convenience—Expense.—Generally, it is held that the reason for the rule which governs a court in sustaining or overruling a demurrer, which sets out multifariousness as an objection, is the question of convenience to all parties concerned.

In Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353, 7 S. E. Rep. 335, the court says: "The cases upon the subject are extremely various, and the court in deciding them, seems to have considered what was convenient under the particular circumstances, rather than to have laid down any absolute rule." After setting forth some of the cardinal rules for testing whether in a particular case multifariousness exists, it seems that the reason assigned why in a given instance it would be multifarious, is, that it would render the proceedings oppressive because it would tend to load each defendant with an unnecessary burden of costs; thus, giving an additional reason for objection to the fault.

Discussing the question in County School Board v. Parish, 92 Va. 156, 23 S. E. Rep. 221, it was held that a bill would not be declared multifarious if it proposed to accomplish the end in view in a manner and by a proceeding convenient to all concerned, unless the course so pursued was so injurious to one or more of the parties as to render it inequitable to accomplish the general convenience in that manner. See Stande v. Keck, 92 Va. 544, 24 S. E. Rep. 227; Dillard v. Dillard, 97 Va. 484, 34 S. E. Rep. 60.

V. APPLIES TO WHAT PLEADINGS.

Bill—Answer—Plea.—The fault of multifariousness may exist either in the bill, answer or plea. If the plea contains distinct points it will be bad. Thus, a plea is bad for multifariousness that sets up the statute of limitations, and also alleges that the plaintiff who sued as the personal representative of a decedent was not such representative. See Barrett v. McAllister, 85 W. Va. 103, 12 S. E. Rep. 1106; Miller v. Miller, 93 Va. 196, 23 S. E. Rep. 232; Porter v. Young, 85 Va. 49, 6 S. E. Rep. 808. As to the bill, see cases cited throughout the note.

VI. MULTIFARIOUSNESS AS DETERMINED BY PRAYER FOR RELIEF.

1. IN GENERAL.—It is said by the court in Washington, etc., Bk. v. Thornton, 83 Va. 157, 2 S. E. Rep. 193, that "whether or not a bill is multifarious depends, it is said, upon its allegations, and not upon its prayer." See Nunnally v. Strauss, 94 Va. 255, 26 S. E. Rep. 580.

2. ALTERNATIVE PRAYER.—A bill is not necessarily bad by reason of multifariousness because it contains an alternative prayer for relief. But in order, to avoid the fault they should, in general, be consistent. Still a bill in chancery is not multifarious, and therefore demurrable, simply because it contains a prayer for alternate relief, inconsistent with its prayer for specific relief. Korne v. Korne, 80 W. Va. 1, 8 S. E. Rep. 17. See Garrison v. Hall, 75 Va. 150; Carskadon v. Minke, 26 W. Va. 729.

And where the principal object of the bill is to have the profits of a lease collected and applied to pay certain decrees against complainant and insolvent defendant, a prayer that accounts be taken to ascertain the right of the parties under the lease, and the profits applied to pay the decrees and the balance according to the rights of the parties, does not make the bill multifarious, but the decree creditors should be made parties. Yates v. Law, 86 Va. 117, 9 S. E. Rep. 508.

Also, it is permissible for a bill to be framed in a double aspect, but the alternative case stated must be the foundation for precisely the same relief. Thus, stockholders who come into a court of equity and seek to have their contracts of subscription rescinded on the ground that they were fraudulently obtained, cannot in the same bill complain of the malfeasance and misfeasance of the corporate directors in the management of the corporate property, and seek relief which rests upon their relation as stockholders of the defendant company. Such relief must be considered a distinct act of affirmance and ratification of the very transaction which they, in another part of their bill, sought to repudiate. Brown v. Bedford City L. & I. Co., 91 Va. 31, 20 S. E. Rep. 968.

3. IMPOSSIBLE OR IMPROPER RELIEF ASKED.—Moreover, a bill is not rendered multifarious because it contains averments and prays relief respecting them which could not in any event be granted.

Thus, in Snaveley v. Harkrader, 29 Gratt. 112, infants by their next friend filed their bill against their guardian, first to surcharge and falsify the settled account of their guardian, and to have him removed; and second, to have a sale of their lands. The guardian demurred to the bill on the ground that it was multifarious. It was held that as the court could not sell the infants' land on a bill filed by them, and no relief on that part of the bill could be given, the court would consider the case as if that part of the bill was not in it; and the demurrer was properly overruled.

VII. AT WHAT STAGE OBJECTION RAISED.

In Answer.—In Virginia the demurrer may be embodied in the answer. Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291.

On Motion to Dissolve Injunction.—But if a bill, which is in part a bill of injunction, be multifarious, that objection cannot be made on a motion to dissolve the injunction. It must be made at the final hearing. Shirley v. Long, 6 Rand. 764; Beall v. Shaul, 18 W. Va. 268.

VIII. METHOD OF RAISING OBJECTION.

Demurrer.—In Virginia and West Virginia the objection that pleadings in chancery are multifarious is usually raised by demurrer. Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291; Wells v. Sewell's, etc., Co., 89 Va. 708, 17 S. E. Rep. 2.

And a demurrer in the form prescribed by the statute, and assigning no grounds, inserted in the answer, is sufficient. Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291; Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 468; Cook v. Dorsey, 88 W. Va. 196, 18 S. E. Rep. 468.

And the demurrer may not only be general but, as stated above, may be embodied in the answer. Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291.

IX. BY WHOM RAISED.

Party Prejudiced or Court Sua Sponte.—It is well settled, that the defence of multifariousness may be made by demurrer by the party prejudiced, or by the court at the hearing sua sponte. But where a defendant is liable for each one of the amounts decreed in a suit, he cannot object on the ground of multifariousness. Wells v. Sewell's, etc., Co., 89 Va. 711, 17 S. E. Rep. 2; Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. 291.

X. WAIVER.

Though a bill be multifarious, and but vaguely state the matter on which relief is sought, consent by the parties, to an interlocutory decree that the cause be referred to a commissioner, to audit, state and settle an account of the amount due each of the plaintiffs, is a waiver of any objection to such irregularity; and a demurrer thereafter, for such cause, should be disallowed. Rittenhouse v. Harman, 7 W. Va. 380.

XI. EFFECT AND REMEDY.

1. IN GENERAL.—It is difficult to apply the rule against multifariousness in practice. The instances are numerous and inharmonious. A suit is not thrown out of court for this fault except in a plain case. Oney v. Ferguson, 41 W. Va. 568, 23 S. E. Rep. 710. An amendment may be allowed. See Shaffer v. Fetty, 30 W. Va. 248, 4 S. E. Rep. 278.

2. AMENDMENT.—But in West Virginia an amendment is not allowed as a matter of course. Shaffer v. Fetty, 30 W. Va. 248, 4 S. E. Rep. 278.

3. DISMISSAL.—When there is a dismissal it should as a rule, be without prejudice. Shaffer v. Fetty, 30 W. Va. 248, 4 S. E. Rep. 278.

297 *Shiflett &c. v. The Orange Humane Society.

January Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and BROOKE, J.)

Action on Bond—Plea of Failure of Consideration—When Inadmissible under Statute of Equitable Defences.*—In an action on a bond given for the purchase money of land, the act of 1831 does not authorize a plea of failure of consideration upon equitable grounds which would require a rescission of the contract out of which the bond originated, and a reinvestment of the obligee with the interest in the land alleged to have been sold to the obligor.

*The proposition laid down in the principal case is

This was an action of debt brought in 1845 in the Circuit court of Albemarle county, by the Orange Humane Society, a chartered institution, against Isaac Shiflett and George Martin, upon a bond executed by the latter to the former on the 29th of March 1839, in the penalty of 2077 dollars 18 cents, with condition to pay the sum of 1038 dollars 89 cents.

The defendants appeared and pleaded payment, on which issue was joined. They also offered a special plea under the act of 1831. This plea was very informal, but in substance it stated, That in 1787 one Monroe of the county of Orange bequeathed his estate, real and personal, for the purpose of educating poor children. That William Bell, his executor, sold the estate, and that Richard Bruce, of Albemarle county, purchased to the amount of somewhat upwards of £100. Virginia currency. That in 1789 Bruce executed a deed of trust to secure this sum upon two tracts of land, one of three hundred, and the other of two hundred, acres. That the tract of three hundred acres was sold under this deed for £50., and purchased by Watson, who paid the amount, principal and interest, to *Bell prior to 1797; and he and those claiming under him, had ever since held the land. That one moiety of the two hundred acre tract was held by Nelson Barksdale by a prior and better title; and of the remainder the defendant Shiflett was in possession of fifty acres as one of the heirs at law of Bruce. And that Bruce had before his death satisfied the trust in full as to this tract of two hundred acres.

They further stated that the Orange Humane Society had succeeded to the rights and liabilities of William Bell as executor of Monroe. That in 1839 this society advertised that they would close the deed of 1789 (Bruce's deed of trust), by a sale at Orange courthouse on the 25th of March 1839. That the defendant Shiflett attended the sale with the sole view of saving his land; and was induced by the opinions and representations of the president and directors of the society to bind himself to pay off their claim under the old trust. That at the sale on the 25th of March 1839, the two tracts of land were sold, and were purchased by the defendant Shiflett, for the sum of 1038 dollars 58 cents; being the amount of the principal and interest due under the deed of 1789, without any credits whatever, for which he had executed his bond with the defendant Martin as his surety. That the defendant Shiflett had then no conception of the true nature of the case: and that the defendants were totally and wholly deceived by the said Orange Humane Society, and especially by Reynolds Chapman and James Barbour, members thereof, in whom the defendants had the most implicit confidence; and who must have been themselves deceived as to the nature of the claim. And that defendants believe that it was known to some of the members of said society when the sale was made, that a large portion or the whole of the debt had been paid. They therefore say that there has been a total failure of the consideration of the said writing obligatory, &c.

299 *The Court rejected the plea and the defendants excepted: And they then withdrew the plea of payment, and there was a judgment for the plaintiff. Whereupon the defendants applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellants.
Patton, for the appellee.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that if the plaintiff in error was entitled to any relief on account of the matters averred in his plea, such relief could only be afforded in a Court of equity, where upon a rescission of the contract the defendant in error could be reinvested with the interest alleged to have been sold to the plaintiff in error: It was, therefore, not competent to set up such matter in defence to the action at law brought to recover the purchase money agreed to be paid on such a contract touching the realty, by a plea under the statute in the nature of a plea of set-off; and the rejection of the plea does not preclude the party from applying to a Court of equity for such relief as he may shew himself entitled to on account of the matters alleged in the plea. It therefore seems to the Court here, that there is no error in the judgment of the Circuit court rejecting the plea. It is therefore considered that the same be affirmed, with costs.

300 Snead v. Coleman & Wife.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

1. Executors and Administrators—Judgments†—Case at Bar—Quære.—S the executor of C executes a note to M for a debt of his testator, which he signs S ex'or of C. On this note M brings an action against S and declares against him as executor of C; but the count is in the debit and debit, and the breach is laid in his failure to pay. Upon a judgment by default; QUÆRE, If it should be against S as executor or de bonis propriis.

2. Pleading and Practice—Clerical Errors—How Amended.†—If it is error to enter a judgment de bonis propriis, it is a clerical error to be amended upon motion to the Court; and is not a ground for an appeal.

This was an action of debt in the Circuit court of Henrico county, by Hawes Coleman and Mary G. his wife against Jesse Snead. The language of the writ was, "We command you that you take Jesse Snead executor of John G. Crouch deceased," &c. And the endorsement on the writ was, "An action of debt on a promissory note, and no bail required."

The declaration was in the name of Hawes Coleman and Mary G. his wife, who before her intermarriage with said Coleman, was Mary G. Crouch, and complained of Jesse Snead as executor of John G. Crouch deceased, defendant, in custody, &c., of a plea that the said defendant render to the said plaintiffs the sum of 617 dollars 16 cents with interest thereon from the 1st day of January 1840, till paid, which to the said plaintiffs he owes, and from them unjustly detains. For this, that the said defendant heretofore, &c., made his certain promissory note, his name being thereto subscribed with his own proper hand, by the name and style of Jesse Snead executor of John G. Crouch deceased, which, 301 &c., whereby *the said defendant on, &c., promised as executor of John G. Crouch deceased, to pay, &c. Wherefore and by force, &c., right of action hath accrued to the said plaintiffs to demand and have of the said defendant the said sum, &c.

The action was founded on a note, of which the following is a copy:

"$617 16. On demand, with interest from the 1st day of January 1840, I promise, as ex'or of John G. Crouch, to pay to Mary G. Crouch six hundred and seventeen dollars and sixteen cents, being a balance due her on settlement of her claims against Thomas, Richard and John G. Crouch, which she held jointly against them, and is now surrendered on each paying to her their proportions. Witness my hand this 22d day of January 1840.

Jesse Snead,
ex'or of John G. Crouch dec'd."

Snead did not enter his appearance to the action, so that there was a judgment by default; and the clerk in entering up the judgment entered it against him personally, and not as executor of Crouch. Whereupon Snead applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was allowed.

The Attorney General and Cabell, for the appellant, insisted, 1st. That the action was against Snead as executor, and therefore that it was error to enter a judgment against him personally. Eppes v. Dudley, 5 Rand. 437.

†Amendment of Record.—See principal case cited in foot-note to Price v. Com., 33 Gratt. 819.

2d. That the note was executed by Snead as executor, and that the action should have been against him in that character. 2 Lomax Ex'ors 272; Dawse v. Coxe, 11 Eng. C. L. R. 12; Ashby v. Ashby, 14 Eng. C. L. R. 77; S. C. 17 Id. 235; Powell v. Graham's ex'or, 2 Eng. C. L. R. 223; Kayser v. Disher, 9 Leigh 357.

302 *3d. That the declaration did not set out a consideration which would sustain a personal judgment. Rann v. Hughes, 7 T. R. 350, in note; Taliaferro v. Robb, 2 Call 258.

John Thompson, jr., for the appellees, submitted the case.

MONCURE, J. The appellant complains that the judgment of the Court below was erroneously entered against him in his own right; instead of being entered against him as executor of John G. Crouch. I think the judgment was rightly entered, de bonis propriis. An executor may bind himself personally to pay the debt of his testator. But to make him liable the common law requires that the promise shall be on sufficient consideration; and the statute requires that it shall be in writing. The promise in this case is in writing, and the requisition of the statute is therefore satisfied. Was there a sufficient consideration to support the promise, according to the requisition of the common law? Under our statute an action of debt may be brought upon a note in writing; and in such action it need not be averred or proved that there was any consideration for the note. Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh 195. The note itself imports consideration, as does a bond; the only difference being, that in the case of a bond the consideration cannot be enquired into, but in the case of a note it may. The defendant in this case, therefore, might have defended himself on the ground of want of consideration; and, if he had sustained such a defence by proof, would have defeated the action. Having made no such defence, the judgment was rightly rendered against him for the amount of the note. Assets in the hands of the executor, constitute a sufficient consideration for a promise by him to pay the debt of his testator. So 303 does forbearance to sue, &c. In an *action against an executor personally on a promissory note given by him for a debt of his testator, the defendant may shew an insufficiency of assets to pay the debt; and if the plaintiff cannot shew that there was other sufficient consideration for the promise, he must fail in his action: In this way the defendant can sustain no injury. If there be any other consideration for the promise than a sufficiency of assets, then it is consistent alike with justice and the intention of the parties that the executor should be personally liable for the debt. If the consideration depends upon the sufficiency of assets, the executor has the same defence in an action against him personally as he would have in an action against him as executor.

In this case, there is not only a promise in writing by the executor; which in an action of debt upon it imports a sufficient consideration; and there is not only an absence of any evidence of want of consideration, which is necessary to defeat such an action on such a promise; but the note itself furnishes express evidence of sufficient consideration. It furnishes evidence of a sufficiency of assets. It contains a promise to pay "on demand." In the language of Dallas, C. J., in Childs v. Monins, &c., 6 Eng. C. L. R. 201, suppose a demand had been made immediately; does not the executor by subjecting himself to such a demand admit he has assets to satisfy it. If he meant to limit his liability why did he not add to the words as executor, the words out of the estate of John G. Crouch? It also furnishes evidence of forbearance. It contains a promise to pay interest on the debt; which in the language of the same Judge in the same case, "necessarily imports a payment at a future day; and an executor promising to pay a debt at a future day makes the debt his own." The case thus far is parallel with that of Childs v. Monins just referred to; in which it was 304 unanimously decided by the Court of common pleas *that "a promissory note by which the makers as executors jointly and severally promise to pay on demand, with interest, renders them personally liable." But the note in this case furnishes affirmative evidence of other consideration, which was not furnished by the note in that; and which renders it more reasonable that the executor should be personally liable. It shews that the plaintiff having a joint claim against Thomas, Richard and John G. Crouch, "surrendered it on each paying to her his proper proportion." Instead of payment in money of the proper proportion of John G. Crouch, his executor, the defendant, executed the promissory note in question, promising to pay it on demand, with interest. The joint claim against the three debtors was thus extinguished. The original obligation of the testator for the whole claim was discharged; and in lieu thereof a new security was taken from the executor for the payment of his testator's proportion on demand, with interest. Was not this surrender of the original claim, this extinguishment of a joint debt of three, a sufficient consideration for a promise by the executor of one of them to pay one third of the amount of the debt? The original debt may have been a debt of higher dignity against the testator's estate than the note would be. It may have been due by judgment or bond. At all events it was a joint debt of three. Would the plaintiff have surrendered such a debt without being assured of the certain payment of the different proportions of the parties? Would she have taken a security for the proportion of one of them which might embarrass her with a future enquiry as to the sufficiency of assets? Her subsequent conduct proves that she reposed with confidence on the promise of the defendant to pay his testator's proportion with interest, on demand. She waited more than four years before she made the demand. Would she have so waived if the demand had been against a decedent's estate?

305 In the language *of the same Judge whose language I have before quoted, "if executors were not liable on such a promise, they would be enabled by making such a promise to defraud any individual among their testator's creditors." The case of Childs v. Monins was cited with approbation by Chief Justice Sharkey in delivering the opinion of the Court in Sims v. Stilwell, 3 How. Miss. R. 176. See also Bradly v. Heath, 3 Simons 543, 5 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 241; Bank of Troy v. Topping, 9 Wend. R. 273.

The note in this case being a good cause of action against the executor personally, the declaration is sufficient to charge him personally, though it complains of him "as executor," and charges the promise to have been made by him as such. "Where the nature of the debt is such as necessarily to make the defendant liable personally, the judgment will be de bonis propriis, although he be charged as promising as executor." 2 Wms. on Ex'ors 1096. The naming the defendant executor in the declaration in such case is surplusage. Id. 1101. In this case not only is the nature of the debt such as to charge the executor personally, but it would seem from the declaration that it was intended thereby so to charge him. The words "as executor of John G. Crouch," seem to have been used therein as matter of description. The declaration is in the debet and detinet. And the breach is charged against the "defendant," without any addition to that term.

But suppose the judgment ought to have been de bonis testatoris, would it be proper to reverse the judgment on that account? I think not. The judgment in the case was an office judgment, which not having been set aside, became, by operation of law, a judgment of the succeeding term. In such a case the only entries usually made after the declaration is filed and before the execution issues, are two short entries in the rule book, one in the words "common 306 order," and the *other, "common order confirmed." These entries are identical, whether the suit be against the defendant in his own right, or en autre droit. The execution is issued upon the judgment as if it had been rightly entered in full. The clerk afterwards at his leisure enters a formal judgment in the case in a book kept for the purpose. The error, if any, in running out these short entries into form when the record is made up, is nothing but a clerical error, the correction of which belongs to the Court whose officer committed it. The remedy is by motion to that Court, and not by appeal to this. Eubank v. Rall's ex'or, 4 Leigh 308; Shelton's ex'ors v. Welsh's adm'rs, 7 Leigh 175; Digges' ex'or v. Dunn's ex'or, 1 Munf. 56. I am for affirming the judgment.

DANIEL, J., concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J.

BALDWIN, J., thought the judgment of the Circuit court ought to have been de bonis testatoris; but that the error was a clerical misprision which should have been corrected in the Court below; and therefore that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

ALLEN, J., concurred with Judge Baldwin in the opinion that the judgment should have been de bonis testatoris; and that the error was a clerical misprision which might have been corrected in the Court below; but thought that as the case was in this Court it might be corrected here.

I. OF EQUITY PLEADINGS.

A. IN GENERAL.—No invariable rule can be laid down with reference to the amendments of equity pleadings. Their allowance rests largely in the discretion of the court, to be determined by the special circumstances of the case. On application to amend, justice should not be sacrificed to form or too rigid an adherence to rules of practice. Great caution should be exercised, however, when the application has been long delayed, or when the granting it would cause serious inconvenience or expense to the opposite side; and an amendment should rarely, if ever, be permitted where it would materially change the very substance of the case made by the bill, and to which the parties have directed their proofs. Glenn v. Brown, 99 Va. 322, 38 S. E. Rep. 189; Alsop v. Catlett, 97 Va. 364, 34 S. E. Rep. 48.

Discretion of Court.—"The whole matter of amendments rests in the sound discretion of the court. In general, however, the indulgence is confined to cases of mere mistake or surprise; and a distinction is also made between the allowance of an amendment as to a matter of fact, and as to a conclusion in law, an amendment as to the latter being much more freely allowed." 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) p. 1443; Vashon v. Barrett, 99 Va. 344, 38 S. E. Rep. 200.

Compared with English Practice.—The practice in this country in allowing amendments is said to be much more liberal than in England. Belton v. Apperson, 26 Gratt. 207.

Verified Pleadings.—Where pleadings are verified by the oath of the party, the court will not easily suffer an amendment. Matthews v. Dunbar, 3 W. Va. 188.

Effect of Statute Dispensing with Affidavit.—But as Code of W. Va., ch. 125, sec. 38, does not require the defendant to verify his answer by affidavit, it is obvious that one of the principal reasons for the courts being so reluctant to permit answers to be changed or amended, has been removed, and no doubt answers may be amended or changed with the leave of the court, now, under circumstances wherein they could not be formerly so amended or changed. Depue v. Sergeant, 21 W. Va. 326.

Effect of Laches.—Moreover, a defendant should be permitted to amend his pleadings, or add to his pleas whenever justice requires it, provided unreasonable delay be not thereby occasioned, or good reason be shown for not having done so sooner. But he will not be permitted so to do where he has had ample opportunity for earlier action, and has, without sufficient excuse, delayed until trial is at hand. Keckley v. Bank, 79 Va. 458; Perkins v. Hawkins, 9 Gratt. 653.

1. OF BILLS.—See monographic note on "Amended Bills" appended to Belton v. Apperson, 26 Gratt. 207.

2. OF PLEAS.—Where an improper plea is filed by an attorney through inadvertence, and for want of information, it may be amended, after a trial and verdict for the plaintiff. Richardson v. Johnson, 2 Call 528.

Amendment by Personal Representative.—And a personal representative may, on motion, without an affidavit, amend his plea by pleading plene administravit at any time before the trial of a suit against him, provided the court is satisfied that the motion is not made merely for the sake of delay. Chisholm v. Anthony, 1 H. & M. 27.

3. OF REPLICATIONS.—Where, in an action of detinue, the replication to the defendant's plea of the statute of limitations is insufficient, but the declaration contains the averments for lack of which the replication is defective, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his replication. Morris v. Lyon, 1 Va. Dec. 615, 2 S. E. Rep. 515.

Terms.—But the declaration being in the name of two plaintiffs, if the replication purport to be in behalf of one only, it is a departure in pleading; and on demurrer, judgment ought to be entered for the defendant, unless the plaintiffs move the court to amend their replication, which in that case should be allowed, on their paying costs. Graham v. Graham, 4 Munf. 205.

Withdrawal of Joinder in Demurrer.—An attorney for the commonwealth, who has joined in the defendant's demurrer to his replication, it being defective in mere form, may have leave, before judgment is entered on the demurrer, to withdraw his joinder in demurrer and amend his replication. Com. v. Jackson, 3 Va. Cas. 501.

4. OF ANSWERS.

a. In General.—The cases are exceptional where amended or supplemental answers are allowed. In small matters, however, the defendant may amend, but not in a material one, unless upon evidence to the court of surprise. The most common case of amending an answer is, where, through inadvertence, the defendant has mistaken a fact, or a date; then the court will give leave to amend to prevent the defendant from being prosecuted for perjury. In general, however, this indulgence is confined to cases of mere mistake or surprise in the answer. Elder v. Harris, 76 Va. 187.

The following general rules were established by the court in Liggon v. Smith, 4 H. & M. 407, for the amending of answers in chancery:

1. To allow a defendant to amend his answer must, from the nature of the case, be always at the discretion of the court.

2. It may be done in a small matter, on motion, at any time before issue joined.

3. But, in a material point, the motion must be made upon an affidavit of the facts, which make it necessary; and after reasonable notice thereof to the plaintiff or his counsel, that the court may take care that no injury be produced to the other party. And, the affidavit ought to state, that, at the time of putting in the answer, the defendant did not know the circumstances upon which he makes the application, or any other circumstances upon which he ought to have stated the fact otherwise.

But the provision of the statute (Va. Code 1873, ch. 167, sec. 35), allowing a defendant to file his answer at any time before final decree, has no reference to an amended or supplemental answer. Elder v. Harris, 76 Va. 187.

Answer in Nature of a Cross Bill.—Where an amended answer is filed by a defendant in the nature of a cross bill, praying affirmative relief, such amended answer should be confined to the matters contained in the original bill and answer, and should not introduce new and different matters not embraced therein. Radcliff v. Corrothers, 33 W. Va. 682, 11 S. E. Rep. 228.

Setting Up Statute of Frauds and Limitations.—After issue joined, and the cause set for hearing, the defendant in chancery may be permitted, for good cause shown, to amend his answer, and to plead the statute of frauds and limitations. Jackson v. Cutright, 5 Munf. 308. See Henderson v. Hudson, 1 Munf. 514, opinion of TUCKER, J., in which he says: "In an amended answer, which he was permitted to file, he insists upon the benefit of the statute of frauds and perjuries." This shows that the amendment was permitted, though not at what stage of the cause.

In White v. Turner, 2 Gratt. 502, a defendant in equity was allowed to amend his answer for the purpose of setting up the statute of limitations in bar of the plaintiff's claims.

Irrelevant and Immaterial Matter.—But an amended answer, presenting as new matter, only matter immaterial and irrelevant, ought to be rejected. McKay v. McKay, 33 W. Va. 724, 11 S. E. Rep. 218; Union Bank of Richmond v. Richmond, 94 Va. 316, 23 S. E. Rep. 831; Tracewell v. Boggs, 14 W. Va. 254.

Substituting New Answer.—Where a defendant has filed an answer to the bill, which has been replied to, and the cause comes on for hearing, the defendant will not be permitted to withdraw his answer for the purpose of substituting another, on the ground that he had forgotten to present a material matter of defence in his first answer; but he may be permitted to amend his answer setting up such new matter, but in no wise to delay the hearing of the cause. Tracewell v. Boggs, 14 W. Va. 254; Wyatt v. Thompson, 10 W. Va. 645.

b. Grounds.

Surprise, Ill Advice—Inadvertency.—There are no certain rules, however, for the amendment of answers; but they are in the discretion of the courts; the admission of a fact is never suffered to be struck out, but on affidavit of surprise, or the defendant being ill-advised. But, where an amendment is admitted in the bill, where through inadvertency, a mistake is made as to a fact or date, where there is no danger of perjury, where the case depends upon old documents, etc., the courts have allowed amendments to be made, either by striking out passages, or making new facts, and this after issue joined, or upon the hearing of a cause. Jackson v. Cutright, 5 Munf. 312.

Negligence.—But an amended answer should not be allowed, raising new issues, where it appears that the party knew the facts when he filed his first answer, and is thus guilty of negligence. Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 46 W. Va. 426, 33 S. E. Rep. 266, citing Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. Rep. 1006.

Before a court of equity should allow an amended answer to be filed, it should be satisfied that the reasons assigned for it are cogent and satisfactory; that the mistakes to be corrected or facts to be added are made highly probable if not certain; that they are material to the merits of the case in controversy; that the party has not been guilty of gross negligence, and that the mistakes have been ascertained, and the new facts have come to the knowledge of the party since the original answer was filed. Matthews v. Dunbar, 8 W. Va. 138; Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. Rep. 1006. See also, Sturm v. Fleming, 26 W. Va. 59.

Infants.—An answer, filed by an infant, may be amended on motion, when he attains his age. Campbell v. Winston, 4 H. & M. 477.

c. Rule When Answers Were under Oath.—When an answer was always sworn to and when it not only served the purpose of pleading, but was also regarded as evidence, the general rule was that an answer would not be permitted to be amended after the evidence had been taken, because to permit that would allow the defendant to change his evidence to suit the exigencies of the case, which would be unjust to the plaintiff and would tend to the encouragement of perjury. But even then, an answer was sometimes allowed to be amended, or supplemented, or to be withdrawn, and a new answer filed, when the amendment was in some small matter not material, unless the defendant by evidence showed to the court, that he had been surprised. As for instance, where a mistake was made in a date from inadvertency. But in general, very cogent circumstances had to appear before a court would permit an answer to be changed though even then where it was manifest that the purposes of substantial justice required it, the court in its discretion might permit an answer to be changed; but when the new facts sought to be let in by the answer were wholly dependent on parol testimony, the reluctance of the court to permit the answer to be changed was greatly increased. Depue v. Sergeant, 31 W. Va. 343.

In Furtherance of Justice.—But the court ought not to permit answers to be changed or amended at the option of the defendant, but should only permit it when substantial justice requires that it should be done. Depue v. Sergeant, 31 W. Va. 336.

Improperly Refusing Amendment.—Though if the inferior court refuse leave to a party to amend his pleadings where it should be allowed, the appellate court will reverse for that, as error. Cooke v. Beale, 1 Wash. 313.

d. At and after Hearing.—Upon the hearing of a cause, the court may grant the same indulgence to a defendant as it would to a plaintiff. If it has appeared, that the defendant has not put in issue facts, which he ought to have put in, and which must necessarily be in issue to enable the court to determine the merits of the case, he will be allowed to amend his answer for the purpose of stating these facts. But the courts have been always very cautious in permitting such amendments at the hearing. Depue v. Sergeant, 31 W. Va. 336.

II. OF PLEADINGS AND PROCEEDINGS AT COMMON LAW.

A. DEMURRER TO DECLARATION.—In Virginia and West Virginia, the usual course, where the opinion of the court is in favor of the defendant on a demurrer to the whole declaration, is to allow the plaintiff to withdraw his joinder in the demurrer, and amend his declaration, if the ground upon which the demurrer is sustained be of such a nature as can be removed by an amendment. And there is no difference as to the doctrine of amending at common law, between penal, and other actions. Hart v. B. & O. R. Co., 6 W. Va. 336.

Amendments Favored.—Statutes allowing amendments are favored, and although resting in the sound discretion of the court, the authorities without exception it is said, declare that such statutes are remedial and must be construed liberally. Langhorne v. Richmond City R. Co., 91 Va. 364, 23 S. E. Rep. 357, citing with approval 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 516-517.

B. INTRODUCING NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.—After the appearance of the defendant the court should be liberal in allowing such amendments to the declaration, as tend to promote the fair trial and determination of the subject-matter of controversy, upon which the action was originally based, but no amendment should be allowed against the protest of the defendant, which introduces into the case a new substantive cause of action different from that declared upon, and different from that which the party intended to declare upon when he brought his action, though the amendment be such, as would, in another count have been properly inserted in the original declaration and the new cause of action was such, as could, if the plaintiff had so chosen, been united in the same suit with the original cause of action actually sued upon. Snyder v. Harper, 24 W. Va. 206; Kuhn v. Brownfield, 34 W. Va. 252, 12 S. E. Rep. 519; Clarke v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 732, 20 S. E. Rep. 696.

Inconsistent Amendments—Amendments are not to be allowed which are inconsistent with the nature of the pleadings or change the cause of action. Allegations may be changed and others added, provided the identity of the cause of action is preserved. Kuhn v. Brownfield, 34 W. Va. 252, 12 S. E. Rep. 519; Clarke v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 732, 20 S. E. Rep. 696.

C. MISDESCRIPTION.

1. EXPRESS AND IMPLIED CONTRACT.—In an action against a physician for malpractice, alleging breach of an express contract, an amendment may be made setting forth the breach of an implied contract. Kuhn v. Brownfield, 34 W. Va. 252, 12 S. E. Rep. 519.

2. IDENTITY OF TWO CORPORATIONS.—If one corporation is sued for a personal injury, and the evidence of the defendants tends to show that the injury was committed by another corporation, the plaintiff upon request, should be allowed to amend his declaration so as to charge that the two corporations were one and the same corporation known by both names, because sec. 3384 of the Va. Code of 1887, was clearly intended to provide for such a case, and, being remedial in its character, should be liberally construed. Langhorne v. Richmond City R. Co., 91 Va. 364, 22 S. E. Rep. 357.

3. ACTION IN NAME OF WRONG PLAINTIFF.—Where an action is brought in the name of the wrong plaintiff, it is not error to allow the declaration to be so amended as to show the party beneficially interested. National Bank of Virginia v. Nolting, 94 Va. 263, 26 S. E. Rep. 826.

If a jury find for the plaintiff the slaves in the declaration mentioned, and, proceeding to state the several values, recites the name of one of them erroneously, such an error should be corrected by reference to the declaration. Boatright v. Meggs, 4 Munf. 145.

D. VARIANCE.

Materiality of Amendments.—An immaterial variance between the allegata and probatum may be amended at the trial, but after all the evidence has been introduced on the trial of an action at law an amendment cannot be made that is material to the merits. Harman v. Cundiff, 82 Va. 239; Hansbrough v. Stinnett, 25 Gratt. 495; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rudd, 88 Va. 648, 14 S. E. Rep. 361.

Variance between Writ and Declaration.—But a variance between the writ and declaration may be amended at any time before judgment, if substantial justice may be done thereby. Courson v. Parker, 39 W. Va. 521, 20 S. E. Rep. 583.

Omission of a Condition in Policy.—Where, in an action on a life insurance policy, the declaration omits one of the conditions endorsed upon it; and on the trial when the policy is offered in evidence, it is objected to for the variance, the court may allow the plaintiff to amend the declaration by inserting the omitted condition, and proceed with the trial. The New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hendren, 24 Gratt. 536.

Ejectment.—And, in ejectment, if the term laid in the declaration expires before the decision of the cause, the practice is to grant leave to amend the declaration by enlarging the term. Hunter v. Fairfax, 1 Munf. 218.

To Conform to Proof.—If the evidence in the trial of a case before a jury fails to prove substantially the plaintiff's case as stated in the declaration, though it shows that the plaintiff has a good cause of action, the court should permit the plaintiff to amend his declaration so as to correspond with his proof at the trial. Hutchinson v. Parkersburg, 26 W. Va. 227.

Under Statute.—Va. Code 1880, ch. 177, sec. 7, provides that: "If at the trial of any action, there appears to be a variance between the evidence and the allegations or recitals, the court, if it consider the cause not material to the merits of the case, and that the opposite party cannot have been prejudiced thereby, may allow the pleadings to be amended on such terms as to payment of costs or postponement of trial, as it may deem reasonable." See Code 1887, sec. 3384. See Beasley v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 325; R. & D. R. Co. v. Rudd, 88 Va. 648, 14 S. E. Rep. 361. See Va. Code 1887, sec. 3259.

Time of, and Terms for, Amendment.—The plaintiff during the trial of the cause, and before verdict found, may at the discretion of the court be permitted to amend his declaration, in order that a material variance between its allegations and the proofs may be avoided, upon the terms, if the defendant so request, that the jury shall be discharged and the cause continued with leave to the defendant to amend his pleas, or plead anew to the declaration so amended. Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 583; Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 225.

E. FILING A BLANK.—The rule seems to be well settled that the circumstance that the damages are left blank in the declaration is unimportant, but if the gist of the action be blank, it is fatal. Blane v. Sansum, 3 Call 495; Stephens v. White, 2 Wash. 203; Taylor v. M'Clean, 3 Call 557; Craghill v. Page, 2 H. & M. 446; Digges v. Norris, 3 H. & M. 203.

Cured by Act of Jeofails.—And the omission to lay damages in the declaration, though in an action sounding in damages, is cured, after verdict, by the statute of jeofails. Stephens v. White, 2 Wash. 203.

But if the damages be laid high enough in the writ, though the jury find for more than are laid in the declaration, the writ may be referred to for the purpose of amendment, and the judgment will be sustained. Palmer v. Mill, 3 H. & M. 502.

Omission of Ad Damnum.—The omission of an ad damnum in the declaration will be considered as amended. Hook v. Turnbull, 6 Call 85.

Illustrations.—After verdict in an action for breach of a promise to marry, judgment ought not to be reversed on the ground that the time when the marriage was to be solemnized is left blank in the declaration. Milstead v. Redman, 3 Munf. 219.

Count in Assumpsit.—Thus, a count for money had and received was adjudged good after verdict, although the sum received was left blank. Hall v. Smith, 3 Munf. 550.

F. AT WHAT STAGE OF PROCEEDINGS.

Common-Law Rule.—At common law amendments seem to have been always readily obtained, at any time before issue, either in law or fact, was joined, or while the proceedings continued in paper, but, after the record was made up, and the pleadings were entered on the roll, there was a reluctance to admit of any alteration, through fear of defacing the record. Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 228.

Furtherance of Justice.—So that to promote justice on one hand, and prevent injury on the other, seems to be all that is requisite, for if they can be effected the amendment will be allowed at any time before final judgment. Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 228; Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 594.

After Demurrer Sustained.—After a demurrer has been sustained to a declaration which states a good cause of action, the court may allow the declaration to be amended, though the statement is defective with regard to the matters in which it is amended. Guarantee Co. v. Bank, 95 Va. 490, 28 S. E. Rep. 909; Baylor v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 9 W. Va. 270.

Refusal to Allow Amendment.—Where the inferior court properly sustains a demurrer to a declaration, and enters judgment in the action for the defendant, without giving leave to the plaintiff to amend, the supreme court will, if the defect in the declaration appears to be amendable, reverse the judgment, and remand the case, with directions to grant leave to the plaintiff to amend if he elects to do so. Rigg v. Parsons, 29 W. Va. 522, 2 S. E. Rep. 81; Norris v. Lemen, 28 W. Va. 336.

Cannot Be Forced to Amend.—But, if in such case, the record shows that the plaintiff declined to amend his declaration, the supreme court will not reverse the judgment, although it distinctly appears that the defect in the declaration could have been readily amended if the plaintiff had chosen to do so, but the judgment will be affirmed. Rigg v. Parsons, 29 W. Va. 522, 2 S. E. Rep. 81; White v. Railway Co., 26 W. Va. 800.

Technical Defect in Replication.—It is proper to allow an amendment, after demurrer is sustained, to cure a purely technical defect in a replication, when it occasions no surprise to the defendant, produces no delay nor inconvenience, and is necessary to the justice of the case. "It is fully authorized by the practice and decisions of Virginia." Bowles v. Elmore, 7 Gratt. 385; Hart v. B. & O. R. Co., 6 W. Va. 336.

After Demurrer and Argument.—After demurrer and argument upon the issue in law, either party will be permitted to amend. Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 228.

Statutory Rule.—Under Va. Code 1887, sec. 3384, providing that, if at the trial there appears to be any variance between the evidence and pleadings, the court, if it considers that substantial justice will be promoted, may allow the pleadings to be amended on such terms as it may decree reasonable, it is proper to allow a declaration to which a demurrer has been sustained to be amended at bar by striking out immaterial words, and to refuse to remand the case to rules. Alexandria & F. R. Co. v. Herndon, 87 Va. 193, 12 S. E. Rep. 289.

After Issue Joined.—If the plaintiff be permitted to amend his declaration, by consent of parties, after issue joined on a plea to the action, the defendant ought not to be permitted to plead in abatement any variance between the amended declaration and the writ, which equally existed between the writ and the original declaration. Moss v. Stipp, 3 Munf. 159; Payne v. Grim, 2 Munf. 297.

Nul Tiel Record.—Upon the trial of the issue nul tiel record, the court may allow an amendment of the declaration, and, if the defendant consents, may proceed with the trial. Thus, in an action of debt, brought on a judgment recovered for £144. 17. 2¼. and costs, but declared on for £144. 7. 2¼. and costs, the plaintiff, upon the trial of the issue joined upon the plea of "no such record" filed by the defendant, was allowed to amend his declaration by inserting the correct sum. Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call 529.

Before Verdict—Terms.—The circuit courts of West Virginia, in the exercise of their general common-law jurisdiction, in the absence of any statute prohibiting them from doing so, and independently of any statute authorizing them to do so, may, in their discretion, permit the pleadings to be amended at any time before verdict found whenever justice will be promoted thereby, and the same can be done without injury to the opposite party, but in every such case, if the opposite party requests it, the jury should be discharged, and the cause continued with leave to the opposite party to amend his pleadings or to plead anew to the pleadings, so amended. Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 583.

After Verdict.—Even after the verdict is returned if there is anything by which it can be done, or the justice of the case requires it, amendments will be allowed. Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 594; Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 228.

After Submission to Jury.—The case was submitted to the jury, who not agreeing, a juror was by consent withdrawn. In this stage of the proceedings, the plaintiff was permitted to amend his declaration, the cause being in paper, notwithstanding the jury had been sworn, as no verdict was rendered; during which time amendments, in favor of justice, are within the discretion of the court. Syme v. Jude, 3 Call 521; Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 228.

Amendments before Final Judgment.—But the rigor of the common law has been gradually departed from, until it has become the settled doctrine, that amendments, at the discretion of the court may be allowed at any time before final judgment, provided they produce no injury to the opposite party. Tabb v. Gregory, 4 Call 228; Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 594.

Amendments of Judgment Entered on Order Book and Signed by Judge.—But a district court has no power or jurisdiction to reverse, alter or amend a judgment given at a former term of that court, which has been entered on the order book and signed by a judge in open court. Halley v. Baird, 1 H. & M. 25; Freeland v. Field, 6 Call 12.

If an entry be made in a minute book of the clerk of the district court and a part of it be omitted in the order book, signed by the judge, the order book cannot be amended from the minutes after the term at which the proceedings were had. Cogbill v. Cogbill, 2 H. & M. 467.

During Trial of Appeal.—If a party during the trial of an appeal from a justice is entitled to amend his pleadings, that right cannot be made to depend solely on whether the adverse party is then ready to proceed with the trial. If such an amendment would be a surprise to the other party, a continuance will obviate that objection. Powell v. Love, 36 W. Va. 96, 14 S. E. Rep. 405.

1. IN APPELLATE COURT.—Amendment of the record in the supreme court is not permissible, because the supreme court tries the case by the record as made up in the lower court. Resort must be had to the lower court for such amendment. McClure-Mable Lumber Company v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. Rep. 921, citing 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 607.

Remand with Directions to Amend.—Where an appellate court reverses the judgment of the lower, the cause will be sent back with directions that the plaintiff shall have leave to amend the declaration. Strange v. Floyd, 9 Gratt. 474; Liggatt v. Withers, 5 Gratt. 24, 50 Am. Dec. 95; Hale v. Crow, 9 Gratt. 268; Creel v. Brown, 1 Rob. 265; White v. Toncray, 5 Gratt. 180.

So also, where there is a demurrer to a declaration which is overruled, but upon appeal the judgment is reversed, the cause will be remanded with directions that the plaintiff be allowed to amend his declaration if he elects to do so. Hansbrough v. Stinnett, 25 Gratt. 495.

Proceedings after Leave to Amend Declaration.—When an order of court has been entered, granting the plaintiff leave to amend his declaration, and remanding the cause to the rules, the case, after the amended declaration is filed, ought to be regularly proceeded in at the rules to an issue or office judgment, unless by consent an issue be made up in court; and if, without such proceedings at the rules, judgment be entered up in court against a defendant because he has not appeared and pleaded to the amended declaration, such judgment will be erroneous. Couch v. Fretwell, 10 Leigh 578.

G. EFFECT OF AMENDMENT.

1. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—When an amendment to a declaration is not inconsistent with the nature of the pleadings, and does not introduce a new cause of action, then so far as regards the statute of limitations, it will have the same effect as if it had been originally filed in the amended form at the commencement of the term, and the cause not then barred will not be treated as barred at the time of the amendment by reason of such amendment. Kuhn v. Brownfield, 34 W. Va. 252, 12 S. E. Rep. 519; Lamb v. Cecil, 28 W. Va. 653.

2. AMENDMENT AS WAIVER OF ERROR IN PREVIOUS RULINGS.—By amending his declaration, however, and going to trial on the merits, the plaintiff waives his right to assign for error that a demurrer to the declaration, as originally filed, was improperly sustained. Darracott v. C. & O. R. R. Co., 83 Va. 288, 2 S. E. Rep. 511; Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Gratt. 485; Harris v. N. & W. R. R. Co., 83 Va. 560, 14 S. E. Rep. 535; Birckhead v. C. & O. R. Co., 95 Va. 648, 29 S. E. Rep. 678; Connell v. C. & O. R. Co., 98 Va. 44, 24 S. E. Rep. 467.

Amendment of Complaint after Demurrer Sustained.—If a special demurrer is filed to a declaration, which is afterwards amended in the points specified in the demurrer, issues made up on pleas filed before the amendment, a verdict rendered on those issues, and no further notice taken of the demurrer, the demurrer must be considered as abandoned. Vaiden v. Bell, 8 Rand. 448.

3. ORIGINAL PLEADING SUPERSEDED.—When the plaintiff files an amended declaration, which is complete in itself, and does not refer to, or in any manner adopt the former as part of the same, and to which amended declaration the defendant replies and issues joined thereon, the former shall be considered as withdrawn or abandoned. Roderick v. Railroad Company, 7 W. Va. 54.

4. RIGHT TO PLEAD DE NOVO.—Where one party is permitted to amend, or amends without leave in a material matter, the other has a right to plead de novo, whether the new plea be material or not to his defence. Cosby v. Hite, 1 Wash. 365; Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 583.

Right to Elect.—Where the defendant's plea to the original declaration is applicable to the amended declaration filed by the plaintiff, and which plea is not withdrawn, the defendant must be understood to have still rested his defence on the same plea, and the verdict on the original issue will stand; but the defendant might have pleaded de novo if he had elected to do so. Power v. Ivie, 7 Leigh 147.

H. LEAVE TO AMEND.

1. AMENDMENT AS MATTER OF RIGHT.—The plaintiff may, as a matter of right, amend his declaration at any time before appearance by the defendant if substantial justice will be promoted thereby, and in such case it is not necessary to summon the defendant to plead to the amended declaration. Phelps v. Smith, 16 W. Va. 522; Baylor v. B. & O. R. Co., 9 W. Va. 270.

Suggestion by the Court.—But a plaintiff cannot be compelled to amend after the sustaining of a demurrer to a declaration. Rigg v. Parsons, 29 W. Va. 522, 2 S. E. Rep. 81.

I. METHOD OF MAKING AMENDMENTS.

1. ACTUAL AND IMPLIED AMENDMENTS.—If a party obtains leave to amend his plea, he may elect to make the amendment or not as he pleases; but if he fails to make the amendment, and the former plea is not withdrawn, the issue made by the original pleading should be tried. Fox v. Cosby, 2 Call 1.

J. OTHER MATTERS SUBJECT TO AMENDMENT.

Contested Elections—Grounds of Contest.—In Halstead v. Rader, 27 W. Va. 818, it was held that a notice which does not state some substantial ground of contest cannot be amended. See also, Ralston v. Meyers, 34 W. Va. 737, 12 S. E. Rep. 783.

See monographic note on "Elections" appended to West v. Ferguson, 16 Gratt. 270.

And where the proceedings are before a body which has no common-law jurisdiction, but becomes functus officio as soon as the cause is determined, it cannot permit amendments of notices and specifications after the time has passed within which the parties themselves may correct omissions, and supply defects. Loomis v. Jackson, 6 W. Va. 613.

Misnomer in Christian Name.—Under W. Va. Code 1887, sec. 14, ch. 125, "No plea in abatement for a misnomer shall be allowed in any action; but in a case wherein, but for this section, a misnomer would have been pleadable in abatement, the declaration and summons may, on the motion of either party, and on the affidavit of the right name, be amended by inserting the same therein." Thus, under this statute, where the writ named the plaintiff as "Collohan" Hoffman, and in declaration he is named as "Collahill" Hoffman, such misnomer in the plaintiff's christian name was amended. Hoffman v. Dickinson, 81 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. Rep. 53. See also, Va. Code 1887, §§ 3258 and 3300.

Where the jury find a conveyance to James, the lessor of the plaintiff, whereas his name is Jacobus, this is a plain mistake, which may be corrected by the other part of the finding, that he is lessor of the plaintiff. Pendleton v. Vandevier, 1 Wash. 381.

Misnomer of Corporation.—The misnomer of a corporation cannot be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, but where formerly pleadable in abatement, the declaration and summons may, on the motion of either party, on affidavit of the right name, be amended by inserting the same therein. W. Va. Code, ch. 125, sec. 14; First Nat. Bank of Ceredo v. Huntington, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 580, 23 S. E. Rep. 792.

Striking Out Plaintiffs.—Where a married woman, over the age of twenty-one years, sues for a personal injury in her name by a next friend, the declaration may be amended by striking out her next friend, and by inserting her own as plaintiff. Richmond Railway & Electric Company v. Bowles, 92 Va. 738, 24 S. E. Rep. 388. The court, in this case, further said: "No reason can be perceived why, if a married woman may amend her bill by inserting the name of a next friend, she may not with equal propriety be permitted to amend her declaration by striking from it the wholly needless and superfluous shadow, rather than to permit the substance to be sacrificed."

Of Scire Facias.—But a scire facias returnable to a day which is not a proper return day, is void and cannot be amended. Kyles v. Ford, 2 Rand. 1.

Of Bill of Particulars.—When a cause is called for trial, and substantial justice requires that the court should have allowed the plaintiff to amend his bill of particulars, and if it be clear, that such amendment cannot operate a surprise to defendant, the cause ought not to be continued because of such amendment. Anderson v. Kanawha Coal Co., 18 W. Va. 526. See Code of W. Va., ch. 125, sec. 12, p. 601.

Of Record—Upon What Based.—The amendments authorized by the act, Va. Code, ch. 181, sec. 5, p. 681, in relation to amendments of a record by a judge in vacation, are to be based upon something in the record, and not upon the recollection of the judge who presided at the trial, or evidence alibis; and the amendments authorized are amendments to support the judgment, not amendments to give ground for reversal. Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. 823, and note; Barnes v. Com., 92 Va. 794, 23 S. E. Rep. 784.

When Writ Part of Record.—For the purpose of amendment, the writ is a part of the record only where issue has been joined upon a plea to the action. Payne v. Grim, 2 Munf. 297.

Amendment after Term.—After the term at which a judgment is entered, the court cannot amend a record. Sydnor v. Burke, 4 Rand. 161.

III. OF PROCESS.

By the common law, process made returnable to a day which is not a return day, is void, and hence cannot be amended; though it seems that a scire facias may be amended in the teste or return. Kyles v. Ford, 2 Rand. 1; Coda v. Thompson, 39 W. Va. 67, 19 S. E. Rep. 548.

A. OF SHERIFF'S RETURN.—After a judgment by default, the court may allow the sheriff to amend his return so as to show a proper service. Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. Everhart, 88 Va. 952, 14 S. E. Rep. 836; Railroad Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1008; Stotz v. Collins, 83 Va. 423, 2 S.

E. Rep. 737; Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 18; Stone v. Wilson, 10 Gratt. 539. See also, Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 779; Wardsworth v. Miller, 4 Gratt. 99; Smith v. Triplett, 4 Leigh 500.

It is proper on the hearing of a motion to reverse a judgment by default for a defective return of the summons in the action, to allow the sheriff to amend his return, and then overrule the motion to reverse, if the amended return be good. Anderson v. Doolittle, 38 W. Va. 633, 18 S. E. Rep. 726; Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750; Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1008.

Application in Vacation.—Where a judgment by default has been rendered on a defective return of service of summons, and the defendant, after the term, applies to the judge in vacation to reverse the judgment, and remand the cause to trial under Va. Code 1873, ch. 172, sec. 5, on the ground that it does not appear from the sheriff's return that the writ has been served as prescribed by law, the court may, on the plaintiff's motion, allow the return to be amended so as to show a proper service, and dismiss the motion. Stotz v. Collins, 83 Va. 423, 2 S. E. Rep. 737; Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146.

Where under Va. Code 1873, ch. 172, sec. 5, defendant moves the judge in vacation to reverse the judgment by default upon defect of return of substituted service of the summons, and to remand the case to trial, the court will then allow the sheriff to amend his return so as to show a proper service, and dismiss the defendant's motion. Stotz v. Collins, 83 Va. 423, 2 S. E. Rep. 737; Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 779.

Application to Circuit Judge in Term.—Moreover, it is competent for the circuit court, whence the writ issued, to permit an amendment of the return, if the application to reverse the judgment is made to the court in term instead of to the judge thereof in vacation; and in this particular the authority of the judge in vacation is the same as that conferred upon the court. Stotz v. Collins, 83 Va. 423, 2 S. E. Rep. 737.

And the judge in vacation may allow the sheriff to amend his return on the first execution, upon a motion to quash a second execution in vacation. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 18; Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 160.

Amendment of Summons by Clerk.—But on the trial of a motion to reverse the judgment by default, made in a circuit court under the fifth section of chapter 184 of the W. Va. Code, the court ought not to permit the clerk to correct the summons itself, though he has made a mistake by inadvertence in issuing it. Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 779.

Objections in Appellate Court.—After judgment by default, a party cannot object in the appellate court, to the truth of a sheriff's return. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189.

Return on Notice.—An amendment of the return made by an officer on a notice, does not permit him in any wise to change or amend the notice itself, and if he does, the changed or amended notice is a nullity. White v. Sydenstricker, 6 W. Va. 46.

Justice's Court.—Return of service of a summons from a justice's court, defective in failing to show that service on a corporation's agent was made in the county of his residence, may be amended, either before the justice or in the circuit court upon an appeal. Hopkins v. B. & O. R. Co., 42 W. Va. 535, 26 S. E. Rep. 187.

Certiorari to Justice.—And upon a writ of certiorari from a judgment of a justice, the circuit court may allow the return on the summons, issued by the justice, to be amended. McClure-Mable Lumber Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. Rep. 921.

Pendency of Suit on Original Return.—A court from which process is issued may permit the sheriff's return thereon to be amended at any time, even though a suit or motion founded on the original return be then pending, and even though the proposed amendments be inconsistent with the original return, and take away the foundation of the suit or motion. Stone v. Wilson, 10 Gratt. 529; Stotz v. Collins, 83 Va. 423, 2 S. E. Rep. 737.

Not Ground for Continuance.—The allowance of an amendment to the sheriff's return on a writ of summons is not ground for a continuance, though, before the amendment, there was nothing to show a valid service of the writ, especially where the case had previously been set for trial by consent. Atlantic & D. R. Co. v. Peake, 87 Va. 180, 13 S. E. Rep. 348.

Amendment as Affecting Liability of Sureties.—Where a sheriff has made a return on an execution and on that return, in part, a decree has been entered, in a subsequent proceeding against him and his sureties, he will not be permitted to amend his return, so as to explain it away and enable his sureties to escape liability for his default. Carr v. Meade, 77 Va. 142.

Effect on Subsequent Mortgagees.—It is immaterial that subsequent mortgagees of a corporation may be injured by an amendment, it not being shown that they were aware of the irregularity in the judgment, which was duly docketed, when they took their mortgages, and if they were, they would nevertheless acquire their lien subject to the plaintiff's right to have the record perfected. Shenandoah Valley R. R. Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1003.

Extent of Right to Amend.—If two writs of scire facias be successively issued, the returns on which are both defective, and the defendant, after pleading specially, obtains leave to withdraw his plea, as having been improvidently pleaded, the court ought not thereupon to permit the sheriff to amend both his returns, but only that on the first writ quashing the second writ, and remanding the cause to rules for further proceedings. Lee v. Chilton, 5 Munf. 408.

Amended Return Relates Back to Original Return.—When an officer's return of process is amended by leave of court, the amended return relates back to, and takes place of the original return, as if it had been the first return; and any pending proceeding founded on the first return is, after the amendment, tested and tried by the amended return. McClure-Mable Lumber Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. Rep. 921, citing Capehart v. Cunningham, 13 W. Va. 750; Stone v. Wilson, 10 Gratt. 533; Stotz v. Collins, 83 Va. 423, 2 S. E. Rep. 737; Railroad Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1003. See Anderson v. Doolittle, 38 W. Va. 633, 18 S. E. Rep. 726.

Time for the Amendment.

In General.—The extensive power with which every court is ordinarily clothed, to permit an amendment of a return of its own process, whether original, mesne or final, for the correction of a casual and honest mistake or omission, may be exercised in all cases where it exists at all as well after judgment as before. In some cases it has been exercised even to the extent of taking away altogether a cause of action, growing out of the original return, and even though a suit or motion founded on the original return was pending at the time. And it makes no difference that the officer by whom the return was made, has gone out of office or is dead; there being no specific limitation of time within which the power may be exercised, although after a considerable lapse of time, it should be exercised with caution, and in no case ought it to be exercised, unless the court can see that it will be in furtherance of justice. S. V. R. R. Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1003.

Before Judgment.—The court ought to permit the sheriff to amend his return upon a writ of ad quod damnum, at any time before the judgment upon it. Dawson v. Moons, 4 Munf. 535.

Any Time after Return Day.—And a sheriff may be permitted, by order of court, to make a return upon an execution, or to amend it, according to the truth of the case, at any time after the return day. Bullitt v. Winstons, 1 Munf. 269.

After Verdict.—Also, where execution is awarded on a forthcoming bond against the principal and surety therein, but the sheriff makes his return only as to the surety, the court after trial and verdict may allow the sheriff to amend his return. Smith v. Triplett, 4 Leigh 590.

After Action Commenced against Sureties.—Moreover, a sheriff will be permitted to amend his return on an execution, after an action has been commenced by the plaintiff in the execution against the sheriff and his sureties on his official bond, founded on the return. Wardsworth v. Miller, 4 Gratt. 99. See also, Lathrop v. Lumpkin, 3 Rob. 49.

Lapse of Seven Years.—A sheriff has been permitted by the court to amend his return after a lapse of seven years from its date. Rucker v. Harrison, 6 Munf. 181.

Lapse of Thirteen Years.—The court, in Hopkins v. B. & O. R. Co., 42 W. Va. 535, 26 S. E. Rep. 187, said: "Under a statute like that involved here, it was held, in Railroad Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1003, and the case is pointed authority in this case, that the return to a summons may be amended thirteen years after the judgment by default has been rendered, so as to show that the county in which service was had on the defendant corporation was the county in which the agent resided, and the judgment thereby validated."

Amended by Sheriff or Deputy.—The sheriff or his deputy will be permitted to amend his return of process, mesne or final, so as to make it conform to the facts. State v. Martin, 38 W. Va. 568, 18 S. E. Rep. 748; Stone v. Wilson, 10 Gratt. 529; Wardsworth v. Miller, 4 Gratt. 99.

Cause May Be Tried at Same Term.—It is not error to try a cause at a term at which a sheriff is permitted to amend his return, showing that a party was duly served with notice, when in fact such party had been actually served with notice to appear at that term. Trimble v. Patton, 5 W. Va. 482.

Liberality of Courts.—Courts are liberal in allowing officers to amend their returns, according to the truth, when a casual and honest mistake has occurred. 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1042, and cases cited; Hopkins v. B. & O. R. Co., 42 W. Va. 535, 26 S. E. Rep. 187; S. V. R. R. Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, 9 S. E. Rep. 1003.

"The law of amending returns is very liberal." McClure-Mable Lumber Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. Rep. 921.

IV. OF AFFIDAVIT FOR ATTACHMENT.

An affidavit for an attachment cannot be amended except as to merely clerical defects, and as to other facts relied on to show the existence of the grounds for attachment. W. Va. Code 1891, ch. 106, sec. 1, goes no further in allowing amendments than as to such additional facts. Sommers v. Allen, 44 W. Va. 120, 28 S. E. Rep. 787; Bohn v. Zeigler, 44 W. Va. 402, 29 S. E. Rep. 983.

When Additional Facts Must Exist.—But an amended affidavit in an attachment cause, stating additional facts to show the existence of the ground of attachment specified in the first affidavit, must show that such facts existed at the date of the first affidavit. Sommers v. Allen, 44 W. Va. 120, 28 S. E. Rep. 787.

Omission of Word "Justly."—The omission, from the affidavit for attachment, of the word "justly" cannot be cured by amendment. Sommers v. Allen, 44 W. Va. 120, 28 S. E. Rep. 787.

Mistake in Date.—A mistake in the date of an affidavit may be amended. Anderson v. Kanawha Coal Co., 12 W. Va. 526.

V. IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS—LOST INDICTMENT.

If, in a prosecution for a felony or misdemeanor the indictment is lost at any time before the trial, though after arraignment and plea, the accused cannot be tried upon it. Bradshaw v. Com., 16 Gratt. 507, following Ganoway v. State, 23 Ala. 772, and Harrison v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 542, and holding that the act, Va. Code, ch. 180, p. 69, authorizing the lost record or paper to be substituted by an authenticated copy or proof of its contents, applies only to civil cases, and does not extend to records or papers in criminal proceedings.

See monographic note on "Indictments, Informations, and Presentments" appended to Boyle v. Com., 14 Gratt. 674.

A. OF VERDICT.

By Direction of Court.—The court may, for good reason, return a jury to its room to further consider and amend or alter its verdict, at any time before a verdict is received by the court and the jury discharged. State v. Cobbs, 40 W. Va. 718, 22 S. E. Rep. 310.

At Request of Jury.—In the case of Sledd v. Com., 19 Gratt. 818, upon the rendition of the verdict, the defendant, for certain reasons then expressed, moved the court to set aside the verdict. One of the jurors, after hearing the discussion upon the motion to set aside, said that he desired to amend the verdict. Thereupon the court inquired of the jury whether they desired to amend their verdict and each of the jurors answered that he did. The jury were then allowed to amend their verdict, which proceeding was subsequently approved by the supreme court.

Period within Which Jury May Amend.—Where the jury has not been discharged or the verdict recorded it is a familiar practice to allow the jury to amend their verdict; but after they are discharged amendments are not allowable. Sledd v. Com., 19 Gratt. 818; Mills v. Com., 7 Leigh 751; Com. v. Gibson, 3 Va. Cas. 70.

1. NAME OF ACCUSED.—Where by mistake a wrong name is inserted in an indictment for a misdemeanor, though the record of the court and the endorsement on the indictment shows the correct name, the indictment cannot be amended by striking out the wrong name and inserting the name of the person intended. Buzzard's Case, 5 Gratt. 604.

Where defendants indicted jointly for a misdemeanor, have been duly summoned, but fail to appear, the court may, in their absence, amend the indictment against "S. C.," and make it read "S. S. alias S. C." Shiflett v. Com., 90 Va. 886, 18 S. E. Rep. 838. See Va. Code 1887, sec. 3099.

Where an indictment for a wilful trespass was against J. M., but the grand jury endorses it as against T. M., "a true bill," and it is so noted in the record, the court cannot alter or amend the record so as to make it conform to the indictment. McKinney's Case, 8 Gratt. 589.

Where the grand jury find an indictment against C & D, but the clerk, in making a minute of the finding, accidentally omits the name of D, the record cannot be amended at a subsequent term of the court, by inserting the name of D in the minutes. Drake & Cochren's Case, 6 Gratt. 665.

B. OF INFORMATION.

Where No Offence Charged.—If the offence charged in the presentment, upon which the information is based, does not amount to a misdemeanor, the court ought not to permit the attorney for the commonwealth to amend his information. Com. v. Williamson, 4 Gratt. 554.

After Motion to Quash.—But on an information for perjury, the attorney for the commonwealth may amend the information in accordance with the presentment on which it is founded, after the appearance of the defendant and a motion by him to quash it. Com. v. Lodge, 6 Gratt. 609.

VI. JEOPAILS.

A. AT COMMON LAW.—By the common law, if the issue joined be such as necessarily to require, on trial, proof of facts, defectively or imperfectly stated, or omitted, and without which it is not to be presumed that the judge would direct the jury to give, or the jury would have given, the verdict, such defect, imperfection, or omission is cured by the verdict. Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. 256; Davis v. McMullen, 86 Va. 256, 9 S. E. Rep. 1095; Lincoln v. Iron Co., 103 U. S. 415.

See monographic note on "Judgments" appended to Smith v. Charlton, 7 Gratt. 425, and subtitle "Judgments by Default."

Surplusage.—Surplusage in pleading does not, in any case, vitiate after verdict. Thus, in debt on a judgment for £50 19s. 10d. the verdict finds for the plaintiff the sum of £50 "that being the debt in the declaration mentioned," the error is in the sum only, which may be regarded as surplusage, and the verdict is cured by the statute of jeofails. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182.

Defective Plea.—The proper plea to an action of debt upon a prison bounds bond is "conditions performed"; but as the plea "that he was not guilty of the premises laid to this charge," is substantially the same, it is good after verdict. Payne v. Ellzey, 3 Wash. 143.

But it seems that a plea of "the act of limitations" in those words only, to which the plaintiff replies generally, is good after verdict. Cook v. Darby, 4 Munf. 444.

Wrong Form of Action.—If a man, prosecuted without probable cause for stealing a deed, brings trespass on the case instead of trespass, the error cannot be taken advantage of in arrest of judgment; the error being cured by the act of jeofails. Cleek v. Haines, 2 Rand. 440.

Averment of Demand in Detinue.—If the declaration in detinue does not contain a demand "that the defendant surrender to the plaintiff" the property sued for, yet, after verdict on the plea of non detinet, judgment ought not to be arrested. Bogges v. Bogges, 6 Munf. 486.

Doctrine of Intendment.—Nothing will be presumed after verdict, but what must have been necessarily proved from the matter stated in the declaration, and therefore, the total want of an averment of fact, which constitutes the gist of the action, will not be cured after verdict by the act of jeofails. Chichester v. Vass, 1 Call 83, 1 Am. Dec. 509.

Collateral Parts of Pleading.—Defects, omissions, or imperfections, though in form only, appearing in some collateral parts of the pleading which were not in issue between the parties, may not be cured by the application of this doctrine of intendment, as there is no room for the presumption that the defect or omission was supplied by proof. Bailey v. Clay, 4 Rand. 346.

"A verdict operates, under the act of jeofails, only where the case is defectively stated in the declaration, and not where no case or title is made. It cures on the ground that proof is presumed to have been given at the trial, without which the jury could not have found the verdict in question; but it does not cure in cases in which no such presumption can be made. The court presumes proof to have been given as to facts imperfectly laid, but not as to facts not laid; it only presumes such proof to have been given as is called for by the averments in the declaration." Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. 273.

Imperfect Statement of Essential Facts.—A verdict cures, where the essential facts are imperfectly stated, but not where they are entirely omitted. Fulgham v. Lightfoot, 1 Call 250; Horrel v. M'Alexander, 3 Rand. 101, opinion of CARR, J.

See "Omission of Essential Elements."

Ambiguities.—The court, in Chichester v. Vass, 1 Call 83, 1 Am. Dec. 509, said: "Under our act of jeofails, according to the principles of construction adopted by the courts of law in England, a verdict will cure ambiguities, but it will not cure a declaration where the gist of the action is omitted; for, no proof at the trial can make good a declaration, which contains no ground of action upon the face of it. This is the distinction laid down in the case of Rushton v. Aspinall, Dougl. 679, and upon this distinction, this court went in the case of Winston v. Francisco, 2 Wash. 187."

Averment of Breach.—If the breach in a declaration is not sufficiently laid, and, therefore, would be bad on demurrer, it will, nevertheless be cured by a verdict, if the necessary facts are stated, though imperfectly. The distinction taken in Chichester v. Vass, 1 Call 83, and in Fulgham v. Lightfoot, 1 Call 250, is between necessary facts not being stated at all, and being imperfectly stated. In the first case, a verdict does not cure; in the second, it does. Horrel v. M'Alexander, 3 Rand. 94; Peas' Case, 2 Gratt. 640.

Promise to Pay in Assumpsit.—But if the promise to pay, in an action of assumpsit, be not averred, the omission is not cured by the verdict; or where the promise is averred by way of recital, instead of positively, the error is fatal after verdict. Winston v. Francisco, 2 Wash. 187; Sexton v. Holmes, 3 Munf. 566.

Refusal of Payment.—A declaration, however, which charges only that the defendant "hath and does refuse to pay," without alleging that he has not paid, is good on general demurrer. Cobbs v. Fountaine, 3 Rand. 484.

Condition Precedent.—The failure to allege the performance of a condition precedent, in a declaration, will be cured by a verdict at common law. Bailey v. Clay, 4 Rand. 346.

Separate Values.—Failure to lay a separate value in an action of detinue, as to each slave demanded, is an error which would be fatal on demurrer, but is cured by a verdict severing the values. Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf. 539.

Payment on Demand.—In Winslow v. Com., 2 H. & M. 459, in debt on a sheriff's bond, the declaration charging that he failed to pay the taxes on demand, instead of at the time appointed by law, was held sufficient after verdict.

Charging Heir Only in the Detinet.—Charging an heir in the detinet only, instead of in the debet and detinet as is proper, is not a fatal defect after verdict, or upon general demurrer. Waller v. Ellis, 2 Munf. 88.

Demise and Ouster in Ejectment.—If, in ejectment, the demise and ouster be laid precedent to the plaintiff's title, it is cured by the act of jeofails. Duval v. Bibb, 3 Call 362.

Maliciously Suing Out Attachment.—Where, in an action for maliciously suing out an attachment against the effects of the plaintiff, the declaration alleges, that the attachment was sued out "wrongfully and without good cause," instead of "maliciously and without probable cause," such an irregularity is cured by the verdict. Spengler v. Davy, 15 Gratt. 381. It would certainly seem that the cases of Kirtley v. Deck, 2 Munf. 10; Ellis v. Thilman, 3 Call 3; Young v. Gregorie, 3 Call 446, would have dictated an opposite decision in the above case, but the court reconciled its decision on the ground that these cases were decided in the absence of some of the most sweeping provisions of the present statute of jeofails.

Declaration by Firm Name.—A declaration in behalf of a mercantile company, by the name of the firm, without mentioning the names of the partners, is good after a verdict for the plaintiffs upon the general issue. Pate v. Bacon, 6 Munf. 219; Totty v. Donald, 4 Munf. 430. See Scott v. Dunlop, 2 Munf. 349; Murdock v. Herndon, 4 H. & M. 207.

Covenant—Certainty.—On a covenant in which the plaintiff engaged to serve the defendant as his overseer, for one year, and the defendant to pay the plaintiff a certain part of all grain made on the plantation (after deducting the seed) oats excepted; a declaration charging that the defendant did not at the close of the year, pay to the plaintiff such part of the grain made on the plantation (without setting forth what crop was made) is good after verdict. Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. 255.

Naming of Issue.—In detinue, if a negro woman by name, and her issue (without naming them), be demanded in the declaration and the jury find the names of the issue, the defect (if any) is cured after verdict. Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf. 539.

Where an action was brought on a bond for $188, which is declared on as for $108, and the defendant confessed judgment for the debt in the declaration mentioned, and judgment is entered for $108, this is not a clerical error which may be amended under the 108th section of the statute of jeofails, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 123. Compton v. Cline, 5 Gratt. 137.

Writ of Right.—The statute of jeofails extends to writs of right, therefore, if the verdict and judgment be substantially right, though not in the words of the law, they ought not to be disturbed. Turberville v. Long, 3 H. & M. 309.

A count upon a writ of right describing the land demanded as a certain number of acres, part of a larger tract, and setting forth the boundaries of such larger tract is sufficiently certain after verdict. Lovell v. Arnold, 2 Munf. 167.

Failure to File Plea.—In a writ of right, the failure to file a plea is not cured by a verdict in favor of the tenant. Rowans v. Givens, 10 Gratt. 250.

Blanks, Informal Titles, Bad Grammar.—After verdict for the tenant in a writ of right, the blanks, informalities and bad grammar of plea and replication is immaterial. Snapp v. Spengler, 3 Leigh 1.

Distinction between Defective Statement of Title and Statement of Defective Title.—"If the declaration states a defective title or cause of action, though it state it well, or if it state no title or cause of action at all, neither common law nor the statute of jeofails helps the judgment. If it states a defective title, it shows that there is no right to recover; if it states no title, the presumption is irresistible that the plaintiff could not have made out a case by proof on the trial. But if it states a good title, but states it defectively, it is fair to say that the plaintiff on the trial proved a good case, else the jury would not have found for him, and the statute cures the defective statement." Long v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 66, 17 S. E. Rep. 199, citing Chichester v. Vass, 1 Call 83; Fulgham v. Lightfoot, 1 Call 350; Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. 273, opinion of court.

Where a plea is so defective as not to raise a substantial defence to the action, the plea is bad even under the statute of jeofails; and a repleader ought not to be awarded by the appellate court, though no objection was raised thereto in the court below, and issue had been joined thereon. But where an improper or defective plea raises a substantial defence to the action, and it is unobjected to in the court below, and issue is joined thereon, after verdict or judgment it is too late to object; the defect being cured by the statute of jeofails. State v. Seabright, 13 W. Va. 590, citing Callis v. Waddy, 3 Munf. 511; Tomlinson v. Mason, 6 Rand. 169; Dimmett v. Eskridge, 6 Munf. 308; Hunnicut v. Carsley, 1 H. & M. 153; Cleek v. Haines, 2 Rand. 440; Chew v. Moffett, 6 Munf. 120; Pence v. Huston, 6 Gratt. 304.

B. UNDER THE STATUTE.

1. JOINDER OF ISSUE.—It is a perfectly well settled rule of law, that the statute of jeofails will cure a misjoinder or informal joinder of issue, but it is equally well settled that it will not cure a nonjoinder or want of issue altogether. Petty v. Frick Co., 86 Va. 501, 10 S. E. Rep. 886; Johnson v. Fry, 88 Va. 605, 12 S. E. Rep. 973; Southside R. Co. v. Daniel, 20 Gratt. 345 (a case of nonjoinder); McMillion v. Dobbins, 9 Leigh 423; White v. Clay, 7 Leigh 68 (a case of misjoinder); Sydnor v. Burke, 4 Rand. 161; Walden v. Payne, 2 Wash. 1; Stevens v. Tallafarro, 1 Wash. 155; Wilkinson v. Bennett, 3 Munf. 314; Totty v. Donald, 4 Munf. 430; Lockridge v. Carlisle, 6 Rand. 21 (cases of nonjoinder or want of issue); Simmons v. Trumbo, 9 W. Va. 358; Huffman v. Alderson, 9 W. Va. 617; Moore v. Mauro, 4 Rand. 488 (cases of misjoinder).

Want of Similitude.—But the mere want of a similitudo shall not after a trial, vitiate the verdict. Brewer v. Tarpley, 1 Wash. 363.

Where there has been a demurrer to any pleading, and the same has been overruled, the statute cures no defect, imperfection, or omission therein, except such as could not be regarded on demurrer. 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 941; Va. Code 1887, sec. 3246; Southern Railway Co. v. Wilcox, 98 Va. 223, 35 S. E. Rep. 365.

The misjoinder of an issue is not fatal after verdict, when it is stated in the record that issue was joined. Moore v. Mauro, 4 Rand. 488.

Former Rulings.—Misjoinder of issue was, at one time, held not to be cured by the statute of jeofails. Stevens v. Tallafarro, 1 Wash. 155; Wilkinson v. Bennett, 3 Munf. 314. But it was held otherwise in Moore v. Mauro, 4 Rand. 488, and this decision in Moore v. Mauro, supra, apparently met the approbation of the court in the case of Southside R. Co. v. Daniel, 20 Gratt. 360.

Upon the plea of payment or nonassumpsit, though all the evidence has not been certified, yet if the plea be such that the plaintiff could reply no special matter without a departure from the allegations of the declaration, but could only take issue on the plea, the nonjoinder will be cured by the statute of jeofails. Douglass v. Central Land Co., 12 W. Va. 502.

Joinder of Counts in Contract and Tort.—After verdict, without a demurrer, the statute of jeofails cures a misjoinder of counts, as where counts ex delicto are joinder in the same declaration with counts ex contractu. N. & W. R. R. Co. v. Wysor, 82 Va. 250.

Defective Declaration of Title by Descent.—A defective plea and issue joined upon a defective declaration of title by descent, in an action against an heir on his ancestor's covenant, is cured by the act of jeofails. Woodford v. Pendleton, 1 H. & M. 303.

Also, a defective setting forth of title by descent in an action by an heir for breach of covenants contained in a conveyance of lands to his ancestor, is good after verdict. Woodford v. Pendleton, 1 H. & M. 303.

Plea of Nil Debet in Assumpsit.—A plea of nil debet in an action of indebitatus assumpsit is cured by a verdict and will be treated in the appellate court as if it had been a plea of nonassumpsit. Smith v. Townsend, 21 W. Va. 486.

Plea of Not Guilty in Covenant.—Also, a plea of not guilty to an action of covenant is cured by a verdict. Hunnicut v. Carsley, 1 H. & M. 153.

Plea of Statute of Limitations.—And, if a plea of the statute of limitations to an action of covenant is defective in form or substance, but is not demurred to, such plea is cured after verdict by the statute of jeofails, Va. Code 1873, ch. 177, sec. 8; Davis v. McMullen, 86 Va. 256, 9 S. E. Rep. 1095.

Actio Personalis Moritur Cum Persona.—Such an error as giving judgment for the plaintiff, in an action for deceit against the vendor's personal representative, will not be cured by the act of jeofails. 1 Rev. Code of 1819, ch. 128, sec. 103, p. 511; Boyles v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202, disapproved in Lee v. Hill, 87 Va. 497, 12 S. E. Rep. 1052.

Extent of Curative Effect.—If errors in the pleadings or proceedings are cured by the statute of jeofails as to one defendant, they are cured as to all the defendants. Jenkins v. Hurt, 2 Rand. 446.

2. OMISSION OF ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS.—In spite of the sweeping provisions of the statute of jeofails, it does not apply to cases in which the declaration sets forth no cause of action or no ground of defence, as where there is a total omission to state matters essential to a cause of action or defence. Roanoke Land & Imp. Co. v. Karn, 80 Va. 589; Boyles v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202; Davis v. Com., 13 Gratt. 189, 151; Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. 273; Buckner v. Blair, 2 Munf. 336; Braxton v. Lipscomb, 2 Munf. 282; Green v. Dulany, 2 Munf. 518; Sydnor v. Burke, 4 Rand. 161.

Where a declaration shows that the plaintiffs have no right of action, but on the contrary that the right of action is in another, and verdict is found for the plaintiffs, the statute of jeofails, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, sec. 108, does not apply to the case, and does not cure such a defect. Ross v. Milne, 12 Leigh 200, 37 Am. Dec. 646; Robrecht v. Marling, 29 W. Va. 765, 2 S. E. Rep. 827.

Quare, if the plaintiff omits to aver in his declaration matter necessary to show a good cause of action, and the defendant, instead of demurring, pleads the general issue, whether, upon the construction of the statute of jeofails, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, sec. 108, p. 512, the plaintiff is bound to prove the matter at the trial of the issue, which he has not averred in his declaration. Thompson v. Cumming, 3 Leigh 321.

To hold a defendant liable upon a cause of action not asserted, is going to the utmost verge of the law, even where such a cause of action is proved. But to hold him liable for such cause when not proved, or proved by evidence not admissible if the suit had been brought for that cause, is going beyond the letter and spirit of the law. Boyles v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202, and note.

An action is misconceived in the sense of the statute of jeofails, only in a case, wherein upon the trial, the proofs show a cause of action fit to be asserted in a form different from that adopted. The defendant is held liable upon proof showing a liability; and if no objection is made to the form of the action until after verdict, the defect is cured thereby. Boyles v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202.

But under the statute of jeofails of 1819, the omission to allege property in the plaintiff, in the declaration, is cured after verdict. Valden v. Bell, 3 Rand. 448.

Averment of Notice.—The failure of the plaintiff, in an action on a collateral promise, to aver notice to the guarantor of the performance of the act contemplated by the promise, and, perhaps, of a failure to pay by the person, in whose favor the undertaking was made, will be cured by the statute of jeofails, after verdict. Pasteur v. Parker, 3 Rand. 458.

Misnomer.—Where suit is brought against the president and directors of a branch bank, this is not a mere misnomer, which must be pleaded in abatement, but is a bar to any recovery; and though the verdict is founded upon the general issue pleaded, the error is not cured by the statute of jeofails. Mason v. Farmers' Bank, 12 Leigh 86.

Ejectment.—Under sec. 5, ch. 177 of Va. Code 1878, an amendment of a judgment for the plaintiff in ejectment "for their term yet to come in the lands," etc., so as to conform with the plaintiff's claim and the requirements of the Va. Code 1849, whereby ejectment was adopted to try title to, as well as to get possession of land, is not erroneous. Alvey v. Cahoon, 86 Va. 173, 9 S. E. Rep. 994.

a. Gist of Action Omitted.—"Though the statute of jeofails will aid many omissions after a verdict, it will not cure the defect in a declaration, in which the very gist of the action is omitted to be charged." Moore v. Dawney, 3 H. & M. 184. See Smith v. Walker, 1 Wash. 185.

Statements under Quodcum.—The gist of the action must, in all cases, be directly and positively averred in the declaration, therefore, if in trespass, the plaintiff declare "for that whereas," etc., and does not make a positive averment, it is error, and will not be cured by the verdict. Moore v. Dawney, 3 H. & M. 187; Lomax v. Hord, 3 H. & M. 271, citing Winston v. Francisco, 3 Wash. 187; Chichester v. Vass, 1 Call 83; Cooke v. Simms, 2 Call 20.

3. CRIMINAL CASES.

a. Errors Cured.—The statute of jeofails is frequently applied in criminal cases to cure informal defects in indictments, or such as are not essential or of the substance of the charge. As, where in an indictment for grand larceny, the charge was for stealing on a certain day, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, leaving out the r; and in rape, the using of the word "female" child, instead of "woman" child, and omitting the word "unlawfully"; and in an indictment for malicious and voluntary shooting, using the term "willfully" instead of "voluntarily." Aldridge v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 447; Com. v. Bennet, 3 Va. Cas. 235; Trimble v. Com., 3 Va. Cas. 143.

Where, in an indictment for forgery of bank notes, the notes are referred to as being annexed to the count, instead of setting out the tenor of the forged notes, this careless and irregular mode of counting is cured, after verdict, by the act of jeofails. Com. v. Ervin, 3 Va. Cas. 337.

Indorsement of Grand Jury's Finding on Indictment.—It has been held that where an indictment filled the whole sheet of paper and was then folded in another half sheet of the same size, on which half sheet the attorney indorsed "Commonwealth v. Joseph Burgess, indictment," and immediately below, in the handwriting of the foreman of the grand jury was indorsed "A true bill, Robert Hamilton, Foreman," although the half sheet of paper was blank except the indorsement, and although it was not otherwise attached to the indictment then being folded around it, yet the indictment enveloped by it must be considered as the indictment which was passed on by the grand jury, and on which, verdict was found by the jury. Though the objection was a good one, it would come too late after verdict. Burgess v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 483.

Sufficient Certainty.—Where, in a presentment, the offence is charged with a sufficient certainty for judgment to be given thereon according to the very right of the case, any defect in the presentment will be aided by the verdict. Thus, where an indictment against S for keeping an office and transacting business as agent of the protection Insurance Company of Hartford, incorporated and authorized by the laws of Connecticut, without having a license therefor, did not allege that the said company was an insurance company, the error was held to be cured by the verdict. Slaughter v. Com., 13 Gratt. 707.

b. Errors Not Cured.

Ownership of Stolen Bank Notes.—If the indictment for stealing bank notes does not charge that they are the bank notes of, or belong to, some person or persons by name, or of, or to, some person to the jurors unknown, the defect is fatal, and is not cured by the act of jeofails. Barker v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 122.

Omission of Word "Feloniously."—The statute of criminal jeofails does not cure an indictment for stealing bank notes under the act of 1806, which fails to charge that they were feloniously stolen. Barker v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 122.

Intention of Statute.—The statute of criminal jeofails was not intended to introduce a carelessness or laxity in pleading but merely to cure those defects which the over-nicety of the courts had introduced into the common law, and which did not put the rights of the commonwealth or the accused into jeopardy. Barker's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 122; Old v. Com., 18 Gratt. 930.

Origin of Statute.—That part of our statute of jeofails which cures the omission of all averments, "without proving which the jury ought to have found such a verdict," is not taken from the English statute, but is the adoption of the principle established in the English courts, and which is well explained in Ruston v. Aspinall, Dougl. 658, per ROANE, J. Stephens v. White, 2 Wash. 210.

*Galt v. Archer.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

Common Carriers—Action for Freight—Case at Bar.—A common carrier contracts to deliver a crop of wheat at an agreed price per bushel. A large proportion of the crop is delivered in good order; but from the unavoidable effects of a storm, a small part is delivered in a damaged condition, and another small portion is lost. In an action by the carrier for the freight, he is entitled to recover under the common indebitatus count, the agreed price for the whole quantity so delivered or lost.

This was an action of assumpsit in the Circuit court of Goochland county by Peter J. Archer against James and William Galt. The suit abated as to the latter by the return of "No inhabitant" upon the writ. The object of the action was to recover the freight upon certain wheat and tobacco and other articles, which the plaintiff had contracted to carry on his boat from the farms of the defendants on James river to Richmond. The declaration contained only the common indebitatus count.

On the trial of the cause, after the plaintiff had offered evidence for the purpose of proving that a contract had been entered into between James and William Galt and himself, by which he undertook as common carrier, to receive of them their crop of wheat, and to deliver the same to the consignees in Richmond for a freight of 12½ cents per bushel; and that in pursuance of this contract he did receive the said crop and deliver a part thereof, but that the whole of the crop was not delivered to the consignees, and that a portion of that which was delivered was in an unsound and damaged condition; and among other evidence introduced a letter from William Galt to himself, and an account accompanying it, which shewed that the matter of difference between them, was as to the lost and damaged wheat; in connexion therewith and in explanation thereof, offered to introduce a witness to prove that the failure to deliver the whole of said crop and the damaged condition of a part of that delivered, resulted from inevitable accident, to wit, a storm, by which a portion of said wheat whilst in the hands of the plaintiff as common carrier was ducked in James river. To the introduction of which testimony under the pleadings in this cause, the defendant by his counsel objected; but the Court overruled the objection and admitted the testimony; and the defendant excepted.

After the evidence referred to in the first bill of exceptions had been introduced, which, with the bill of particulars, was all the evidence in the cause, the defendant by his counsel moved the Court to instruct the jury as follows: "If, from the evidence, the jury shall believe that a portion of the wheat for which freight is charged was not delivered, and a part of it was damaged and delivered to the consignee in an unsound state, then the plaintiff is not in this cause entitled to recover the freight for wheat at the rate of 12½ cents per bushel, as claimed by him in the account filed in the cause." But the Court overruled the motion and gave the following instruction, viz: "If, from the evidence, the jury shall believe that a portion of the wheat for which the freight is charged was not delivered, and a part of it was damaged and delivered to the consignee in an unsound state, then the plaintiff is not in this cause entitled to recover the freight for wheat at the rate of 12½ cents per bushel, as claimed by him in the account filed in the cause, unless the jury shall believe from the evidence, that the loss and damage were occasioned by inevitable accident; and not by the negligence of the plaintiff. And if the jury shall believe from the evidence, that the loss and damage were occasioned by the negligence of the plaintiff, or could have been prevented by proper care and diligence on the part of the plaintiff, then the defendant is entitled to the full amount of the loss and damage by way of set off." To the opinion of the Court refusing the instruction asked, and giving the other, the defendant again excepted.

There was a verdict and judgment in favour of the plaintiff for 172 dollars 72 cents, with interest thereon from the 22d of July 1839, till paid; and thereupon Galt applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellant, insisted, that in this case the special contract had not been completely executed; and therefore, that the plaintiff below was not entitled to recover upon it, under the common indebitatus count. Hulle v. Heightman, 2 East's R. 145; Algeo v. Algeo, 10 Serg. & Rawle 235; Donaldson v. Fuller, 3 Id. 505; Jennings v. Camp, 13 John. R. 94; Harris v. Liggett, 1 Watts & Serg. 301; Brown, &c. v. Ralston, &c., 9 Leigh 532.

Grattan, for the appellee, insisted, that the indebitatus count was sufficient in this case to let in either the special contract or the quantum meruit. 1 Chitty's Plead. 333, 337, 339; Brooke v. White, 4 Bos. & Pul. 330; Payne v. Bacomb, 2 Doug. R. 651; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cranch's R. 297; Brooks v. Scott, 2 Munf. 344; Brown, &c. v. Ralston, &c., 9 Leigh 532; 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 24, 44 Law Lib.

By the Court. The judgment is affirmed.

Fleming v. Toler.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

1. Pleading and Practice—Bonds—Special Plea in Nature of Plea of Set-Off—Case at Bar.—In an action on a bond given for the price of a slave, a special plea under the act of 1831 is good, which avers in general terms, that the slave was unsound at the time of the sale, and that the plaintiff knew the fact and fraudulently concealed it from the defendant; and that upon discovering the fact the defendant offered to return the slave and demanded a rescission of the contract, which plaintiff refused; laying the damages to the whole amount of the price, or not laying any damages, and praying for judgment in bar of the action.

2. Same—Same—Same—What May Be Proved under.—If such a special plea avers in general terms the unsoundness of the slave, and then adds a specific unsoundness, the defendant may under this plea, prove any unsoundness; and is not confined to the specific unsoundness mentioned in the plea.

3. Same—Same—Same—Case at Bar.—Where a plea under the statute is filed, and another is tendered, which only varies from the first in the amount of damages laid, or in asking to rescind the contract entirely, the rejection of this last by the Court is not ground for reversing the judgment upon appeal, where the verdict negatives the facts stated in both pleas.

4. Same—Same—Penalty and Condition of Same—How Treated.—The penalty and condition of a bond for the payment of money, is in the same sum. It is proper to treat it as a single bill, and to give judgment for the amount of the bond with interest from the time of payment.

This was an action of debt in the Circuit court of Goochland county, brought by William T. Toler, administrator of William Toler deceased, against Tarlton Fleming and John B. Pemberton. The action was founded on the following bond:

“Know all men by these presents, that we, Tarlton Fleming and John B. Pemberton are held and firmly bound unto William T. Toler, administrator of William
311 *Toler deceased, in the just and full sum of eleven hundred dollars, to be paid unto the said William T. Toler, administrator of the said William Toler deceased, his certain attorney, his executors, administrators and assigns; to which payment well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors and administrators, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our seals, and dated this 23d day of October one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight. The condition of the above

Pleading and Practice—Bonds—Special Plea in the Nature of Plea of Set-Off.—On this question, see principal case cited in foot-note to Watkins v. Hopkins, 13 Gratt. 743, where there is a collection of the cases and a discussion of the authorities; foot-note to Huff v. Broyles, 26 Gratt. 283; Binns v. Waddill, 32 Gratt. 593; Grayson v. Buchanan, 88 Va. 257, 13 S. E. Rep. 457; Fisher v. Burdett, 21 W. Va. 630. The principal case is cited in Newberry v. Williams, 89 Va. 302, 15 S. E. Rep. 865.

obligation is such, that if the above bound Tarlton Fleming and John B. Pemberton, their heirs, executors or administrators, do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said William T. Toler, administrator of said William Toler deceased, his certain attorney, his executors, administrators or assigns, the just sum of eleven hundred dollars, twelve months after the date hereof, then the above obligation to be void, or else to remain in full force and virtue.

Tarlton Fleming, [Seal.]
John B. Pemberton, [Seal.]”

Fleming appeared and filed a plea of payment; and at a subsequent term he filed a special plea under the statute. In this plea he alleged that the bond sued on was executed by the defendants to the plaintiff for the price of a negro man slave, sold by the plaintiff to Fleming, for the sum of 1100 dollars; Fleming then believing that the slave was sound and healthy and free from blemish. That at the time of said sale, the slave was defective in this: that he was diseased; and was constitutionally liable to periodical returns of bilious colick once every week, and so continued to be; of which defect plaintiff was informed at the time of the sale, and fraudulently concealed his knowledge of said defect, and the fact of said defect from the defendant Fleming, whereby Fleming was induced to purchase 312 chase *said slave of the plaintiff as a sound slave, without any defect; and the defendant averred that the defect lessened the value of the slave 900 dollars, which the defendant proposed to set off against the debt declared upon. Upon this plea, and that of payment, the plaintiff took issue.

At another term of the Court the defendant tendered two other special pleas under the statute. The first after stating as in the special plea filed, the execution of the bond for the price of a negro man slave, sold by the plaintiff to the defendant Fleming, averred that on the day of sale the slave was unsound, defective and constitutionally diseased, and still continued to be so. That at the time of said sale the plaintiff well knowing that the slave was so unsound, defective and diseased as aforesaid, did not disclose the same to the defendant, but fraudulently concealed the same and all knowledge on the part of him, the plaintiff, in relation thereto from the defendant; by means whereof the defendant believing that the said slave was sound, healthy and free from blemish, was induced to purchase and did purchase the slave as a healthy slave at the price of 1100 dollars. That after the sale and purchase, and as soon as defendant discovered that the slave was so unsound, defective and diseased as aforesaid, viz.: on &c., he apprised the plaintiff thereof, and notified him that he should resist the payment of the bond executed by him to the plaintiff as aforesaid. And that after he had so discovered that the slave was unsound, and within a reasonable time thereafter, viz.: on the 24th of October 1839, he offered to return the said slave to the plaintiff, and demanded a rescission of the said contract of sale, and the surrender to him by the plaintiff of said bond; but the plaintiff then and there refused to comply with such demand, or to surrender the said bond. That defendant had always been ready and willing to return the said slave and receive back *his bond, and was willing still so to do. Whereby defendant had sustained damage to the whole amount mentioned in the bond, viz.: 1100 dollars, with interest thereon from the 23d of October 1839 till paid. Wherefore he prayed judgment, and that the plaintiff be barred to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against him.

The second plea tendered only varied from the first by the omission of the averment of damages. The Court rejected both the pleas, and the defendant excepted.

When the cause came on for trial the jury found a verdict as follows: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff the debt in the declaration mentioned, with interest thereon, from the 23d of October 1839 till paid." And on this verdict the Court rendered a judgment, that the plaintiff recover against the defendants eleven hundred dollars, the debt in the declaration mentioned, with six per cent. per annum interest thereon from the 23d day of October 1839 till paid, and his costs by him about his suit in this behalf expended. From this judgment Fleming applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellant, insisted that the pleas tendered and rejected stated a valid defence to the action on the bond; and if sustained entitled the defendant below to a total rescission of the contract. And for this they referred to Lewis v. Cosgrave, 2 Taunt. R. 2; Thornton v. Wynn, 12 Wheat. R. 183; Burton v. Stuart, 3 Wend. R. 236; Street v. Blay, 22 Eng. C. L. R. 122; 1 Smith's Leading Cases, p. 155, 157, note to Chandellor v. Lopus; Story on Sales, § 405, 408, 411, 420, 426. That in this respect they differed from the special plea filed; and they also differed from that plea, in the fact that under that plea the defence was confined to the proof of the specific *disease mentioned therein; whereas under the special pleas tendered, any legal unsoundness might have been proved. As to the second of the pleas, they insisted the omission of the averment of damage was not a defect in the plea. That going for a rescission, the averment of damage was out of place; and that the statute authorized the defendant to insist upon the entire rescission of the contract. And they insisted further, that the plea set out a valid defence at common law. This they argued upon principle; and also referred to Hayne v. Maltby, 3 T. R. 438.

2d. They insisted further that it was error to enter the judgment for the amount due with continuing interest, the action being on a bond with a penalty. Tennants v. Gray, 5 Munf. 494.

Lyons and Grattan, for the appellee, insisted that the pleas tendered and rejected were defective, and therefore properly rejected. That the statute authorizes a plea of set off, and not a plea in bar, and these pleas are pleas in bar. That it is true that fraud and injury may be proved to the extent of the whole price, but to do this the thing must be worthless or he must return it within reasonable time. Story on Sales, § 427; Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. R. 283; Holbrook v. Burt, 22 Id. 546; Kingsley v. Wallis, 2 Shepl. R. 57. And they insisted Fleming did not offer to return the slave within reasonable time.

They insisted further, that if the rejected pleas were good, the same defence could have been made under the special plea filed. That there was in this plea a general charge of disease as well as the specific disease named, and that the proof was not necessarily confined to the specific disease mentioned. And under this plea defendant might have proved that the slave was of no value and thus have defeated the action. Beecker v. Vrooman, 13 John. R. 302; Lewis v. Cosgrave, 2 Taunt. R. 4. That the second plea was defective under the statute for want of an averment of damages; and it was not good as a plea at common law. Taylor v. King, 6 Munf. 358.

2d. They insisted further, that the judgment was correct. That the act 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 80, p. 508, authorized the jury to fix the period when interest should commence to run; and they referred to Davies v. Miller, 1 Call 127; Francis v. Wilson, 1 Ryan & Moody 105.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that the pleas tendered by the plaintiff in error, and set out in his first and second bills of exceptions, were good in form and substance, and presented a proper defence to the action; and as the same were not objected to on account of the time at which they were offered, they should have been received. But the gravamen of each of said pleas was the unsoundness of the slave, a fact also put in issue by the special plea on which issue was joined; it being competent for the plaintiff in error on the issue joined on that plea, to have given any evidence of general unsoundness, notwithstanding the plea, in addition to the averment that the slave was defective and diseased, also specified a particular disease. As all the pleas concurred in resting on the proof of the existence of a disease or defect amounting to unsoundness, and that such defect, though known to the defendant in error, was fraudulently concealed by him; and differed merely as to the measure of relief resulting from the establishment of the facts aforesaid; and the existence of such facts being negatived by the finding of the jury on the plea putting the existence of such facts in issue, it is manifest the plaintiff in error was not prejudiced by the rejection of said pleas. There is no exception *to the rejection of any testimony offered by him at the trial. If he failed to offer proof which would have been proper under the issue, it was his own fault; he could have offered, and from the whole record it is most probable he did offer, all the proof in his power to sustain his defence, and the verdict of the jury is not objected to: It therefore must be taken as concluding the facts alleged in the pleas which were rejected, and the judgment thereupon was plainly right.

The Court is further of opinion, that although the obligation sued on purports to be a penal bill, yet as the sums named in the penalty and condition correspond, there was no error in treating it as a simple obligation and rendering a verdict and judgment for the amount, with continuing interest from the time the same fell due.

BALDWIN, J., dissented. He thought the Circuit court erred in rejecting the plea in the first bill of exceptions mentioned; that there is nothing in the record to shew that the error was not prejudicial to the plaintiff in error; and that the judgment ought to be reversed.

Judgment affirmed.

317 *Dabney & Wife & als. v. Kennedy.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and DANIEL,* J.)

1. Husband and Wife—Agreement in Contemplation of Marriage Unrecorded—Effect as to Creditors—Between Parties—Specific Execution.†—An agreement made in contemplation of marriage, though void against creditors because not recorded, is valid between the parties; and the wife and children for whose benefit it is made, may call for a specific execution of the agreement, if there is no existing creditor or purchaser whose rights will be affected by it, though the marital rights of the husband has attached by an actual reduction of the property into his actual possession.

2. Same—Same—Suit to Obtain Possession of Wife's Property.—In a suit by husband and wife against the executor of her father, to obtain possession of her property, there is a decree directing the executor to deliver it to the husband and wife, to be held by them subject to the uses and stipulations of a marriage agreement entered into by them before marriage, but unrecorded. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same—Decree—Marital Rights of Husband.—The decree did in effect set up and execute the marriage agreement; the marital rights of the husband were thereby intercepted; and the property taken and received in virtue of the said decree, was thereafter held by the husband and wife as trustees under said decree for the purposes of the agreement; and not by the husband in his character of husband alone.

*JUDGE DANIEL was related to one of the parties.

†See principal case cited in Glazebrook v. Ragland, 8 Gratt. 340. See also, monographic note on "Husband and Wife" appended to Cleland v. Watson, 10 Gratt 159.

2. Same—Same—Same—Same—Failure to Record—Effect.—That the validity of the decree is not impaired by the failure to record it in the county where the property was situated or the parties resided; and the rights acquired in virtue of the decree are good and valid against the subsequent creditors of the husband.

3. Same—Same—Suit against Administrator of Husband—Case at Bar.—After the death of the husband the wife and children file a bill against his administrator to recover the property covered by the decree which remained, and for satisfaction for that which had been wasted by the husband; and there is a decree in their favour. HELD: Such recovery of the property undisposed of, and for the value of such as was wasted, is conclusive against the administrator and creditors of the husband.

318 *A marriage being about to occur between John H. Lee and Elizabeth Prosser, and she being entitled to a considerable estate, real and personal, by bequest from her father, the parties entered into articles under seal, bearing date the 5th day of December 1825, by which it was agreed between them, that all the estate, real and personal, to which the said Elizabeth was entitled should be secured to and settled upon her and her heirs. And Lee covenanted that all the said estate should remain in the possession of the said Elizabeth during the continuance of the intended marriage; and the annual proceeds thereof only should be applied to the maintenance of the said Lee and the said Elizabeth and their issue. And he further covenanted not to sell any part of the property except for the purpose of reinvestment or appropriation within the meaning of the articles. And it was further agreed that if Lee died in the lifetime of the said Elizabeth, leaving issue by her, any issue she might have by a subsequent marriage should share equally with his children in the property; and if there should be no issue of the marriage, and Mrs. Lee died in the lifetime of her husband, then the whole of the aforesaid estate, whether real or personal, should go to such persons as the said Elizabeth by her last will, or by any other instrument, properly attested, should appoint. This agreement was not admitted to record.

The marriage took place, and shortly thereafter, in January 1826, a bill was filed in the Chancery court at Richmond in the name of Lee and wife against Edmund W. Rootes, the executor of John Prosser, the father of Mrs. Lee, in which, after stating the provisions of the will of the father, they say they have applied to the executor to pay to them the female plaintiff's share of the property, but he declined to do it without the authority of the Court, because he doubted whether he could properly deliver to the complainants the property of the female complainant because of the

319 articles of *agreement aforesaid. The articles were exhibited with the bill; and the question was submitted to the Court whether they created any obstacle to the transfer by the executor of the property to the complainants. They say it was not designed by the articles to interfere with the right of Lee to have possession during the marriage, and during his life, of all and every part of the property of the complainant Elizabeth.

The executor answered the bill, expressing his anxiety to deliver over the property in his possession belonging to Mrs. Lee to whomsoever the Court might appoint to receive the same, and give a legal discharge therefor. And when the cause came on to be finally heard on the 4th of February 1826, it was decreed that the plaintiffs should hold the real estate and slaves, and also the bank stocks and money transferred and paid to them by the executor, subject to the uses and stipulations of the marriage agreement.

John H. Lee died in July 1832, leaving Mrs. Lee and two children of the marriage surviving him; and John Tabb qualified as administrator upon his estate. In 1833 Mrs. Lee for herself, and as next friend of her two infant children, filed their bill in the Circuit court of Norfolk county against Tabb as the administrator of John H. Lee, in which she set out the execution of the marriage agreement and the suit against Rootes as executor of Prosser. She charged that Lee had with the proceeds of some of the trust property purchased certain slaves named, of which he died possessed; that he had sold too, fifty-four shares of bank stock for 5292 dollars; and held other moneys of the trust fund amounting together to 15,192 dollars. And she prayed that Tabb as the administrator of Lee might be restrained from setting up any title to the slaves purchased as aforesaid by Lee; and that they might be so disposed of as to satisfy all rights in them under the trust.

And she asked that Lee's estate might be held *responsible for so much of the trust moneys as he had received and wasted.

Tabb answered the bill, admitting the facts stated in the bill, and submitting the case to the Court upon the law, for such a decree as should be consistent with his safety as administrator, and the rights of the parties.

The cause came on to be heard in June 1833, when the Court held that the marriage articles were valid in equity as between the parties thereto, and that the estate of John H. Lee was responsible for their violation by him; and the plaintiff being willing to take a decree against the estate of Lee in the hands of the administrator Tabb, without taking an administration account, the Court decreed that the administrator should convey to trustees named, the slaves mentioned in the bill, to be held by them as trustees for the purposes, objects and intents of the marriage articles; and that the administrator should, out of the assets of his intestate in his hands, pay to the same trustees the sum of 15,192 dollars, to be held or invested by them for the same objects, purposes and intents. Upon this decree Tabb transferred to the trustees the slaves mentioned therein; and paid to Mrs. Lee 442 dollars 13 cents, in part of the 15,192 dollars, which he as administrator of Lee was decreed to pay to her. And there seems to have been no further or other assets remaining in his hands.

At the time of John H. Lee's death Edmund P. Kennedy was his surety as endorser on a negotiable note for 1800 dollars discounted at the Bank of Virginia at Norfolk, for the accommodation of Lee. On this note the bank instituted an action at law against Kennedy, and recovered a judgment against him in November 1832; and in June 1833, Kennedy being taken in execution took the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors. Upon this proceeding there seems to have been made the sum of 277 dollars 84 cents, credited *the 16th of July; and it appears by a receipt of the president of the bank, bearing date the 22d of May 1838, that Kennedy then paid the balance of the judgment, amounting to 2104 dollars 15 cents.

In October 1838, Kennedy instituted an action in the Circuit court of Norfolk borough against Tabb as the administrator of Lee, to recover the amount which he alleged he had paid as the surety of Lee; and Tabb having pleaded non assumpsit, and fully administered, on which pleas issues were made up, on the trial the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on the first, and for the defendant on the second issue; and there was a judgment quando, for the plaintiff for 2381 dollars 99 cents, with interest on 277 dollars 84 cents, a part thereof, from the 16th of July 1833, until paid, and on 2104 dollars 15 cents, another part thereof, from the 22d of May 1838, until paid.

Mrs. Lee having intermarried with Chiswell Dabney of Lynchburg, Kennedy in October 1840, filed his bill in the Circuit court of the borough of Norfolk against Dabney and wife and her children, and the trustees, and Tabb as administrator of Lee, for the purpose of subjecting the slaves conveyed to the trustees, and the money paid to Mrs. Lee, under the decree of June 1833, in her suit against Tabb as the administrator of Lee, to the satisfaction of his judgment against the administrator. In his bill, after referring to the marriage articles and Mrs. Lee's suit against Tabb as administrator of Lee, he charged that the marriage articles and all the proceedings in said suit were fraudulent and void as to him; and that the marriage articles never having been recorded, were fraudulent in law as to him as a creditor of Lee.

Dabney and wife in their answer, called for proof that Kennedy was the creditor of Lee. They insisted that the marriage articles were valid in equity though not *recorded; and they further relied on the proceedings and decree in the case of Lee and wife against the executor of Prosser, as giving it validity. They utterly denied all fraud in procuring the decree of June 1833; and they pleaded the statute of limitations. Tabb also answered, denying all fraud if any was charged.

The facts hereinbefore stated all appear in the pleadings and proofs. And the cause came on to be heard in June 1842, when the Court held that the marriage articles were as to the complainant's demand, fraudulent and void, at least so far as to entitle him to satisfaction out of the slaves mentioned in the decree of June 1833; and decreed that unless Dabney should pay to the complainant the sum of 2381 dollars 99 cents, with its interest, and his costs at law and in this suit, within sixty days from the rising of the Court, then that he should deliver up the slaves aforesaid to the sergeant of the Court to be sold for the payment of said debt, interest and costs. And the sergeant was directed to sell the slaves on twenty days notice, at public auction, and out of the proceeds to pay the complainant. And liberty was reserved to the complainant to ask for a further decree against the defendants, if it should become necessary. From this decree the defendants, except the administrator Tabb, applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Patton, for the appellants, insisted:

1st. That even if the marriage contract, by itself, was void against creditors of the husband because not recorded, yet it was affirmed by the decree of February 1826, in the case of Lee and wife against Prosser's executor. That the decree established the marriage articles, and that the property went into the possession of Lee and wife by virtue of that decree, and in pursuance thereof, upon the trusts of the marriage articles; and was not in possession of 323 Lee as the husband *of Mrs. Lee:
And there was no statute which required the decree to be recorded.

2d. That although the statute required deeds of marriage settlements to be recorded, that statute did not apply to marriage articles; upon the principle affirmed in the case of Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407.

3d. That the marriage articles were at least valid as between Lee and his wife and children; and he having appropriated the trust property was their debtor. That the bill filed by them against Tabb the administrator of Lee, was the bill of creditors of Lee, and the decree was a decree in favour of creditors; and it was not competent for creditors of even higher dignity to recover from them what they had received under the decree of the Court, and which as creditors of Lee they were legally and justly entitled to demand and have from his estate.

T. Taylor, for the appellee, insisted:

1st. That the suit brought by Lee and wife against Prosser's executor, was not a suit to have the estate settled on Mrs. Lee, but to relieve the executor from any difficulty in delivering over the property of Mrs. Lee to her husband. That the bill shewed the plaintiff's intention to hold under the articles and not under the decree; otherwise the Court would not have made the decree rendered in 1826, but would have appointed a trustee. That the decree could not, therefore, give validity to the marriage articles against creditors.

2d. That the decree of 1833 against Tabb the administrator of Lee did not affect the rights of the appellee; who was not even a creditor of Lee at that time. That the decree, as between the parties to it, was proper; but it did not affect the rights of creditors who were no parties to it. These creditors were entitled to pursue the assets in the hands of the wife and children or their trustees. Gillespie v. Alexander, 1 *Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 388; March v. Russell, 14 Id. 31; Neafie v. Neafie, 7 John. Ch. R. 1; M'Call v. Harrison, 1 Brock. R. 126; Boyd v. Stainback, 5 Munf. 305; 2 Wms. Ex'ors 893; Story's Eq. Pl. § 793; 2 Spence's Eq. p. 297.

MONCURE, J. I feel myself compelled to dissent from the opinion of a majority of the Court in this case. The marriage agreement made between John H. Lee and Elizabeth his wife, on the 5th day of December 1825, not having been recorded, was, according to the decision of this Court in the case of Thomas v. Gaines, 1 Gratt. 347, void as to his creditors. Does it derive any validity as against those creditors, from the decree of the Richmond Chancery court of the 4th of February 1826? Or does that decree, proprio vigore, make the claims of those who claim under the agreement, paramount to the claims of the said creditors? I think not. It is unnecessary to enquire in this case what would be the effect on the claims of the husband's creditors, of a decree in an adversary suit, brought by the wife against her husband to enforce the execution of an ante-nuptial agreement between them. Nor whether a deed executed in pursuance of such a decree, or of a decree for a settlement, rendered in a suit in which the wife's equity could properly be administered, would be good against the husband's creditors, without being recorded. There would be much room for contending in such a case, that both the letter and the spirit of the statute required the recordation of the deed. On that question, however, I express no opinion. It is enough to say that this is not such a case. The suit in which the decree of the 4th of February 1826 was rendered was not an adversary suit, as between husband and wife, if adversary as to any person. It was brought by husband and wife in about a month after their marriage, to 325 recover of her father's executor her portion of *his estate, real and personal. It was not brought to enforce the execution of the ante-nuptial agreement. There had been no refusal and was no unwillingness on the part of the husband to execute it. Suppose it had been executed by the execution of a deed conveying the property to a trustee for the purposes of the agreement. Would not the recordation of that deed have been necessary to give it effect against the husband's creditors? The agreement was referred to in the bill because it was a binding agreement between the parties, and the husband was willing the property should be received and held subject to the uses therein declared. Whether the suit would have been brought if there had been no agreement does not positively appear. The nature of the wife's property and the provisions of her father's will might have rendered such suit necessary. It seems that the portions of the older children had been assigned and paid to them under the order of the Chancery court. However this may be, the executor did not refuse to assign and pay the wife's portion to the husband in this case for the purpose of enforcing the execution of the agreement, or a settlement by him on her. The bill states that the executor doubted whether he could properly deliver to the complainant the share of the wife, because he had been informed of the ante-nuptial agreement. The agreement is then exhibited, and the complainants pray that the share of the wife may be assigned and paid to them. The executor probably doubted whether the husband could give him a valid discharge under the agreement, and in his answer stated that he was willing and anxious to surrender her portion of her father's estate to whomsoever the Court might appoint to receive the same and give him a legal discharge. And the Court decreed that the plaintiffs hold the real estate and slaves allotted to them in right of the female plaintiff, subject to the use and stipulations of the *marriage agreement.

I think this decree was merely a recognition of the agreement, and cannot operate as notice to creditors and purchasers, or dispense with the necessity of recording the agreement according to the requisition of the statute. I cannot see how such a recognition can have any greater effect on the rights of creditors than a deed executed by the husband in pursuance of the agreement, which it will be admitted would not affect those rights without being recorded. It seems to me that it would be strange indeed if a decree for the plaintiffs in a suit brought to recover property on an agreement binding on the parties, but not as to creditors because not recorded, should have the effect of setting up the unrecorded agreement against the creditors. This would be against the policy of the statutes of registration, the overruling influence of which is so great, that, as was decided by this Court in Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. 93, the pendency of a suit to set up an unrecorded deed which is required by law to be recorded, will not affect a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration without actual notice.

The agreement then being void as to creditors, notwithstanding the decree of the 4th of February 1826, is it rendered valid as to them by the decree of June 1833? Or does that decree proprio vigore bind the creditors of Lee? I think not. The agreement and decree of 1826 being void as to the creditors of Lee at the time of his death, that event rendered it impossible to set up the agreement against those creditors.

Their rights to the legal administration of Lee's estate, of which the trust subject was part as to them, became then fixed, and could not be changed by the subsequent recordation of the deed or recovery of the subject by the wife. The agreement being valid inter partes, the trust subject did not devolve on the executor of Lee, or if it did, he held it as trustee in equity *for the benefit of the wife. He could not resist her suit against him for it, and therefore he was properly decreed to render it to her by the decree of 1833. But that decree declares the deed valid as between the parties thereto, and not as to creditors; and the Court which pronounced it did not intend "to intimate any opinion as to the effect of the marriage contract as to the creditors of Lee," as appears by a copy of the opinion contained in the record. Supposing the agreement then to be void as to creditors, notwithstanding the decrees of 1826 and 1833, the wife held the property after its recovery by her as executrix de son tort as to her husband's creditors, and those creditors had a right to subject it to the payment of their claims after exhausting the assets in the hands of the legal executor. Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 384; Boyd v. Stainback, 5 Munf. 305; and Shields v. Anderson, 3 Leigh 729. Kennedy is a creditor of Lee, and he established his claim by judgment against the executor, which is at least prima facie evidence against the executrix de son tort. The assets in the hands of the rightful executor have been exhausted. The act of limitations interposes no bar in favour of the executrix de son tort, and I therefore think that the subject is liable for the payment of the appellee's claim, and that the decree in his favour should be affirmed.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that the agreement entered into on the 5th December 1825 between John H. Lee and the appellant Elizabeth, in contemplation of marriage, was a valid agreement between the parties; that although for want of recordation the same would have been void as against the creditors of the said John H. Lee, it was nevertheless competent for the wife and children provided for in said agreement, to have called for the specific execution of said agreement; and if *there was no existing creditor or purchaser whose rights would have been affected thereby, there could have been no objection to such specific execution, even although the marital rights of the husband had attached by a reduction of the property into his actual possession. It would have been competent under such circumstances for the husband to have made a voluntary settlement, which, if duly recorded, would have been good against subsequent creditors; and a decree for the specific execution of an agreement, made in consideration of marriage where there was no existing creditor or purchaser to be affected is equally free from objection. The Court is further of opinion, that in this case the wife and children occupy a more favourable position than in the case supposed of an agreement in respect to, or a voluntary settlement of, property upon which the marital rights of the husband had attached by a reduction of the property into possession. Inasmuch as it became necessary here to apply to the Court of chancery for its aid in reducing the property into possession, it would have been competent for such Court in a proper case to have required a settlement even in the absence of any marriage contract, as a condition upon which it would interpose. The Court is further of opinion, that by the bill exhibited in the late Superior court of chancery for the Richmond district by the said John H. Lee and Elizabeth his wife, against Edmund Rootes executor of John Prosser deceased, for a division and allotment and delivery to the plaintiffs of her portion of said Elizabeth in the estate of her father, the rights of said Elizabeth and her children under said marriage agreement were brought directly to the consideration of the Court; that by the issue made up by the bill, answer and proceedings in said cause, it was proper for the Court to determine and adjudicate upon the legal effect of said agreement. The Court is further of opinion, that when 329 *by the interlocutory decree and by the final decree pronounced in said cause on the 4th of February 1826, the property of said Elizabeth was decreed to be delivered over to the said John H. Lee and Elizabeth his wife, to be held by them subject to the use and stipulations of said marriage agreement, the decree in effect did set up and execute said marriage agreement; the marital rights of the husband were thereby intercepted; and the property taken and received in virtue of said decree was thereafter held by said John H. Lee and wife as trustees under said decree for the purposes of said agreement; and not by the said John H. Lee in his character of husband alone. The Court is further of opinion, that the validity of said decree was not impaired by the failure to register the same in the county where the property was situate or found, or the parties resided; and the rights acquired in virtue of said decree are good and valid as against the subsequent creditors of the said John H. Lee. The Court is therefore of opinion, it was not competent for the appellee, a subsequent creditor of the said John H. Lee, to assail the validity of said marriage contract so as aforesaid established by the decree of the 4th of February 1826, because said contract and decree had not been duly recorded.

The Court is further of opinion, that when after the death of said John H. Lee, the widow and children filed their bill against the personal representative of said John H. Lee and obtained a decree for the recovery of such of the property as remained undisposed of, and for the value of such as had been wasted by said Lee, they asserted a claim to such undisposed of property by a title paramount to the title of the personal representative; and their title being valid under and in virtue of the decree of the 4th of February 1826 aforesaid, such recovery of the property undisposed of, and for the value of such as was wasted, is conclusive against said administrator of John H. Lee. 330 Lee *and the creditors of said Lee, who became such after the decree of the 4th of February 1826; there being no allegation that said decree against the administrator of John H. Lee was collusive. The Court is therefore of opinion said decree is erroneous; reversed with costs: And this Court proceeding, &c. Bill dismissed with costs.

Tucker v. Daly, Assignee.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and ALLEN, J.)

Bonds—Assignment*—Case at Bar.—Y agrees with D to assign to D a bond held by Y, to indemnify D for becoming his surety; but the bond not being present, is not then delivered to D. Afterwards Y commits an act of bankruptcy, upon which he is duly declared a bankrupt. After committing the act of bankruptcy, Y writes upon the bond an assignment of it to D, and delivers it to D, who collects the money from the obligor. HELD: D is entitled to hold the money as against the general assignee of the bankrupt.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought in the Circuit court of Mecklenburg county by J. J. Daly, assignee of J. Murray Yates, a bankrupt, against Henry Tucker. On the trial the jury found a special verdict, which set out the following facts, viz:

That the defendant received from John G. Oliver the sum of 470 dollars 86 cents, that being the amount of a bond executed by Oliver to J. Murray Yates. That on the 17th of December 1841, the defendant became the surety of Yates in a bond to 331 E. James & Co. for *the sum of 222 dollars 78 cents, in consideration of the promise of Yates to assign to him the bond aforesaid, and other papers, to indemnify him for thus becoming his surety, and for previous liabilities of the defendant as surety for Yates. That the bond of Oliver was not then delivered to the defendant, it not being then present; but was retained by Yates, and remained in his possession until after the 30th of May 1842. That Yates on the 4th of May 1842, committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was thereafter duly declared a bankrupt; and the plaintiff was appointed his assignee in bankruptcy. That after this act of bankruptcy, Yates wrote an assignment on the bond of Oliver to the defendant; and after the 30th of May 1842, for the first time delivered the bond to the defendant.

On this special verdict the Court rendered a judgment in favour of the plaintiff for 470 dollars 86 cents, with interest from the 21st October 1843 till paid, and his costs. Whereupon the defendant applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was granted.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellant, admitted that the judgment was in accordance with the decisions in England; but they insisted that the English decisions were founded upon a provision of the English statute to which there was no similar provision in the act of Congress: and that in cases not coming within that provision, the English decisions were opposed to the judgment in this case. They referred to Mogg v. Baker, 3 Mees. & Welsb. 194; Winsor v. M'Lellan, 2 Story's R. 492; Mitchell v. Winslow, Id. 630; Winsor v. Kendall, 3 Id. 507.

J. Alfred Jones, for the appellee, insisted, that the agreement between the appellee and Yates, did not constitute such an equitable assignment of the bond as was protected by the act of Congress. He referred to Foster v. Lowell*, 4 Mass. R. 308; Anderson v. Temple, 4 Burr. R. 2235; Hague v. Rolleston, Id. 2174.

DANIEL, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

This Court is of opinion, that by virtue of the agreement between the plaintiff in error and John Murray Yates, and the conduct of the said parties in reference thereto, set forth in the special verdict, the plaintiff in error acquired a right to have an assignment of the bond of Oliver, and a lien upon its avails, which a Court of equity would, as between the parties, have respected and enforced: That whilst, by the third section of the act of Congress, entitled "an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved the 19th August 1841, the defendant in error, was, under the decree of bankruptcy in said verdict mentioned, vested with all the property and rights of property of the said Yates; yet, that by a just construction of said section, he took said property and rights of property subject to all the equities which had attached thereto prior to the act of bankruptcy on which the decree aforesaid was founded; and by the express terms of the proviso of the second section of the act aforesaid, of the 19th August 1841, held the same subject to all liens, mortgages and securities which were valid by the laws of this State, and which were not inconsistent with the provisions of said act.

The special verdict does not disclose the pecuniary condition of the said Yates at the time the agreement before mentioned was made, nor does it find any facts or circumstances that would justify this Court in inferring that the said agreement was made in contemplation of bankruptcy, or that the conduct of the parties to it was in any respect inconsistent with the provisions and requirements of the said act of Congress.

333 *The Court is also further of opinion, that notwithstanding the act of bankruptcy committed by Yates, and the decree of bankruptcy consequent thereupon, there was nothing to restrain him from proceeding to execute and perfect, on his part, the agreement between him and Tucker; but that on the contrary, equity and good conscience required that he should do so; and that by virtue of the actual assignment and delivery of the said bond of Oliver, and of the preceding agreement and transactions in reference thereto, the said Tucker acquired a complete right to enforce the collection of said bond, and to hold its proceeds as an indemnity against the suretyships and liabilities in the verdict mentioned, which he had undertaken on account of the said Yates. The Court is therefore further of opinion, that the Circuit court erred in pronouncing the law upon the special verdict to be for the defendant in error, and in rendering the judgment thereon in his favour.

Judgment of the Circuit court reversed, with costs; and this Court proceeding to render such judgment as said Court ought to have rendered, judgment for the plaintiff in error, on the special verdict, with costs, &c.

Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances—Donor and Donee—Liability of Property in Hands of Donee.*—

W being largely indebted in proportion to his property, made a gift of slaves to his married daughter; and her husband remained in possession of them for eight years. Judgment having been recovered on some of these debts, and also on other debts contracted since the gift, B became the surety of W in the forthcoming bonds; and was compelled to pay the money. He then recovered judgment against W for the amount so paid by him, and all the property of W having been then sold, by the directions of B, his executions were levied on the slaves given by W to his daughter and their increase. HOLD: The slaves were liable to satisfy the debt of B.

Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances—Settling Aside—Limitation.—In McCue v. McCue, 41 W. Va. 156, 28 S. E. Rep. 691, it is said: "As the grantee parted with no value in consideration thereof, it makes no difference whether she had notice or not of such fraudulent intent; she stands in place of, and on no higher ground than, the grantor. See monographic note on "Fraudulent and Voluntary Conveyances" appended to Cochran v. Paris, 11 Gratt. 348.

This was a suit in equity in the Circuit court of Halifax county, instituted in February 1844 by William Wilson against John Buchanan and the sheriff of Halifax. The bill alleged that some eighteen months or two years before the filing thereof, John Buchanan became the surety of William Webb in a forthcoming bond. That the bond had been forfeited, and by this means Buchanan had obtained a judgment against Webb for the amount of the bond and costs, and had levied his execution on six slaves the property of the plaintiff. That the said slaves were the absolute property of the plaintiff, were born his and on his plantation, with the exception of one of them, and that one he had held as his own for nine or ten years. The prayer of the bill was for an injunction to the sale of the slaves, and for general relief.

Buchanan in his answer, stated that he had been compelled to pay money for Webb as his surety in two *forthcoming bonds, in both of which Easley & Co. for the benefit of Bruce's executor, were plaintiffs. That for the money so paid he had recovered a judgment against Webb; and the execution which had issued thereon had been levied on the property mentioned in the bill by the direction of the defendant. That defendant believed the property was liable to satisfy his execution, as the debts out of which it originated had been contracted by Webb long before the plaintiff had become possessed of the property, for which he never had paid a cent. That after the defendant had become the surety of Webb, the latter had by three several conveyances conveyed all his property to secure other debts which he owed, except the property he had loaned or fraudulently given to the plaintiff. That previous to giving the property in the bill mentioned to the plaintiff, Webb, who was the plaintiff's father-in-law, was largely indebted for a man of his property; and had failed to pay many of the debts he then owed, and among them the debts for which the forthcoming bonds in which defendant was surety were given. That the three oldest of the slaves on which the execution was levied were the property of Webb, and went from his possession to that of the plaintiff; the others were born since.

The evidence shewed that one of the slaves named Martha, who was the mother of the others, and her oldest child then a few weeks old, were given by Webb to his daughter Mrs. Wilson, in April or May 1834, and had been in the possession of Wilson from that time until the execution was levied upon them; and the other slaves had been born in his possession. That at the time Webb gave the woman and child to Mrs. Wilson he owed about 3519 dollars 7 cents, some of which had been due as early as 1825. That his debts had been for some years gradually increasing, up to that time, and continued to increase until 336 1842, when it *amounted, as far as ascertained in this cause, to 5717 dollars 88 cents. That in 1837 and 1838 he executed deeds upon the most of his property to secure debts which he owed. That in 1842 he executed two other deeds for the like purpose; and in November of that year his whole property was sold for the payment of his debts, when the sales amounted upon six months credit, to the sum of 4393 dollars 45 cents: Though some of the witnesses thought that if it had been sold some three or four years earlier it would have produced more money; and Webb thought that if it had been sold in the spring of 1834, after he gave the woman and child to Mrs. Wilson, it would have paid all his debts and left him 1200 dollars. It appeared further that a part of the debts for which Buchanan was the surety of Webb was due at the time of the gift of the slaves.

It seemed probable from the papers in the record that the judgment which Buchanan had recovered against Webb was for more than he had paid for him; but that was a question not noticed in the pleadings or in any way put in issue.

The cause came on to be heard in September 1845, when the Chancellor—Leigh—pronounced the following opinion:

Two questions are presented in this case:

First. Was the gift of the slaves by Webb to the plaintiff fraudulent as to the defendant's debt? And if it was, then, secondly, whether the length of time during which the plaintiff has held the slaves, bars the defendant of the right to levy his execution on them?

In examining the first question, it may be well to enquire whether the debt due to the defendant is to be regarded as a debt existing at the date of the gift, or as a subsequent one? It is clear that the defendant became the surety of Webb on 337 the forthcoming bonds, *long subsequent to the gift; but it is equally clear that by far the greater part of the debts, to satisfy which the forthcoming bonds were executed, was due at the time of the gift. And to the amount of this part of the debts, my opinion is that the debt due to the defendant must be regarded as an existing debt at the time of the gift. A forthcoming bond forfeited is no actual payment of the judgment; Randolph v. Randolph, 3 Rand. 490; and if the forthcoming bonds had proved unproductive, it surely would not be contended that the obligees ought to be regarded as subsequent creditors. The debt has in truth been paid by the defendant; and in some sense, he is a creditor of Webb subsequent to the gift. But Webb has never paid the pre-existing debt; and his donee cannot be in a better situation, because he has by his management compelled the defendant to pay this pre-existing debt. I do not, however, consider it as of much importance whether the debt be a pre-existing or a subsequent one. For in Richardson v. Smallwood, 4 Cond. Eng. Ch. R. 262, it is settled, that if a gift be fraudulent as to previous creditors, it is also fraudulent as to subsequent creditors. Some of the remarks of the Master of the Rolls are so apposite and conclusive, that I will extract a part of them. He says: "Suppose a person to execute a conveyance, such that if those who were creditors at the time complained, it would be void as to them; then if they are paid off, and a new set of creditors stand in their places, does that make any difference? Does it not delay and hinder these creditors, and is it not void as to them? If it be not so, it would be easy to evade the statute: the party may pay off those to whom he is then indebted by borrowing of others, and then he may say to them, I did not make the settlement to defraud you, but to defraud the other persons who were my creditors."

338 *These remarks are made upon a supposed case by no means as strong to shew the unreasonableness of the position he was opposing, as the case actually before me. For the debt due to the defendant is for money which Webb compelled him to pay in discharge of a previous debt. I need hardly add, that this view of the Master of the Rolls is sustained by Judge Baldwin's opinion in Hutchison v. Kelly, 1 Rob. R. 128, and by Atherly, in his treatise on marriage settlements, p. 313. It seems that it was formerly considered by some high authorities to be the law, that every voluntary conveyance was fraudulent in respect to existing creditors. Reade v. Livingston, 3 John. Ch. R. 481, and the cases there cited; Atherly on Mar. Sett. 212-217; 1 Mad. Ch. 218; and Stanard, J., in two recent cases, Huston v. Cantril, 11 Leigh 168, and Hutchison v. Kelly, 1 Rob. R. 128, has expressed the opinion that this is still the correct doctrine. And I have read most of the English cases, and I have no doubt the remark of Chancellor Kent is correct, namely, that there is no English case in which a voluntary gift has been held valid against a pre-existing debt. But notwithstanding this weight of authority, the modern cases seem opposed to this doctrine; and according to them, the question always is, was the gift made with the intent to defraud creditors? Still, if the grantor was so greatly indebted and embarrassed as that the gift put in hazard the debts due to his creditors, it is the presumption of law that the gift was made with intent to defraud creditors. What degree of indebtedness (short of insolvency) will conclusively raise the presumption of the fraudulent intent has never been, and never can be, settled; and this want of some certain rule, will probably give rise to much troublesome litigation, and will result in different decisions on nearly the same state of facts, according to the varying deductions which different Judges may draw from them. It is, however,

339 settled, that a voluntary *gift is not to be sustained merely by proving that the donor was not insolvent at the time of the gift. Indeed, there is but one case which seems to countenance the doctrine that the insolvency of the grantor must be proved in order to invalidate a voluntary gift. That case is Lush v. Wilkerson, 5 Ves. R. 384, in which a subsequent creditor filed his bill to set aside a voluntary settlement; and having failed to prove any antecedent debt, asked for an account to ascertain whether the settler was indebted at the time of the settlement. This Lord Alvanley refused, remarking that the plaintiff had not proved a single antecedent debt; and then added, "a single debt will not do: it must depend on this—whether he was in insolvent circumstances at the time." Such a remark, unsupported by any authority, on such a subject, is surely not entitled to much consideration. It seems to be opposed by the constant course of the Court; for if such was the law, the Court ought, in all doubtful cases, to direct an enquiry to ascertain whether the grantor was in insolvent circumstances. Yet such an enquiry is never directed, unless under very peculiar circumstances. But, in truth, the correctness of the remark is disproved by subsequent cases. Thus, in Richardson v. Smallwood, before cited, the Master of the Rolls said—"I do not conceive it necessary to shew that the party was insolvent." And in Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 384, Green, J., delivering the opinion of the Court, said—"The deeds in question are clearly fraudulent and void as to the creditor of the donor. All except that to Everlyn Beverly, in 1793, were executed when the donor was indebted to a degree of embarrassment, and when the very debt, the satisfaction of which is now claimed, was due; and although he retained enough to satisfy all his debts, and lost a large portion of his personal estate by a calamitous accident, he had no right to throw upon his creditors the hazard of such 340 *an accident, and to provide for his family at their expense." But there can be no necessity to cite particular cases. The whole course of argument upon the cases shews that it is not necessary to prove insolvency in the grantor. If it was, all the laboured reasoning of Chancellors, and Judges, and text-writers, as to the degree of the indebtedness and embarrassment of grantors has been worse than useless; for it has only served to deceive the enquirer. Their labour would have been saved by the single remark, that the insolvency of the grantor must be proved. On the other hand, the modern cases establish that neither a single debt, (unless it be equal, or nearly equal in amount to the value of the donor's estate,) Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. R. 499, nor indebtedness to a considerable amount, if the grantor be not on the eve of insolvency, Bailey's S. Car. R. 585, as cited in 2 Kent's Com. 441, note, will render void a voluntary gift as to the creditors. What state of indebtedness, then, will authorize the presumption that a voluntary gift was made to defraud creditors? I answer, a state of indebtedness which produces embarrassment, and which approaches to insolvency; a state of indebtedness which, if any calamitous accident should happen to the property, or any fall in the price of it should take place, would probably leave the donor without the means of paying his creditors. For a gift made under such circumstances would prove, that the donor was so unmindful of his obligation to his creditors, as fairly to justify the presumption that he designed to defraud them. This appears to me to be the true doctrine, as deduced from the modern cases. Thus it seems that a voluntary gift, made when the donor is in debt, is prima facie fraudulent. George v. Milbanke, 9 Ves. R. 189; Hutchison v. Kelly, 1 Rob. R. 128, Judge Baldwin's opinion. And it is incumbent upon the donee to repel this presumption, which he may 341 do by *proving that the donor was in prosperous and unembarrassed circumstances at the time he made the gift, not considerably indebted, and that the gift was a reasonable provision for the child, according to his state and condition in life, comprehending but a small portion of his estate, and leaving ample unincumbered funds for the payment of his debts. Hinde's lessee v. Longworth, 11 Wheat. R. 199; Salmon v. Bennet, 1 Conn. R. 525; Huston v. Cantril, 11 Leigh 168. But if the donor be loaded with debt, the prima facie presumption of fraud becomes conclusive. Baldwin, J., 1 Rob. R. 128. Such appears to be the now prevailing doctrine: a doctrine which, from the uncertainty as to the degree of indebtedness necessary to authorize the inference of a fraudulent intent, is well calculated to produce litigation; and, what is infinitely worse, to hold out to debtors in doubtful circumstances, the temptation to attempt to provide for their families at the expense of their creditors. And I cannot but think it would have been better to have adhered to the doctrine laid down in Reade v. Livingston, and since so long and so strenuously insisted on and maintained by Chancellor Kent. For either that doctrine or the present uncertain rule must govern, since, I presume, no one will contend that a gift ought to be upheld unless it should be established that it was made with a previous fixed intent to defraud creditors. For if this was established as the true doctrine, the gifts of debtors, not only on the very brink of insolvency, but also lately insolvent, would be maintained; a doctrine which no one who regards a debtor under the least obligation to his creditors, would be willing to sanction.

Let us now examine the case according to the principles deduced from the modern cases.

The Judge then proceeded to examine the evidence in the cause, and held that 342 upon the principles stated *in his opinion the gift was clearly fraudulent as to the defendant's debt. He then proceeded to the consideration of the second question.

I regret that I have not the notes of the plaintiff's counsel on the second question, as I do not know whether he considers the plaintiff's right to the slaves protected by some provision of the act of Assembly for the limitation of actions, or merely from some principle adopted by the Courts for the purpose of discountenancing stale demands.

In examining this case, I have been unable to lay my hands on any direct authority. Yet I am pretty sure there is authority to establish that, so long as the creditor has a right to sue out an execution, the execution may be levied on the property of the debtor, either in his own possession, or in the possession of his fraudulent donee. This has always been my opinion; and upon principle, I think it must be so. For the fraudulent gift of property to defeat creditors is utterly void. 1 Rev. Code, ch. 104, § 2, p. 372. And the creditor has always been permitted to regard the fraudulent gift as a nullity, and to prosecute his legal remedies for the recovery of his demand in like manner as if the fraudulent act had never been done. Baldwin, J., in Hutchison v. Kelly, 1 Rob. R. 128. If the property fraudulently given is, as to the creditors, regarded as the property of the debtor, and if the creditor may prosecute his remedies precisely as if the gift had never been made, it follows that the execution, which issues at the suit of the creditor, may be levied on the property of his debtor, whether the property be in his possession or in the possession of his fraudulent donee. Besides, the act against fraudulent gifts was made for the benefit of creditors; not to change their mode of proceeding, either as to the time of bringing their suits, or in any other manner.

343 *But as to the act of limitations:

I can find no one provision, which has the remotest application to the present question, unless it be the one which limits the time within which creditors are at liberty to sue out executions after judgments have been obtained by them. And fraudulent donees, doubtless, are entitled to the benefit of this provision in all cases where it is applicable. But this provision, it must be observed, takes away the right to sue out an execution, but interferes not at all with the right to levy it after it has been legally sued out. In all the other provisions of our act of limitations, the time begins to run against the creditor only from the time when his cause of action accrued. In this case, however, the defendant never had a cause of action against the plaintiff, either for the debt due to him by Webb, or for the negroes on which his execution has been levied. Indeed, previous to the defendant's placing his execution in the hands of the sheriff, he had no right to institute any proceeding questioning the fairness or legality of the gift to the plaintiff. Tate v. Liggatt, &c., 2 Leigh 84; Rhodes v. Cousins, 6 Rand. 188. So that, from the moment the defendant acquired the right of questioning the plaintiff's right, he has been diligently prosecuting his claim; and it is difficult to conceive how the act of limitations can apply to such a case. Had the defendant, or had Bruce's representative delayed the action against Webb, so that Webb might have relied effectually on the act of limitations, the question would have been of more difficulty; but this is not even pretended to be the case.

I understood the plaintiff's counsel, at the last term, to insist that the eight or nine years possession which the plaintiff had had of the slaves before either Bruce's or the defendant's execution against Webb was sued out, gave the plaintiff a complete title to the slaves. It is true that an adverse possession of five years gives 344 "a complete title to slaves against all to whom such possession has been adverse after the accruing of their rights of action. But no possession, however long or adverse, if it be before the accruing of the claimant's action, is a bar, as is proved by the clear right of a remainderman to sue, after the death of the tenant for life. A slave is given to one for life, with remainder to another. No possession of a third person during the life of the tenant for life, no matter how long or how adverse, will bar the action of the remainderman; and for this reason—that the remainderman had no cause of action until the death of the tenant for life.

There is only one other ground, as it seems to me, on which the plaintiff can contend that his possession of the slaves bars the defendant's right to levy his execution on them—namely, the delay in proceeding to subject them. But the delay in nowise barred the right of action of the creditors against Webb; and if I am right, that an execution legally issued against a debtor may be levied on property in the possession of his fraudulent donee, no matter how long such possession may have continued, this delay cannot avail the plaintiff at law. Is there any principle of Courts of equity more favourable to the plaintiff? There may be cases, in which creditors have so long delayed the assertion of their rights, that Courts of equity will refuse to give them any aid to enable them to subject to their demands property in the hands of fraudulent donees; for Courts of equity discountenance all stale demands. But here the defendant is asking no aid of the Court. Besides, the delay has not been great; and even if it had been greater, it would be difficult to maintain, that a Court of equity ever regards a demand as stale, for which a judgment has been obtained at law in an action, to which no legal defence could have been made. And my opinion is, that the possession of the slaves by the plaintiff for eight or nine years pre-

345 vious to the *suing out the defendant's execution, does not exempt the slaves from the defendant's execution. On this question, there is a late case in the Court of appeals, which, perhaps, requires some remarks from me. I allude to the case of Huston v. Cantril, 11 Leigh 168. That case was a suit in equity to subject property in the possession of alleged fraudulent donees to the plaintiff's demand; and three of the Judges thought that the action was barred by the act of limitations. But it is clear that the general question, whether the act of limitations will bar the right of the creditor to levy his execution on property in the hands of a fraudulent donee, was not decided. The case as to this point was this: The plaintiff became the security of the grantor in a bond to Mayo. After this, the grantor made the fraudulent gifts, and died in 1798; upon whose death the property came to the possession of the grantees. In 1800, the plaintiff paid the debt for which he was the security of the grantor; and in 1827, filed his bill against the grantees. And three Judges held that this suit was barred by the act of limitations. But this decision no way affects the general question; for the Judges seem to have held that the grantees, by taking possession of the property, after the death of the grantor, became executors de son tort; that a cause of action against them in that character accrued to the plaintiff in 1800; and that this latter cause of action was barred by the act of limitations. That this was the decision, is manifest from the whole report, and from the opinions of the other Judges; and if so, it is obvious that the decision in that case does not touch the question now under consideration.

In accordance with this opinion the Court dissolved the injunction and dismissed the bill, with costs. Whereupon Wilson applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

346 *Robinson and G. N. Johnson, for the appellant.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellee.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that upon the issue made by the pleadings, and the evidence applicable thereto, there is no error in the decree; and the same is therefore affirmed, with costs to the appellee. But this affirmance of the decree is to be without prejudice to the right of the appellant to shew in any proper proceeding where that matter may be put in issue, that the judgment in favour of the appellee against said William Webb was rendered for too large a sum; and that the credit endorsed on the execution of 124 dollars 85 cents does not cover the whole excess.

Gray v. Overstreet & als.

Injunctions—Dissolution—Before Final Hearing.*—Under the circumstances of this case, it was error to dissolve the injunction, before the cause was matured and came on for a final hearing.

On the 5th of October 1844, James Gray presented to the Judge of the Circuit court of Bedford county, a bill, in which he alleged that, on the 6th of October 1838, he purchased of George Overstreet, of Bedford county, a tract of land in that county, containing about 320 acres, which was described in the written and sealed contract exhibited with his bill, as "the tract of 347 *land on which he Overstreet lives, it being the same he bought of John West, also the land that Overstreet bought off of Miller's tract, and thirty odd acres that he bought of Jesse A. Bramblett, about 320 acres in all;" and that it was further set forth in said written contract, that the plaintiff was "to give five dollars per acre for all excepting the part that Overstreet had run off for Joel Richards, say forty odd acres, for which he was to give four dollars per acre, to be paid for as follows: six hundred dollars in hand, and the balance to be divided into four annual payments;" that the plaintiff went on to pay the 600 dollars from time to time, as Overstreet wanted it, until the 6th of March 1839, when he completed the cash payment, and executed four bonds for the deferred payments for 250 dollars each, payable on the 25th day of December in 1839, 1840, 1841 and 1842, which was the full contract price for the whole tract, made up as aforesaid of three smaller tracts. And he called the attention of the Court to the fact, that in the bond payable in 1842 the two hundred and fifty dollars therein promised to be paid on the 25th December in that year, is said to be "the fifth payment of two tracts of land, one of which formerly belonged to Thomas West, and the other to William Miller." "But he charged that, in fact and in truth, the said bond was executed as the last payment for the 320 acres of land mentioned in the contract aforesaid, including the thirty odd acres bought of Jesse A. Bramblett."

He charged that the said thirty odd acres bought of Bramblett, were part and parcel of a larger tract by him bought of William Dickenson, containing acres, at the price of dollars. For this tract the said William Dickenson never executed to him any deed, but retained in himself the title as a security for the purchase money.

348 *The bill proceeds to state that Bramblett, having absconded from the State, Dickenson proceeded to make what he could by a sale, &c., of the residue of the land, which fell short, by 300 dollars, of the purchase money due to him, and had instituted a suit in chancery against the plaintiff, to charge the said sum of 300 dollars on the thirty odd acres of land aforesaid still remaining in his possession.

The plaintiff further stated, that he had never got any title to the thirty odd acres, though he had paid off the bonds for 250 dollars each due in 1839, 1840 and 1841, and had moreover paid 85 dollars on account of the last bond. He averred also that the thirty odd acres was wood land and very valuable to him, and that he would gladly pay the balance due on the last bond to obtain a title for it. No title, good or bad, has ever been made to him by Overstreet, nor can he make such title.

Finally, the plaintiff stated that Overstreet had unjustly assigned the last obligation to S. C. Hurt & Co. who had sued and were about to obtain judgment against him, to wit, at the October term 1844, of said Circuit superior court.

On these grounds he asked an injunction, which was granted.

On the 14th of April 1845, the assignees of the obligation, who had obtained judgment in the preceding October, filed their answer. They deny, on the strength of a letter said to have been received by them from Overstreet, (who, after assigning to them the last bond in September 1843, had removed to the west,) that the thirty odd acres of land got by Overstreet of Bramblett was any part of the consideration of the fourth or any bond given by Gray to Overstreet.

They allege that the bond was assigned to them with the full knowledge, consent and approbation of *the plaintiff, 349 with a knowledge on his part at the time, that the said Overstreet would remove from this Commonwealth in a short time thereafter, who, so far from intimating any objection to the payment of said bond on account of a failure of the consideration, or otherwise, expressed himself well pleased and satisfied with the arrangement, because, as Overstreet was about to remove, he would want the money for the bond immediately, in the event he did not dispose of it, and that if the defendants obtained the bond, they being stationary here, engaged in the mercantile business, and the complainant being one of their customers, he could get some indulgence on the same and be relieved from the necessity of immediate payment to Overstreet. It was under these circumstances that these respondents were induced to take the said bond, for which they paid a full and valuable consideration.

They insist that the plaintiff having signed a paper, (the bond,) stating that the consideration thereof was two tracts of land, viz: the Miller tract and the West tract, has no right to set up as against them that the Bramblett tract was a part of the consideration.

In September 1845, the absent defendant Overstreet (having given security for costs), filed his answer.

He says "that the bond for 250 dollars, assigned to S. C. Hurt & Co. was given for the consideration stated on its face, to wit, 'as the fifth payment of two tracts of land, one of which formerly belonged to Thomas West, and the other to William Miller;' and that no part of the consideration of said bond is 'for thirty odd acres bought of Jesse A. Bramblett,' nor did the complainant ever execute to this respondent his bond for the purchase money, or any part thereof, of the land that was purchased of Bramblett; nor does this respondent believe that the complainant has ever, at any time, paid to this respondent, or to any person for him, any sum on account of land purchased of Bramblett; nor *is he bound to this respondent, in any manner, for the purchase of the same. It is true, that at one time, there was a contract between this respondent and complainant for the purchase of a small tract of land obtained of Bramblett, in addition to the West and Miller tracts; but when the complainant came to execute his bonds, he executed them in consideration of, and for the price of the Miller and West tracts alone, one of which is the bond assigned by this respondent to S. C. Hurt & Co., to which tracts the complainant has a good and perfect title; and it was agreed that the complainant should pay Bramblett for the land which had been purchased of him, and look to him for the title; the complainant preferring that arrangement because Bramblett was indebted to him, which debt, this respondent is informed, was actually taken in by Bramblett in payment of the said land; so that, by the arrangement, this respondent had nothing to do with receiving the pay for, or making a title to the land that had been purchased of Bramblett."

He adds that "he assigned the bond to S. C. Hurt & Co., with the knowledge and consent of the complainant; and although it was known for a long space of time that this respondent was about to leave the State, the complainant never intimated to him that he had the slightest defence to make to said bond, or that he conceived this respondent in any manner liable to him for the title to the land bought of Bramblett.

The documentary evidence filed in the cause, (it does not always appear in the record by whom,) consists of two deeds, a copy of the contract of October 6, 1838, and a copy of the obligation sued on, which bears date March 6th, 1839. One of the deeds, from Overstreet and wife to Gray, dated November 20, 1838, conveys "one hundred and thirty-four and three-fourths acres and thirty-one poles," for the consideration of 643 dollars 72 cents. The other, from the *same grantors to the same grantee, conveys 161½ acres, for the consideration of "eight hundred and seven and half dollars." Total quantity of land 296 acres, 1 rood and 31 poles. Total consideration 1451 dollars 22 cents.

The deposition of Alexander A. Smith completes the record. He was examined by the plaintiff on the 30th of September 1845, two days before the successful motion to dissolve. He said that "he was present when the contract between Gray and Overstreet was closed, which was in the early part of March 1839. The bonds were executed at that time by James Gray to George Overstreet, who was present, and he understood from all parties the bonds were for the purchase money of all three of said parcels of land, including the thirty odd acres which Overstreet bought of Bramblett. There were four bonds of 250 dollars each, due in one, two, three and four payments. A part of the money—the amount he did not remember—was paid down at the time the bonds were executed for the balance due, in the four payments above mentioned."

This deposition was objected to for want of notice to the defendants Hurt, Preston and Overstreet. It appeared that Leftwich, one of the partners of the firm of S. C. Hurt & Co. was present with his counsel at the taking of the deposition, and the commissioner who took it certified it as taken pursuant to notice; but the notice was not returned.

The cause came on in October 1845, upon a motion to dissolve the injunction, when the same was dissolved. Whereupon Gray applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

John R. and John E. Cooke, for the appellant.

Stanard and Bouldin, for the appellee.

352 *ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court, without deciding upon the merits of the controversy, as such decision would be premature until the case was matured and came on for final hearing, is of opinion, that upon the motion to dissolve, the Court erred in dissolving the injunction. Order dissolving the injunction reversed, with costs to appellant. Injunction reinstated, and cause remanded in order that the same may be matured for hearing and a final decree.

Indeed, the law is that where the person solicited to subscribe has no other information on the subject than that which the agent chooses to convey, the statements of the agent ought to be characterized by the utmost candor and honesty. 1 *Cook, Stockh. and Corp. the written proposals of sale were in all material respects true, and no fact within the knowledge of the vendors materially affecting the value of the thing sold, was suppressed to the injury of the purchasers, the subsequent failure of the mine in value and productiveness, does not impair the right of the vendors to enforce the contract.

This was an action of debt, brought in the Circuit court of law for the county of Henrico and the city of Richmond, by the United States Mining Company, against Crump and Liggon. It was one of twenty-eight actions brought by the same plaintiffs against certain subscribers to the stock of the company, for arrears due upon their stock. All the cases turned upon the same questions, and were *submitted to the same jury.

On the trial of the causes the plaintiffs introduced in evidence an act of the General Assembly of Virginia for the incorporation of the United States Mining Company, and then offered in evidence a minute book purporting to be a minute book of the 354 company, for *the purpose of proving the existence of the corporation. To this evidence the defendants objected, upon the ground that it was not competent until it was shewn by the subscription list of stockholders, that the persons who assembled on the 16th of August 1834, (the day when according to the minute book the company was organized,) were stockholders authorized to associate and act as such; and they called for the production of such list. Whereupon the plaintiffs offered to prove by J. J. Chew, that shortly after the passage of the act of incorporation, the company had an office or place of business, where the business to carry on which they were incorporated, was carried on; and that the affairs of the company had been managed by directors who were chosen from time to time. That he was himself a subscriber, and had paid after the organization of the company, a portion of his subscription as called for from time to time; and that he had sold out his stock to a person who had fully paid up to the company the instalments due upon it. That he had transferred said stock in the office of the company on the books of the company. And that the various books purporting to be the books of the company, including the minute book aforesaid, were kept in the handwriting of Richard B. Maury, who was the recognized, notorious secretary of the company from the time it purported in said books to have been organized, and his appointment as secretary, until the death of said Maury. The plaintiffs by their counsel stated also, that they proposed to follow up the evidence of Chew, in further proof of the organization of the company, by evidence that each and all of the present defendants recognized the company as an existing corporation, by entering into the contracts with the said corporation upon which the present actions were brought. Whereupon the defendants moved to exclude the testimony of Chew, upon the 355 ground that such *testimony was not competent in the absence of the subscription book, which being written evidence of the fact that the persons who claimed the right to act as a corporation, were subscribers to stock, could not be dispensed with, unless shewn to be lost or destroyed, by any parol proof of the fact which such subscription list would establish. But the Court overruled the motion, and admitted the testimony; and the defendants excepted.

In the further progress of the cause, the plaintiffs offered in evidence the prospectus of a sale of the stock of the company signed by William Jackson the president, and the contract annexed thereto, on which this action is founded, and proved the signatures of the defendants to the contract by which they each subscribed for the number of shares annexed to his name. They also introduced a printed report of the president and directors giving a description of the property and of the condition and prospects of the company, which was referred to in the prospectus. They also introduced copies of the certificates of stock issued by the company to the defendants, and offered evidence to prove that the defendants had received a dividend of five per cent. upon the amount of forty dollars a share paid in by them for their stock. And they introduced certain proceedings of the defendants, by which they expressed their determination to pay on requisitions which should be made upon them on account of their stock. And the plaintiffs then rested their case. Whereupon the defendants called a witness, John H. Eustace, whose name appears first upon the list of subscribers mentioned above, who stated that the signature of his name was not in his handwriting, and that he had no recollection of having given any person authority to make it for him; though he has no doubt he did: but that he had never paid anything for the stock standing 356 against his name, nor had he been called upon to pay *anything for it.

The defendants then called a witness, James B. Cowles, who proved that his signature to the subscription list aforesaid was genuine. That the book which contained the prospectus and list, was in the hands of James Williams, who came to the city of Richmond as the agent of the plaintiffs to sell their stock, and presented the said prospectus and subscription list, but did not shew him, and he did not ask for, the printed report before referred to, and induced the witness to subscribe for stock, which he did without reading the prospectus. And then the defendants offered to prove by the witness Cowles, that Williams at the time of procuring the subscriptions to the said stock from the witness and the defendants, and for the purpose of inducing him and them to subscribe for and purchase the stock, made representations to them in addition to those contained in the report and prospectus, as to the description, condition and value of the gold mine, upon the faith of which, he and the defendants became subscribers for the stock, as shewn by the list aforesaid; which representations were false and fraudulent: And for the purpose of getting such proof, asked the witness to state what representations were made to him and the defendants, as aforesaid, by Williams touching the value and description of the mine and condition of the company. But the plaintiffs objected to the question and any answer thereto, upon the ground that it was not competent for the defendants to give evidence of any representations by said Williams, because they insisted he was a limited agent, whose authority was defined by the prospectus aforesaid and the printed report referred to in it. The Court sustained the objection, and excluded the evidence; and the defendants again excepted.

After the introduction of the evidence mentioned in the previous exceptions, the defendants proposed to prove by the witness Cowles, that when Williams made 357 *the representations referred to in the preceding bill of exceptions, William Jackson the then president of the company, whose name was signed to the prospectus, was present and assented to them; and also proposed to prove that the same representations were made sometimes by Williams in the presence of Jackson, and sometimes by Jackson himself, to other subscribers for stock, who are defendants in these causes. The witness did not identify Jackson very confidently, though he expressed the belief that the person who was with Williams was the same with William Jackson the president of the company, who was then in court, and was pointed out to the witness. The counsel for the defendants then asked the witness to state what the representations were which were made as aforesaid by Williams and assented to by Jackson. But the plaintiffs by their counsel moved the Court to exclude all evidence of any such statements or representations made in the presence of or by William Jackson the president of the company, which were not contained in the written prospectus and the report therein referred to, upon the ground that the said prospectus and report contained the only representations of the value of the mine and stock, and the condition of the company, which could be given in evidence in the cause, based upon any representations of Jackson or Williams. The Court sustained the motion and excluded the evidence; and the defendants again excepted.

It appears that an act for the incorporation of the United States Mining Company was passed in January 1834. This act constituted John L. Marye and four other persons by name, and such other persons as should be thereafter associated with them, a corporation for the purpose of mining. These five named gentlemen owned a tract of land on which the mining was expected to be carried on. Their proposals for the disposition of stock were, that the land should be put in as a part of the 358 *capital stock of the company, at 150,000 dollars; in payment of which they were to receive 40 dollars a share, on each share subscribed for by others than themselves, until the proceeds with their own subscription, which was to be for five hundred shares in the first instance, should make the sum of 150,000 dollars. It was first intended that the capital stock should be 300,000 dollars; of which the original proprietors were to take 500 shares, and the rest be sold out to other persons; but it was afterwards agreed to reduce it to 180,000 dollars. Of this sum the original proprietors subscribed for five hundred shares, equal to 50,000 dollars, and other persons subscribed for five hundred and nineteen shares, equal to 51,900 dollars: The proprietors then, to make up the capital stock, subscribed for the remaining seven hundred and eighty-one shares; and the company was organized, and proceeded to business.

At the annual meeting of the company held about the 17th of August 1836, a committee made a report in which they "earnestly recommend that the mine should be further developed and worked on a scale commensurate with the immense treasures it contained;" and to obtain the means thus to enlarge the operations of the company, they recommend a sale of the capital stock to the amount of 70,000 dollars; and advise that it shall be sold at a premium of 10 dollars a share.

In accordance with the recommendation of the committee the stockholders, on the 17th of August, adopted a resolution authorizing the board of directors to create six hundred and eighty-nine shares of additional stock, upon such terms as they might deem most expedient; and that they should cause books for the sale of the same to be opened when and where they might think proper. On the 14th of September the board of directors adopted a resolution in which it was recited, that the approval of the directors; and directions were given for carrying it into execution. Some time after the stock had been subscribed for by the defendants, these proceedings of the directors were approved and ratified by the stockholders.

359 *original proprietors had proposed to surrender to the company a part of the stock received by them in payment for the mine, not exceeding 781 shares, provided the company would issue new scrip for a like number of shares to such subscribers as are content to pay therefor to the proprietors 40 dollars per share, and to the company 60 dollars per share. And it was declared that the proposition met the

In pursuance of the resolutions aforesaid the prospectus referred to in the second bill of exceptions was prepared, in which it was stated that the company holding in reserve 781 shares of the original stock of the company, propose to sell the same on the following terms and conditions, viz: The terms were then stated, and it was added that the mines were in full and successful operation, having three veins of valuable ore, one of which was then working at the depth of eighty feet, &c. And for a full description of the mine, buildings, machinery, &c. reference was made to the last report of the president and directors of the company. To this prospectus was attached a subscription paper, upon which the defendants in these cases made their subscriptions. These are the papers referred to in the foregoing exceptions, and which were in the hands of Williams, the agent of the company, when he was in Richmond soliciting subscriptions to the stock.

In addition to the written evidence much parol testimony was offered by both parties, on the one part to prove that a fraud had been practised upon them in the sale of the stock, and on the other to repel and disprove the imputation; but only such a statement of the proofs is given as will shew the nature of the claim and of the defence, and the relevancy of the instructions given 360 or *refused by the Court. In 1837 the mine proved to be unprofitable and was abandoned.

After all the evidence had been introduced the defendants by their counsel, moved the Court to instruct the jury as follows:

1st. "If from the evidence the jury shall believe that the United States Mining Company, either by forfeiture of its charter or by failure to appoint the proper officers and nonuser, has ceased to be a legal corporation, this suit cannot be maintained, and a verdict must be rendered for the defendants."

2d. "That the stockholders of the United States Mining Company in general meeting, only, and not the board of directors, had authority to create new stock, and if they shall believe that the stockholders in general meeting authorized a sale of new stock, and the defendants afterwards, in Richmond made their subscription for stock; and after that subscription without the assent of a general meeting of the stockholders, and without the assent of the defendants, the board of directors purchased old stock from the original proprietors, and did not create new stock according to the authority and resolution of the stockholders, and have not created any, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover."

But the Court refused to give the first instruction, upon the ground, that whether the supposed acts of forfeiture, the failure to appoint officers, or other acts of nonuser, did exist or not, they could not be enquired into collaterally in this case, for the purpose of affecting the right of the plaintiffs to maintain their suit, unless there was evidence to shew that the charter had been ascertained to be forfeited, or the corporation to be dissolved, by the sentence of a Court in which those matters had been decided.

And the Court refused to give the second instruction without the following qualification, which was insisted on by the plaintiffs, viz:

361 "But if the jury believe that after the order of the stockholders authorizing the board of directors to create new stock, the board agreed with the original proprietors, that the latter should surrender a portion of the original stock for the use of the company, and to be sold by the company as original stock instead of creating new stock; and the said original stock was thereupon offered for sale and subscribed for by the defendants; and that the contract thus made was executed by the subscribers receiving the scrip for the stock purchased by them, and that they have claimed the benefit of said contract by receiving dividends on said stock purchased by them, and that the stockholders at a subsequent meeting approved and ratified the act of the board, then the plaintiffs are not precluded from recovering by reason of the stock sold to them being original or old stock substituted as aforesaid, instead of creating new stock."

To the opinion of the Court refusing the instructions asked, and giving the addition to the second, the defendants excepted.

The defendants further moved the Court to instruct the jury:

1st. That if the representations contained in the prospectus and report, as part thereof, are false as to any material fact, constituting an inducement or motive to the subscription for stock by the defendants, by which they have been misled to their injury, and in which the defendants are presumed to have trusted to the plaintiffs, and not to have relied on their own judgment, then the contract founded on such representations is void, and cannot be enforced, whether the plaintiffs knew the representations to be false at the time they were made or not; and whether made with a fraudulent intent or not.

2d. That the suppression from the prospectus of any fact within the knowledge 362 of the plaintiffs materially *affecting the value of the thing to be sold, and inconsistent with the statements in the prospectus, vitiates the contract as fully as the false affirmation of any material facts, if the defendants be injured thereby.

The Court gave these instructions, and the plaintiffs excepted.

The plaintiffs then moved the Court for the following instruction, viz:

"That if the jury believe from the evidence that all the representations made by the plaintiffs in the prospectus and report, as to the description, condition and prospects of the mine, before and at the time of the sale, were in every material particular substantially true as represented, and that the plaintiffs at the time believed, and were justified by the facts known at the time, in believing, the ore and mine as valuable as they represented it to be, then that the right of the plaintiffs to recover in this case is not impaired or affected by any proof that the mine and ore did not, when subsequently developed and opened to a greater depth, prove to be as valuable as in the opinion of the plaintiffs so expressed and believed, it was supposed to be; and thus failed to be as productive and valuable as was anticipated at the time of the sale of the stock to the defendants."

This instruction the Court refused to give, but at the instance of the defendants' counsel gave the following in lieu thereof, viz:

"If the jury shall be satisfied that the representations contained in the prospectus and the report, as part thereof, were true at the time they were made as to all the material facts constituting an inducement or motive to the defendants to subscribe for the stock, and as to which the defendants are presumed to have trusted to the plaintiffs, and not to have relied on their own judgments, and that no fact within the knowledge of the plaintiffs materially affecting the value of the thing sold 363 *was suppressed to the injury of the defendants, the subsequent failure of the mine in value and productiveness, and disappointment of the expectations and anticipations of the parties, does not impair the right of the plaintiffs to recover: And the subsequent failure of the mine can be relied on by the defendants, only as evidence to affect, so far as it may, the question whether the representations were true at the time they were made."

To the refusal of the Court to give the instruction asked for by them the plaintiffs excepted.

There was a verdict for the plaintiffs for 600 dollars, with interest, whereupon the defendants asked the Court for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence; but the Court overruled the motion, and gave a judgment for the plaintiffs according to the verdict; and the defendants excepted. Upon the application of the defendants this Court awarded a supersedeas to the judgment.

Robinson and Lyons, for the appellants, insisted:

1st. That the proof offered to shew the organization of the company should have been rejected. That this charter was a private act, and the organization of the company must therefore be proved. United States Bank v. Stearns, 15 Wend. R. 314; Rees v. Conococheague Bank, 5 Rand. 326; Lithgow's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 297; Bacon's Abr. title Corporations, p. 12. And although the books of a corporation are competent

Upon the question whether the company might not cease to exist in some of the modes mentioned in the instructions, without a proceeding against it at the suit of the Commonwealth to enforce the forfeiture of its charter, they referred to 4 Comy. Dig. title Franchise, 375; Greeley v. Smith, 3 Story's C. C. R. 657.

3d. That the representations of Williams the agent of the plaintiffs in the sale of the stock to the defendants, should have been received in evidence. They said that the cases make a distinction between the declarations of the agent made at the time of the contract, and those made before or after. Fairlie v. Hastings, 10 Ves. R. 123. That the representations of Williams offered in evidence, were made at the time of the contract; and these were clearly admissible. Westcott v. Bradford, 4 Wash. C. C. R. 492; 1 Stark. Evi. p. 47, § 28; Haynes v. Rutter, 24 Pick. R. 245; Woods v. Clark, Id. 35; Hannay v. Stewart, 6 Watts 487. That he was an agent to sell stock, and representations as to the nature, quality, prospects, &c. of the thing sold, were legal incidents of his powers. Hough v. Doyle, 4 Rawle's R. 291. That the prospectus does not set forth the terms of his agency; indeed does not mention him; and cannot, therefore, limit his powers. Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Metc. R. 193; Locke v. Stearns, Id. 560; Welsh v. Carter, 1 Wend. R. 185; Story on Agency, 58, 73, 135. That if Williams exceeded his powers, yet when plaintiffs come into Court to enforce a contract made by him they ratify his acts, and are bound by his representations. Story on Agency, § 126, 135-39; U. S. Bank v. Davis, 2 Hill's R. 452; Campbell v. Fleming, 28 Eng. C. L. R. 29. And they insisted that the question as to the authority of the agent, ought to have been determined by the jury. Paley on Agency 211.

4th. That the Court erred in excluding the evidence as to the representations made by Jackson the president of the company. They insisted that the representations of Jackson were as binding on the company as was the prospectus itself. Salem India rubber Co. v. *Adams, 23 Pick. R. 256; Gibbs v. Neely, 7 Watts' R. 307; Dobell v. Stevens, 10 Eng. C. L. R. 201; Pilmore v. Hood, 35 Id. 43. That these representations were calculated materially to influence the purchasers of the stock; and even if they were free from all moral fraud, yet if they were untrue in fact and calculated to mislead in any important particular, they were proper to be given in evidence. Pawson v. Watson, Cowp. R. 788; Adamson v. Jarvis, 13 Eng. C. L. R. 346; Foster v. Charles, 19 Id. 113; S. C. 20 Id. 64; Polhill v. Walter, 23 Id. 38; Humphrys v. Pratt, 5 Bligh P. C. New series 154; Hazard v. Irwin, 18 Pick. R. 95; Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Metc. R. 193; Smith v. Richards, 13 Peters' R. 26; U. S. Bank v. Davis, 2

Hill's R. 452; Conn v. Penn, 1 Peters' C. C. R. 496.

B. B. Minor and Patton, for the appellees, insisted:

1st. That the corporation books properly kept are evidence of the organization of the company, and of the regularity of their proceedings. Angel & Ames on Corp. § 373, 374, 567-70, 502; Utica Ins. Co. v. Tilman, 1 Wend. R. 555; Hagerstown Turnp. Co. v. Creeger, 5 Har. & John. 122; Wood v. Jefferson City Bank, 9 Cow. R. 205; Grays v. Turnpike Co., 4 Rand. 578; Turnpike Co. v. M'Carson, 1 Dev. & Batt. 309.

2d. That no act of forfeiture of a charter can be relied on in a collateral way to defeat a suit by the corporation; but there must first be a proceeding for the purpose of enforcing the forfeiture, and an ouster of the franchise. People v. Manhattan Co., 9 Wend. R. 351; Trent v. Cartersville Bridge Co., 11 Leigh 521; Angel & Ames on Corp. 224-5, and also 82, 84, 85, 86: As to the omission to elect officers, they referred to Angel & Ames on Corp. 106-8, and 734-36.

3d. That Williams was a special agent to make sale of the stock; that the only evidence of his agency which these defendants had, was his possession of the *prospectus and the report of the directors; and these distinctly stated what was to be sold, and described the subject. If, therefore, Williams made any other representations than are contained therein, the defendants were obliged to know, by an inspection of his powers, that he had no authority to make it; and they were bound to look to his powers. Story on Agency, § 76; Angel & Ames on Corp., p. 301. They insisted that the rule as to an agent of a corporation was the same, or even more stringent than that applicable to agents of private persons. Angel & Ames on Corp., p. 215, 216, 290, 292; Gunnis v. Erhart, 1 H. Bl. 289; Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & Beame 202; Powell v. Edmonds, 12 East 6; Whitehead v. Tuckett, 15 East 400; Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 757. And this rule limited the agent strictly by his authority; so that he could not bind his principal for any thing beyond it. Gibson v. Colt, 7 John. R. 390; Delafield v. The State of Illinois, 2 Hill's R. 159; North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill's R. 262; Mann v. King, 6 Munf. 428; Hooe, &c. v. Oxley, &c., 1 Wash. 19; Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call 362; Blane v. Proudfit, 3 Call 207; Bank U. S. v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. 234; Union Bank v. Beirne, Id. 226; Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh 47; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Maine R. 84; Brown v. Johnson, 12 Smeade & Marsh. 398; Bank of Hamburg v. Johnson, 3 Richardson's R. 42; Schimmelpennich v. Baird, 1 Peters' R. 264; Parsons v. Armor, 3 Id. 413; Walker v. Smith, 1 Wash. C. C. 4th. That the Court properly excluded the evidence as to the statements of Jackson, the president of the company. He had no authority further than as president; and it was no part of his official duty to make statements as to the value of the stock, 367 or the condition, *prospects, &c. of the company, in order to induce subscriptions. Angel & Ames on Corp., 243, 249, 251; Hartford Bank v. Barry, 17 Mass. R. 97.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question presented by the second bill of exceptions taken at the trial is, whether the Circuit court erred in rejecting the evidence offered by the defendants in these actions for the purpose of proving that the contract upon which the actions are founded was procured from them respectively by false and fraudulent representations made to them at the time, as to the description, condition and value of the subject, by Williams the agent of the plaintiffs. And the question must be considered upon the hypothesis, that the defendants were able and ready to prove such false and fraudulent representations so made at that time. The first step in the order of such proof was of necessity evidence of the declarations and conduct of the agent at the time the contract was entered into; and the decision of the Court excluding the representations so made by him, assumes the proposition, that though the contract in question was so fraudulently procured from the defendants, it is nevertheless obligatory upon them.

It cannot be doubted that where a contract is made between parties acting for themselves as principals, and in an action founded upon it, the defence is that the contract was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of the party seeking to enforce it, his conduct and declarations at the time are parts of the res gestæ, and essential elements of the defence. If therefore the decision of the Court below can be sustained, it must be upon the ground of a distinction, applicable to these cases, between the effect of such a fraud when perpetrated by a principal, and its effect when perpetrated by an agent.

368 *The question whether an agent has transcended the authority conferred on him by his principal in making a contract, usually arises where the other party is seeking to enforce it, and the agent's want of authority is relied upon by the principal as matter of defence against the performance of the contract on his part. But in the present cases, the principals demand the performance of the contract by the other parties, and of course recognize the authority of their agent to procure it, but deny that they can be affected by the alleged false and fraudulent representations employed by him for that purpose. This denial rests upon the alleged ground that Williams was an agent of limited powers, restricted by his principals from making any representations true or false on the subject of the contract, and made the mere medium for communicating to purchasers the terms of sale proposed by his principals, and their own representations of the description, condition and value of the property.

But the admissibility of evidence to prove the procurement of a contract by the fraudulent practices of an agent does not turn upon the extent or the limitations of his authority; for if so, then as the principal may in most cases recognize and confirm the authority of the agent, the consequences of his misconduct would be visited, not upon the person whose confidence enabled him to commit the fraud, but upon its innocent victim. The fraudulent conduct of the agent in procuring a contract may be an abuse of his known authority, or it may be accomplished by means of the suppression or concealment of the limitations upon it; and in neither case can his principal give validity to the contract by repudiating the fraudulent practices employed to obtain it.

That a person professing to act as agent for another does so wholly without authority, or transcends the authority actually conferred upon him by his principal, 369 *is no reason for enforcing the contract against the other party when obtained from him by false and fraudulent representations. In the words of a judicious writer: "Contracts made for the benefit of another, but without his privity or consent, may be rejected or affirmed at his election. But by making the election to affirm it he adopts that which is detrimental, as well as that which is for his benefit. And in seeking to enforce contracts entered into by agents, the principal is subject to have them impeached by any conduct of his agent which would have that effect if proceeding from himself. Every species of fraud, misrepresentation or concealment, therefore, in the agent, affects the principal's right to recover." Paley Agency, 324-5.

That an agent to sell is restricted in the delegation of his authority by his principal from making any representations on the subject of the contract, whether true or false, has, it is true, a bearing upon the obligatory force of the contract; but it is as a question of fact, and not as a question of law. It may be used in evidence as tending to prove that the representations of the agent, though false and fraudulent, had not the effect of deceiving the purchaser. But this presupposes that the restraint upon the authority of the agent was known to the purchaser; and whether he knew it, and the effect of such knowledge in preventing him from being deluded, deceived and defrauded, are also questions of fact for the consideration of the jury.

It is difficult to conceive a case of an action founded upon a contract of sale, to which the defence is that it was obtained by fraud, in which the acts and declarations whether of the principal seeking to enforce the contract, or of his agent through whose intervention it was procured, occurring at the time of making it as part of the res gestæ, are inadmissible evidence. Such a defence does not present a naked question of law for the decision of the Court; but a mixed question of law and fact for the consideration of the jury, with the aid of such instructions as the Court may give in regard to the principles of law applicable to the facts that may be proved to the satisfaction of the jury.

The bill of exceptions shews nothing to render these cases an exception to the general rule of evidence just mentioned. It appears therefrom that the contract in question consisted of a written prospectus on the part of the plaintiffs, in the form of a subscription paper, to be signed by the purchasers, for the sale of a number of shares of reserved stock of their Gold Mining company, upon the terms and conditions therein prescribed, representing the mines to be in full and successful operation, with several particulars of description and recommendation, and referring to the last report of the president and directors of the company for a full description of the mine, buildings, machinery, &c., which subscription paper was signed by the defendants and others. The plaintiffs also gave in evidence a report of the president and directors of the company to the stockholders, containing a detailed and favourable description and statement of the condition of the mining property, and of the operations, resources and prospects of the company, as being the report referred to in the prospectus; but it does not appear that it was shewn to the defendants, or was called for by them; or that the prospectus itself was read to or by them, except so far as it may be inferred from their having subscribed it. It further appears that Williams was an agent of the company for effecting the contemplated sales of the stock upon the terms and conditions prescribed in the prospectus; but the extent or limitations of his authority do not appear, except so far as may be inferred from the facts above mentioned, and the recognition of his agency by the act of the company in seeking to enforce the contract in question. Upon this state of facts, the defendants offered to prove that Williams, at the time of procuring the subscriptions of stock from them, and for the purpose of inducing them to subscribe for and purchase the same, made representations, in addition to those contained in the prospectus and report therein referred to, as to the description, condition and value of the gold mine, upon the faith of which the defendants became subscribers for said stock; which representations were false and fraudulent; and for the purpose of getting such proof, asked a witness to state what representations were made to the defendants as aforesaid, touching the value and description of the mine and condition of the company: whereupon the counsel for the plaintiffs objected to the question and any answer thereto, upon the ground that it was incompetent for the defendants to give evidence of any representations by said Williams, because they insisted that he was a limited agent, whose authority was defined by the said prospectus and the report of the president and directors therein referred to.

We are of opinion, for reasons above suggested, that the Circuit court erred in rejecting the evidence so offered by the defendants, upon the ground urged on the part of the plaintiffs, and if the propriety of its rejection on any other ground could be considered by this Court, as to which we express no opinion, none such appears from the bill of exceptions. The evidence relied on by the plaintiffs as proving acquiescence in and recognition of the contract on the part of the defendants, was proper for the consideration of the jury, in connection with all the circumstances of the case, and the principles of law applicable thereto; but could not be used by way of estoppel, for the purpose of excluding the evidence of fraud offered by the defendants.

The Court is further of opinion, that the Circuit court did not err in the rejection of the declarations of Jackson, the president of the company, as stated in the third bill of exceptions, upon the assumption made by that Court, that he was identified as the person who made them; inasmuch as it does not appear that he acted as the authorized agent of the company for the purpose of making sales of the stock above mentioned.

And the Court is further of opinion, that there is no error in the several decisions of the Circuit court, rejecting proposed instructions, nor in the actual instructions given, as set forth in the several bills of exception in relation thereto.

The Court therefore, without considering whether the bill of exceptions to the refusal of the Circuit court to grant a new trial, was properly taken, is of opinion that the judgments must be reversed for the error of that Court in rejecting the evidence offered of the declarations of Williams, as stated in the second bill of exceptions.

Judgments reversed, with costs to the plaintiffs in error, verdict set aside, and new trial directed.

Detinue—Female Slave—Recovery.*—In an action of detinue for a female slave, the recovery may be, not only for the slave named in the writ, but for her children born since the commencement of the action.

This was an action of detinue brought in the Circuit court of Orange county, by Thomas H. Peregoy against George Morris, for the recovery of four slaves, one of whom was named Fanny. On the trial an instruction was asked for by the defendant and refused by the Court, and another instruction was given; and exceptions were taken, but it is not important to report them. The jury found a verdict for the four slaves mentioned in the writ and declaration, and also for a fifth, the child of Fanny, born since the institution of the suit; and there was judgment accordingly; whereupon Morris applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Lyons, for the appellant, and Robert G. Scott, for the appellee, submitted the case on printed notes.

By the Court. The judgment is affirmed.

1. Appeals—Bond Not Given within Prescribed Period—Effect.—Upon an appeal to the Court of appeals, from a final judgment, decree or order, if the appeal bond is not given within five years from the date of the said judgment, decree or order, the appeal will be dismissed.

2. Statutes—Construction.†—A case in which there has been a final decree is not a pending suit in the sense of the Code, ch. 16, § 18, p. 101, and ch. 216, § 2, p. 800.

3. Statute of Limitations—Proviso—Applicable to What.—The proviso in the act for limitation of suits as to rights existing when the Code takes effect, ch. 149, § 19, p. 549, is restricted to actions and rights barred by that chapter; and does not extend to the law limiting and regulating appeals.

This was a motion to dismiss the appeal in this case, because it was not perfected in time. It appears that there was a final decree in the cause on the 10th of November 1845, from which an appeal was allowed on the 8th of November 1850, and process issued from the clerk's office on the next day; but the appeal bond was not executed until the 18th of December 1850.

S. Taylor, for the motion, referred the Court to the Code of 1850, ch. 182, § 17, p. 686.

J. Howard, in opposition to the motion, referred to Williamson v. Gayle, 4 Gratt. 180.

Appeals—Bond Not Given within Prescribed Period—Effect.—The proposition of the principal case, that an appeal will be dismissed when the appeal bond is not given within the time prescribed by law, was approved in Otterback v. Alexandria & Fredericksburg R. Co., 26 Gratt. 941, 942; Pace v. Flicklin, 76 Va. 297.

See the principal case also cited in Dunbar v. Dunbar, 5 W. Va. 570.

Laws Allowing Appeals—Remedial in Nature.—The principal case was cited in Crawford v. Halsted, 20 Gratt. 236, as holding that laws relating to appeals are remedial in nature. See the principal case also cited in Price v. Harrison, 81 Gratt. 114.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

In the case of Williamson v. Gayle, 4 Gratt. 180, it was decided that the act of 1830-31, Sup. Rev. Code, p. 148, limiting appeals to this Court, refers to the time *of presenting the petition for an appeal to the Court, or a Judge in vacation. That if the petition be presented within five years from the date of the judgment or decree, the appeal is not barred by the statute. That the appeal being allowed, the cause was pending in the Court of appeals; and that the failure of the appellant to execute the appeal bond directed to be given on granting the appeal, did not avoid the appeal. In the opinion given in that case it was said that "by the terms of the statute, the limitation applies to the time at which the petition shall be preferred to the Court, or any Judge in vacation. The law is silent as to the period within which the bond may be given. The petition may be preferred on the last day allowed by law, and will be within time, but if not acted on within the five years by the Judge or Court, bond could not be given within the five years, or if acted on within the time limited, it might be impossible, from the remoteness of the county, to execute the bond in time. In such instances, would it be contended the party had lost his right to appeal?"

The law as thus construed, with the reasons assigned for such construction, were before the legislature at the late revision. The Code of Virginia, ch. 182, § 17, p. 686, provides that "no process shall issue on any appeal, writ of error or supersedeas allowed to or from a final judgment, decree or order, if, when the record is delivered to the clerk of the appellate Court, there shall have elapsed five years since the date of such final judgment, decree or order: But the appeal, writ of error or supersedeas shall be dismissed whenever it appears that five years have elapsed since the said date before the record is delivered to such clerk, or before such bond is given as is required to be given before the appeal, writ of error or supersedeas takes effect."

Under this law, although the petition may have been preferred, and appeal allowed, within the time limited, 376 *yet if the record be not delivered to the clerk of the appellate Court; and where bond is required, if it be not also given within five years from the date of the judgment, the appeal must be dismissed. No reservation is made to meet the cases of hardship suggested in the opinion delivered in Williamson v. Gayle, or to secure a perfect equality between suitors residing near to or remote from the places at which the sessions of the Court are held. A short proviso allowing a certain number of days from the date of the order granting the appeal, to file the record and give bond, when required, though the five years should have elapsed, would have remedied the inconvenience, if it had been deemed of any importance to provide for it. In the absence of any such provision, the law is imperative, and no discretion is left to the Court. Parties desiring to apply for appeals must make their applications in time not only to allow the Court or Judge to act upon it, but also to allow themselves time to file the records in the appellate Court, and to give the bonds required. In the present case a final decree was rendered by the Circuit court of Powhatan county on the 10th November 1845. It does not appear when the petition was presented, but an appeal was allowed in Court on the 8th November, and process issued on the 9th of November 1850; and it appears from the certificate of the proper clerk that an appeal bond was executed on the 18th of December 1850. Five years from the date of the decree had not elapsed before the record was delivered to the clerk, but more than five years had elapsed since the date of the decree before the bond was given. It therefore falls within the terms of the law, and the appeal must be dismissed. The appeal was allowed under the act in the New Code, the only law in force at the time, regulating appeals, and must be governed by its provisions. Not being a prosecution, suit or proceeding pending on the 1st July 1850, when the Code 377 *went into operation, it is not affected by the 18th section, ch. 16, p. 101, and the 2d section, ch. 215, p. 800 of the Code, providing that the repeal of the previous acts should not affect any prosecution, suit or proceeding pending on that day. The proviso in the act for limitation of suits as to rights existing when the Code takes effect, contained in the 19th section, ch. 149, p. 594, is restricted to actions and rights barred by that chapter, and does not extend to the law limiting and regulating appeals.

Lyon's Adm'r v. Magagnos' Adm'r.

April Term, 1851. Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

1. Legacy—Direction to Be Paid a Year after Testatrix' Death—Interest.—Testatrix gives a legacy, and directs it shall be paid within a year from her death. The legacy bears interest from the end of the year, though there is no hand to receive it for thirteen years.
2. Same—No Hand to Receive It—Duty of Executor.—Where there is no hand to receive a legacy, the executor should invest it in an interest bearing fund, or bring it into Court to be so invested.
3. Same—Statute of Limitations—Case at Bar.—The legatee having died shortly after the testatrix and before a qualification upon her estate in this country, and there having been no administration on the estate of the legatee for twelve years, the act of limitations of 1826 does not bar the claim for the legacy.

Anne M. G. Magagnos was a French woman who came to this country some time before 1807. At that time she lived in Norfolk, where she kept a clothing store, by which she made a considerable property.

She returned to France in 1818, and 378 died in 1826, at Marseilles. *Shortly before her death she made her will, which was written in French, and was duly proved in France; and in August 1827 a copy properly authenticated was admitted to record by the Borough court of Norfolk. In August 1829 Joseph Magagnos qualified as administrator with the will annexed.

By one clause of her will she says: "I leave to Jean Layene, and in case of his death, to his children, and in case he has left no children, then to his heirs or legal representatives, 1200 dollars, or six thousand francs, also payable within the year of my decease. The said Jean Layene was born in Washington, and was purser in the navy at Norfolk in Virginia during the time of the embargo."

On the 28th of November 1840, Sanford Chancellor qualified as the administrator of John Lyon; and then filed his bill in the Circuit court of Norfolk borough against the administrator of Madame Magagnos, in which he charged that his intestate was the person referred to in Madame Magagnos' will as Jean Layene, he having been a purser in the navy at Norfolk at the time designated by her, and dealing largely with her at her store; and that he died between the first of the year 1827 and 1829. The administrator answered, denying that John Lyon was the Jean Layene of the will; and relying upon the act of the 8th of March 1826 limiting proceedings against fiduciaries.

The evidence in the cause satisfied the Court below and this Court, that the intestate of the plaintiff was the party referred to in the will of Madame Magagnos; and the cause coming on to be heard in July 1843, the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to the legacy of 1200 dollars, with interest from the 28th of November 1840; and directed an account of the defendant's administration upon the estate of Madame Magagnos. On the next day, however, this decree was set aside, and the administrator 379 admitting assets sufficient to satisfy the *decree about to be made, it was decreed that the plaintiff as administrator of John Lyon deceased, recover of the defendant as the administrator with the will annexed of Anne M. G. Magagnos, the sum of 1200 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 28th day of November 1840 till paid, and his costs; thus giving interest on the legacy only from the date of the plaintiff's qualification as administrator of Lyon. From this decree the plaintiff applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

W. Harrison, for the appellant, referred to Granberry v. Granberry, 1 Wash. 246; 2 Fonb. Equ. p. 432, § 3; Bourne's ex'or v. Mehan, 1 Gratt. 292.

There was no counsel for the appellee.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that there is no error in so much of the decree as decides that the appellant is entitled to the legacy of 1200 dollars, mentioned in the will of the testatrix. But as by the terms of the will the said legacy was payable within one year after the decease of the testatrix, the Court is of opinion there was error in allowing interest thereon from the 28th day of November 1840, instead of allowing interest from a year after the death of the testatrix: the Court being of opinion that although there was no hand to receive the same, it was the duty of the representative of the estate of the testatrix to have invested the same in some interest bearing fund, or to have paid the same into Court to be invested; and failing to do so, and retaining the fund, he should account for the interest. Burwell's ex'or v. Anderson, 3 Leigh 348; S. C. 6 Gratt. 405; Bourne's ex'or v. Mechan, 1 Gratt. 292. And the Court would now proceed to enter such a decree as the Court below should have done, if it appeared 380 *that assets sufficient to pay the same had come to the hands of the appellee. But as the admission of assets was made with reference to the amount of the claim as ascertained by the interlocutory decree, such admission should not bind the party to the payment of the larger amount to which the appellant is entitled.

It is therefore adjudged and ordered, that so much of said decree as conflicts with this opinion, be reversed, with costs to the appellant; and that the residue be affirmed. Cause remanded for an account of assets, unless a sufficiency to pay the plaintiff's claim be admitted; and for a final decree according to the principles above declared.

Peyton & Others v. Stratton & Others.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

Partnerships—Dissolution—Transfer of Partnership Debts—Case at Bar.—S is the acting member of the firm of L, S & Co. The partnership is dissolved by the death of L: the firm being largely indebted to S for advances for them in their business, and S being indebted to P the commission merchant of the firm and S. S transfers to P the debt due him from the firm in discharge of his debt due to P, and credits the firm with the amount. Held: S under the circumstances of the case was authorized to make the transfer, and the members of the firm were bound for the amount to P.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought in the Circuit court of Buckingham county by Peyton, Deane & Edwards against Peter B. Stratton and three others, surviving partners of the firm of Lancaster, Stratton & *Co. On the trial after a 381 number of exceptions had been taken, in which all the evidence was stated, there was a verdict for the defendants. The plaintiffs thereupon asked for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; but the Court overruled the motion, and the plaintiffs excepted. In this bill of exceptions the Court certified all the evidence stated in the previous bills of exceptions as to the facts proved.

It appears from the evidence that Lancaster, Stratton & Co. were partners and millers doing business at Curdsville in the county of Buckingham; and that Peter B. Stratton was the managing partner. The business was commenced in the spring or summer of 1838, and Nathaniel Lancaster one of the partners died on the 19th of March 1841; but the business was continued until the 30th of June of that year.

In the year 1838 Peter B. Stratton commenced business as a merchant at Curdsville, in his own name; and in September 1839 he formed a partnership with Richard A. Booker, under the name of Stratton & Booker, which was continued until September 1841.

Peter B. Stratton being the acting partner in both concerns, and the books of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. being in fact kept in his storehouse, he purchased the grain manufactured at the mill of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. paying for it sometimes by goods out of his store or the store of Stratton & Booker, and at others by his own money or his own note, or by the proceeds of the flour manufactured. This flour was shipped to the plaintiffs Peyton, Deane & Edwards, commission merchants in Richmond; and Peter B. Stratton drew upon them for the proceeds of it, either in his own name or the name of Lancaster, Stratton & Co., as suited his own convenience.

The books of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. shewed that when Peter B. Stratton 382 purchased grain for them and *paid for it out of his store or the store of Stratton & Booker, Lancaster, Stratton & Co. were charged with the amount paid for them; and when Stratton drew on Peyton, Deane & Edwards on his own account, Lancaster, Stratton & Co. were credited with the amount so drawn. In the account rendered to this firm by the plaintiffs, there is, under the date of February 4th, 1840, a charge by the plaintiffs to them, of 4222 dollars 43 cents, being a transfer of that sum from the account of Peter B. Stratton to the account of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. To this charge the other members of the partnership made no objection; and at this time the books of the firm shewed that Lancaster, Stratton & Co. were debtors to Peter B. Stratton to this amount. Again, there is in the account of the plaintiffs with Lancaster, Stratton & Co. under date of July 15th, 1841, a charge of 10,646 dollars 42 cents in like manner transferred from the account of Peter B. Stratton to the account of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. This sum it was ascertained afterwards, was more than Stratton or Stratton & Booker were in advance to Lancaster, Stratton & Co., and the excess was returned: yet leaving Lancaster, Stratton & Co. debtors to Peyton, Deane &

Edwards as appeared by the books of the former in the sum of 8252 dollars 26 cents, on the 1st of July 1841. Of this sum there does not seem to have been any doubt but that it was due to Peyton, Deane & Edwards from one or the other of the parties; and the question in the cause was whether Peter B. Stratton was authorized, after the dissolution of the partnership of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. by the death of Nathaniel Lancaster, in March 1841, to substitute them as the debtors of Peyton, Deane & Edwards in the stead of Stratton & Booker, whilst he credited them with Stratton & Booker for the same amount.

The Court having refused a new trial, and rendered a judgment upon the verdict for the defendants, the *plaintiffs applied to this Court for a superseas, which was awarded.

Randolph, Patton and Lyons, for the appellants.

Garland, for the appellees.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that as it appears from the account taken from the books of the firm of Lancaster, Stratton & Co., that the firm, at the expiration of the partnership, was indebted to the plaintiffs in error in an amount exceeding the sum claimed in this suit, such account furnished by their own books would be prima facie evidence of the claim of the plaintiffs in error, and throws upon the defendants in error the burthen of shewing that the claim was not really due.

The Court, without deciding upon the sufficiency of the certificate of the facts proved upon the trial, as set forth in the bill of exceptions to the decision of the court overruling the motion for a new trial, but looking thereto for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent the prima facie evidence furnished by said account is counteracted by the other evidence in the cause, and regarding the same in the most favourable aspect for the defendants in error, it clearly appears from evidence uncontradicted by any thing appearing in the cause, that the firm of Lancaster, Stratton & Co. were indebted to Stratton or Stratton & Booker in an amount exceeding that which was transferred for the account of the latter, and not settled by P. B. Stratton, to the account of the plaintiffs in error. And the effect of such transfer was merely to substitute the plaintiffs in error as the creditors of the defendants in error in the place of Stratton or Stratton & Booker, without enlarging, or in any other mode affecting, their liability for the debt due by them; they having obtained credit for the amount so transferred with Stratton or Stratton & *Booker. The Court is of opinion, that under the authority of the case of Brown v. Higginbotham, 5 Leigh 533, and the circumstances of this case, the surviving partner, P. B. Stratton, was authorized to make such transfer. It appears he was the acting member of the firm charged with the settlement of the accounts; that the debt due from the defendants in error to the said Stratton or Stratton & Booker, grew out of purchases of wheat made for their benefit, by Stratton and Stratton & Booker, and paid for by the latter with merchandise purchased by them of or through the plaintiffs in error. It further appears that the plaintiffs in error supposed that P. B. Stratton, the acting partner of the firm of Lancaster, Stratton & Co., had authority to make such transfers, and that on the 4th February 1840, which was long before the dissolution of the firm by the death of Lancaster, a transfer for the amount of 4222 dollars 43 cents was actually made and entered on the books of the defendants in error, and never objected to; so that in reality the effect of the transfer merely rendered the defendants in error responsible for a debt contracted for goods and merchandise of which they received the benefit; and the propriety of the transfer was recognized by the firm in one instance before its dissolution by the death of Lancaster; in these particulars making this a stronger case for the exercise of the authority to make such transfer by the surviving partner in settling up the affairs of the firm, than was furnished by the facts in the case of Brown v. Higginbotham.

It therefore is considered by the Court, that the judgment of the Court overruling a motion for a new trial is erroneous.

Reversed with costs, verdict and judgment set aside, and cause remanded for a new trial.

385 *Bowles' Ex'or v. Elmore's Adm'x.

April Term, 1851. Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

Pleading and Practice—Amendment of Pleadings—Case at Bar.—In September 1837, the administratrix of E sued the executor of B in debt on a promissory note dated June 1817. The executor pleaded the statute of limitations; and the administratrix replied that after making the note, B having become the bail of E, they in October 1818 entered into a covenant, by which it was agreed that E should deliver to B the note of B, who was to hold it until the liability of B as bail was ended, and then he was to redeliver it to E. That pending the suit, E died in February 1832, and there was no administration on his estate until August 1836. There was a demurrer to the replication, which was sustained, because there was no proferri of the covenant. The plaintiff was then allowed to amend the replication by adding the proferri of the covenant, and the defendant again demurred. HELD:

1. Same—Same—Same.—It was proper to allow the amendment, it being mere matter of form, occasioning no surprise to the defendant, and being necessary to the justice of the case.
2. Same—Same—Merger.—The note was not merged in the covenant so that an action could not be maintained upon it.
3. Same—Statute of Limitations—Sustaining Running.—The statute of limitations did not run

*Statute of Limitations—Suspension of.—The proper from the time the covenant was executed, until the liability of B as bail ceased.

4. Same—Set-Off—Case at Bar.—The executor offers as a set-off, an account purporting to be due from E to A, and an order on the back of the account, purporting to be signed by E, and addressed to B, requesting him to pay the account; and then an acceptance by B. QUÆRE, what is sufficient proof of the execution of the order by E.

In September 1837, the administratrix of David Elmore deceased, instituted an action of debt against the executor of Lyddal Bowles deceased, in the Circuit court for the county of Henrico and city of Richmond. The action was founded on a promissory note for 350 dollars, alleged to have been executed by Bowles to 386 Elmore "on the 13th of June 1817; and which note was then in the possession of the defendant. In December 1837, the defendant appeared and pleaded "non detinet." In December 1842, the defendant was permitted to plead the statute of limitations, and file an account of offsets. To this the plaintiff filed a bill of exceptions, which, however, it is not necessary to notice, as this Court did not consider the question. She also replied specially to the plea of the statute of limitations; and in her replication she averred, that after the making of the note declared on, Bowles became the bail of Elmore in an action of detinue brought against him for a slave in the County court of Henrico. That as his indemnity against loss as said bail he, on the 2d of October 1818, received from Elmore the note declared on, and did then and there covenant with Elmore by his covenant in writing sealed with his seal, to return the note to Elmore as soon as he should be released from his responsibility as bail in said action. That the action of detinue was afterwards proceeded in and pending and undetermined, and that Bowles continued to be the bail of Elmore until the 25th day of February 1832, on which day Elmore died; and no person took administration on his estate until the 3d day of August 1836, when it was committed to the plaintiff for administration. That up to that time there had been no person authorized to bring the suit; and that Bowles during his lifetime, and the defendant since his death, had wrongfully detained the note.

The defendant demurred to the replication, and assigned for causes of demurrer: 1st. That there was no profert of the covenant referred to in the replication.

2d. Because if such a covenant was signed mode of testing the application of the statute of limitations, is to enquire, not whether the plaintiff might have brought at a given time a premature or groundless action, as where it has been suspended or discharged, but whether his cause of action had accrued—whether he had the right to sue, and was bound to do so, in order to prevent or suspend the running of the statute. Horner v. Speed, 2 P. & H. 614, citing the principal case. The principal case is cited and distinguished in Johnson v. Jennings, 10 Gratt. 7.

and sealed by Bowles, it did not arrest or suspend the act of limitations, which began to run against the note declared on, on the 1st of September 1817.

387 *3d. That if any such covenant was executed by Bowles and accepted by Elmore, all right of action upon the note was merged in the covenant.

The plaintiff joined in the demurrer, which was sustained by the Court; but the plaintiff had leave to withdraw her joinder in the demurrer, and amend her replication. The only amendment, however, was to make profert of the covenant referred to in the replication; and then, upon the defendant's demurring to the amended replication, the demurrer was overruled: And then the defendant took issue upon the replication.

The cause came on at length to be tried in May 1844, when the defendant to sustain one of the offsets relied on by him, offered in evidence a paper which purported to be a medical account due from David Elmore to Dr. Aaron Burton in 1817, amounting to 27 dollars 50 cents, with the following endorsement thereon:—"Mr. Lyddal Bowles, Sir: Pay to Dr. Burton the within account and oblige y'rs, David Elmore.

June 16th, 1818.

Sep. 9, 1818."

And being unable as the defendant averred, to produce direct proof of the handwriting of Elmore in the order on the back of the account, he offered to prove by a witness, that Aaron Burton was a practising physician in the county of Henrico in the year 1818, and practised in the family of Elmore; that he was dead at the time of the trial, and the witness was his executor; that the account was in the handwriting of a brother of Dr. Burton, who was in the habit of collecting his medical bills; that no account had been due or paid from Elmore's estate to Dr. Burton's estate since Dr. Burton's death; and that the acceptance on the back of the order was in the handwriting of Lyddal Bowles; as evidence to be weighed by the jury for the purpose of determining whether the said order on the back of 388 *said account was drawn by Elmore and paid by Bowles. But the Court excluded the evidence and the defendant excepted.

After introducing the account and order above mentioned, the defendant for the purpose of proving them, introduced a witness who deposed that the account was in his handwriting, and was made out by him from the books of Dr. Burton, by his direction; that Dr. Burton practised in the county of Henrico and in the family of Elmore, before and at the time specified in the account; but he had no present knowledge that the particular services charged in the said account were actually rendered; nor did he recollect anything about the presentation of the account to Elmore. That the witness had frequently gone to Elmore's house for the purpose of collecting from him money due to Dr. Burton by Elmore for medical services; and that the order was in the handwriting of the witness; but he did not recollect that Elmore signed the order, and was not sufficiently acquainted with his handwriting to swear to his signature.

The witness was then asked by the counsel for the defendant if he had any doubt that the said account was due according to its face, at its date, from Elmore to Burton; but the question was objected to by the plaintiff as not proper evidence to charge Elmore on said order, in the absence of any proof of his signature to the order; and it was excluded by the Court as inadmissible for that purpose.

The witness was then asked whether at the date of the order he had any knowledge of indebtedness by Bowles to Elmore, to which he answered he had not. He was then asked, whether he could have drawn that order without the direction of Elmore to him to do so; whereupon the plaintiff by her counsel moved the Court to exclude the said question and any answer to it, upon the ground that the handwriting of 389 Elmore to the order *could only be proved by the testimony of a witness having knowledge of the handwriting, or by proof of the admission of Elmore that it was his signature. And the Court upon that ground sustained the motion, and did exclude the said question, and forbade any answer to it by the witness. And the defendant again excepted.

There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for 350 dollars, with interest from the 13th day of June 1818, until paid. And thereupon the defendant applied to this Court for a supersedeas, which was awarded.

Lyons, for the appellant.

Daniel, for the appellee.

MONCURE, J. In my view of this case it is unnecessary to decide whether the Court below erred in permitting the plea of the act of limitations and list of offsets to be filed; being of opinion that it did not err in deciding the other questions which arose in the case.

I think the Court did not err in permitting the replication to the plea of the act of limitations to be amended. The demurrer to the original replication was sustained, solely because it contained no profert in curiam of the covenant therein mentioned. After the demurrer was sustained the replication was amended by the insertion of the profert therein. This amendment cured a defect which was merely technical, produced no delay nor inconvenience, and was necessary to the ends of justice. Without stopping to enquire how far it would have been authorized by the English practice, it is sufficient to say that it was fully authorized by the practice and decisions of Virginia. Cooke v. Beale's ex'ors, 1 Wash. 313; Graham v. Graham, 4 Munf. 205.

Nor do I think the Court erred in overruling the demurrer to the amended replication. Two propositions *are 390 presented by the demurrer. First, that the promissory note on which the action was brought was merged in the covenant; and if not, secondly, that the action on the note accrued at its date, and the act of limitations began then to run, and was not afterwards arrested or suspended by the covenant.

First. Was the promissory note merged in the covenant? The doctrine of merger is a technical doctrine founded upon the presumed intention of the parties. "A simple contract debt is merged in a bond or covenant taken for or to secure the claim, because in legal contemplation the specialty is an instrument of a higher nature, and affords a higher security and a better remedy than the original demand presented. But this does not hold, even in favour of a surety by simple contract, if it appear on the face of the subsequent deed that it was intended only as an additional or collateral security, and there is nothing in the deed itself expressly inconsistent with such intention." Chitty on Con. 783. It plainly appears on the face of the covenant in this case that the note was not intended to be merged therein. It was deposited in the hands of Bowles to indemnify him against his responsibility as the bail of Elmore; and was to be returned to the latter as soon as the former should be released from such responsibility. Its existence as an independent security was thus preserved; and though its animation was suspended during the continuance of such responsibility, it was to become again an active security when the responsibility should be determined. The covenant was not given for the payment of the debt, but for the return of the note. It was collateral to the note. The delivery of the note would be a discharge of the covenant, and a suit upon the covenant might produce merely nominal damages. The note therefore was not merged in the covenant.

391 *Secondly. Was the action on the note barred by the act of limitations? The note bears date on the 13th of June 1817, and is payable on demand. The covenant bears date on the 2d of October 1818. The plain object of the covenant was to suspend the right of action on the note until Bowles should be released from responsibility as the bail of Elmore, and then to restore such right of action. Was not that object legal? Was it not competent for the parties to agree, on sufficient consideration, that the time for payment of the note should be postponed; or that it should be payable on a future contingency? Could not the debtor, for any consideration however valuable, by any contract however solemn, arrest or suspend the running of the act of limitations against a subsisting debt? Where a new promise is made to pay a debt barred by the act of limitations, it has long been a vexed question whether the action should be brought on the old or new contract; or perhaps it would be more proper to say, whether or not it might be brought on the old; for I suppose there never was a question but that it might be brought on the new contract. Two of the Judges of this Court contended in Butcher v. Hixton, and The Farmers Bank v. Clarke, 4 Leigh 519 and 603, that the action should be brought on the new contract; but the question was not decided in those cases, and has never been decided in Virginia. That the old cause of action is revived, and may be sued upon, was recently decided by the Supreme court of Massachusetts in the case of Ilsey v. Jewet, 3 Metc. R. 439, which was ably argued, and in which all the authorities on the subject were reviewed. Our statute of 1838 regards the original cause of action as revived and brought down by the new promise, and our new Code expressly authorizes the creditor at his option to sue on the original cause of action or on the new promise. But whether, prior to the 392 operation of the *statute of 1838 and of the new Code, (which do not apply to this case,) the action in such cases should have been brought on the old or new contract, is a question which does not affect this case. Generally, there is nothing in the new promise which shews an intention of the parties to set up the old contract; and an action on the new promise answers every purpose of an action on the old contract. Were such an intention plainly expressed in the new promise, there is no case which shews that the action could not accordingly be brought on the old contract; and I imagine there can be no doubt but that it could. In this case it is plainly expressed in the covenant that the note should be preserved, and set up as the cause of action when the responsibility of Bowles as bail should be determined. This too is a stronger case than that of a mere promise to pay a debt barred by the act of limitations. It is the case of a covenant made on valuable consideration by the maker of a note a few months after its date, to return it to the payee on a future contingency, in order that he might then have a right of action thereon. That the action in this case was rightly brought on the promissory note, and was not barred by the act of limitations, is, I think, clearly shewn by the case of Irving, &c. v. Veitch, 3 Meeson & Welsby, p. 90. This is not like the case of a creditor covenanting not to sue for a limited period on a note of the debtor remaining in the hands of the creditor; in which case it might be said that the institution of a suit upon the note during such period would merely be a breach of the covenant. In this case the note was surrendered by the creditor to the debtor, for the purpose of effectually preventing it from being used as a subsisting security until the debtor should be released from his responsibility as bail of the creditor. If the debtor should be so released, the note was to be returned to the creditor, and to become again 393 an active *security. If he should not be so released, but be subjected to loss as bail, the note would be at home, and the amount of it in the hands of the debtor for his indemnity. The effect then of the covenant, in my opinion, was to restore the right of action on the note on the 25th of February 1832, when Bowles was released from his responsibility as the bail of Elmore by the latter's death; but there being no personal representative of Elmore until the 3d of August 1836, the act of limitations did not begin to run until that day. Hansford v. Elliot, 9 Leigh 79. The action having been instituted in September 1837, was of course not barred by the act.

I am also of opinion that the Court did not err in excluding the evidence mentioned in the two bills of exceptions taken on the trial. The defendant being unable, as he averred, to produce direct proof of the handwriting of Elmore, offered the evidence mentioned in the first of the said two bills of exceptions, to prove that the order therein mentioned was drawn by Elmore and paid by Bowles; but it was excluded by the Court. Was the evidence admissible for the purpose for which it was offered? The question is not whether independent parol evidence of the payment of the money by Bowles at the request of Elmore would have been admissible. There is a class of cases, it is true, in which parol is primary evidence, notwithstanding the existence of written evidence of the same fact. When a receipt is given for a payment, the general opinion is that the payment may be proved as well by parol evidence of the fact as by the production and proof of the receipt, though the case of Hamlin's adm'r v. Atkinson, 6 Rand. 574, has thrown some doubt on that question in this State. But I doubt whether the case under consideration falls in that class. If Bowles claims to have paid this money to Burton upon Elmore's written order, the order itself would 394 *seem to be the highest evidence of the fact of its having been given; and must be produced and proved as primary evidence, or its absence accounted for before secondary evidence would be admissible. There are reasons for the admissibility of parol, as primary evidence in the case of a receipt which do not apply to the case of an order; and I do not see why parol evidence is admissible in the case of an order, any more than in the case of any other written contract. However this may be, certainly the written order having been produced and relied on to prove the request, and no attempt having been made to prove a parol request, the order should have been proved precisely in the same way as if it had been the only admissible evidence of the request. It should have been proved that Elmore executed or acknowledged the order, or that the signature thereto was his handwriting. It may have been impossible for the defendant to have proved either of these facts. If so it was his misfortune or the consequence of his neglect. He should have supplied himself with legal evidence. As to the questions mentioned in the second bill of exceptions, they were, I think, improper, and with the answers thereto were rightly excluded by the Court. The first question was clearly inadmissible. The witness after stating in effect that he had no knowledge of the account or order, was asked "if he had any doubt that the said account was due according to its face." I think the other question, "Whether he would have drawn the order without the direction of Elmore," was also inadmissible. The answers to these questions would have been mere opinions of the witness; and a very unsafe foundation for the verdict of a jury. Every man who brings a suit for a claim must prove it by legal evidence; and no opinions, however numerous or well founded, that he would not assert an unjust claim, will be sufficient to warrant a verdict in his favour.

I think the judgment ought to be affirmed.

395 *BALDWIN, J. Upon the effect of the covenant between the parties in regard to the promissory note sued upon to prevent the action from being barred by the statute of limitations, and the other questions arising upon the pleadings, I concur in the opinion of Judge Moncure.

But I think the Circuit court erred in excluding from the consideration of the jury the evidence offered by the defendant in the action to prove the following item in his account of set offs: "1819, July 1st. Cash paid Dr. Burton, 27 dollars 50 cents." The defendant's two bills of exception on this subject, one of which refers to the other, may be properly treated together, and as presenting substantially the question, whether the proposed evidence was admissible for the purpose of proving the payment of so much money by the defendant's testator, for the plaintiff's intestate at his instance and request. The defendant produced a paper consisting of several parts, unattested by any subscribing witness, and purporting to be, 1st. An account of Dr. Burton against Elmore, the plaintiff's intestate, for medical services. 2dly. The order of Elmore endorsed thereon addressed to Bowles, the defendant's testator, requesting him to pay the amount of the account to Dr. Burton. 3dly. The acceptance of Bowles at the foot of the order. And to authenticate the paper as genuine, the defendant offered the parol evidence mentioned in the bills of exception. But the Court excluded from the jury the whole evidence written and parol, on the ground it seems that there was no proof of the handwriting of Elmore's signature of the order, nor of his admission that it was his signature.

In this decision the Court overlooked, I think, a distinction between writings attested by subscribing witnesses and those not so attested. Where an instrument is attested by a subscribing witness, the law requires him to be called to prove its execution; the parties *having agreed that he shall be their witness of the fact; and the presumption being that he has a better knowledge than any other of the attending circumstances: and the omission to call him cannot be supplied by proof of any acknowledgment or admission of the party against whom the instrument is adduced, or that the signature of the party is in his handwriting. If, however, the production of the subscribing witness has from his death or other circumstances become impracticable, the next best evidence is proof of the handwriting of his attesting signature, which covers the entire execution of the instrument, from the presumption that he would not have put his name there in authentication of what in truth did not occur.

The case of an instrument unattested by any subscribing witness stands upon a quite different footing. There the parties have not made any one the special depository of the fact of execution. The fact may be proved by any witnesses. And the evidence may be direct and positive or indirect and circumstantial. It may relate to what occurred at the time of the transaction, or to subsequent acknowledgments or admissions of the party, either by words or by circumstances of recognition or acquiescence. Or it may be of the handwriting of the party; but that rests upon no higher ground in regard to competency than any other evidence of the fact of execution, whether direct or circumstantial; if it did then, as being of a higher class, it would exclude all evidence not only of subsequent acknowledgments or admissions, but even of what occurred at the time of the transaction. And besides to require proof of the handwriting of the party, presupposes that the signature of his name was written with his own hand, whereas, in simple contracts, at least, if written by some other person at his request or by his authority, it would have been equally effectual.

397 *In the present case it cannot, I think, be doubted that it would have been competent for a witness to prove that he presented the account upon which the order is endorsed to Elmore, and at his request, or by his permission, wrote the order, which was signed by Elmore with his own hand, or by some other person at his request; and that such proof of the execution of the order would be direct, positive and complete, without any evidence whatever of the handwriting of Elmore. Here the evidence of these facts was not direct and positive, but indirect and circumstantial; and no one supposes that the law makes any distinction in point of competency between these two kinds of evidence, or that the sufficiency of either is not matter for the consideration of the jury. And it is obvious that the evidence of a witness which would otherwise be positive, may be rendered circumstantial by his want of recollection of parts of the transaction, though he still remembers circumstances from which the inference is safe and satisfactory.

The circumstances appearing from the bills of exception are these: 1. The authentication of Dr. Burton's account upon which the order is endorsed. His brother was examined as a witness, and deposed that the account was copied by him from Dr. Burton's books by his direction. 2. The authentication of the body of the order from its being in the handwriting of the same witness. 3. That the witness would not have written the order without the request of Elmore (which we are warranted in assuming from his being prevented by the Court from speaking to that point). See 1 Stark. Ev. pt. 2, p. 332-3, n. and the cases there cited. 4. That the account with the order endorsed, was in the possession of but not retained by Elmore, but came to the possession of Burton or his agent, and was presented to Bowles for his acceptance, and was accepted by him at the foot of the order. 5. That the order was afterwards *paid by Bowles. The two last circumstances are inferences from, but warranted by the evidence, as will be seen by inspecting it. The evidence moreover warrants the inference, that the medical services charged in the account, were rendered by Burton, and that the account itself was presented to Elmore for payment by the agent of Burton.

I cannot doubt that if the evidence offered had been submitted to instead of being excluded from the jury, they might very properly have deemed it sufficient to sustain the set off claimed by the defendant. But whether they would or not, it seems to me that it was proper for their consideration, and I can perceive no principle, nor am I aware of any authority, upon which it ought to have been rejected. Evidence of the handwriting of the party is doubtless proper in such cases, (though in itself circumstantial,) and is perhaps most usual, because most convenient; and the failure to produce it when obtainable, may in a doubtful case be proper for the consideration of the jury, though entitled to but little weight, for it is equally in the power of either party, and is in its nature of equal force when used negatively as when used affirmatively. But after the lapse, as in this case, of twenty-six years, the fair presumption is that such evidence has perished, if it ever existed; and if so, then the exclusion of other evidence whether direct or circumstantial, to prove the execution of the instrument, has to my mind no colour of reason.

DANIEL, J., concurred in the opinion of Moncure, J., except as to the proof of the set off of 27 dollars 50 cents.

ALLEN, J., concurred with Moncure, J.
Judgment affirmed.

399 *Clarke v. Hardgrove &c.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

Sale of Land—Defect of Title—Case at Bar.—H sells land to C, and conveys to him with general warranty; and C assigns to H the bonds of S in payment of the purchase money. The title to a part of the land is afterwards discovered to be clearly defective. Held:

1st. Same—Same—Injunction.—C may enjoin H from collecting so much of the bond of S as will compensate him for the land to which the title is defective.

2d. Same—Same—Compensation to Vendee.†—C is entitled to compensation according to the relative value of the land to which a good title cannot be made.

3d. Same—Same—Action of Court.—H should be directed to perfect the title by a day specified by the Court: And if he failed to do so, a commissioner should be directed to ascertain the relative value of the part of the tract to which the title is defective.

This was a suit in equity in the Circuit court of Dinwiddie by Thomas E. Clarke against Thomas Hardgrove and others. In his bill he charged that he in September 1839, bought of Thomas Hardgrove of the city of Richmond a tract of land containing eleven hundred and seventy-six acres, lying in the county of Dinwiddie, at the price of 11,000 dollars; and that Hardgrove had conveyed the land to him by a deed with general warranty. That in the same year the plaintiff had sold a tract of land in Nottoway to Samuel Scott for 10,000 dollars, for which he had received Scott's three bonds of 3333 dollars 33 cents, with good security; which bonds he assigned to Hardgrove in part payment of the land bought of him; and that the last of these bonds

Sale of Land—Defect of Title—Injunction against the Collection of Purchase Money.—In Virginia, equity will enjoin the collection of the purchase money of land on the ground of defect of title, after vendee has taken possession, after conveyance from vendor with general warranty, if the title is questioned by a suit either prosecuted or threatened, or if the purchaser can show clearly that the title is defective. Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh 606. See also, Ralston v. Miller, 3 Rand. 44 15 Am. Dec. 704. For this proposition, see the principal case cited in Wamsley v. Stalnaker, 24 W. Va. 223; Heavner v. Morgan, 41 W. Where a vendor has bound himself to convey land with covenant of general warranty, he is responsible for defect of title to any part of the land so sold; and a court of equity will not compel the payment of the whole of the purchase money until the defect is removed, although there has been a conveyance of the land by the vendor. Worthington v. Staunton, 16 W. Va. 242, citing the principal case, Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh 606, and Renick v. Renick, 5 W. Va. 285. See also, principal case cited for this proposition in Johnston v. Jarret, 14 W. Va. 230.

†Same—Same—Compensation to Vendee.—To the point, that, where land is conveyed with general warranty of title, and it is found that the title to part of it is defective, the vendee is entitled to compensation for that part, according to its relative value to the whole tract, see principal case cited in Butcher v. Peterson, 26 W. Va. 454; Heavner v. Morgan, 30 W. Va. 343, 4 S. E. Rep. 411; Renick v. Renick, 5 W. Va. 291; Heavner v. Morgan, 41 W. Va. 445, 23 S. E. Rep. 880.

remained unpaid. That when he purchased and received the deed for the land, 400 *he had not the slightest suspicion that there was any defect in the title to any part of it. That he has been informed, and has no doubt of the fact, that neither Hardgrove or his vendor ever had any title to a part of the land containing about fifty-one acres. That this fifty-one acres was owned by P. Goodwin, who died about twenty years since, and who devised it to his two daughters, one of whom was married to Thomas Whitworth, and the other had married Daniel E. Allen, and died leaving an infant daughter. And that the legal title to this land was then in this infant and Mrs. Whitworth. That Hardgrove was probably in at least doubtful circumstances.

The plaintiff stated further, that this fifty-one acres of land were situated in the middle of his tract, and in front of his dwelling house, about one hundred and fifty yards from the door: And he stated other circumstances which enhanced its value; so that the whole of the bond of Scott which remained unpaid would be not more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff for the loss of the land. And having made Hardgrove, Allen and his infant daughter, Whitworth and his wife, and Scott and his sureties, and others, parties defendants, he asked that the payment to Hardgrove of this last bond of Scott might be enjoined. That a commissioner might be directed to enquire and report as to the alleged defects of the title to said land; and if they existed the Court would require the title to be made good if possible; and if that was impossible, that full relief might be afforded him by decreeing payment to him of the amount of Scott's last bond, and such other sum as should be sufficient to compensate him for the loss of the land. And he asked for general relief.

The injunction was granted according to the prayer of the bill: and the cause was so proceeded in that the bill was taken for confessed as to all the before mentioned parties; and one of the commissioners of the 401 *Court was directed to examine and report as to the title to the fifty-one acres of land, and also as to the value of the land the title to which he should consider defective; embracing in such valuation and report the inconveniences, loss of buildings and damages which might be sustained by the plaintiff if he should be deprived of the said land.

The commissioner reported that the title to the fifty-one acres was clearly defective; and he gave the location of it very much as it is described in the bill. For the injury which the plaintiff would sustain by the loss of this land he referred to the testimony of several witnesses whose examinations were returned with the report. These witnesses agreed in estimating the plaintiff's damages by the loss of the fifty-one acres of land at 2500 dollars.

After the commissioner had returned his report the defendant Hardgrove filed his answer. He objected that the case stated in the bill was not proper for the jurisdiction of a Court of equity; and asked that he might have the benefit of this objection as if it had been formally pleaded. He said that he had purchased the land sold by him to the plaintiff, through the agency of his brother-in-law R. C. Pollard; and knew nothing himself of either the land or the title to it; but relied upon said Pollard who lived near to the land, and who informed him that the title was good. That changing his purpose to remove to the country, he sold the land again through the agency of Pollard. That never whilst he held the land, and indeed not until very lately, had he known or heard of any defect in the title to the fifty-one acres of land mentioned in the bill; but if there was any defect in the title he was willing to do what might be deemed by the Court right in the matter: He was ready and willing to buy the land if it could be bought, and convey 402 it to the complainant; *and if it was so situated that it could not be sold, he was willing to pay a full equivalent to the complainant for it; but he objected strongly that the claim of the complainant as to the amount of the damages sustained by him, was exorbitant and most unreasonable.

It appeared from the testimony of Thomas Whitworth, one of the defendants, that the fifty-one acres of land mentioned in the bill, had been devised by P. Goodwin to his two daughters, of whom Mrs. Whitworth was one; and had been sold by the defendant Allen to Edward O. Branch the vendor of Hardgrove, for 600 dollars. That the sale was sanctioned by Whitworth who had joined in a deed with Allen conveying their interest in the land. That since this controversy commenced he had executed and delivered to Mr. Hardgrove's counsel a legal title to one moiety of the fifty-one acres; and that the legal title to the other moiety was in the infant daughter of Allen.

The plaintiff in 1844 filed an amended bill claiming compensation for an injury which he alleged was done to his land by the Upper Appomattox company under a contract between that company and Hardgrove, entered into whilst Hardgrove was the owner of the land. But it is unnecessary to state the questions arising on that amended bill. The cause came on to be finally heard in September 1845, when the Court dismissed the bill and amended bill with costs: Whereupon Clarke applied to one of the Judges of this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Spoooner, for the appellant.

The defect of title in this case was no ordinary one. It was not a mere cloud at a distance, which would in all probability vanish into thin air; it was not only palpable, but alarming to the appellant. When this suit was brought, the legal title to the fifty-one acres, by far the most valuable and important part 403 *of the tract, was in Mrs. Whitworth, wife of Thomas Whitworth, and the infant daughter of D. E. Allen. Could such a defect of title be of but little importance to the appellant? It was not a distant one, of long standing, which would never probably be noticed, nor any claim be ever set up. The facts, which have happened since the suit was brought, although not a part of the record, may be stated by way of argument. Mrs. Whitworth, whose title Allen attempted to sell and not her husband's, has since died, leaving a child or children; Whitworth himself has become insolvent and taken the oath of an insolvent debtor; D. E. Allen has died utterly insolvent, and was so some time before his death; of what use would their warranty deeds be in such a case? It is said by one of the Judges of this Court, in Jackson v. Ligon, 3 Leigh 161, that "it is the settled rule of this Court, not to compel a vendee to pay the purchase money until he gets a title." It is submitted to the Court, that the situation of the persons in whom was the legal title to the fifty-one acres, was such that the appellant might well consider a suit threatened. But if not, he has done what the Court, in Ralston v. Miller, 3 Rand. 44, stated as necessary to be done in cases like this; proved the title to be bad. Can there be the least question, that if a suit had been depending against Clarke for the purchase money of the land in question, that a Court of equity could legally have arrested the payment, and compelled Hardgrove to make good in some way the title, or to have secured Clarke against future loss or danger?

The question whether the transfer of the bonds in this case was equivalent to cash as a payment in all respects, may require some notice.

The counsel contends, that while the bonds transferred were uncollected, they should be considered in equity in no other light than if the bonds were due by the vendee himself, or than orders given by Clarke *on the obligors of the bonds and accepted by them. In both cases the vendor would have a clear legal right to go back to the vendee for payment, if the obligors or persons accepting orders should fail to pay. It is no where intimated in this cause, that if the obligors in the bonds assigned and transferred to Hardgrove, had all proved insolvent, that Hardgrove was deprived of his legal right to go back and to look to Clarke to pay the amounts. They were not transferred and assigned to Hardgrove, and received by him as cash, with an agreement that he should have no recourse against Clarke. The transfer then was but the transfer of evidences of debt, to become a payment if collected; if not, he had recourse back on Clarke. The transfer was a payment in common parlance, and was so used in the bill, but not equivalent to an actual payment in cash, or a receipt of the bonds, without recourse to Clarke. The assignment and receipt of the bonds was not a Novation. "The old debt was not extinguished by the transfer." "It was not a new engagement with Hardgrove in consideration of being liberated from the former." "It was not the accepting of the obligors in the bonds as the sole debtors, and thereby discharging Clarke." The obligors in the bonds were not expromissors. They made no engagement with Hardgrove to stand in the shoes of Clarke, and in fact no engagement at all. Pothier, vol. 2, p. 58, 59, 60, edi. of 1802, chap. 2 of part 3, art. 1.

Neither was there a delegation of the debt in question. Pothier, vol. 2, p. 71, chap. 2, art. 6.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 71, chap. 436, vol. 2, 231, and references. Bullitt v. Songster, 3 Munf. 54. In this case the Court decreed, that a bond due by other persons than the vendee, and assigned by him to the vendor, should be delivered back by him to the vendee.

405 *May and Wallace, for the appellee.

We hold that the plaintiff never having been evicted, has no right of action. There has been no breach of the covenant of warranty. "The covenant of warranty and the covenant for quiet enjoyment are prospective, and an eviction is necessary to constitute a breach of them." Kent's Com. part 6, lecture 66, p. 459. This is the general doctrine admitted by all the writers and approved by all the Courts to whose decisions we have had access; in England, in New York, Greenby v. Wilcocks, 2 John. R. 1; in Connecticut, Booth v. Stark, 1 Conn. R. 244; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. R. 497; and in Massachusetts, Marston v. Hobbs, 2 Mass. R. 439; Bickford v. Page, 2 Mass. R. 455; Gore v. Brazier, 3 Mass. R. 523.

Chancellor Kent (Kent's Com. p. 464) says, "If the grantor had notice to remove the incumbrance and refused, equity would undoubtedly compel him to raise it, and decree a general performance of a covenant of indemnity." In this case, so far from waiting to give notice to Hardgrove, and giving him an opportunity to remove the difficulty, Clarke goes into a Court of equity without ever even informing Hardgrove that there was a defect in the title. Had he done so, Hardgrove would have willingly procured the title to be made good, and if required, have given a bond of indemnity till it could be done. The truth is, that he did get the title perfected years ago; though as to the half of the 51 acres which Allen's daughter would be entitled to at Allen's death, there is no evidence in this record that her right was quieted, because it was not done till after the decree dismissing the bill was rendered; but as to the part to which Whitworth and wife were entitled, the claim was quieted in 1844.

We submit that the cases referred to by the counsel for the appellant, are not in conflict with these well understood principles. First, the case of Boullitt v. Songster, *3 Munf. 54, differs entirely from this. In that case, there was a special agreement; and the case was decided upon that special contract; not upon a mere warranty of title, such as was given by Hardgrove to Clarke.

Second, the case of Ralston v. Miller, 3 Rand. 44, is equally inapplicable. The principle decided in that case was, that Courts of equity will not interfere between vendor and vendee to prevent the collection by the vendor of the purchase money, unless, &c. The decision was against an injunction in that case. It is true there is an obiter dictum in the opinion of the Court, to the effect that this Court has gone far beyond any thing which has been sanctioned by the Courts of England or elsewhere, in enjoining the payment of the purchase money after the purchaser has taken possession under a conveyance, especially with general warranty; and that it would interfere in a case where the purchaser could shew that the title was clearly defective. But is there any intimation that the Court would interfere to prevent the collection of a security against a stranger, received as payment by the vendor, as in this case? The Court meant to say, that it would interfere where the vendor was enforcing the payment of the purchase money from the vendee when there was a defective title. In this case the principle contended for would justify the Court in forcing the vendor to refund what he had already received.

But would the Court interfere even in that case unless the vendee or grantee had given reasonable notice to the vendor of the defect in the title, required him to remove it, and been refused either to remove it or to give satisfactory indemnity.

In every aspect in which we can view the case, we think the law is in favour of sustaining the decree of the Court below.

407 *ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that as the appellant has clearly shewn that at the institution of his suit the title to a portion of the land conveyed to him was defective, he had a right, notwithstanding a deed with general warranty had been made, to enjoin the collection of the purchase money; Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh 606, and cases there cited; and that such right is not impaired though the vendor is seeking to collect the purchase money, not directly from the purchaser, but from a third person on a collateral security assigned to him by the purchaser: It not being incumbent upon the purchaser, in case of such clear defect of title, to risk the hazard of the vendor's solvency.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that said Court erred in dismissing the bill and amended bill of the plaintiff.

Decree reversed with costs, injunction reinstated, and cause remanded with instructions to enter a decree that unless the appellee shall within a reasonable time to be prescribed by the Court, perfect the title to so much of the land conveyed as is shewn to be defective, that an account be directed to ascertain the relative value of the part, or the interest therein, to which the appellee cannot make a good title, and for further proceedings in order to a final decree.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P.)

Equity Practice—Suits to Divide Estate of Decedent—

Case at Bar.—J T died intestate, leaving a large number of slaves; and leaving a widow F T, and eight children. Of the children a daughter F was married to A, and there was a marriage settlement securing her property to her and her children. Another daughter H, died an infant and unmarried. Subsequently it was agreed between F T and the children, that she should surrender to them at once her dower slaves upon terms agreed on by them; and a suit was brought in equity to have the slaves divided among the parties. The Court appointed commissioners with directions, first to allot to the widow F T one sixty-fourth of the slaves as her own as distributee of her daughter H; and to divide the remainder among the children. The division was made; and the share of the widow was valued at $1580; the share of each child at $14039. The share of F was valued at $211 more than the average; and her husband was directed to pay this to the other children. In consideration of the surrender of these slaves to F and her husband, the husband agreed to convey and did convey to F T, a portion of these slaves valued at $2200; and he received the remainder, and sold some and retained others until the death of F T, ten years after the division. The children of F then claimed the slaves conveyed by her husband to F T, and their increase. Held:

1. Same—Same—Same.—The husband of F having been entitled absolutely on account of his wife to her share of her sister T's interest in the slaves amounting to $1580, and he being required to pay $211 for owelty of partition,—$1791; and he having by agreement with F T, conveyed the slaves to her, in consideration of her surrender of the remainder, the slaves so conveyed by him, to the extent of his interest in the dower slaves, must be taken to have been his own, and to have passed by his conveyance to F T; and her title was not affected by the fact that the husband had afterwards, in disregard of the terms of the marriage articles sold some of the slaves surrendered to him.

409 *2. Same—Same—Same.—The arrangement by which the beneficiaries in the marriage agreement acquired immediate possession of the slaves, was so clearly beneficial, that the difference between the interest of the husband of F in the dower slaves, being $1791, and the value of the slaves conveyed by him to F T, was a proper and reasonable charge upon the trust estate.

In February 1829, John Y. Archer filed his bill in the late Superior court of chancery for the Richmond district, in which he stated that he and his four brothers and sisters, three of whom were infants, were the children of John R. Archer and Frances Cook his wife, formerly Frances Cook Tabb, who had before their marriage, entered into a marriage contract, by which the property of the wife had been secured to her children. That some time during the previous year Frances Tabb, the grandmother of the plaintiff, had died possessed of certain slaves on account of her dower interest in the estate of her husband John Tabb; and that William J. Barksdale as her administrator, was about to sell them as her property. And making Barksdale as the administrator of Frances Tabb, a defendant, he asked for an injunction to the sale; and that the Court would decree to the plaintiff and those equally interested their portion of said slaves; and for general relief.

The injunction was refused by the Chancellor, but was granted by the Court of appeals.

In July 1829, Barksdale answered the bill. He admitted the marriage settlement between John R. Archer and his wife; the death of Mrs. Frances Tabb in April 1828, and his qualification as administrator upon her estate. He said that a large number of slaves had been allotted to Mrs. Tabb as her dower in the slaves of her husband John Tabb deceased; but at the earnest solicitation of John R. Archer the father of the plaintiff, as respondent understood, Frances Tabb on the 25th of December 1818, agreed 410 *that portion of the slaves which would belong to Mrs. Archer at the death of Frances Tabb, the sum of 2000 dollars to be paid in slaves: and in consideration of her relinquishing the same to the said John R. Archer he executed to Frances Tabb a bill of sale for the following slaves, viz: Philip, Maria, Nelly, Lucy and William; as would appear by his bill of sale exhibited with the defendant's answer; and that the woman Maria had since had four children. He admitted the five first named slaves were a part of the slaves held by Frances Tabb as her dower slaves, assigned to her out of the estate of her husband John Tabb; but he insisted that an absolute estate in these slaves was not worth more than the life estate in the slaves surrendered by Frances Tabb to John R. Archer.

The defendant further insisted on an absolute right to these slaves under the bill of sale of John R. Archer; but if Archer had no right by reason of the marriage contract between himself and his wife, to sell them absolutely, then he insisted the sale was good for his life. But if John R. Archer had no right to make the purchase and sale, then that he should be a party in this suit, and should be decreed to pay this defendant as administrator of Mrs. Frances Tabb, a reasonable hire for all the dower slaves of Frances Tabb from the time he received them until her death.

The defendant further insisted that the slave Sye or Syphax was not one of the dower slaves of Mrs. Frances Tabb; but had been purchased by her at a sale of negroes belonging to the estate of her son John Y. Tabb deceased, made 15th February 1819, at the price of 800 dollars.

At the June term 1830, the Court directed John R. Archer to be made a defendant in the case; and by leave of the Court his name was inserted in the bill as a defendant; and in January 1832, he and his wife filed an answer. They objected to 411 the jurisdiction of the *Court, and insisted that if their codefendant Barksdale had any claim against them, or either of them, he should have asserted it by original or cross bill, or by an action at law. But if they were wrong in their objection, then for answer to the bill they say that the several matters of fact contained therein they believe are correctly stated; and they submit all questions of law arising thereupon to the consideration of the Court.

They say that as to John R. Archer's liability to Barksdale as administrator of Frances Tabb, raised in his answer, they admit the agreement therein mentioned between Mrs. Tabb and Archer; and that he, under a belief that he might lawfully do so, executed the bill of sale exhibited with the answer. That the slaves therein contained were a part of the slaves assigned to Mrs. Tabb for her dower in the slaves of John Tabb deceased. That the price agreed to be paid to Mrs. Tabb for the relinquishment of her life estate was 2000 dollars; but in fact, the slaves conveyed to her were valued at 2200 dollars.

They say that the slave Sye or Syphax was one of the dower slaves allotted to them; and to whom independent of the agreement with Mrs. Tabb, they would have been entitled at her death. That he was sold by John R. Archer at the time and place of the sale made by the trustees of John Y. Tabb; but he was sold solely for the benefit of the defendant Archer, and was purchased for Mrs. Tabb, to whom he was sent; but that no part of the purchase money amounting to 800 dollars, was ever paid.

The defendant Archer further stated, that among the slaves allotted to himself and wife, was one called Miller Lee, valued at 900 dollars. That this slave was sold on account of the defendant Archer, at a sale made on the 18th and 19th December 1818, of a number of the dower slaves, for 700 dollars, and the proceeds paid to William

412 B. Giles, at the instance and for the benefit *of Mrs. Frances Tabb; who also received from the agent who conducted the said sale the further sum of 695 dollars, part of the proceeds of other slaves allotted to the defendants Archer and wife, and sold for the defendant Archer at the sale aforesaid. That there were two other dower slaves held by Mrs. Tabb which under the agreement with her, should have been delivered up to the distributees of her husband, viz: George, called shoemaker George, and Delphia; the latter was sold at the sale mentioned above for dollars, and the proceeds paid over to Mrs. Tabb. George was subsequently disposed of by her. He was worth probably about 900 dollars: And no account had ever been rendered to said distributees of the value of either. They therefore insisted that they had never received the full consideration for which the bill of sale was executed; and that a large portion of the sum of 2000 dollars which the defendant Barksdale supposed he was entitled to claim of the defendant Archer, had been retained or received by Mrs. Tabb in her lifetime.

And they insisted further, that Mrs. Tabb died largely indebted to the estate of her daughter Harriet Tabb, of whom she had been the guardian; and that one seventh part of the sum thus due belonged to the defendants Archer and wife as distributees of said Harriet.

It appears that John Tabb died intestate about the year 1797, leaving a very large number of slaves to be divided among his widow Frances Tabb and his eight children, one of whom was Frances Cook and another was Harriet Tabb. In 1801 Frances Cook Tabb was married to Dr. John R. Archer; and previous to the marriage they executed a marriage agreement by which Dr. Archer agreed that all the estate, real and personal, of the said Frances Cook, should be secured and settled upon her and her heirs, with a specific exception; and the annual profits only should be applied to the support and maintenance of themselves and their 413 issue. This *marriage agreement was sustained and enforced, as will be seen by the case of Tabb v. Archer, reported in 3 Hen. & Munf. 433.

Mrs. Frances Tabb qualified as the guardian of Harriet Tabb, and her guardianship continued until 1806, when Harriet Tabb died an infant and unmarried; and Dr. Bathurst Randolph became the administrator of her estate. In 1818 Mrs. Frances Tabb, Dr. Archer and his wife and three others of Mrs. Tabb's daughters and their husbands filed their bill in the County court of Amelia, in which they stated the fact that Mrs. Tabb had a number of slaves in her possession as dower slaves of her husband's estate, to which the children of John Tabb would be entitled at her death. That it would be for the interest of all the parties that these slaves should be distributed among those entitled in remainder. That arrangements had been made between the complainants for compounding their respective interests in said slaves, which they conceived to be mutually beneficial. And having made the administrator of a deceased child, and the other living daughter defendants, they asked for a distribution of the slaves among the parties entitled, upon their making to Frances Tabb such satisfaction for her dower interest therein as she should be willing to accept in full discharge of the same.

The defendants answered, concurring in the prayer of the bill; and the Court made a decree appointing commissioners who were directed to receive the slaves from Mrs. Tabb, and of these slaves, in the first place to allot one sixty-fourth part to Frances Tabb, to be held by her in absolute property, as her distributable share of her daughter Harriet's proportion of said slaves; and that they should then proceed to divide the residue of said slaves into seven equal portions or allotments, having reference to value, and should deliver one portion to each of the husbands of the female 414 plaintiffs, *and to the daughter and the representatives of the deceased sons, to be held by the said parties according to their respective titles, upon the exhibition by each of the said parties respectively, of a release or acquittance in writing to the said party by the said Frances Tabb, and attested by two witnesses at the least, discharging the said party from all the right, estate and interest of her the said Frances Tabb, to dower in the slaves composing the said allotment; and if any of the parties failed to produce such acquittance, the slaves allotted to such party should be delivered to Frances Tabb. And the commissioners were directed to make out lists containing the names and descriptions of the slaves composing each allotment; which lists should be separate, and headed with the name of the respective parties to whom the allotment ought to have been made if the conditions of the decree had been complied with. And the commissioners were directed to return the said lists with all other their proceedings in the premises, in order to a final decree.

The commissioners appointed to make the division of the slaves made a report, which contained a list of the slaves allotted to Mrs. Tabb, and to each of the five living children. The slaves allotted to the representatives of the other two children were named, but they were not divided between them. This report shewed that the slaves allotted to Mrs. Tabb for her one sixty-fourth part, as distributee of her daughter Harriet, were valued at 1580 dollars. The shares of the seven children were each 14,039 dollars; and Dr. Archer's share was valued at 14,250 dollars; being 211 dollars more than his share, which he was directed to pay to the different distributees. And it also appeared that the slaves conveyed by Dr. Archer to Mrs. Tabb were valued at 2200 dollars. The report shewed a release by Mrs. Tabb to each of the five living children, as directed by the decree, 415 and a delivery of the slaves to *them.

And it was in consideration of this relinquishment by Mrs. Tabb of her interest in Mrs. Archer's portion of these slaves, that Dr. Archer executed the bill of sale referred to in the answer of Barksdale, by which, in consideration of 2200 dollars, as therein stated, he conveyed to Mrs. Tabb the five slaves mentioned in Barksdale's answer.

The cause came on to be heard in June 1832, upon the bill, answers, replications and exhibits, when the Court then held that the plaintiff and the other children of the defendants John R. Archer and Frances Cook his wife, and the said Frances Cook, were entitled to all the dower slaves of Frances Tabb deceased, and the increase of the females, the reversion in which, after the death of the said Frances Tabb, was allotted to the defendants John R. Archer and Frances Cook his wife, under the order of the County court of Amelia, filed as an exhibit in the cause. And that John R. Archer had no legal right or authority to sell and convey to the said Frances Tabb the slaves Philip, &c., which he attempted to convey to her by his bill of sale of the 25th of December 1818. And it was therefore decreed that the injunction awarded the plaintiff should be perpetuated; and that the defendant Barksdale should at the end of the year deliver to a trustee appointed for the purpose, the slaves conveyed in the bill of sale aforesaid, and the increase of the females, to be held by him upon the trusts of the marriage agreement referred to in the bill. And Barksdale was directed to render an account of the hires of said slaves before one of the commissioners of the Court.

And the Court further decreed, that the same commissioner should ascertain and report whether the slave Sye or Syphax was or was not one of the dower slaves of Frances Tabb, the reversion in whom, after her death, was allotted to the defendants John R. Archer *and his wife, under the aforesaid order of the County court of Amelia. And if the said slave should be ascertained by the commissioner to be one of the said dower slaves, then that he should state an account of his hire from the 31st of December 1828.

And at another day of the same term, the Court decreed that Barksdale should render an account of Frances Tabb's guardianship of her daughter Harriet Tabb deceased, before the commissioner who might execute the previous order made in the cause; and the commissioner was directed to ascertain the share of that estate to which the defendants John R. Archer and his wife were entitled: and to make an enquiry and take an account of the slave Miller Lee, the reversion in which was allotted to said defendants, alleged in their answer to have been sold, and the proceeds received by Frances Tabb. And the commissioner was also directed to take an account of the sale of the slaves shoemaker George and Delphia his wife; and ascertain the share of the proceeds arising from such sale, to which the defendants John R. Archer and his wife and their children were entitled, and report all the said accounts to the Court, &c.

In July 1834, commissioner Baker made his report. He stated the net hires of the slaves Phil, &c., conveyed by Dr. Archer to Mrs. Tabb, and their increase, up to the time when they were delivered by Barksdale to the trustee of Mrs. Archer and her children, at 154 dollars 53 cents. He reported that Sye or Syphax was one of the dower slaves of Frances Tabb, the reversion in whom after the death of Mrs. Tabb, was allotted to the defendants John R. Archer and his wife: and he stated his hire from 1828 to December 1834, at 100 dollars per annum, or 600 dollars. He reported the interest of the defendants John R. Archer and wife and of their children in shoemaker George and Delphia, 417 *at 227 dollars 85 cents; and that Mrs. Tabb was indebted to John R. Archer and wife and their children on account of Miller Lee, 1330 dollars.

As to the account of Mrs. Tabb as guardian of Harriet Tabb, the commissioner reported that the administrator represented that he had no other means of rendering an account, except the books of a certain mercantile house in Petersburg, with which Mrs. Tabb kept an account for herself and all of her children except Mrs. Giles. And the commissioner made some statements of the account from these books, but they were unsatisfactory to himself.

To this report the defendant Barksdale filed exceptions. First to the statements of the account of Mrs. Tabb as guardian of Harriet Tabb; and after pointing out what he conceived specific errors in the statements, he relied upon the twenty-seven years which elapsed between the death of Harriet Tabb and the assertion of the claim by Dr. Archer to have this guardian account settled.

2d. He controverted the conclusion of the commissioner that the slave Sye or Syphax was one of the dower slaves the reversion of which had been allotted to John R. Archer and wife.

3d. To the charge for shoemaker George and Delphia, both on the ground of lapse of time and the insufficiency of proof; and to the charge on account of the slave Miller Lee, on the same grounds; and also on the ground that the interest in the value of the slave should not commence until the death of Mrs. Tabb in 1828.

And he insisted that as by virtue of the agreement between Mrs. Tabb and Dr. Archer, his family had the use of twenty-three valuable slaves from 1818 until 1828, if the conveyance by Dr. Archer to Mrs.

418 Tabb was set aside, Dr. Archer and wife and their children *should be held to account for the hires of the said twenty-three slaves.

In July 1840, the plaintiff's death was suggested, and the suit was revived in the name of his administrator; and the cause was removed to the Circuit court for the town of Petersburg. In July 1842, the cause came on to be heard, and the Court held: 1st. That the decree of June 1832, so far as it related to the slaves mentioned in the bill of sale from John R. Archer to Frances Tabb, and their increase, was binding on the Court, and on the parties to this suit; and that the said slaves having been by said decree ordered to be delivered up to a trustee, and having been actually delivered in compliance with said decree, it would be illegal and improper for the Court now to disturb the same.

2d. That the slave Sye or Syphax was one of the dower slaves of Frances Tabb, the reversion in whom, after her death, was allotted to the defendants John R. Archer and wife, under the order of the County court of Amelia filed as an exhibit; that Archer retained this slave until February 1819, after he had sold much the larger number of the slaves allotted to him and his wife under that order; when he sold him, and he was purchased by Frances Tabb. That therefore the said slave Syphax should be decreed to be delivered to the trustee to be held by him subject to the uses specified in the marriage settlement.

3d. That there was nothing in the decree of June 1832, in relation to the hires of Philip and family or of Syphax, which should restrain the Court from decreeing in relation thereto, as to it might seem just and equitable; and that the plaintiffs had no right to have these hires paid over to them, because the same belonged to and should be paid over, if to any one in this cause, to the defendant John R. Archer. But if he was entitled to them he was also answerable to the defendant as admin-

419 *sum of 2000 dollars, with interest from the 25th of December 1818, the amount paid him by said Frances Tabb for Philip and his family; and for 800 dollars, with interest from February the 1819, paid for the purchase of Syphax; an amount much more than the hires of these slaves; and therefore and because the said John R. Archer was insolvent, the Court would allow the defendant to withhold said hires in part payment of the amount so due from John R. Archer to the estate of the defendant's intestate; and would, if the administrator required it, order an account between them, as to that subject; but as to no other.

4th. That the accounts directed to be taken by the decree of June 1832, of Frances Tabb's guardianship of Harriet Tabb deceased, and also in relation to the slaves Miller Lee, George and Delphia, were improvidently ordered in this cause; and that the Court would neither consider the same or decree in relation thereto.

It was therefore decreed that Barksdale should deliver to a trustee named, the slave Syphax, to be held by him upon the trusts and to the uses and purposes of the marriage settlement referred to in the bill; and that he should out of the assets of his intestate pay to the plaintiff his costs; and that the defendant John R. Archer should pay the costs of taking the accounts and making the reports ordered by the decree of June 1832. And the cause was continued for the sole purpose of taking an account between John R. Archer and the administrator of Frances Tabb as before indicated, if the administrator should desire it.

In December 1842, Barksdale as the administrator of Frances Tabb, applied to the Court by petition for a rehearing of the decrees of June 1832, and July 1842, on the ground that when he filed his answer, in ignorance and under a misapprehension of the facts as to the title of John R. Archer to the slaves directed by full facts which would have sustained the title of his intestate, and indeed had honestly made admissions according to his then belief, which were seriously detrimental to the interests of his intestate's estate. That since the rendition of that decree he had been truly informed of the real circumstances under which said slaves were acquired by his intestate, and had obtained the record which he had filed in this suit, of a suit brought in the County court of Amelia in May 1818, from which it was then apparent that instead of said slaves, or at least the greater number of them, being merely held by the father of the plaintiff in trust, they were then actually owned by him; having been acquired in right of his wife as a distributee of a deceased sister, subsequent to the execution of the aforesaid marriage agreement.

The cause came on again to be heard on the 23d of December 1842, when the Court rejected the petition for a rehearing of the cause; and the defendant Barksdale electing to take the account tendered him by the Court, it was decreed and ordered that John R. Archer do render an account of the hires and profits of the said slaves received by him during the continuance of the life estate of Frances Tabb deceased, before one of the commissioners of the Court, who was directed to state the account and make report thereof to the Court. And thereupon Barksdale applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

Morson, for the appellant.

Cooke, for John Y. Tabb's administrator.
P. V. Daniel, jr., for John R. Archer.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that although the appellant when he filed his answer 421 in this cause, was ignorant of *all the facts in regard to the title of his intestate to the slaves sold to her by John R. Archer, and described in his bill of sales of the 25th of December 1818, he nevertheless relied on the bill of sale as shewing an absolute title in his intestate to the slaves, and that his intestate had agreed to take for her dower right for that portion of her dower slaves which would belong to Frances C. Archer wife of John R. Archer, at the death of the intestate of the appellant, the sum of 2000 dollars to be paid in slaves; and that said bill of sale was executed in consideration of her having previously agreed to relinquish her right in said dower slaves.

It appears by the decree of the County court of Amelia, of the 29th of May 1818, that the commissioners who were appointed to receive from the intestate of the appellant said dower slaves, and make a division thereof, were directed to allot to the intestate of the appellant one sixty-fourth part of said dower slaves as mother and distributee of her deceased daughter Harriet. The report made by said commissioners shews that the one sixty-fourth part so allotted to the intestate of the appellant as her distributable share of her deceased daughter's proportion of said dower slaves, was of the value of 1580 dollars; and that the residue of said dower slaves were divided amongst the other distributees of the said John Tabb and said Harriet; whereby each of said distributees received one sixty-fourth part of the slaves as a distributee of said Harriet. And the report further shews, that the slaves allotted to said John R. Archer and wife exceeded the just amount by 211 dollars, which John R. Archer was to pay for owelty of partition. And thus the fact was disclosed by said decree and report, that of the slaves allotted to John R. Archer and wife, he was entitled to receive and did receive, in his own right, unaffected by the marriage articles between himself and wife, slaves to the value of his distributable share in said Harriet's estate 422 *and the said sum paid by him for owelty of partition, making together the sum of 1791 dollars; and which, therefore, he had a clear right to dispose of. And as the decree of the County court of Amelia was filed as an exhibit and read at the hearing, as appears by the interlocutory decree of the 19th day of June 1832, the facts so disclosed were then in the record, and the appellant is entitled to the benefit thereof at any subsequent hearing, and upon the appeal bringing up the record.

The Court is further of opinion, that it sufficiently appears the conveyance of the slaves by the bill of sale of the 25th December 1818, was nothing more than the execution of the agreement and arrangement previously entered into between the parties referred to in the bill filed in the County court of Amelia, as the arrangements made for compounding their respective interests in said slaves; and the surrender of the slaves, and the release of the intestate of the appellant, was made on the consideration that she should retain slaves to the value of the sum of 2000 dollars agreed to be paid to her by each of the distributees, for the surrender of the whole of said dower slaves. And if the said John R. Archer, in disregard of the terms of the marriage articles, after such surrender of the dower slaves, should have improperly disposed of a portion thereof, such misconduct could not affect the title of the appellant's intestate, acquired under an agreement preceding the surrender of any of the slaves.

The Court is further of opinion, that the arrangement by which the beneficiaries under the marriage articles obtained the immediate possession and enjoyment of the dower slaves of the value of 14,039 dollars, for the small additional consideration above the sum of 1791 dollars, being the difference between that sum and the sum of 2200 dollars; the consideration expressed in the bill

423 of the sale of the 25th of December 1818, was so *clearly beneficial to all concerned, as to constitute a proper and reasonable charge against the trust estate; and after the beneficiaries under said marriage articles have received or might have received the profits of said dower slaves from the time of such surrender, it would be unjust to permit them to disturb the title acquired by the intestate of the appellant, to the slaves conveyed to her in consideration of her surrender and relinquishment; the said Archer having an absolute right to convey to the extent of 1791 dollars, and the residue of the consideration named being inconsiderable when compared with the advantages accruing to the beneficiaries by the arrangement.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that so much of the interlocutory decree of the 19th June 1832, as perpetuated the injunction enjoining the appellant from selling the slaves named in said bill of sale of the 25th December 1818, and the increase of the females, and directed a surrender of said slaves and their increase to the trustee thereby appointed, and ordered the appellant to account for the hires thereof, is erroneous.

The Court is further of opinion, that the slave Sye or Syphax in the proceedings mentioned, being shewn to have been one of the dower slaves allotted to John R. Archer and wife, the sale made of him by said Archer was against the terms of the marriage articles; and there is no error in the interlocutory decree of the 12th July 1842, directing him to be surrendered to the trustee in said decree mentioned.

The Court is further of opinion, there was no error in said decree in holding that certain accounts directed to be taken by the interlocutory order of the 23d June 1832, were improvidently ordered in this cause, and refusing to decree in relation thereto.

The Court is further of opinion, that the interlocutory decree of the 23d December 1842, directing that John R. Archer do render an account of the hires and 424 *profits of the slave Syphax and Philip and family, stated to have been received by him during the continuance of the life estate of the appellant's intestate, is erroneous, the slaves being in fact held by said intestate.

And the Court is further of opinion, that if under the pleadings in this cause, an account could properly be directed in regard to the price alleged to have been paid to John R. Archer for the slave Syphax and his hires and profits, the question as to who would be entitled to the hires has not been put in issue; and the circumstances of the case shew that no account could lead to any beneficial result.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that said decrees in the particulars herein before declared to be erroneous, be and the same are hereby reversed with costs to appellant; and that the same in the particulars herein declared not to be erroneous, be affirmed. And the cause is remanded with instructions to dissolve the injunction awarded on the 25th of February 1829, in respect to the slaves mentioned in the bill of sale of the 25th December 1818, and the increase of the females; to order a restoration of said slaves, together with the increase of the females, to the appellant; and for an account and payment over to the appellant, of the hires and profits thereof from the time he surrendered the same in pursuance of the interlocutory decree of the 19th June 1832, and also to carry into effect so much of the decree of the 12th July 1842, as directed the surrender of Sye or Syphax to the trustee therein named, if he has not been surrendered; and that as to all other matters the bill be dismissed.

Judgments—Quando Acciderint—Statute of Limitations.‡—A judgment quando acciderint does not come within the operation of the statute of limitations in relation to judgments, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 5, p. 487. By two Judges in a Court of three.

Warner Lewis of Gloucester county, by his deed dated the 5th of January 1798, conveyed all his estate, real and personal, (except a parcel of land specified in the deed,) which had descended to him from his father, to John Lewis and Wilson Cary Nicholas, in trust for the payment of his debts, then for the support of his family, and then for his children. In November of the same year, Warner Lewis died, and by his will, after providing for his wife, he gave the residue of his estate to his two daughters; and if they died without issue, to his brother John Lewis; who he appointed one of his executors.

It seems that John Lewis was the principal, if not the sole, acting trustee and executor under the deed and will of Warner Lewis. In May 1802, William Wiseham administrator, and Mary Charlton administratrix, of Francis Charlton deceased, recovered a judgment against John Lewis, as the executor of Warner Lewis deceased, for £ 123. 14. 5½., with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on £ 122. 9. 11½., a part thereof, from the 3d of September 1796, to be paid when assets sufficient should come to his hands, and their costs, 6 dollars 426 14 cents. William Wiseham *died not later than 1805, and Mary Charlton died in 1810 or 1811; and there was no qualification on the estate of Francis Charlton until February 1831, when Robert Anderson qualified thereon as administrator de bonis non. John Lewis died in 1827, when Thomas Smith qualified as his executor.

It seems that after the death of John Lewis the two daughters of Warner Lewis instituted a suit against his executor Thomas Smith, for a settlement of his trustee and executorial accounts; and the case was so proceeded in that a sum exceeding 4000 dollars, principal and interest in 1827, was ascertained to have been in the hands of John Lewis, as trustee and executor, as early as 1815.

In 1840 Robert Anderson instituted this suit against Thomas Smith as executor of John Lewis, for the purpose of subjecting the estate of Warner Lewis deceased, in his hands, to the satisfaction of the judgment recovered by Francis Charlton's former representatives against John Lewis, as the executor of Warner Lewis in 1802. In his bill he set out the foregoing facts, and asked for a decree against the executor of John Lewis for the amount of the judgment.

Smith answered the bill, and relied upon the statute of limitations, and the great lapse of time which had occurred since the judgment in bar of the claim. And he dying, the cause was revived in the name of William P. Smith his administrator; and came on to be heard in October 1844, when the Court decreed in favour of the plaintiff for the amount of the original judgment, 412 dollars 41 cents, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. on 408 dollars 32 cents, from the 3d of September 1796 till paid, and 6 dollars 64 cents the costs of the judgment, and also the costs of his suit. Whereupon William P. Smith applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

427 *Harvey and Crump, for the appellant.

In this case thirty-eight years had elapsed from the date of the judgment in 1802, before this suit was brought to enforce the payment of it. In all that time there must have been a considerable estate in the hands of John Lewis, the trustee and executor of Warner Lewis, the debtor; and we have positive proof that as early as 1815 there were assets in his hands more than sufficient to pay this judgment, after all other debts of the testator had been satisfied. It is under these circumstances, when every party to the transaction is dead, without a single circumstance to rebut the legal presumption, and the matter of fact probability, that this judgment has been long since satisfied, that this plaintiff asks a Court of equity to enforce this stale demand. In twenty years a bond will be presumed to have been paid. In the same time a mortgage will be presumed to be satisfied; and in all cases a presumption of payment will arise. Dunlop & Co. v. Ball, 2 Cranch 180;

*For monographic note on Judgments, see end of case.

†The case was argued before his appointment.

‡Judgments—Fieri Facias—Pending Injunction.—In Richardson v. Prince George Justices, 11 Gratt. 190, it is said: "JUDGE BALDWIN, in delivering his opinion in the case of Smith's Adm'r v. Charlton's Adm'r, 7 Gratt. 425, 426, intimates that pending a writ of error or injunction or cessat, an action of debt or scire facias cannot be brought upon the judgment. He cites no authority for the proposition, and so far as it respects the injunction, it is an intimation thrown out arguendo and by way of illustration. He probably did not advert to the distinction between the nature and effect of an injunction and that of a writ of error or cessat. At all events it was a point not at all material to the decision in that case, and the remark of the judge as it respects the injunction, must be regarded as obiter merely." The principal case is also cited in Hutsonpiller v. Stover, 12 Gratt. 582; Wendenbaugh v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 588.

Winchelsea Causes, 4 Burr. R. 1962; Cope v. Humphreys, 14 Serg. & Rawle 15; Wills v. Washington's adm'r, 6 Munf. 532; Anderson adm'r v. Burwell's ex'ors, 6 Gratt. 405. What is there, then, in this judgment quando, which shall forbid the application to it of this well established rule of law, of equity, of common sense and common justice?

Of the thirty-eight years which elapsed between the rendition of this judgment and the institution of this suit, for seventeen of them there had been a representative of the estate of Francis Charlton. Mrs. Charlton died in 1810 or 1811; and the present representative, Robert Anderson, qualified in 1831. And if there was not a representative during the whole period, it was only the neglect and laches of the persons interested in Francis Charlton's estate. Yet during this whole period of time, these representatives rested quiet 428 *on their rights, if they had any; and unless the judgment had been satisfied, were guilty of such neglect and delay as should have deprived them of all aid from a Court of equity. Pickering v. Id. Stamford, 2 Ves. jr. R. 272; S. C. Id. 581; Deloraine v. Brown, 3 Bro. Ch. Cas. 633.

It has ever been the rule of Courts of equity, having regard to public convenience, as well as to presumptions arising from lapse of time, not to enquire into old transactions, or entertain suits founded on causes of action which had accrued so long that all evidence of their adjustment might have been lost by the destruction of papers or the death of witnesses. Hercy v. Dinwoody, 2 Ves. jr. R. 87. This is a consideration of peculiar importance in this instance, as the claim of the administrator of Charlton is founded on a judgment all the parties to which have been long since dead; and the judgment being against an executor when assets of his testator should come to his hands to be administered, it is dependent on and interwoven with, transactions of such an ancient date, that a Court of equity having a due regard to the public inconvenience which would be caused if such transactions were enquired into, as well as the presumptions arising from a long lapse of time that the judgment itself had been satisfied, should not have entertained the suit. Ray v. Bogart, 2 John. Cas. 432; Ellison v. Moffatt, 1 John. Ch. R. 46; Coleman v. Lyne, 4 Rand. 454; Burwell's ex'ors v. Anderson, 3 Leigh 348; Carr v. Chapman, 5 Leigh 164. Even in cases arising under technical and continuing trusts which are not cognizable in a Court of law, but fall within the proper, peculiar and original jurisdiction of the Court of equity, and which cannot be reached by the statute of limitations, Courts of equity, always averse to stale claims, will regard the public inconvenience of 429 enquiring into demands which *have long existed without any effort having been made to enforce them. Carr, J., in Carr v. Chapman, 5 Leigh 164.

In this case the administrator of John

Lewis pleaded the statute of limitations; and we submit the case comes clearly within the fifth section of the act 1 Rev. Code, ch. 182, p. 498. That act says that "judgments in any Court of record within this Commonwealth, where execution hath not issued, may be revived by scire facias or action of debt brought thereon, within ten years next after the date of such judgment, and not after." This is a general statute of limitations in relation to judgments. The section under consideration embraces judgments on which executions have not issued, and also judgments on which execution hath issued, but has not been returned. It does not undertake to set out the various kinds of judgments which are intended to be embraced within it, but designates them by a characteristic feature which is common to them all. Not judgments by default, and by confession, and upon verdicts of a jury, and when assets; not judgments of the County court, and Circuit court; not judgments in debt, and detinue, and trover, and trespass, &c., &c., &c., but judgments where execution hath not issued, may be revived by scire facias or action of debt brought thereon, within ten years after the date of such judgments, and not after. The criterion by which it is to be tested whether the judgment is embraced in the first clause of the section, is, whether an execution hath issued upon it. The test is not whether execution could have issued upon it at any time, or can issue upon it at the present time; but the test is whether execution has issued upon it. We submit then that the case of a judgment quando comes clearly within the language of the statute.

We submit further, that the judgment
430 quando comes equally within the mischief intended to be prevented *by the statute. Indeed it would be difficult to point out a mischief which can arise from the delay to prosecute a general judgment to its final and full satisfaction, which may not equally arise from the neglect to prosecute a judgment quando to its final termination. And there are mischiefs arising from delay to which these judgments are especially liable. They are always judgments against the representatives of dead men's estate; and the fact that they involve no personal liability to the representative, but release to him all the assets then in his hands, whilst they relieve him from the trouble and annoyance of a legal contest, induces a facility in yielding to such a judgment by the representative; and it will be generally found that they are, as in this case, judgments by confession. These judgments, if this statute does not apply to them, may be disinterred from their graves at any distant day, to subject, not the person by whose confession or acquiescence they were obtained, but the next or second generation of legatees or distributees of his testator. But we need not speculate upon this subject. The case now under consideration, is an illustration of the consequences which will result from the exclusion of these judgments from the operation of this statute. In this case, as we have seen, thirty-eight years after this judgment was confessed by the executor of Warner Lewis; after his death and the death of the original plaintiffs; when there was no one living who knew anything about the merits of the case; after the creditor's estate had ceased to be represented for thirty years, a stranger discovers this old judgment, and disinters it from the grave in which it had laid quietly for thirty-eight years, that he may devour the pittance that these female legatees had been enabled to secure from the ruins of their father's estate, after a forty years pursuit of this executor and his representatives.

431 *We have always understood that in the interpretation of statutes the first rule is to look to the language employed; and if that is plain and explicit, it is to be followed. That if there is any doubt upon the language of the statute, as to its proper construction, then the first and most important rule by which the true construction is to be ascertained, is to look to the mischief which it was intended to remedy; and so to construe the statute as to advance the remedy and suppress the mischief. And taking either or both of these rules for our guide in the construction of this statute, we submit that the conclusion is inevitable, that these judgments quando are within the intent and meaning of the statute. And we submit that this conclusion is strengthened by the consideration that if these judgments are not embraced within this statute, they are wholly without limitation, and may be proceeded on at any day however distant.

What then are the grounds on which this Court is asked to decide that these judgments quando are not within the intent and meaning of the statute? It is first insisted that the language of the statute confines the judgments embraced by it to those on which execution may issue at once. We have only to say that the statute does not say so. It is very true that most of the judgments to which the statute applies, are judgments on which executions might have been at once issued; for the very good reason that ninety-nine judgments in every hundred, are of that kind. But as we have already said, the statute is framed not upon the plan of specifying the various judgments which are intended to be embraced in it, but of giving one characteristic feature which is common to all. As to the phraseology used in the statute about reviving some judgments by scire facias, and obtaining executions on others, we think it would not be difficult to show that this language is entirely appropriate to the 432 statute, upon *the construction we give to it. But if it is not precisely and technically correct, it cannot be doubted that it is readily accommodated to our construction of the statute, and every word and phrase may have a precise and proper meaning upon that construction: and surely these are not objections which are to weigh against the plain language and obvious policy of the statute.

There is, however, another objection to our construction of this statute; and it is the objection which is at the foundation of the argument of the other side. That objection is, that there is no mode of proceeding to enforce the judgment quando, until the plaintiff can allege and prove that assets have come to the hands of the personal representative: And it is insisted, that according to the principles of the common law, a scire facias to have execution upon the judgment, will not lie without the averment and proof of assets; and that the only object is to have execution upon the old judgment.

It will be found on examination that the cases which speak of the necessity of averring and proving that assets had come to hand since the last judgment, upon the proceeding by scire facias, have reference to the issue upon the plea of plene administravit, and the judgment de bonis testatoris, to be rendered upon that issue, which at common law concludes the executor upon the question of his having assets. Hope v. Bayne, 3 East's 2; Dickson v. Wilkinson, 3 How. U. S. Ct. R. 57; but they have no reference to the proceeding to have another judgment quando against the executor, by which the debt against his testator is re-affirmed and judgment revived precisely in the sense in which a general judgment is revived by scire facias. That this is the correct view of these authorities, is strongly corroborated by the case of Perryman v. Westwood, cited 1 Ventr. R. 95, in which where assets in part were found 433 by the jury, there was an award of *execution to that extent, and a judgment quando for the balance of the original judgment. If the uses of the scire facias are to be limited to the obtaining of an execution on the judgment, there can with no propriety be a judgment quando for a part of the first judgment: And if there may be a second judgment quando for a part, with equal propriety may there be a second judgment quando for the whole.

If, however, it be true that the purpose and object of the scire facias upon the judgment quando, at common law, is only to obtain execution on the original judgment, then we say that the mode of proceeding by scire facias to have execution upon these judgments quando, refers itself to the remedy; and is prescribed by no Virginia statute. It is an old mode of proceeding adapted to the law as it then was; and if at the present day, its forms are found to be inapplicable to the law as it now is, the proper remedy is, not to change the law to suit the form, but to adapt the form to the law: And we respectfully suggest that this is peculiarly proper, when the law is a Virginia statute, and the form is an old English form.

But if the English forms of proceeding are too sacred to be modified so as to adapt them to the present state of the law, we submit that there are other modes of proceeding upon these judgments quando which are not obnoxious to this objection. A judgment quando by its terms and in its effect, ascertains and establishes the debt against the estate of the testator or intestate as firmly and irrevocably as a general judgment. The quando has relation, not to the existence of the judgment, but to its satisfaction. This judgment binds the estate of the testator or intestate so that all the personal estate in the hands of legatees or distributees is liable for its satisfaction. It so binds the personal representative, that if he afterwards pays a debt on which

434 *there has been no judgment, or on which judgment has been obtained subsequent to the judgment quando, out of subsequently acquired assets, he will be guilty of a devastavit. Parker v. Dee, 3 Swanst. R. 530, in note. And although at law the creditor would not be allowed to obtain satisfaction of his judgment out of assets in the hands of the personal representative, when the judgment was rendered, yet in equity there can be no doubt that he would be permitted to subject them. Upon this judgment then, as upon any other judgment, an action of debt will lie. It is the conclusive evidence of a debt due from the testator or intestate to the creditor; and upon the commonest principles of law applicable to actions, it must therefore be sufficient to sustain an action: And of this there is no doubt upon authority. Noel v. Nelson, 2 Wms. Saund. 219, note 2; M'Dowall v. Branham, 2 Nott & M'C. 572; Taylor v. Holman, Bull. N. P. 169. What then is to be found in the form of declaring in debt on a judgment quando, which prevents the creditor from proceeding upon it in that way, though no assets have come to his hands since the judgment was rendered. He declares that the testator of the executor was indebted to him in a certain sum of money; and he shews as the evidence of that indebtedness, the judgment which he had recovered against the executor; which is conclusive of the fact of indebtedness. To this action of debt the executor, if he has no assets, may plead plene administravit; and he pleads it precisely as he did in the first action. Noel v. Nelson, 2 Wms. Saund. 221; and if the issue upon this plea is found for him, then of course there cannot be a judgment de bonis testatoris, because that at common law would be evidence against the executor in an action for a devastavit, of his possession of assets sufficient to pay the debt: But the plea itself not going to the question of the indebtedness of the testator, the

435 plaintiff *would be entitled to a judgment quando in his favor in this second action, precisely as he was entitled to it in his first. And if it be true that the only object of the scire facias is to enable the plaintiff to obtain execution on the judgment quando; and that by that mode of proceeding he cannot have another judgment quando; then there is this obvious difference in the results of the two modes of proceeding: For there is certainly nothing in the action of debt upon the judgment which requires that it should be limited to the issue upon the plea of plene administravit, or to the award of execution; but it equally admits and authorizes the judgment quando acciderint.

We submit then with confidence that the plaintiff may proceed either by scire facias or action of debt, and certainly by the latter mode, to revive his judgment quando; revive it in the sense of the statute by obtaining a new judgment: And being thus authorized to proceed upon it, the statute of limitations runs upon it. We have never contended that the statute would run against a judgment upon which no proceedings could be had, or that however general the terms of the statute such a judgment was embraced in it. But we do contend that wherever a scire facias or an action of debt can be maintained on a judgment, that such a judgment is within the intent and meaning of the statute. And this we submit is the distinction between a judgment quando and a judgment with a cessat executio, or upon which there is an injunction or an appeal. In the first as we have endeavoured to shew, the plaintiff may proceed to revive by scire facias or action of debt; in the others there is a positive prohibition of record to his taking any steps to enforce them.

We have thus endeavoured to consider this question on principle, because we are aware that it will be contended by the counsel for the appellee, that there has been no authoritative decision of it by this 436 Court. We *know indeed, that the case of Braxton v. Woods, 2 Gratt. 25, was decided by a Court of three, and that one of the Judges put his decision upon grounds peculiar to himself; and therefore that the decision is not an authority binding upon this Court. But we nevertheless refer with confidence to that case as one of high authority, as well for the ability of the argument by which the judgment is sustained, as for the respect which is due to the opinions of the venerable and enlightened Judge who concurred in it. And even if the Court should think that the mode of proceeding sanctioned by the decision in that case, is a departure from the ancient mode of proceeding in such case; as it is a question not of right but of practice, and as the practice so authorized by that case, is most consistent with the security of parties, and the policy of the law, we submit that it should be adhered to by the Court.

Bouldin, for the appellee.

The plea of the statute of limitations presents the only debatable question in this case. There is certainly no ground for imputing laches to the appellee or his intestate's estate. The terms of the judgment itself conclusively ascertain that at the time of its rendition there were no assets out of which it could be satisfied; and such being the case, there was no right at that time to enforce the judgment by execution, and consequently there could be no default in failing to attempt it. It is true that assets accrued about the year 1815, but there was then no representative of Charlton's estate; nor was that estate represented until 1831; within nine years after which time this suit was brought. Now there could very clearly be no presumption of payment between the accruing of assets in 1815 and the qualification of the appellee as Charlton's administrator in 1831; for between those periods there was no person in esse to whom payment could 437 *be made; and there has certainly been no pretence of payment to the appellee since 1831. The case stands then simply on a delay of nine years to demand payment of a judgment; and I am aware of no case in which such delay has been held sufficient either to raise a presumption of payment, or to bar a demand on the ground of laches.

It is true that in the case of Anderson v. Burwell's ex'ors, 6 Gratt. 405, cited by the counsel for the appellants, this Court applied the doctrine of laches. But that, to use the language of the learned counsel who argued the cause for the appellees, was "a naked, unmitigated case of sleeping for half a century and more;" and there was no successful attempt to explain the delay. In the case of Burwell's ex'ors v. Anderson, 3 Leigh 348, however, to which the case just referred to was a sequel, the Court sustained a bill filed after the lapse of some 30 years, expressly on the ground that for a great part of the time the estate to which the legacy was due, was not represented. There is nothing then in the question of laches.

I come now to the real question in the cause, the statute of limitations, 1 Rev. Code, p. 489, § 5. This it is said presents a peremptory bar to the proceeding; and the case of Braxton v. Woods, 2 Gratt. 25, is cited to sustain the plea.

It cannot be denied that the learned Judge who delivered the opinion of the majority of the Court in that case, did hold that the statute applied to a judgment quando acciderint; and the Judge who concurred with him must also be regarded as holding the same opinion. But it will be observed that the case was decided by a bare Court, and the third Judge not only did not concur with the majority, but evidently dissented. It was conceded too by all the Judges in that case that the question now under consideration did not arise. The judgment there was not a judgment quando, but one 438 *of a totally different character. It did not preclude, but invited an enquiry into the statute of the assets; and all that was said about the effect of the statute on a judgment quando, was clearly beside the case. The question, then, is an open one, and must now be adjudicated for the first time.

It is said the terms of the statute are broad enough to embrace a judgment quando, and the mischiefs intended to be guarded against equally apply to such a judgment.

The object of the statute is to prevent a judgment creditor from sleeping on his rights; to compel him promptly to take out execution on his judgment, by imposing a forfeiture for his failure to do so. Let us examine then the nature and effect of a judgment quando; and see whether it can, by any just construction, be embraced by the terms of this statute.

The judgment quando is wholly unlike a general judgment. It ascertains of record, it is true, like a general judgment, the existence and amount of a debt from the estate of a decedent; but here the analogy ceases. It concedes by its terms that there are no assets out of which it can be satisfied; and confers on the creditor no present right to issue or even to ask for an execution. Indeed, under no circumstances, can an execution issue on such a judgment as a matter of course. It can only issue by special award of the Court, on suggestion and proof of assets accruing since the date of the judgment. This suggestion of assets must be made by scire facias on the judgment, and unless made the scire facias is demurrable. Mara v. Quin, 6 T. R. 1; Noel v. Nelson, 2 Wms. Saund., p. 241, and notes. So, too, if the suggestion be made and issue be taken on the fact of assets, and it turns out that none have accrued since the date of the judgment, the plaintiff in the scire facias will be nonsuited. Taylor v. Holman, Bull. N. P. 169.

439 *From this view of the nature of a judgment quando, it will be seen that an award of execution thereon is by no means a matter of course, as in the case of ordinary judgments. The object of the scire facias on a judgment quando is not to revive a judgment, the vitality of which has been suspended by failure to take out execution thereon within the year. Its function is entirely dissimilar. It is to suggest some new matter, viz., the accruing of assets, which gives the right not to revive, but for the first time to put in motion a judgment previously dormant. It is rather analogous to the scire facias on a recognizance, or on a judgment on a bond with collateral condition, suggesting breaches.

Such being the nature of the judgment quando, and the functions of the scire facias to enforce it, the question arises, is it embraced by the terms of the statute fairly construed. I submit, both on reason and authority, that it is not. What are the terms of the statute? "Judgments in any Court of record within this commonwealth, where execution hath not issued, may be revived by scire facias or an action of debt brought thereon, within ten years next after the date of such judgment, and not after." Now apart from judicial construction, is it possible, upon any just and common sense construction of these words, to resist the plain implication which at once arises, that they refer to judgments capable of being executed at once, but on which "execution hath not issued" within the year; judgments, the vitality of which had been suspended by such failure to take out execution; and which, by reason thereof, required to be revived by scire facias or action of debt; and not to a judgment incapable in its nature of being forthwith executed, and about which no default can be predicated. The construction we contend for results naturally from the terms of the statute, and accords 440 with the spirit of the *act of limitations, which only imposes a forfeiture on him who has slept on his rights; who has failed to avail himself of a legal remedy; whilst the construction contended for on the other side would lead to the strange result of punishment to a party for failure to do that which under the law he has no right or power to do. That, I submit, would be an anomaly in legislation and judicial construction.

This view of the statute is fortified by the concluding paragraphs of the same section, referring to judgments on which executions have issued but have not been returned. In such cases the creditor is authorized not to revive his judgment, but to "obtain other executions," for the term of ten years from the date of such judgment, and not after. Why this distinction between judgments on which "execution hath not issued" and judgments on which execution hath issued, without being returned? The period of limitation is the same in both cases. Why is the first to be revived by scire facias or action of debt, whilst on the second the creditor is allowed to "obtain other executions?" Obviously, because, by the issue of an execution in the last case the judgment has been already kept alive and needs no revival, whilst in the first the vitality of the judgment has been suspended by the failure to take out execution within the year, and the judgment must necessarily be revived by scire facias or action of debt before execution can issue.

The same distinction is studiously observed in the next section, 1 Rev. Code, p. 489, § 6, saving to persons under certain disabilities the benefit (after disabilities removed) of a "judgment where no execution hath issued, by reviving the same by scire facias or by action of debt;" and where execution hath issued and no return made, giving them, not a revival of the judgment, but "the benefit of the other executions." I submit, then, that it would be doing the utmost violence

441 *to the terms and spirit of this statute to make it apply to a judgment on which the party has no right, under any circumstances, to issue an execution.

But it is said that the terms of the statute embrace all judgments without distinction, and of course a judgment quando. Now, it is conceded from the bench, and at the bar, and is abundantly sustained by authority, that the statute does not apply to a judgment with a cessat executio, which is a stay by the act of the parties for a definite period, nor to a judgment enjoined by decree of the Court of chancery, which is a stay by the act of the Court for an indefinite period, nor to a judgment for an annuity payable at a future day. In none of these cases does the statute apply from the date of the judgment. Hiscocks v. Kemp, 30 Eng. C. L. R. 182; Underhill v. Devereux, 2 Wms. Saund. p. 72, c. 72 f; Noland v. Cromwell, 6 Munf. 185. Yet they are all "judgments," and if the terms of the statute are broad enough to embrace a judgment quando, they are alike broad enough to embrace these. Why are they not embraced? Simply because, from the nature of the judgments, or the circumstances attending them, the creditor has no right to issue execution on them. So with the judgment quando; from its terms and character the creditor has no right to issue execution on it. Now the chief difference between a judgment quando and a judgment with a cessat, is, that the former is a stay for an indefinite period by operation of law, whilst the latter is to stay for a definite period by the act of the parties. The effect is the same in both—incompetency to take out execution—and this is the true test of the applicability of the statute.

Should it be urged that the distinction just stated is important, the argument is answered by the case of a judgment enjoined, for that like the judgment quando, is a stay of execution for an indefinite period by act of the Court. Yet the statute does not apply to it.

*The only case I have been able to 442 find in which this question might have been directly adjudicated, is the case of Lidderdale v. Robinson, 2 Brock. R. 160. In that case a bill was filed in the year 1820 to enforce a decree when assets, rendered in 1797. The bill alleged that assets had recently accrued, and the claim was enforced after the lapse of twenty-three years, without even raising the question of limitation, although the case was much contested.

But the learned Judge in Braxton v. Woods, says that the bar applies to a judgment quando, because a scire facias will lie on it at once and without proof of assets, whilst on a judgment with a cessat, a scire facias would not lie. I have endeavoured to shew that it is the capacity to take out an execution, and not a scire facias, that brings the creditor within the operation of the statute. In all respect, however, I would insist that the distinction suggested does not exist. It is quite as easy to repeat a judgment with a cessat, as a judgment quando, although the operation would be alike useless in both cases, the parties being neither better nor worse off afterwards, than they were before. The scire facias will lie, I think, in neither case; but if in either, then in both.

In the case at bar, there were no assets within ten years after the date of the judgment. If, then, a scire facias had been sued out within the ten years, and had stated the truth, it would, on the authorities already adduced, have been dismissed on demurrer.

It is conceded, however, that the suggestion of assets must be made, but this is treated as a mere form, adopted in order that the scire facias may conform to the judgment. This conformity to the judgment is matter not of form but of substance. The prayer of the scire facias is for an award of execution on the judgment. Now the judgment is itself conditional; its 443 enforcement depending on the accruing of assets; and yet, we *are told, that the happening of that on which alone the right to execute the judgment depends, is unimportant, and its allegation a mere form, because it is the object of the party to obtain, not what he asks for, an award of execution, but a simple renewal of his judgment quando. That is to say, the plaintiff in the scire facias, must allege that which he knows to be false, and ask for that to which he knows he is not entitled, in order to arrive at a mere repetition of the judgment quando!!! Can this be law?

But suppose the scire facias to be sustained, what would be the judgment on it? Not a new judgment quando, on which an execution or scire facias might issue: Such is not the function of the scire facias. "It seeks not a new judgment on which execution is to issue, but an award of execution on the judgment already rendered. The execution issues on that judgment, and the award of it on the scire facias is but the authority to issue it." Steward, J., in Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 64; Robinson's Forms, passim. The only judgment then that could be entered on such a proceeding would be an award of execution quando acciderint, on the previous judgment. But that would neither be the issuing of an execution nor the unconditional award of execution, nor a judgment on which execution might thereafter be awarded. It leaves the condition of the parties unchanged, only giving to the creditor, what he had before, the right to sue out execution on his previous judgment by scire facias when assets should accrue. After such an entry, a plea that no execution had issued on the judgment quando, within ten years from its date, would be true both in form and in substance, and if applicable to a judgment quando, could not be avoided.

I submit, however, that neither reason nor authority will justify a proceeding, which if it state the truth will be demurrable, and which to be sustained must 444 allege *what is known to be false, and pray for what cannot be granted, in order to attain that which will leave the party precisely where he was before.

There might be some reason to contend that the statute would apply from the accruing of assets; as from that time the creditor would have a perfect right to sue out execution by scire facias. And this principle seems now to be established by the Code of 1850, p. 710. But even this would not help the appellant in this case. When the assets accrued there was no representative of Charlton's estate; and the bill was filed within the period of limitation, computed from the date of the appellee's qualification as administrator.

On every ground the decree should be affirmed.

DANIEL, J. The judgment upon which the decree sought to be reversed is founded, was rendered in the year 1802. No steps appear to have been taken to enforce the judgment until the institution of this suit in the year 1840.

Thomas Smith the intestate of the appellant William P. Smith, in his answer to the bill, set up two defences, to wit, the statute of limitations, and the presumption of satisfaction arising from the great delay in proceeding upon the judgment. It is insisted in the petition and in the arguments of counsel here, that both of said defences were good, and that the Chancellor erred in overruling them.

The judgment was obtained by William Wischam administrator and Mary Charlton administratrix of Francis Charlton deceased, against John Lewis, executor of Warner Lewis deceased, to be levied of the goods and chattels of the said Warner Lewis deceased, when assets sufficient should come to the hands of the defendant to be administered.

445 It is stated in the bill, and proved by a deposition in the cause, that Wischam the administrator died in 1804 *or 1805, and that Mary Charlton the administratrix died in 1810 or 1811; and Anderson the appellee qualified as administrator de bonis non of the said Francis Charlton in February 1831. Though thirty-eight years, therefore elapsed between the date of the judgment and the commencement of proceedings to enforce it, it appears that for at least twenty years of that period the estate of Charlton was without a representative. There cannot, of course, arise any presumption of satisfaction during this interval, and excluding it, there remains but seventeen or eighteen years upon the lapse of which to rest that defence.

No circumstances in aid of the lapse of time are averred in the answer or disclosed in the proofs. If this, therefore, had been a judgment de bonis testatoris, to be levied presently of the goods, &c., in the hands of the representative, instead of a judgment when assets, I should hardly suppose that the demand to have it satisfied could have been successfully resisted on the score of lapse of time: And when the character of the judgment is adverted to, and the further fact is brought into the statement of the case, to wit, that no assets came into the hands of the representative of Lewis till after the death of both the administrator and administratrix of Charlton, to wit, in 1815, it seems to me that all grounds for a defence, resting upon lapse of time or staleness of demand, is entirely removed.

It remains to be considered whether the statute of limitations presents any bar.

It must be conceded that the words of the 5th section of the statute of limitations, 1

Rev. Code, p. 489, are sufficiently broad to cover the case of a judgment when assets; and two of the members of this Court, (the President and Judge Baldwin,) expressed the opinion, in the case of Braxton v. Wood's adm'r, 4 Gratt. 25, that such judgments fell within the scope and design of the statute.

446 *I did not regard the question as fairly arising in that case for adjudication, inasmuch as the judgment to which the bar of the statute was there sought to be applied, was not, in my opinion, a judgment quando acciderint, but a judgment de bonis testatoris, capable of being at once enforced by execution, without the previous issuing of a scire facias. With such views of the nature of the judgment, I did not deem it necessary to express any opinion as to whether judgments when assets came within the meaning of the statute. I did, however, on that occasion, endeavour to investigate the subject, but was unable to find any authority directly bearing on the question, except the opinion of Judge Lomax, expressed in his work on the law of executors and administrators. At page 465, vol. 2, he says, that he regards them as embraced within the provisions of the statute; but he does not vouch any decision, nor does he go into any reasoning in support of the opinion.

A re-examination of the question, with a view to the decision of this case, has been attended by a like result; and I therefore regard the question as an open one.

The words of the statute embrace all judgments, without exception or proviso, "where execution hath not issued," and limit the suing out of a scire facias, or the bringing of an action of debt thereon, to the ten years next after the date of the judgments. The 6th section of the statute provides for disabilities appertaining to the persons entitled to the judgments, and existing at the date of the judgments; and gives the further period of five years after the removal of such disabilities, for suing out the scire facias, or bringing the action; but no provision is made for the case of disabilities belonging to the judgments themselves. Such disqualifications or disabilities may however be attached to or so connected with the judgments as to 447 render *it legally impossible (for a period) to enforce them by execution, or to revive them by scire facias, or to bring an action upon them. To judgments so situated, it will hardly be presumed the Legislature intended any limitation to apply, during the period of their incapacity.

By the common law, the failure of the plaintiff to sue out execution within the year, so far created the presumption of a payment, satisfaction or release of the judgment, as to compel the plaintiff to bring his action on the judgment; and thus give the defendant an opportunity, by pleading, to put in issue such supposed payment, satisfaction or release. By the statute Westminster 2, 13 Edward 1, c. 45, a scire facias is given to the plaintiff to revive his judgment where he has omitted to sue out execution within the year; and it is now the remedy most usually resorted to for such purpose.

Notwithstanding the year's neglect drives the plaintiff, generally, to his action or scire facias, the English cases furnish many exceptions to the rule. As when a writ of error is brought on a judgment, the delay in executing the judgment being imputable to the defendant, execution may issue after the judgment is affirmed, although more than a year and a day have elapsed since the judgment was signed. 1 Salk. 322. So if a plaintiff has a judgment with a "cessat executio" for a given time, he may within a year and a day after the expiration of the time allowed by the "cessat executio," take out execution without a scire facias. 1 Salk. 322. So when the plaintiff is prevented from suing out his execution within the year by the defendant's obtaining an injunction out of chancery, he may upon the dissolution of the injunction, have execution without resorting to the scire facias. This was for a time disputed, but is now well settled law.

2 Burr. R. 660. And even where a 448 year after judgment had *expired before the writ of error was sued out, and the judgment is affirmed, or plaintiff in error is nonsuited, or the writ of error discontinued, the plaintiff may sue out execution, the writ of error being held to have revived the judgment. 1 Show. 402.

In most of the States of this Union the same rule prevails either by force of the common law or by virtue of legislative enactment; and the same or like exceptions will be found to obtain. Thus in Nicholson v. Howsley, 5 Litt. Sel. Cas. 218, the agreement of the parties to suspend the execution prevented the operation of the one year rule; and in 8 Serg. & Rawle 377, and 3 Binn. R. 160, it was decided that the plaintiff would be excused by such agreement, whether entered on the record or not. And in the case of the United States v. Harford & Ely, 19 John. R. 173, it was decided that when the execution is delayed at the request and for the benefit of the defendant, the rule requiring a scire facias does not apply. So in Long v. Morton, 2 A. K. Marsh. R. 39, where there was a decree against a widow for a tract of land with a reservation of her right of dower, and a period fixed within which she might have it assigned, and providing that if she should by the day fixed have her dower assigned, she might satisfy the decree by surrendering up so much of the tract as might not be allotted to her, it was held that the "habere facias" might well issue within twelve months after the day fixed for the allotment.

The language of the first section of our execution law, 1 Rev. Code, p. 524, ch. 134, is "that all persons who have or shall hereafter recover any debt, &c., by the judgment of any Court of record within this Commonwealth, may at their election prosecute writs of feri facias, &c., within the year, for taking the goods, &c., &c."

449 *The language of the statute is explicit in confining the peremptory right to sue out execution "within the year." Yet I presume it has not been doubted since the decisions in Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call 186, and Noland v. Cromwell, 6 Munf. 185, that this one year's limitation could not avail a defendant where there had been a stay of execution by his own agreement, or by force of an injunction obtained at his instance.

In any of the instances above cited of stay of execution, whether by "cessat executio" or the parol agreement of the parties, or by injunction or supersedeas, I presume it will not be doubted that the plaintiff might at the end and expiration of the time bring his action of debt upon the judgment, instead of suing execution thereon; and that if the judgment had been thus suspended for more than ten years, he might meet the statute of limitations by shewing that though his judgment was more than ten years old, and one upon which no execution had issued, and thus falling within the very words of the statute, yet that it was so situated that no execution could be sued out on it, and therefore that it did not fall within the true meaning and design of the statute.

When a plaintiff in an action against an executor or administrator takes judgment of assets quando acciderint, it is well settled that he cannot at any future time proceed to execution on the judgment, without first suing out a scire facias to state that assets have come to hand, and to warn the defendant, should he be able to allege any thing against such execution. Tidd's Practice 1063.

If after the lapse of ten years from the date of his judgment, upon which no execution hath issued, the plaintiff in his action thereon may successfully meet the plea of the statute by shewing that by the agreement of parties, or by force of an in-

450 junction obtained *by the defendant, he could not in the meantime sue out execution, it is difficult to conceive of any good reason why he may not obviate the force of the plea when tendered to an action of debt on a judgment "quando," by a demurrer or replication objecting that by the very form and nature of the judgment itself he had been prevented from issuing the execution.

In construing the statute its aim and purpose must be looked to, and its language ought to have a fair and reasonable interpretation. The limitations imposed on the right of the plaintiff to maintain an action on his judgment, have reference to and grow out of his conduct in respect to the execution, and necessarily presuppose that the plaintiff had at some time the right to sue out execution which he has failed to exercise. That this is so, is, I think, made still more apparent by looking to the second clause of the section of the statute, now under consideration, which provides that "where execution hath issued and no return is made thereon, the party in whose favour the same was issued, shall and may obtain other executions, or move against any sheriff or other officer or their security or securities for not returning the same, for the term of ten years from the date of such judgment, and not after." This Court held in the case of Herrington v. Harkins' adm'rs, 1 Rob. R. 591, that whilst the right to sue out other executions on a judgment where an execution had been before issued but not returned, was, by this clause, expressly limited to ten years, an action of debt was not embraced in the words or meaning of the clause; and that in all cases where the plaintiff had sued out execution there was no limitation to the period within which an action of debt might be brought on the judgment.

Whilst the second clause of the fifth section prescribes a limitation to the remedies of plaintiffs in the cases where they have so far availed themselves of the 451 *means of enforcing judgment as to sue out execution, but have obtained no return thereon, the first clause of the section was, in my opinion, designed to prescribe the limitation to their remedies, where having a right to sue out executions, they have wholly failed to exercise the right. By the term "judgments" in the first clause, are intended judgments clothed as judgments ordinarily are, with the capacity of being enforced; judgments upon which the plaintiffs have the right to sue out execution. Where the exercise of this right is stayed or suspended by the agreement of the parties, or by the restraints of legal proceedings set on foot at the instance of the defendant, the limitation will not begin to run in favour of the defendant till the time of such stay or suspension has expired. Judgments which shew upon their faces that there is now no right to enforce them by execution, and that such right is to depend on other proceedings yet to be instituted, do not, in my opinion, come within the meaning and operation of the statute at all.

Inasmuch as the assets subjected to the decree in this case came into the hands of the administrator of Lewis after the death of the administrator and administratrix of Charlton, and before the administration de bonis non was granted, and the administrator de bonis non brought suit within the ten years after his qualification, the plea of the statute could, under no aspect of the case, avail the appellant, unless he could shew that the limitation began to run in his favour, not from the time of the coming in of the assets, but from the date of the judgment: And such is the proposition contended for; a proposition which seems to me to run counter to all the analogies of the law. It is argued that though no assets came into the hands of the defendant within ten years after the date of the judgment, it was the duty of the plaintiff, in order to keep alive

452 his claim, to sue out a scire facias or to bring an action of debt, within *said period, suggesting that assets had come into the defendant's hands out of which he had a right to demand execution of his judgment. And though upon an issue, made up on the state of the assets, the plaintiff had confessed that no assets had, since the judgment, come into the hands of the defendant, or such issue had been tried and found against him, (as it must have been in accordance with the fact,) he would have been entitled to take a second judgment quando acciderint; that the first judgment would be merged in the second, and that the limitation would again begin to run from the date of the last mentioned judgment. It is said that as, in the original action, the plaintiff may, notwithstanding he admits there are no assets in hand liable to his demand, take a judgment quando, there is no reason why, in the proceedings upon the scire facias, or in the action upon the judgment quando, he may not pursue a like course and take a similar judgment. This reasoning is, I think, founded on a mistaken view of the ends and objects of the two actions. In his original action the plaintiff seeks the accomplishment of two purposes, the judicial ascertainment of the justice of his claim against the decedent, and of his right to have present satisfaction out of the estate of the decedent, in the hands of his representatives. In such action though the administrator shews that there is nothing now in his hands liable to the plaintiff's demand, such defence does, in no way, contravene the right of the plaintiff to prove the original justice and unsatisfied state of his claim against the decedent; nor does it present any reason why the plaintiff should not have satisfaction of his claim out of any assets that may, in future, come into the hands of the representative. Though, therefore, the plaintiff fails in effecting one of the purposes of his suit, there is no reason why he should be denied the accomplishment of the other. The judgment

453 quando acciderint has been *moulded by the Courts to meet the exigencies of the case. The sentence of the Court is pronounced in favour of the debt or demand, but its satisfaction is made dependent on the future coming in of assets out of which to pay it. In the second proceeding, or suit, upon the judgment, the gravamen of the complaint, the gist of the action, is the coming in of assets since the judgment, and the failure of the defendant in applying them to its discharge. The suggestion that assets have come to the hands of the representative since the judgment is no mere form or legal fiction, but involves the pith of the controversy, and presents the point on which the action rests. The judgment quando, from its very form and nature, is an acknowledgment of the most solemn form on the part of the plaintiff, that he is entitled to be satisfied only out of future assets. If no assets have come to hand since the judgment, the plaintiff has nothing to complain of or on which to found his action. In the case of an ordinary judgment capable of being presently executed, it is true the plaintiff may bring his action of debt upon it as soon as it is rendered. He is entitled to immediate satisfaction, and the defendant is at once in default if he does not pay it. But it is difficult to conceive of the propriety of a suit where the plaintiff cannot truly allege any grievance, and the defendant is in no default. If the plaintiff fails in proving that assets have since come, &c., he must, I think, go out of Court: Yet I do not see why a failure in his suit, because of its being prematurely brought, should form any bar to a scire facias or action brought thereafter when assets have actually come to hand. Should the defendant rely on the verdict and judgment in the proceedings on the former scire facias or action on the judgment, the plaintiff might reply and shew that his defeat was occasioned solely by the failure to shew assets, and that assets have come into the hands of the representative since said last

454 mentioned *proceedings. A case has been cited which shews that where the plaintiff in his scire facias or action on a judgment when assets, shews that assets of a limited amount not sufficient to satisfy his demand have since judgment come to hand, he may take judgment for so much to be presently levied de bonis testatoris, and have judgment quando for the balance. I do not perceive the weight of the authority as applicable to a case in which the plaintiff wholly fails to prove assets. If the plaintiff proves assets to any extent, he does to that extent maintain the allegation on which his action rests; and he ought to have judgment accordingly; and as there is no propriety in two judgments of the same character for the same thing, provision in the same judgment is made for the balance of his demand out of the future assets. His original judgment is as it were merged in the second; and any future proceedings for the collection of the demand will be founded on said last mentioned judgment. But where he wholly fails in his proof of assets he only shews that he has been premature in his proceedings, and his demand still rests on his former judgment, exactly as it did before; with the exception that in any future action or scire facias the right to shew assets will be confined to the period since the judgment in the unsuccessful proceedings just mentioned. Judgments quando acciderint may be rendered against heirs as well as against executors and administrators. In debt against a niece as heir to the uncle, the defendant confessed the bond, but pleaded that nothing in fee simple descended to her besides a reversion of thirty acres, &c., after the death of such a one. It was held that the plaintiff might take a special judgment to recover the debt and damages of the aforesaid reversion, when it should fall in. And in Fortrey v. Fortrey, 2 Vern. R. 134, it was decided that where a man obtains judgment against an heir who

to sell the reversion, but must expect till it falls in. So in Comyn's Digest, vol. 6, p. 326, Pleader 2, E. 4, Replication, it is said, "after riens per descent pleaded, the plaintiff may pray execution of assets cum acciderint; or if riens per descent præter, he may pray execution of assets confessed; or reply that the defendant had assets ultra; and if he replies assets ultra he may waive it and pray judgment of assets confessed cum acciderint." In Wells v. Bowling's heirs, 2 Dana's R. 41, most of the foregoing authorities are cited, and the further case is put of the title to real estate descending to an heir whilst in the adverse possession of another; and it is said that there is the same reasons in favour of allowing judgments quando against heirs as against executors: that the creditor is not presumed to know the state of the assets in the hands of the heir or executor, and he should not be prejudiced by bringing his suit to establish his debt against the decedent, before assets have come to hand.

Take the case of a suit against an heir on the bond of his ancestor and of a judgment thereupon quando; the heir having no estate, in possession, descended, but having a right to lands which at the death of the ancestor were in the adverse possession of another, and for which the heir has instituted his action. Of lands so situated, the plaintiff could not have execution; but they would be assets when recovered. Pending such adverse possession and controversy, no failure to proceed on his judgment could, I think, prejudice the plaintiff; and I do not perceive any reasons that would bring a judgment against an executor when assets within the operation of the statute that would not apply with equal force to the like judgment just mentioned against the heir.

If I am correct in supposing that no action on a judgment quando against an executor can be maintained *without alleging and proving assets, it follows that, if the statute embraces such judgments at all, it designs to defeat all recovery upon them after ten years, though no assets may come in the mean time into the hands of the representative; the only means of avoiding the operation of the statute, suggested, being the suing out of a scire facias, or bringing an action and taking a new judgment when assets. But whether correct or not in my views of the plaintiff's right to maintain a suit on such a judgment without proving assets, I am satisfied that the statute only embraces judgments that may be enforced by execution without some new proceeding; and that judgments quando stand as they did at the common law, liable, after assets have come to hand, to those presumptions of satisfaction that attach to judgments ordinarily where there has been great delay in proceeding upon them.

An objection to the jurisdiction of the Court is made in the answer. It is not, however, mentioned in the petition, nor noticed in the arguments of counsel, and may, I suppose, be regarded as abandoned.

The circumstances disclosed in the bill and the proofs, in relation to the state of the assets, furnish, I think, proper grounds for the resort to a Court of equity. One of the causes of error assigned is, that the copy of the judgment filed is not properly authenticated. No exception was made to the paper in the Court below, and nothing said of it in the argument here. I have not been able to discover the force of the objection.

I see no error in the decree, and am of opinion to affirm it.

BALDWIN, J. We have to determine in this case whether a judgment quando acciderint against an executor or administrator, not revived or renewed by scire facias or action of debt brought thereon within ten years next after the date of the judgment, is barred by *the statute of limitations, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 5, p. 457. In 2 Lomax Ex'ors 455, the affirmative construction of the statute is expressed by the learned author; but the question has never been authoritatively decided by this Court. Braxton v. Wood's adm'r, 4 Gratt. 25, was the case of a judgment recovered by confession, "if a sufficiency of assets of the defendant's testator's estate shall remain after payment of debts of superior dignity;" and was decided by the three Judges then sitting to be barred by the statute. In the opinion which I delivered in that case, I had occasion, for the sake of illustration, and the development of the principles belonging to the subject, to express my views of the statutory bar in regard to judgments quando acciderint, and to show their application a fortiori to the judgment we were then considering. In that opinion the President concurred. Judge Daniel delivered a separate opinion, in which he stated his own reasons for concurring in the decision, but was silent in relation to the application of the statute to a judgment quando acciderint.

The question, therefore, in regard to a judgment quando acciderint, is still an open one, and the views of it presented by my opinion in Braxton v. Wood's adm'r, have, in the argument of the present case, been earnestly and ably controverted by the appellee's counsel; but upon grounds, as I conceive, unavoidably narrow and technical. In order that those grounds may be distinctly understood, and to avoid unnecessary repetition, I must here refer to the opinion as reported, to which, after a careful reconsideration, I still adhere.

It is contended, in the first place, on the part of the appellee, that judgments quando acciderint are not at all embraced by the statute. If this be so, then it follows that though assets to many times the amount of such a judgment come to the hands of the executor or administrator, in a few days thereafter, yet the plaintiff *may lie by an indefinite number of years, and then proceed to enforce his demand. It is difficult to conceive any consideration of policy which could have induced the legislature to permit such a result, in the enactment of a law, intended to quiet not only individuals but dead men's estates against antiquated judgments. It is not denied that other judgments de bonis testatoris fall within the plain meaning of the statute, and it cannot be denied that a judgment quando acciderint, in the case supposed, would fall within the same mischief; and it is remarkable if such an exception was contemplated that it was not indicated by express words.

It is sufficiently obvious that the construction contended for is merely literal, and unwarranted even by that mode of treating the subject. The words of the statute are, "judgments in any Court of record within this Commonwealth, where execution hath not issued, may be revived by scire facias or an action of debt brought thereon, within ten years after the date of such judgment, and not after." And the argument is founded upon the word "revived," which it is urged indicates a judgment which has become dead by the failure to sue out execution within the year, and not one upon which no execution could have issued at any time from its rendition. But the word "revived" does not warrant the interpolation of the word "dead," which has never been applied to a judgment, and could not be applied with more propriety to one upon which execution might, than to one upon which it could not, have issued. A judgment on which execution has not issued within the year, is not dead but only sleepeth, and may be awakened not only by scire facias or debt, but by suing out execution without either, if the delay has been occasioned by the acts of the defendant, or for his accommodation and at his request. 8 Bac. Abr. 600, 601, 602; United States v. Harford, 19 John. 173; and in no case is suing out execution *after the year without scire facias void, but only voidable. Id.

The word revived is used in the statute in reference not to the character of the judgment, but to that of the specified remedies, to wit, a scire facias or an action of debt, and it has the same meaning in regard to both, that is to say, the renewal of the judgment; in the former remedy by an award of execution, and in the latter by the recovery of a new judgment. And both remedies may be resorted to as well before as after the year. 8 Bac. Abr. 603; 1 Chit. Plead. 355: and either may be preferable to suing out execution, where the plaintiff wishes a judicial decision, in a regular course of pleading and trial at law, upon some question touching the validity or discharge of the judgment. We accordingly find that the period of limitation begins, not from one year after the judgment, but from its date. The statute, it will be seen, embraces the subject of limitations after judgment, by two distinct clauses of the same sentence; the first of which relates to judgments where execution, from whatever cause, has never issued, and the last to further proceedings by execution, where execution has once issued without being returned.

When we come to the spirit and policy of the statute, there is if possible still less difficulty. It is an act of limitation against judgments, and like other acts of limitation a statute of repose. It bars the judgment by barring the only actions at law by which it can be enforced, the action of debt and the writ of scire facias which is a judicial writ, and in that sense an action, open to all the pleadings, evidence and modes of trial applicable to the action of debt. The necessity for a period of limitation is stronger than in most other cases; for the judgment being matter of record perpetuates itself, and cannot be erased even by the concurring act of the parties; while the evidence of its *discharge, or release, or opposing equities, rests for the most part in perishable documents, or the fleeting testimony of witnesses.

I cannot doubt therefore that judgments quando acciderint fall within the plain terms and meaning of the statute, as well as all other judgments upon which no execution has ever issued; and that if there be any difficulty in the construction of the statute, it is as to the period of time from which the limitation begins to run, whether from the date of the judgment or the time when assets come to the hands of the executor or administrator: and here it is that we must advert to the nature of the judgment.

A judgment de bonis testatoris is compounded of two elements, the recovery against the estate represented by the defendant, and his responsibility for the assets. The first is irrespective of the condition or amount of the assets; the last is dependent upon the assets which have come to his hands to be administered. If the demand in the action be just, he cannot resist the recovery of it against the estate because he has no assets to satisfy it; and on the other hand, he has a right to relieve himself from personal liability, direct or indirect, by shewing that he has fully administered. And if he does so, or the fact be admitted by the plaintiff, how is judgment to be rendered, so as to establish the debt against the estate, and at the same time his full administration of the assets up to the time of his plea? The difficulty arises from his uniting in his own person his individual with his representative interest, so that a judgment against the estate must be rendered through him; and that difficulty is solved by the plaintiff's taking a recovery of his debt against the defendant in his representative character, to be levied of the goods and chattels which were of the decedent at the time of his death, and which since the plea pleaded have come, or which shall thereafter come, to *his hands to be administered. This is a subsisting judgment against the estate, and may be enforced not only against the same executor or administrator, but against any subsequent personal representative of the estate.

The plea of fully administered therefore, although both in form and substance a plea in bar, is one of a peculiar nature. It can be pleaded only by an executor or administrator, and presents no answer to the justice of the plaintiff's demand; but only serves to shew that the defendant is not accountable therefor, having no assets of the estate in his hands wherewith to pay it. It is no bar to the recovery of the debt against the estate, but to the present accountability of the then representative. The plaintiff is therefore not bound to take issue upon it, but may admit it to be true, and take his judgment notwithstanding, with a direction that it shall be paid out of assets that may thereafter come to the defendant's hands. If this were not so, and the plaintiff prevented from establishing the justice of his demand by a judgment against the estate, the absurd consequence would follow of absolving the estate therefrom forever, because of its present inability to make payment.

The leading authority upon this point is Mary Shipley's Case, 8 Co. 134 a, which was debt on a bond against the executors of the obligor: the defendants pleaded fully administered, and so nothing in their hands: replication that they had assets: the jury found assets in part; and judgment was given for the whole debt, damages and costs; which judgment was affirmed in the Exchequer chamber; for upon the bar which is nothing in their hands, the plaintiff might have prayed judgment immediately; for thereby the debt is confessed, but that she cannot have execution until the defendants have goods of the deceased.

462 *In Dorchester v. Webb, Cro. Car. 372, the property of the judgment in Mary Shipley's Case was not denied, but the soundness of the opinion upon which it was founded disputed. The report states it was contended that when an executor pleads fully administered the plaintiff may take judgment presently, and expect when the defendant hath assets, for he remains always executor and may have goods of the testator; and for that purpose was cited Mary Shipley's Case, that if an executor pleads fully administered the plaintiff may take judgment presently, and expect when he has assets in his hands. On the other hand, the law as stated in Mary Shipley's Case was denied, and the difference contended to be that when it is found that the defendant has some assets, though of little value, so as he hath not fully administered, the plaintiff shall have judgment of the entire debt, but he shall not have execution but of as much as is found, and shall not be barred of the residue, and if more assets come afterwards he may have scire facias to have execution thereof; but if it be found that he hath fully administered, or if it be so pleaded and confessed, then judgment shall be against the plaintiff. And so the Court held the law to be.

But in Noel, &c. v. Nelson, 2 Wms. Saunders, pt. 2d, p. 214, 226, the principle of Mary Shipley's Case was affirmed. The action was debt against executors upon a bond of their testator: the defendants pleaded plene administravit, on which plea the plaintiff prayed his judgment of the debt to be of assets quando acciderint according to the rule in Mary Shipley's Case; and the Court gave judgment accordingly; on which judgment the executors brought a writ of error, and insisted on the matter in law, that such judgment as this ought not to be given, notwithstanding the opinion in Mary Shipley's Case; and of such opinion was Twysden*, Justice, strongly, who denied the said opinion in Mary Shipley's Case to be law, and relied much on the opinion of Jones, Bushby and Croke, in Dorchester v. Webb, where Mary Shipley's Case is denied by them to be law: but Kelynge, Chief Justice, Rainsford and Morton, Justices, held the judgment to be good; and afterwards a precedent being produced where such a judgment was entered according to the opinion in Mary Shipley's Case, Twysden agreed that the judgment should be affirmed. And the reporter gives the pleadings and judgment in the case, p. 216, which judgment is as follows:

"And the said W inasmuch as the said M and T by their said plea do not deny but that the said writing now here into Court brought is the deed of the said N the testator, nor that the said debt in the said writing specified is a true and just debt, yet unpaid and not satisfied, or otherwise discharged; and inasmuch as the said W cannot deny but that the said M and T have not, nor on the day of the suing out of the original writ of him, the said W, nor ever since hitherto, had any goods or chattels which were of the said N the testator, at the time of his death, in their hands to be administered, prays judgment of his debt aforesaid by him above demanded, to be levied of the goods and chattels which were of the said N at the time of his death, and which shall hereafter come to the hands of the said M and T to be administered: therefore it is considered that the said W recover against the said M and T his debt aforesaid, to be levied of the goods and chattels of the said N, the testator, at the time of his death, and which shall hereafter come to the hands of the said M and T to be administered." And the like form of judgment will be found in 2 Lilley's Ent's 505, and in 2 Lomax Ex'ors 446.

The principle of Mary Shipley's Case, and of Noel v. Nelson, has never since the latter case been questioned, *and it is equally applicable whether the plaintiff confesses the plea of fully administered, or takes issue upon it and it is found against him, in the whole or in part. All the cases agree that where the jury find assets in part, the plaintiff shall have judgment for the residue also, to be levied quando. And in Dorchester v. Webb, the plaintiff's confession of the plea was very properly considered as standing upon the same footing as a verdict thereupon for the defendant, though the Court erred in the conclusion that there ought in either case to be judgment against the plaintiff. The defence is pleaded in bar of the action, and ought to have the same result whether found or admitted to be true. No reason can be assigned for a distinction, except that in the case of a verdict the defendant has been subjected to costs at the trial, which is no reason for defeating a just debt, but only for allowing such costs to the defendant. And a judgment for the plaintiff quando, after verdict for the defendant upon the plea of fully administered may very properly be regarded as in the nature of a judgment non obstante veredicto.

The case of Timberlake v. Benson's adm'r, 2 Virg. Cas. 348, serves to shew that according to the Virginia practice the plaintiff has judgment quando acciderint, as well where there is a verdict for the defendant upon the plea of fully administered, as where the plaintiff confesses the plea to be true. The General court there held that where an administrator pleads the single plea of fully administered on which the plaintiff takes issue, and the issue is found for the defendant, the verdict is conclusive proof that the defendant has not present assets; but as the plea is an acknowledgment that the intestate is indebted to the plaintiff, and the verdict is not conclusive that the defendant may not have future assets, the judgment ought to be rendered for the plaintiff for his debt and costs, to be levied of the goods of the intestate quando acciderint; but as the 465 defendant *has supported his issue, and to maintain the only plea which he pleaded has been subjected to costs, he ought to have a judgment for the general costs of his defence against the plaintiff. And that where the defendant pleads non assumpsit and fully administered, and issue is taken on both, and both tried, and the first issue is found for the plaintiff, and the second for the defendant, the judgment ought to be for the plaintiff, as in the former case; because as he is obliged to come into Court to establish a debt due to his intestate, he ought to recover not only his debt but his costs also out of the future assets; but as the defendant has supported his second plea, he ought to have a judgment for the costs which he has expended in supporting that issue, that is for his separate costs of that issue.

In Burnes v. Burton, 1 A. K. Marshall, Kent'y R. 369, it was held that on a plea of fully administered, if the plaintiff takes issue upon the plea of fully administered, and it is found against him, he must pay costs, but yet have judgment quando acciderint.

In Miller v. Towles, 4 J. J. Marshall, Kent'y R. 255, in an action of covenant, on a verdict for the defendant on the plea of fully administered, it was held to be error to render judgment in bar of the action; as the issue acknowledged the justice of the plaintiff's demand, it should have been in his favour for the damages, to be levied quando acciderint.

Wilson v. Hurst, Peters' Cir. Ct. R. 441, was a scire facias against executors on a judgment against their testator; the defendants pleaded payment and no assets: there was a verdict for the plaintiff on the plea of payment, and for the defendant on the plea of fully administered; and the plaintiff prayed judgment quando acciderint, which was directed.

The question whether assets or not is the same after a judgment quando that it 466 was before, except that the *range of it is more limited in point of time. It is open to the like pleadings, evidence, verdict and judgment. See the proceedings in a scire facias, 2 Wms. Saunders, pt. 2, p. 217-222, upon the judgment quando acciderint in Noel, &c. v. Nelson. The defendant may plead plene administravit, 2 Tidd. Prac. 1046, and shew the due administration of the assets which have come to his hands since the former judgment and plea; which question involves not merely the enquiry whether goods and chattels which belonged to the decedent did come to the hands of the executor, but also his administration of them according to law. It is the balance only due from him after allowance of the proper credits which constitutes the assets in his hands. And the defendant might plead and prove judgments recovered against him on debts of higher dignity, and paid or outstanding, to a greater amount.

It is argued that the quando of such a judgment has the same effect as the stay of a judgment by a writ of error, or an injunction, or a cessat executio; during which the statute cannot operate. But the reason is that during the writ of error, or injunction, or cessat, an action of debt or scire facias cannot be brought upon the judgment. This it has been shewn is not so in regard to a judgment quando acciderint, upon which scire facias or debt will lie immediately; and that if there be still no assets in the hands of the executor, the judgment may be revived or renewed by the like judgment. And there is direct authority to the point where assets are found as to part only, 2 Wms. Ex'ors 1231, and there is equal reason where none are in hand.

In the cases put of a writ of error or injunction, the judgment is superseded, and has no effect during the pendency of the proceeding. In the case of a cessat executio, the judgment is in effect superseded, for the suspension is absolute and unconditional, and renders it substantially a judgment 467 in futuro. But a judgment *quando acciderint, so far as the estate is concerned, is immediate, absolute and unconditional, and even as regards the executor the direction as to the levy is not so much a condition as a consequence of his having already accounted for the previous assets. And we must not suffer ourselves to be misled to the supposition that the judgment is conditional, by the appellation given to it with more brevity than accuracy.

Indeed, the whole argument of the appellee's counsel upon this branch of the case arises from his treating the judgment quando acciderint as conditional; and hence he has urged that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until assets have come to the hands of the executor. By this must of course be meant assets properly applicable to the discharge of the judgment; for a plea that no assets at all have come to his hands would not present the bar of the statute, it being at most a denial, instead of an admission, of a once existing cause of action. How then would a plea of the bar of the statute according to his view of it be framed. It would have to set forth the assets received by the executor since the judgment, his credits against the same for the payment of debts entitled to priority, the date at which a balance against him ought to have been struck, and that more than ten years have elapsed since that time; thus presenting a plain breach of trust on the part of the executor. This would be an anomalous plea of a statute of limitations, and a strange departure from the one in question, which provides that no action or scire facias shall lie upon a judgment but within ten years from its date; a statute moreover designed primarily, in actions against executors, for the protection of the estate, and operating only incidentally and consequentially for the protection of the executor.

A plea of the statute in general terms, that the cause of the scire facias or action did not accrue within ten years would be idle, if 468 no assets at all have come to the *hands of the executor since the judgment; and unavailing, if in point of fact assets have so come to his hands; for the statute could not run during the period of administration of the assets, but only at its close, when a balance struck would shew assets, still remaining in the hands of the executor, from which time only, if at all, could the statute avail anything. But it could not avail anything in any state of the assets; for an executor always continues executor and trustee for the creditors, and cannot plead the statute in exoneration of his personal responsibility for the assets; and the exoneration of his testator's estate by limitation of the statute has reference to the date of the judgment, and not to the accrual or administration of the assets.

It will be seen that the statute is permissive as well as negative. It provides that judgments may be revived or renewed by scire facias or debt brought within ten years next after the date of the judgment, and not after; and upon the point we are now considering it must be taken that judgments quando acciderint fall within the meaning of the law. Now the statute ought to have a fair and liberal interpretation, so as to allow the revival or renewal contemplated, by the modes prescribed, within the period limited, and to prevent it afterwards; and this cannot be done otherwise than by permitting the plaintiff to shew assets in hand if he can, and if he should fail, to place his case in a condition to shew it thereafter. And we must not be deterred from a fair and wholesome construction of the statute by supposed formal difficulties.

It is urged that a scire facias or declaration would be wrong without the statement that since the judgment quando assets have come to the hands of the defendant; and that the statement may be denied, and if so must be proved. But the suggestion in the scire facias is not merely of assets but of sufficient 469 assets; and it cannot be denied that if assets to the amount of *one dollar or even one cent have come to his hands, the revival may be accomplished: then why not by the plaintiff's admission there are none, with a prayer of judgment quando? Surely a distinction which is to defeat forever a debt acknowledged to be justly due, cannot be founded on such a nicety.

And such must be the inevitable result; for the plea would be in bar of the scire facias or action, and not in abatement. The question whether an executor has assets remaining in his hands must in most cases be one of mere probability. Every action, however, against an executor or administrator, is upon that assumption; and it would be very remarkable if the revival or renewal of a judgment quando should be defeated by a mistake or failure of proof of the very nature which led to the judgment itself.

The reason why a scire facias or a declaration upon a judgment quando must state that assets have come to the hands of the defendant, besides the formal one of conformity with the description of the judgment, is that by the omission the plaintiff encounters an estoppel. The judgment itself is conclusive as to the defendant's full administration up to that time, and he has a right to plead fully administered since. It must therefore appear that the plaintiff is not going behind the judgment in search of assets.

The case cited from Buller's N. P. 169, of Taylor v. Holman, was this: "In debt on a judgment against the defendants as executors, suggesting a devastavit, in the original action the defendants had pleaded plene administravit, and the plaintiff had taken judgment of future assets quando acciderint. Lord Mansfield would not allow the plaintiff to give any evidence of assets come to the hands of the defendants before the judgment, for the plaintiff has admitted that the defendants fully administered to that time: And 470 there being no evidence of any assets come to his hands since, the *plaintiff was nonsuited. Taylor v. Holman, at Guildhall Sittings after T. 1764."

The case is not in point, it not being debt to revive the judgment quando, but debt for a devastavit, by which the plaintiff abandoned the pursuit of the estate, and sought to subject the executors personally. It was moreover a nonsuit, which must have been with the plaintiff's acquiescence, the Court having no power, even in England, to direct a nonsuit after appearance, without his consent. Watkins v. Towers, 2 T. R. 275.

Another case cited, of Mara v. Quin, 6 T. R. 1, was this: The plaintiff sued out "a scire facias upon a judgment in an action of debt against the defendant as executrix of Quin. After stating the proceedings in the former action, that the defendant there pleaded other judgments recovered and plene administravit, on which the plaintiff prayed, and the Court adjudged, that his debt should be levied of the goods and chattels of the testator which should thereafter come to the hands of the defendant to be administered, after satisfaction of the other judgments, &c., it proceeded to state that divers goods, &c., of the testator, sufficient to pay as well the other judgments as the plaintiff's, had come to and were in the hands of the defendant to be administered, &c., (without saying that those goods had come to the defendant's hands since his judgment,) and prayed execution against the defendant to be levied of those goods, according to the form and effect of his said recovery, &c. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that after the plaintiff's judgment no goods, &c., of the testator had come to the defendant's hands to be administered, &c. To this the plaintiff replied that divers goods, &c., had come to the defendant's hands, &c., (without adding 'since the former judgment, &c.'), and the defendant demurred."

In that case, it will thus be seen, that the plaintiff demurred to the defendant's 471 plea, that since the judgment *no assets had come to his hands to be administered; which demurrer was in the face of the estoppel; and in the argument the plaintiff placed the case upon the ground that he had a right to go behind the judgment to shew prior assets. The plaintiff was unavoidably defeated; and the question is not at all presented, whether he might not have confessed the plea, and taken judgment when assets.

The case of Lidderdale v. Robinson's adm'r, 2 Brock. R. 160, has no application. The question whether the judgment was barred by the statute was not and could not be made, for it was not pleaded, and it seems probable the plaintiff, in consequence of his residence beyond sea, came within one of the exceptions of the statute.

It seems to me, therefore clear that whatever may be the state of the assets, or although there may be none, a creditor is entitled to recover judgment against the estate, and keep the same in force by revival or renewal thereof; and that this may always be accomplished by a quando acciderint, the defence of fully administered being personal to the existing executor or administrator, and limited to the time of pleading it, and no bar in effect to the action itself, whether that be founded upon the original demand, or upon the judgment.

On the other hand, I cannot doubt if a creditor sleeps upon his judgment quando acciderint for ten years from its date, instead of taking the proper steps to enforce, revive or renew it, the same is barred by the statute of limitations, as completely as if the judgment were a general one, to be levied of the goods of the testator or intestate, without restriction. If this were otherwise, then as it has been shewn that a plaintiff may at his pleasure confess a plea of fully administered, 472 or no assets, and take judgment quando acciderint, it would *be always in his power, by his own act, to place his demand beyond the reach of the statute.

If it should be thought hard that assets accruing after the ten years cannot be reached for satisfaction of the judgment quando, the answer is, that the same result follows other judgments de bonis testatoris, without regard to the fact whether there be assets in hand within the ten years or not, and also all judgments against persons individually, whether the defendant be solvent or insolvent, within or during that period. It is in vain to say that the want of assets furnishes a presumption against the satisfaction of the judgment. The Legislature has not deemed it sufficient, and in fact it might often prove fallacious, for the evidence of assets, as well as of release or payment, may be lost, and payment may have been made by the executor in anticipation of future assets, or by some person, or out of some fund, collaterally bound for the debt. It is a wise policy, and cures a defect of the common law, to close the door after such laches and lapse of time, against all such enquiries; a policy of which the present case is an apt illustration. The judgment in question was recovered in the year 1802, by the executors of the original creditor, on a debt contracted in 1798, against the executor of the original debtor, who died in the year 1800. The surviving executor plaintiff in the judgment, died about the year 1810, and the executor defendant therein, not until the year 1827. And this suit to enforce the judgment was brought in the year 1840, against the executor of the defendant in the judgment and the sheriff administrator de bonis non of the original debtor, by the administrator de bonis non of the original creditor, he having qualified as such in the year 1831. After such lapse of time, deaths of parties and shifting representations, what security 473 is there for a correct adjudication upon the merits of a case; and *is any thing more manifest than the wisdom of a complete statutory bar?

In the construction of a statute, where a case falls within the words and within the mischief, upon what principle are we to search for an intent of the Legislature beyond and in conflict with both? Here the application of the statute of limitations to the judgment in question is resisted, in the first place, upon the ground that such a judgment is not within the meaning of the Legislature, and in the next place, upon the ground that if it be, the limitation does not take effect until ten years after assets have come to the hands of the executor. The first proposition imports, that though assets to any amount have come to the hands of the executor within a week from the time of the judgment, the plaintiff may lie by for half a century, and then proceed by scire facias or debt to revive the judgment, though such assets have been entirely administered. The second proposition imports, that within ten years after assets to the amount of a single cent have come to the hands of the executor, though twenty years after the date of the judgment, the plaintiff may still proceed to revive his judgment. And the reasoning which results in these propositions is derived from the state of the law existing before the enactment of the statute, the evils of which it was the purpose of the Legislature to redress.

I can understand very well why the statute is not applicable to a judgment where the plaintiff cannot revive by scire facias or debt; but I cannot understand why it should not apply, merely because the plaintiff cannot sue out execution. The cases relied on, are all cases which occurred in reference to the capacity to sue out execution, after the expiration of a year from the judgment, and no execution or continuance on the roll within that time. And in that aspect they have no bearing upon the question, whether 474 debt or scire facias *will lie either before or after the year expires. Most of them it is true, in another aspect, serve to repel the statute of limitations, but it is only because of the incapacity to maintain debt or scire facias; as where occasioned by injunction or writ of error, or cessat executio. The case of execution stayed by indulgence or agreement, is no replication to the bar of the statute, for it neither suspends the capacity to maintain debt or scire facias, nor falls within any of the savings of the proviso. Indeed, a replication of an express promise to pay the debt is bad. Day, ex'or of Yates v. Pickett, 4 Munf. 104.

The true question, therefore, is reduced to this, whether a judgment quando acciderint may be revived by scire facias or debt, without proof that assets have come to the hands of the executor; or more properly to this, whether although such a judgment may be so revived if assets to one cent's value have come to his hands, yet if that cent be wanting, and the verdict of the jury so finds, there must be judgment against the plaintiff thereupon, and his debt barred forever. That such must be the effect of such a verdict and judgment results from the rules of pleading, and is expressed by the Judges in Brickhead v. The Archbishop of York, 1 Hobart 197.

In regard to judgments quando acciderint against heirs bound by the obligations of their ancestors, I do not perceive that they throw any light upon the present case, and when the question arises, it will be time enough to consider whether, in the construction of the statute, they do not equally fall within the terms and the mischief, or whether there is a diversity arising out of the nature of the subject, to wit, realty, or out of the relation of ancestor and heir, making the obligation the personal debt of the latter. Davy v. Pepys, 2 Plowd. 440. But as to the case cited of a reversion or remainder expectant upon an outstanding estate for 475 life, *pleaded specially as the only assets by descent, and immediate judgment to be levied of the same when the life estate falls in, it seems to me clear that it differs widely in principle and effect from a general judgment quando, whether against heir or executor; inasmuch as it is a specific appropriation, and impounding, as it were, of the particular subject for the satisfaction of the judgment, and the lien by matter of record is perfect, as much so as that of a mortgage, and of course there can be no room for the application of the statute.

My opinion is, that the judgment sought to be enforced in this suit, is barred by the statute of limitations; and therefore, without considering the other questions discussed in the argument, I think the decree of the Circuit Court ought to be reversed and the bill dismissed.

Jurisdiction.

I. DEFINITION, NATURE AND KINDS OF JUDGMENTS.

A. DEFINITION.

Judgment of His Peers.—A judgment of his peers means a trial by jury. Jelly v. Dils, 27 W. Va. 374.

"A judgment is the 'decision or sentence of the law, pronounced by a court or other competent tribunal, upon the matter contained in the record.' When, after the facts are found, the court pronounces the decision upon them, that is the judgment. That is the judicial act,—the act of the court as a court speaking the sentence of the law, whereas the entering it in the roll, the docket, or the order or judgment book, is an act of a different character, a clerical or ministerial act, one to constitute merely a memorial to attest that the judicial act of pronouncing judgment was in fact done." BRANNON, J., dissenting. McClain v. Davis, 37 W. Va. 330, 16 S. E. Rep. 629.

But a sentence of a court pronounced against a party without hearing him or giving him an opportunity to be heard is not a judicial determination of his rights, and is not entitled to respect in any other tribunal. Stephens v. Brown, 24 W. Va. 284; Haymond v. Camden, 22 W. Va. 180.

"Judgments" Preclude "Decrees" under Statute.—It is provided by Code of Va. 1873, ch. 182, sec. 1, that, "a decree for land or specific personal property, and a decree or order requiring the payment of money, shall have the effect of a judgment for such land, property or money, and be embraced in the word 'judgment.'" Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251.

B. ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS.

De Facto Judges—Validity of Judgment.—The judgments and decrees of the judges of the court of appeals, who were in office under military appointment when the state was restored to the Union, holding over and continuing to exercise their office, are valid and binding. Grimm v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 31, and note.

Thus, where a judge by military appointment in Virginia, held a court and tried a criminal after the admission of the state into the Union, his act was held to be valid. Quinn v. Com., 20 Gratt. 138, and note.

Incumbent in Office.—But it was held in Morris v. Ins. Co., 85 Va. 568, 8 S. E. Rep. 338, that there could be no judge de facto in any case where there is an incumbent in the office.

Rendition before Commencement of Judge's Term.—

Where a judge was properly elected, and, believing that his term commenced immediately, proceeded to hold court, it was held that although the term of his predecessor had not then expired, he was a judge de facto, and his judgments were as valid and binding as if he had been a judge de jure. McCraw v. Williams, 33 Gratt. 510.

Constituent Parts of a Court.—"In every court, there must be at least three constituent parts, the actor, the reus, and the judex; the actor or plaintiff who complains of any injury done, the reus, or defendant, who is called upon to make satisfaction for it; and the judex, or judicial power, which is to examine the truth of the fact, to determine the law arising upon that fact, and, if any injury appears to have been done, to ascertain and apply the remedy." 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) p. 195.

Definiteness.

Judgment Subject to Unascertained Credit.—A judgment ought not to be entered on a bond for the sum of money, "subject to a credit for a hogshead of tobacco" without ascertaining its value; but the amount of such credit should in the first place, be ascertained by a writ of inquiry, and judgment should be rendered for the balance. Early v. Moore, 4 Munf. 262.

But it seems, that a verdict for a certain sum of money, with interest from a day specified, subject to a credit (without saying on what day such credit is to be applied) is not so uncertain as that the plaintiff cannot take judgment upon it, and a judgment, in such case, for the damages aforesaid, in form aforesaid assessed, sufficiently follows the verdict. Lanier v. Harwell, 6 Munf. 79.

C. GENERAL NATURE.

Sentence of Law.—A judgment, whether in a criminal or civil case, is the sentence of the law pronounced by the proper tribunal, as the result of the proceedings instituted for the redress of injury or the punishment of offences. Pifer's Case, 14 Gratt. 710.

Whether the judgment be the act of the court, or be entered up by the clerk under the statute, the effect is the same. In either case it is the act of the law, and until reversed by the court which rendered it or by a superior tribunal, it imports absolute verity, and is as effectual and binding as if pronounced in a trial upon the merits. Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 480.

"As the judgment is entire, and when a verdict has passed, is the sentence of the law upon the result of the proceedings instituted as aforesaid, it can make no difference whether that sentence is merely for the fine assessed by the verdict, or combined with it and superadded to it, is accompanied with imprisonment; which punishment the law affixes to the finding of the fact, when in the exercise of the legal discretion of the court it is deemed proper to impose it. It becomes, when rendered, an entire judgment upon the facts as found, and in the language of the books finishes the proceedings; and it would seem to follow that as the judgment is the determination of law upon the verdict or particular state of facts, it cannot be divided, and a part of the final sentence be pronounced at one term, and after having to that extent passed entirely from the control of the court, that it should at a subsequent period, take up the same finding and pronounce another sentence in addition to the one already entered upon the same state of facts. Neither judgment would be interlocutory." Pifer's Case, 14 Gratt. 710.

Reasons for Judgment.—Every court ought to state, on record, legal grounds for their judgment; especially subordinate courts, liable to have their judgments reversed in a superior court. Preston v. The Auditor, 1 Call 471.

But if a court give a right judgment for a wrong reason, it ought, nevertheless, to be affirmed. Newell v. Wood, 1 Munf. 555.

Statute Directory.—The clause in the constitution of West Virginia, requiring the supreme court of that state to "decide every point, fairly arising upon the record, and give its reasons therefor in writing" is directory, and does not affect the common-law doctrine of res judicata. Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230; Hall v. Bank, 15 W. Va. 323.

Certainty.—The general rule seems to be, that the judgment, being the voice of the law pronounced by the court on the matter in controversy, should be so certain as to leave nothing doubtful or unsettled. Thus, a judgment "that the plaintiff recover damages and expenses according to law, and the rules and regulations of the society" without specifying the amount or nature of damages and expenses, is erroneous for uncertainty. Stratton v. Mutual Assurance Soc., 6 Rand. 22.

Plea of Plene Administravit.—A verdict upon an issue joined on the plea of plene administravit, should set forth with sufficient certainty, what portion of the assets, which came to the defendant's hands, was unadministered at the time of suing out the plaintiff's writ. Rogers v. Chandler, 3 Munf. 65. See also, Booth v. Armstrong, 2 Wash. 301; Gardner v. Vidal, 6 Rand. 106.

Thus, a verdict which merely finds that assets sufficient to pay the plaintiff's demand "have come" to the defendant's hands, without saying when, is erroneous. Gardner v. Vidal, 6 Rand. 106.

Judgment for Debt and Interest.—But a verdict and judgment which awards the debt claimed in the declaration with interest, subject to a specified credit paid at a specified date, is certain enough. Barrett v. Wills, 4 Leigh 114.

Specific Relief at Law.—In an action for breach of a contract to deliver a certain number of shares of corporate stock, a court of law can only award damages for the failure to deliver such stock, and cannot render a judgment that the defendant shall deliver to the plaintiff so many shares of stock. Orange, etc., R. Co. v. Fulvey, 17 Gratt. 366.

Judgment is a Contract.—A judgment is a contract of the highest nature, and an act which impairs the obligations of that contract, is unconstitutional and void. Ratcliffe v. Anderson, 2 Va. Law Jour. 744.

But a judgment founded on a tort is in no sense a contract. Peerce v. Kitsmiller, 19 W. Va. 564.

II. REQUISITES OF A VALID JUDGMENT.

A. WHAT LAW GOVERNS.—The validity of a judgment is to be determined by the laws in force when it is rendered, and is not affected by subsequent changes therein. Anderson v. Hygeia Hotel Co., 92 Va. 687, 24 S. E. Rep. 269; Kennaird v. Jones, 9 Gratt. 190.

"If a party shows a defence valid at the time it is passed on by the court, a subsequent change in the law cannot deprive him thereof." Currin v. Spraul, 10 Gratt. 148. See also, Arnold v. Kelley, 5 W. Va. 446.

Hence, where the law, as it existed at the time the verdict is rendered, provides that judgment shall be entered for the amount found with interest from the date of the judgment, such judgment should call for interest from its date, although the law existing at the time the judgment is entered provides that on verdicts judgment be rendered, with interest from the date of the verdict. Murdock v. Ins. Co., 38 W. Va. 407, 10 S. E. Rep. 777.

So also, writs of error in the court of appeals must be disposed of in accordance with the law as it existed at the time of the rendition of the judgment. It must be affirmed, if there is no error therein according to the law as it stood when the judgment was rendered, but, if erroneous, it must be reversed, and such judgment entered as lower court ought to have entered. Anderson v. Hygeia Hotel Co., 92 Va. 687, 24 S. E. Rep. 269.

For example, the legislature has no power to set aside a judgment, or to empower a court to set aside a judgment, rendered before the passage of the act, no matter how erroneous the judgment may be. Arnold v. Kelley, 5 W. Va. 446, citing Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 81.

B. JURISDICTION—STATEMENT OF RULE.—Before a court can render a valid judgment or decree it is essential that it should have jurisdiction of the person as well as of the subject-matter; if either of these is wanting all the proceedings are void. Haymond v. Camden, 22 W. Va. 181. See monographic note on "Jurisdiction."

Error in Exercise of Jurisdiction.—"A judgment pronounced by a court having no jurisdiction is a mere nullity, not only voidable but entirely void. Such a judgment may be assailed anywhere and everywhere, in courts of the last resort, as well as in inferior courts. Wherever proceedings may be had to enforce such void judgment it may be opposed, and the jurisdiction of the court that pronounced it questioned and assailed. There is an obvious distinction between such a case where the court has no jurisdiction to enter the judgment complained of, and a case where the court, having a general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, has erroneously exercised it. In the latter case the judgment cannot be questioned in any collateral proceeding, and if not appealed from is final; but where the court is without jurisdiction its judgment must be treated as a mere nullity, and all proceedings under it, or depending on it are void." Withers v. Fuller, 30 Gratt. 547.

C. PARTIES.

1. DEATH OF PARTY.

Judgments for or against Deceased Persons.—Judgments for or against deceased persons are not generally regarded as void on that account. Such judgments have sometimes been upheld in collateral proceedings on the ground that their rendition necessarily implied that the parties were then living, and that this implied finding in support of judgment ought not to be allowed to be impeached by evidence not contained in the record. McMillan v. Hickman, 35 W. Va. 705, 14 S. E. Rep. 227.

Civiliter Mortuus.—Thus, where process is served upon a defendant on the day of his conviction for felony, but before the conviction has taken place, a judgment by default is obtained against the defendant while he is confined in the penitentiary, the judgment is not void, but voidable, and cannot be assailed collaterally in a court of equity, or elsewhere. Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 480.

No Suggestion on Record.—Where process has been regularly served on a defendant, and there is no appearance, and the defendant dies before judgment, and his death is not suggested on the record, and after his death judgment is rendered against him, such judgment is not void but voidable, and cannot be collaterally attacked. King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601; Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107. See also, ch. 134, sec. 1 of the Code of West Virginia.

Death of One of Several Plaintiffs.—The fact that a sole plaintiff, or one of several plaintiffs, is dead at the time of the institution of an action, such death not appearing on the record, does not render a judgment therein void, but only erroneous, and such judgment is a lien on real estate. Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. Rep. 1007; King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601.

Judgment Constitutes a Lien.—Where suit is instituted in the name of a party who is dead at the time the suit is brought, and process is duly served upon the defendants, who suffer judgment to be rendered against them without pleading the death of the plaintiff in abatement in proper time during the pendency of the suit, the judgment so obtained is not absolutely void, but is erroneous, and until reversed in one of the modes prescribed by law, constitutes a lien upon the real estate of the defendant, and may be enforced as other judgment liens, and is not subject to collateral attack. McMillan v. Hickman, 35 W. Va. 705, 14 S. E. Rep. 227. See infra, this note "Lien of Judgment."

Error, How Corrected.—Where the fact of death is apparent in the record of the judgment, its rendition would be error of law, to be corrected by appellate process; and, where it does not appear in the record, but is to be shown aliunde, it is called error in fact, to be corrected at common law by writ of error coram nobis; but now, under Code of W. Va. 1889, ch. 135, sec. 1, it is corrected by motion in lieu of that writ. Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. Rep. 1007; Williamson v. Appleberry, 1 H. & M. 206.

Motion.—A judgment against a defendant, who was dead at the time of its rendition, will be set aside on motion. Hooe v. Barber, 4 H. & M. 489.

D. JOINDER OF PARTIES.

Common-Law Rule—On Contract.—It is a well-established rule of the common law, that the plaintiff upon a joint contract must sue all the joint contractors, and bring all of them before the court, and mature this cause against all, or if any could not be brought before the court he must proceed to outlawry against such defendants before he can obtain a judgment against any of them, and he must recover a joint judgment against all the defendants. Hoffman v. Bircher, 23 W. Va. 537; Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297; Beazley v. Sims, 81 Va. 644.

In a joint action upon contract, the plaintiff must have judgment against all the defendants before the court, or he can have judgment against none. Jenkins v. Hurt, 2 Rand. 446; Early v. Clarkson, 7 Leigh 83; Baber v. Cook, 11 Leigh 606.

Contract Joint or Joint and Several.—At common law in a joint action against several parties, there can be but one final judgment, and it must be for or against all the defendants; and the rule is the same, whether the contract sued on is joint or joint and several, or whether the action is founded on several and distinct contracts, as in a joint action under the statute against the maker and indorser of a note. Stephoe v. Read, 19 Gratt. 1; Moffett v. Bickle, 21 Gratt. 280; Muse v. Bank, 27 Gratt. 252; Gibson v. Beveridge, 90 Va. 696, 19 S. E. Rep. 785.

But in an action upon the joint contract of three defendants, the plaintiff, to sustain his action, must prove that all three joined in the alleged contract; for if it appear that one of the defendants was not a party to the contract, though the other two were, the plaintiff must fail in this joint action. Rohr v. Davis, 9 Leigh 80.

In an action on a contract against two defendants, though one of them confesses a judgment, if the other proves a defence that goes to the foundation of the entire contract sued on, there must be final judgment in favor of both defendants. Steptoe v. Read, 19 Gratt. 1.

"Where all the joint defendants are before the court, and the action as to any of them is not barred by any defence personal to any of such defendants, and one of such joint defendants in court confesses judgment in the action, and the action is further proceeded in against the other joint defendants, the court cannot enter a final judgment upon such confession, and if it does in fact enter up a formal judgment thereon such formal judgment entered under such circumstances is a nullity, nor does such formal entry of such judgment acquire any validity because the plaintiff agreed to accept the same, unless at the same time he discontinues his action against the other defendants. As such cognovit actionem has none of the force or effect of a judgment while the action is waiting the trial of the issues as to the other joint defendants, it is wholly immaterial, whether the issues be tried at the same term at which such confession of judgment is entered, or at any subsequent term, for until the trial of the issues as to the other defendant, the confession awaits the final judgment upon the verdict, jointly against all defendants, or none, notwithstanding such cognovit actionem and the formal judgment thereon against the defendant who confessed said judgment. When such confession has been made and the issues are tried as to the other defendants it is the duty of the court to enter judgment upon the verdict jointly against all the defendants, or against none of them." Hoffman v. Bircher, 23 W. Va. 551.

Exceptions to the Rule.—It is a rule of the common law, that upon joint contracts the action must be against all the joint contractors and, as a general rule, the judgment must be against all or none of them. But this is not a universal rule. When a defendant in such an action pleads matter which goes to his personal discharge, such as bankruptcy, infancy, or any matter that does not go to the action of the writ; or pleads or gives in evidence a matter which is a bar to the action as against him only, and of which the others could not take advantage, judgment may be given for such defendant and against the rest. Moffett v. Bickle, 31 Gratt. 280; Snyder v. Snyder, 9 W. Va. 415; Choen v. Guthrie, 15 W. Va. 104; Beazley v. Sims, 81 Va. 647; Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. 316; Carlon v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297; Hoffman v. Bircher, 22 W. Va. 537. See also, Code W. Va., ch. 181, sec. 19, and ch. 125, sec. 52.

Contract Joint or Joint and Several.—The general rule at common law that in a joint action against several parties, there can be but one final judgment, and it must be for or against all the defendants, does not apply where the plea of one of the defendants admits the contract and sets up a discharge by matter subsequent, as bankruptcy, or where he sets up a personal disability at the time of the contract sued on, as infancy. And these exceptions apply equally, whether the contract is joint, or joint and several. Steptoe v. Read, 19 Gratt. 1; Bush v. Campbell, 26 Gratt. 403; Wamsley v. Lindenberger, 3 Rand. 478.

On Tort.—In an action of trespass against eleven defendants for arrest and false imprisonment, all pleaded the statute of limitations and not guilty; upon issue joined eight were found guilty, two not guilty, and against one the jury omitted to find any verdict, whereupon a joint judgment was entered against the eight for damages and costs, and it was held proper to enter this judgment against those found guilty, as it did not appear that they were prejudiced by this omission to find a verdict. Jones v. Grimmet, 4 W. Va. 104.

Statutory Rule.—The act, Va. Code of 1849, ch. 177, sec. 19, applies to actions on contract against two or more defendants, where the defence of some of the defendants is personal to themselves, though that defence is that they never were parties to the contract sued on, as non est factum. Bush v. Campbell, 26 Gratt. 403.

Code Va. 1860, ch. 177, sec. 19, applies only to cases in which some of the defendants are discharged upon the grounds of defence merely personal; and where the ground of defence goes to the foundation of the entire contract, the case remains as at common law. Steptoe v. Reed, 19 Gratt. 1, and note. But see Choen v. Guthrie, 15 W. Va. 107.

Joint Plea of Nonassumpsit.—But Va. Code 1887, sec. 3396, which provides that "in an action founded on a contract against two or more defendants, although the plaintiff may be barred as to one or more of them, yet he may have judgment against any other or others of the defendants against whom he would have been entitled to recover, if he had sued them only" has no application where the defendants file a joint plea of nonassumpsit, and there is nothing in the record which shows expressly or impliedly, that the defence relied on is merely personal to one defendant, and does not concern his codefendant. Gibson v. Beveridge, 90 Va. 696, 19 S. E. Rep. 785.

Judgment against Those Served.—Under Va. Code, ch. 167, sec. 50, where only one of several defendants is served with process, judgment is properly rendered against the defendant served. N. & W. R. Co. v. Shippers' Compress Co., 83 Va. 272, 2 S. E. Rep. 120; Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

Writ Served on Part.—Where a writ is served on only a part of the defendants, the others being returned no inhabitants of the county, the court may render judgment against those upon whom the writ is served. Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank v. Evans, 9 W. Va. 373. For Code Va., ch. 167, sec. 50, changes the common-law rule that all defendants in actions ex contractu must be summoned, before judgment can be had against any, by providing that judgment may be had against one defendant served with process, and a discontinuance as to others, or at the plaintiff's election, subsequent service of process and judgment, in the same suit against the other defendants. Beazley v. Sims, 81 Va. 644.

Under Va. Code 1887, sec. 3396, providing that where, "in any action against two or more defendants, the process is served on part of them, the plaintiff may proceed to judgment as to any so served, and either discontinue it as to the others, or from time to time, as the process is served as to such others, proceed to judgment as to them until judgments be obtained against all," judgment may properly be entered against several defendants on whom process is served, though return is made that another defendant is dead. Dillard v. Turner, 87

Va. 600, 14 S. E. Rep. 123. See also, Newberry v. Sheffey, 89 Va. 286, 15 S. E. Rep. 548.

It is provided by Code of West Virginia, ch. 181, sec. 19, and Code of Virginia 1860, ch. 177, sec. 19, "That in an action founded on a contract against two or more defendants, although the plaintiff may be barred as to any one or more of them he may have judgment against any other or others of the defendants against whom he would have been entitled to recover, if he had sued them only." In construing this statute, the Virginia court held in Bush v. Campbell, 26 Gratt. 428, and Muse v. Farmers' Bank, 27 Gratt. 254, that the plaintiff may bring his joint action against the defendants alleged to be jointly bound, and recover against some of them, although his action is barred by a defence which showed that no such joint contract with the said defendants ever existed. But these two cases were disapproved of by the West Virginia court in Hoffman v. Bircher, 23 W. Va. 587, they being of opinion that the rigidity of the common-law rule was relaxed by the legislature only so far as to permit the plaintiff, in his action against all the joint contractors, to recover against one or more of them, although the action be barred as to the others, where the plaintiff's declaration shows that he could have recovered against any one of them separately, if he had sued them only, and where he proves at the trial the contract as alleged.

It seems to be well settled that under the Code of Virginia 1860, ch. 177, sec. 19, judgment may be given in favor of some of the defendants at one time and against others at another time. Bush v. Campbell, 26 Gratt. 428, and note; Moffett v. Bickle, 21 Gratt. 280; Muse v. Farmers' Bank, 27 Gratt. 252.

Where Part Only Appear and Plead.—But it is not error to try a cause against a part of the defendants who have appeared and pleaded, and when there is an office judgment not set aside as to the other defendants. Hood v. Maxwell, 1 W. Va. 219.

Test as to Whether Several Judgment Is Proper.—It was held in Hoffman v. Bircher, 22 W. Va. 587, that a several judgment can be recovered against one or more defendants under the statute where the plaintiff's declaration shows that he could have recovered against any of them separately, if he had sued them only.

But separate judgments may be taken, during the same term upon a joint bond. White v. Tally, 5 Call 98.

Dismissal of Scire Facias.—A judgment against one of two defendants in a joint action, is not affected by the judgment of the circuit court dismissing a scire facias to revive the judgment, for a variance between the writ and evidence. Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

Joint and Several Bond.—Where there was an action upon a joint and several bond, against six obligors, and the capias (which was against them all) was executed, on two only, it was held that the plaintiff was not bound to sue out further process against the rest, but might take judgment against those two. Moss v. Moss, 4 H. & M. 293.

Reversal as an Entirety.—A joint judgment against two parties, where the service of notice is improperly executed as against one party, is erroneous, and must be reversed as to both. Vandiver v. Roberts, 4 W. Va. 493. See also, Gregory v. Marks, 1 Rand. 286. See infra, this note, "Reversal."

"Where a judgment is erroneous as to one and is reversed as to one, when the judgment is joint, it must be reversed as to all. Execution must issue against all or none. This is undoubtedly the common-law rule. * * * There is a manifest distinction, however, between an erroneous judgment and a void judgment. The first is a valid judgment, though erroneous, until reversed, provided it is the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. The latter is no judgment at all. It is a mere nullity. The first cannot be assailed in any other court but an appellate court. The latter may be assailed in any court, anywhere, whenever any claim is made or rights asserted under it." CHRISTIAN, J. Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

See also, when a verdict is set aside as to one issue, it must be set aside in toto. Gardner v. Vidal, 6 Rand. 106.

E. PLEADINGS AND ISSUES.

1. NECESSITY OF DECLARATION.—The judgment is not void though no declaration was filed in the cause, and can only be avoided by the proper proceedings taken in due season in the court which rendered the judgment. Terry v. Dickinson, 75 Va. 475.

Sufficiency of One Count.—In an action of detinue there are two counts in the declaration. The first does not allege property in the plaintiff. The second does allege it. The court refuses to allow the defendant to demur to the several counts. The jury find expressly that the property belongs to the plaintiff. Upon this showing of facts, the court held that although the first count is defective, yet as the second is good, and as the jury have found that the property belonged to the plaintiff, the defendant is not injured by the refusal of the court to allow the demurrer to be filed, and it is no cause for reversing the judgment. Binns v. Waddill, 33 Gratt. 588.

Demurrer.—Judgment should be given for the plaintiff where the court overrules a demurrer to the declaration and each count thereof, when it should have sustained the demurrer to the first count, because of the informal and imperfect manner in which the cause of action is stated therein. The defendant demurred to the evidence, and the facts proven did sustain the second count in the declaration, and would have sustained the first count, had it been drawn as it should have been. Stolle v. Aetna Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 10 W. Va. 546.

F. ISSUE MUST BE JOINED—GENERAL RULE.—It is well settled, that if a verdict has been rendered without any issue being joined, it is a mere nullity, and no judgment can be properly rendered upon it, whether it be in a civil or criminal action. Brown v. Cunningham, 23 W. Va. 109. For where trials by jury have been had without issue joined they have invariably been set aside as wholly unauthorized by law. This has been repeatedly held in Virginia before, and in West Virginia since its formation, and must be regarded as settled law, correctly announcing the common-law rule on that subject. Stevens v. Talliaferro, 1 Wash. 155; Kerr v. Dixon, 2 Call 379; Taylor v. Huston, 2 H. & M. 161; Wilkinson v. Bennett, 3 Munf. 316; Sydnor v. Burke, 4 Rand. 161; McMillion v. Dobbins, 9 Leigh 423; Rowans v. Givens, 10 Gratt. 250; Railroad Co. v. Gettle, 3 W. Va. 376; Railroad Co. v. Christie, 5 W. Va. 325; Gallatin v. Haywood, 4 W. Va. 1; Railroad Co. v. Faulkner, 4 W. Va. 180; State v. Conkle, 16 W. Va. 736; State v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 770; Ruffner v. Hill, 21 W. Va. 159; Preston v. Salem Imp. Co., 91 Va. 583, 22 S. E. Rep. 486.

These decisions were rendered in a great variety of cases: in actions of debt, detinue, trespass on the case, assumpsit, writ of right, indictments and ejectments. In Ruffner v. Hill, supra, which was an action of ejectment, the grounds of these decisions are stated thus: "By the common law the court had no right to make up the issue and impanel a jury to try it; but the parties by their pleading must first come to an issue, and then it is tried by a jury. Where, therefore, the record shows that the parties by their pleadings have not come to any issue, but nevertheless the record shows that the issue was tried, this issue must either have been illegally made up by the court or by blunder; it must have been assumed to have been made up by the parties, when in fact it was not."

Effect on Judgment.—If a jury be impanelled to try the issue joined when, in reality, no issue is joined, the judgment must be reversed, and the verdict set aside, notwithstanding it was against the party who failed to meet, by a negative on his side, the affirmative matter pleaded on the other side. Wilkinson v. Bennett, 3 Munf. 314; Totty v. Donald, 4 Munf. 490; Taylor v. Huston, 2 H. & M. 161; Stevens v. Talliaferro, 1 Wash. 155; Kerr v. Dixon, 2 Call 379; Hood v. Maxwell, 1 W. Va. 319.

If the intervention of a jury is waived and the evidence is heard by the court and judgment rendered, without issue having been joined, it is as equally erroneous as though the case had been tried by a jury. B. & O. R. Co. v. Faulkner, 4 W. Va. 181; Stevens v. Talliaferro, 1 Wash. 155.

"In numerous cases, both in Virginia and in this state, it has been decided that a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury sworn to try the issue joined, when no issue is in fact joined, or where there were more than one plea, and no issue had been joined on some one of such pleas, such judgment will, for that reason only, be set aside by the appellate court." Bennett v. Jackson, 34 W. Va. 63, 11 S. E. Rep. 734; State v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 770; State v. Conkle, 16 W. Va. 736; B. & O. R. Co. v. Faulkner, 4 W. Va. 180; Gallatin v. Haywood, 4 W. Va. 1; B. & O. R. Co. v. Christie, 5 W. Va. 325; B. & O. R. Co. v. Gettle, 3 W. Va. 376; Stevens v. Talliaferro, 1 Wash. 155; Taylor v. Huston, 2 H. & M. 161; Kerr v. Dixon, 2 Call 379; Wilkinson v. Bennett, 3 Munf. 316; Sydnor v. Burke, 4 Rand. 161; McMillion v. Dobbins, 9 Leigh 422; Rowans v. Givens, 10 Gratt. 550; Cawood's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 537, 543.

Thus, if a circuit court enter up a judgment on the verdict of a jury, sworn to try the issue joined in any case civil or criminal, including an action of ejectment where no issue has been joined, or no plea filed by the defendant, such judgment will for such reason only be reversed by the appellate court. Ruffner v. Hill, 21 W. Va. 152.

No Charge in Bill or Answer.—Matters not charged in the bill or averred in the answer, and not put in issue in any manner by the pleadings in the cause, are not proper to be considered at the hearing, and should have no weight in determining the cause. Smith v. Lowther, 35 W. Va. 300, 13 S. E. Rep. 999; Burley v. Weller, 14 W. Va. 264. See also, Hunter v. Hunter, 10 W. Va. 321.

Demurrer to Evidence.—When there is a demurrer to the evidence, an unconditional verdict on its face, by the jury, is not error, provided the demurrer to the evidence be afterwards passed upon and determined by the court, but it is error in the court to render judgment upon the verdict of the jury in such case regardless of, and without determining, the demurrer to the evidence. Green v. P., W. & Ky. R. Co., 11 W. Va. 685.

Similitur.—But the want of a similitur will not, after a trial, vitiate the verdict, and, as provided by Code Va. 1860, ch. 181, sec. 3, it is not error after verdict. Brewer v. Tarpley, 1 Wash. 363; B. & O. R. Co. v. Faulkner, 4 W. Va. 180.

G. DETERMINATION OF ALL ISSUES.—Where in an action of detinue for five slaves, the jury find for the plaintiff as to four of them, without also finding for the plaintiff or defendant, as to the fifth, the verdict will be set aside and a venire facias de novo awarded. Butler v. Parks, 1 Wash. 76.

Moreover, where issues are joined on the pleas of cul tel record, and the act of limitations, if the jury find for the plaintiff on the second plea, and the court, without taking any notice of the first plea, enters judgment, such judgment ought to be reversed, notwithstanding, on previous pleadings, which by consent were set aside, the court had pronounced that, in fact, there was such a record. Gee v. Hamilton, 6 Munf. 32.

If a defendant pleads and demurs to the whole declaration, and the demurrer is overruled, judgment ought not to be entered, without first trying the issues joined on the other pleas. Waller v. Ellis, 3 Munf. 88.

H. CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS AND PROOF.—It is a well-settled rule of pleading that judgment or decree can only be entered on the case as made by the pleadings; and evidence of matter not noticed on the pleadings will be of no avail, though it might show a right to a further judgment or decree. Weldley v. Shenandoah Iron, etc., Co., 33 Va. 763, 3 S. E. Rep. 376; Hubbard v. Blow, 4 Call 224; Gregory v. Peoples, 30 Va. 335; Edichal Bullion Co. v. Columbia Gold Min. Co., 37 Va. 641, 13 S. E. Rep. 100; Kent v. Kent, 32 Va. 305; Mundy v. Vawter, 3 Gratt. 518. See Swope v. Chambers, 3 Gratt. 319.

No Count.—If there be no count in the declaration based on the claim specified in a bill of particulars which by statute is declared to be no part of the declaration, the items it contains cannot be proved, and no recovery can be had therefor. Riley v. Jarvis, 43 W. Va. 43, 26 S. E. Rep. 303.

No Plea.—A judgment for the plaintiff in assumpsit, should be set aside, and a new trial granted, if there was no plea by the defendant. Johnson v. Fry, 36 Va. 695, 12 S. E. Rep. 973, 14 S. E. Rep. 183. See also, Petty v. The Frick Co., 36 Va. 501, 10 S. E. Rep. 386.

Judgment Generally on All the Pleadings.—In debt on a bond with collateral condition, if the plaintiff, by replication to the plea of conditions performed, charge the breach defectively, but fully avoids, by other replications, such other pleas of the defendant as go to the foundation of the action, to which replications, demurrers are improperly filed; and the court enters judgment for the defendant, generally, upon all the pleadings, such judgment is erroneous; it should only be that the faulty replication is not sufficient in law, etc., and therefore that the plaintiff takes nothing, etc. Lane v. Harrison, 6 Munf. 573.

Conformity to Proof.—Upon a bill for specific execution of an agreement, the agreement alleged in the bill must be proved by the evidence, and specific execution can only be decreed of the same agreement so alleged and proved, and specific execution must not be directed of a different contract. Pigg v. Corder, 12 Leigh 60.

A court of equity can only decree upon the case made by the pleadings, though the evidence may show a right to a further decree. Mundy v. Vawter, 3 Gratt. 518.

Limiting Relief to That Sought by Pleadings.—

Where a bill is filed for the sole purpose of having a certain paper, purporting to be a deed, declared a nullity, the court cannot decree, upon such pleadings, that it be converted into a valid and proper deed, this not being prayed for in the bill. Miller v. Smoot, 86 Va. 1050, 11 S. E. Rep. 982.

Damages beyond Those Claimed—Interest.—Greater damages cannot be recovered than are declared for and laid in the conclusion of the declaration; but the restriction is confined to the principle of recovery, and does not affect the interest that may be allowed thereon by the jury. Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Goode, 95 Va. 751, 39 S. E. Rep. 336. See Cahill v. Pintony, 4 Munf. 371, where it was held that if the jury, in an action of assumpsit, find for the plaintiff a larger sum than the amount of damages laid in the declaration, with interest from a day fixed in their verdict, the plaintiff may release the surplus beyond that amount and take judgment for the balance, with interest as aforesaid.

In an action of covenant, the verdict for a larger sum than the damages laid in the declaration, or stated in the writ, must be set aside, and a new trial awarded. Cloud v. Campbell, 4 Munf. 214; Lewis v. Arnold, 18 Gratt. 454. See Alleman v. Kight, 19 W. Va. 201.

Where the principal and interest, due on a bond amount to more than the penalty, and damages are found by the verdict, judgment ought not to be entered for the penalty and costs, to be discharged by the principal and interest with the damages so assessed in the cost; but for the penalty and damages if not exceeding those laid in the writ. But if damages found by the jury exceed those in the writ, a new trial ought to be granted unless the plaintiff will release the excess of damages; if this be done, judgment may be entered for the penalty, with the residue of the damages so found, and costs. Tenant v. Gray, 5 Munf. 494.

A verdict and judgment, in debt upon a sheriff's official bond to recover damages sustained by the relator by reason of a false return of nulla bona on a A. fa. sued out by the relator, for more damages than the claim in the warrants, are erroneous; and the error is not cured by the verdict, under the statute of jeofails. Gibson v. Governor, 11 Leigh 600.

Debt on Bond.—But it has been long well settled that in debt upon a bond, with collateral condition, damages may be assessed beyond those laid in the declaration, if the penalty is sufficient to cover them. Peerce v. Athey, 4 W. Va. 22; Payne v. Ellzey, 2 Wash. 143; Johnstons v. Meriwether, 8 Call 523; Winslow v. Com., 2 H. & M. 459.

If the damage be laid high enough in the writ, though the jury find more than are laid down in the declaration, the writ may be referred to for the purpose of amendment, and the judgment will be sustained. Palmer v. Mill, 3 H. & M. 502.

Effect of Releasing Excess.—But the court reversing the judgment for such error, will not direct a new trial, if the relator will release the excess of damages, recovered beyond the just amount, but upon such release of the excess, will direct judgment to be entered for the just amount of damages. Gibson v. Governor, 11 Leigh 600.

So also, a judgment will be supported by a forthcoming bond, which is taken for more than the sum due by the execution, where the plaintiff releases the excess, which release, it seems, may be even after judgment. Scott v. Hornsby, 1 Call 41; Harri-son v. Marr, 1 Call 47.

If a judgment of a county or corporation court, being for less than $100, exclusive of costs, is reversed by a superior court of law, upon a writ of supersedeas, whereupon judgment is entered that the plaintiff take nothing by his bill, etc., he cannot appeal to the court of appeals; notwithstanding his declaration demanded a larger sum than $100. Henry v. Elcan, 2 Munf. 541. See Melson v. Melson, 2 Munf. 542.

Judgment for Aggregate Sum.—A notice that a motion will be made for a judgment against a sheriff, for the amount of his receipt for sundry executions for fines, "as appears by the copy of said receipt," is sufficient, without mentioning the aggregate sum due, the separate amount of each execution, or the time when delivered to the sheriff. And a judgment thereupon for the aggregate sum due, without distinguishing the amount of each execution, will be sustained, if conformable to law in other respects. Segouine v. Auditor, 4 Munf. 398.

Affirmative Relief to Defendant.—In an accounting, the defendant may have an affirmative judgment if the balance found due is in his favor. Hill v. Sutherland, 1 Wash. 128; Fitzgerald v. Jones, 1 Munf. 150.

Judgments beyond Issues Erroneous.—A notice to a sheriff and his sureties being of a motion for a balance of certain land, property and taxes, and the judgment being for a balance due upon these and also for a license, this is error for which the judgment will be reversed in the appellate court. Monteith v. Com., 15 Gratt. 172.

Judgments Must Conform to Issues Raised.—It is an elementary principle of our jurisprudence, that jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties is essential to the conclusiveness of a judgment or decree. And though a court may obtain jurisdiction rightfully, yet its decrees may be void, because, in the progress of the cause, it has exceeded its jurisdiction. Thus, where a suit is brought in the county court, by a widow, for the sole purpose of having her dower assigned, and the court, after assigning dower, of its own accord decreed a sale of the residue of the land, the court transcended its jurisdiction, and its decree of sale is void. Seamster v. Blackstock, 83 Va. 232, 2 S. E. Rep. 36.

Want of jurisdiction makes a judgment a nullity, and it may be so treated by any court in any proceeding, direct or collateral, a judgment being valid to the extent of the court's jurisdiction, and invalid beyond. Thus, in summary proceedings under Va. Code 1873, ch. 76, sec. 9, circuit courts have jurisdiction to appoint, change and remove church trustees, but not to determine how they shall administer their trust, and a judgment entered as to the latter is void. Wade v. Hancock, 76 Va. 620.

Judgment Must Be Based on Allegations.—If matter appear in the answer of a defendant in equity, which is not alleged in the bill, it cannot justify a decree for the plaintiff against the defendant, though it might have been ground for such a decree, if it had been alleged in the bill. Eib v. Martin, 5 Leigh 132.

Judgment Restricted to Allegations.—No rule is better settled than that a judgment or decree must be restricted to the case made by the pleadings, no matter what the evidence may show. Potomac Mfg. Co. v. Evans, 84 Va. 717, 6 S. E. Rep. 2; Mundy v. Vawter, 3 Gratt. 518; Campbell v. Bowles, 30 Gratt. 652.

But in detinue, if the jury find for the plaintiff, the slaves, if to be had, or £250 for each slave, and damages 1*d*; and the court renders judgment for the slaves, if to be had, and if not, the price found by the jury, with the damages and costs, it is not error [though no price or value be laid in the declaration]. Bates v. Gordon, 3 Call 555.

Immaterial Variance between Pleadings and Proof.—Though it is true, however, that the case stated in the complaint must be sustained by the evidence, this rule will not forbid relief to the plaintiff where the case proved does not materially vary from the case stated; as where two deeds are charged to be without consideration, and intended to delay and hinder the plaintiff, and the proof is that the second being a deed to the trustee for the separate use of the debtor's wife, was without valuable consideration. Campbell v. Bowles, 30 Gratt. 652.

Moreover, a plaintiff must allege as well as prove the facts on which he claims relief. He cannot obtain relief on any ground not alleged in his bill. Currey v. Lawler, 29 W. Va. 111, 11 S. E. Rep. 897.

For a plaintiff is no more entitled to recover without sufficient averments in his bill, than he is without proof of his averments when properly made. The one is as essential as the other, and both must concur or relief can not be granted. Pusey v. Gardner, 21 W. Va. 469.

A recovery for abandonment of treatment by a physician may be had under a declaration charging that he "carelessly, negligently, improperly and unskillfully conducted himself," in the treatment, and that the injury resulted from his "careless, negligent, improper, and unskillful attention." Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 16 S. E. Rep. 564.

I. CONFORMITY TO VERDICT.—In an action for defamation the trial court has no power to enter judgment for five dollars only, where the verdict was for that sum and costs; if the verdict is irregular, it should be set aside and a new trial awarded. Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, 19 S. E. Rep. 791. See also, Lee v. Tapscott, 3 Wash. 376.

Judgment Not Supported by Verdict.—Where, upon a trial for murder, the jury finds the prisoner guilty of involuntary manslaughter, and assesses upon him a fine of five hundred dollars, it is error for the court to enter a judgment discharging the prisoner. Such a judgment is not supported by the verdict. Price v. Com., 4 Va. Law Jour. 426, 33 Gratt. 819, 36 Am. Rep. 797.

But where in an action of debt on a check, the declaration demands a sum certain with interest, and the verdict is simply for "the amount of the debt in the declaration mentioned," then, under sec. 2853 of the Va. Code, judgment may be given "for the principal and charges of protest, with interest thereon from the date of such protest." Such a judgment is in conformity both with the verdict and the statute. Lake v. Tyree, 90 Va. 719, 19 S. E. Rep. 787.

In Turberville v. Self, 4 Call 580, although the county court gave no judgment on the verdict, the district court affirmed it with damages, and the court of appeals (probably from oversight), did the same.

Failure of Clerk to Enter Judgment on Verdict.—The clerk of a county court having by mistake failed to enter a judgment on a verdict, and an appeal being taken, such appeal ought to be dismissed, notwithstanding the county court afterwards, during the pendency of the appeal, corrects the error, by having a judgment entered and certified to the district court. Tatum v. Snidow, 2 H. & M. 542.

Amount.—In an action for damages the judgment should be for the amount assessed by the jury as damages and interest on this amount from the day the judgment is actually rendered, and not from the first day of the term at which the judgment is rendered. Hawker v. B. & O. R. Co., 15 W. Va. 623.

J. NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.—Judgment may be rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants only, and need not be absolute and against all others. McClung v. Echols, 5 W. Va. 204.

When Rendered for Plaintiff.—Where the only issue, in an action, is upon a plea in confession and avoidance, upon which a verdict has been found for the defendant, and it is afterwards decided that such plea is bad in substance, judgment should be entered for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto. Mason v. Bridge Co., 28 W. Va. 640.

When Rendered for Defendant.—An action for deceit, practiced in a sale, not being maintainable against the personal representative of the deceased, therefore, though there is a verdict for the plaintiff, judgment non obstante veredicto should be rendered for the defendant. Boyles v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202.

Verdict Unambiguous—Plaintiff's Case Defective.—If a verdict is imperfect by reason of any ambiguity or uncertainty, so that the court cannot say for which party judgment ought to be given, a venire de novo ought to be awarded. Brown v. Ralston, 4 Rand. 504. But if the verdict be not ambiguous or uncertain in itself, but the case made by the plaintiff is a defective case, or defective title, then the judgment should be for the defendant, and a venire de novo should not be granted. Brown v. Ferguson, 4 Leigh 37, 24 Am. Dec. 707.

III. FORM OF JUDGMENT.

A. CERTAINTY.—If the judgment is ambiguous in its terms, the appellate court cannot make it certain, upon the ground that the clerk of the county court might have moulded it into form, because it was only an entry on the minutes. Humphreys v. West, 3 Rand. 516.

Uncertainty as to Amount.—A judgment subject to an uncertain credit is erroneous. The amount of the credit should be first ascertained by a writ of inquiry, and judgment should be rendered for the balance. Early v. Moore, 4 Munf. 262.

In Ross v. Gill, 1 Wash. 87, the judgment was for one amount (£490) to be discharged by the payment of a lesser amount. This last clause was held surplusage, and unwarranted by law, but, as the plaintiff did not complain, it was regarded as a release of so much of the judgment. At all events it was a defect of which the defendant could not complain.

Judgment on Caveat.—A judgment, on a caveat, that no grant shall issue to the caveatee on his inclusive survey, where it appears that he has any other claim or survey, by which he may possibly hold a part of the land, ought to be so worded as not to affect his right under such claim or survey. Preston v. Harvey, 2 H. & M. 55.

B. CONDITIONAL JUDGMENTS.—A judgment with a condition that execution is to be stayed for ninety days to await the decision of the court of appeals, is a conditional judgment, and valid; it is competent for the court which rendered it to deal with it in a summary way and see that its terms are complied with. "It is said in 1 Tidd's Practice 509, that when a judgment is confessed upon terms, in the king's bench, it being in effect but a conditional judgment, the court will take notice of it and see the terms performed; but when the judgment is acknowledged absolutely, and a subsequent agreement made, this does not affect the judgment; and the court will take no notice of it, but put the party to his action on the agreement." Bank of Old Dominion v. McVeigh, 32 Gratt. 590.

In Myers v. Williams, 85 Va. 631, 8 S. E. Rep. 433, a judgment allowing a conditional credit was sustained.

IV. INTERLOCUTORY AND FINAL JUDGMENTS.

Finality of Judgment.—At common law, no matter how long a term might last, a judgment did not become final until it ended, and the court had no power to direct an execution upon it. Until then, in the quaint language of Coke, "the record remains in the breast of the court and in their remembrance, and therefore the roll is alterable during that term as the judges shall direct; but when the term is past, then the record is in the roll, and admits of no alteration, averment or proof to the contrary." The inconvenience and injustice sometimes occasioned by this rule induced the legislature to provide a remedy, and sec. 3600 of the Code of Va. was enacted, which provides that, "any court, after the fifteenth day of the term, may make a general order allowing executions to issue on judgments and decrees after ten days from their dates, although the term at which they are rendered be not ended," etc., but this section was not intended to, and does not, impart to such judgments, the quality of finality so as to deprive the court, during the term, of the power to correct, or if need be, annul an erroneous judgment. This statute manifestly enlarged the power of the court, and imparted to it an authority which at common law no court possessed. Baker v. Swineford, 97 Va. 112, 33 S. E. Rep. 542.

When a circuit court, upon appeal, reverses the final judgment of the county court and retains the cause for a new trial, the judgment of the circuit court is such a final judgment as is the subject of a writ of error. Crawford v. Railroad Co., 26 Gratt. 467; Brambaugh v. Wissler, 26 Gratt. 463, and note.

Cause Sent Back.—But where a cause is sent back for a new trial, the judgment is not final. Omohundro v. Omohundro, 27 Gratt. 824.

Must Be Judgment of Dismissal.—Under Va. Code, sec. 2454, no writ of error lies in an action at law until there is a final judgment; but the sustaining or overruling of a demurrer to a declaration is not a final judgment; to make it final there must be a judgment of dismissal. Gillespie v. Coleman, 98 Va. 276, 36 S. E. Rep. 877. See also, Hancock v. R. & P. R. Co., 3 Gratt. 328; Trevillian v. Louisa R. Co., 3 Gratt. 326. Contra, Jeter v. Board, 27 Gratt. 910, and note. See monographic note on "Appeals."

It was held in Elliott v. Hutchinson, 8 W. Va. 453, that the words "final judgment" contained in, and as employed in, the fifty-third section of chapter one hundred and twenty-five of the Code of West Virginia, means the "final judgment" mentioned in the forty-sixth section of said chapter. In other words they mean the "final judgment" mentioned in said forty-sixth section, which every judgment entered in the office of the case wherein there is no order for an inquiry of damages becomes final, by operation of that section, unless it is set aside by the defendant appearing and pleading to issue, as provided by the forty-seventh section of said chapter. And a rule in an action at law requiring the plaintiff to elect by the next term whether he will proceed at law or in chancery, is not, in the meaning of Va. Code 1873, ch. 178, sec. 2, a final judgment, and the appellate court has not jurisdiction to review it. Priddy v. Hartsook, 81 Va. 67.

Final in County Court, Final in Superior Court.—Though a judgment of a superior court of law, reversing a judgment of a county court, and directing other pleadings in the cause, be interlocutory in its character, yet the finality of the judgment in the county court imparts its character to the judgment of the superior court, so as to authorize an appeal to the court of appeals. Cowling v. Nansemond Justices, 6 Rand. 349; Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 30 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. Rep. 583.

Where on a supersedeas to a judgment of a county court, the circuit court reverses the judgment, but omits to give such judgment as the county court ought to have given, and retains the cause, the judgment of reversal by the circuit court must be regarded as final in its appellate character, and a supersedeas will lie from the court of appeals. Janey v. Blake, 8 Leigh 88; Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 30 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. Rep. 583.

Effect of Issuing Execution.—Where a court authorizes executions to issue upon judgments recovered during the term, the judgments become final from the time when execution may issue, and cannot afterwards be set aside by the court. Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 64.

Eminent Domain Proceedings.—But where the court has not acted upon the report of commissioners in a proceeding to condemn land, there is no final judgment, and therefore no appeal can be taken from an overruled motion by the lower court to set aside the original order appointing the commissioners. Pack v. C. & O. R. Co., 5 W. Va. 118.

Interlocutory Judgments.—Where any further action of the court is necessary to give the complete relief contemplated by the court, or where but one of the questions which the court is called upon to settle, is determined by the judgment, and the others are reserved until a future time for determination, then the judgment or decree is interlocutory and not final. Cocke v. Gilpin, 1 Rob. 20; Shirey v. Musgrave, 29 W. Va. 181, 11 S. E. Rep. 914; Hill v. Als, 27 W. Va. 215.

In civil cases, judgments are either interlocutory or final. Interlocutory, as where the right of the plaintiff is established by a failure to plead or a withdrawal of a plea, but where the damages are not ascertained, and for which the intervention of a jury is necessary. On the return of this enquiry, the right to recover having been established, final judgment is entered up. But whenever final judgment is entered after the writ of enquiry is awarded and executed, or after a verdict on the merits, such final judgment finishes the proceedings, nothing more remains for the court to do, and execution may be done in pursuance of the judgment. Pifer's Case, 14 Gratt. 710.

Confession of Judgment Interlocutory.—A confession of judgment by one of several joint defendants, is only interlocutory, until the final decision of the cause as to the rest; and the confessing defendant must receive the same judgment as his codefendants. Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. 316. See generally, monographic note on "Judgments by Confession" appended to Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

V. JUDGMENTS IN REM.

"A judgment in rem I conceive to be an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for the purpose. Such an adjudication, being a most solemn declaration, from the proper and accredited quarter, that the status of the thing adjudicated upon is as declared, excludes all persons from saying the thing adjudicated upon was not such as declared by the adjudication." Bruff v. Thompson, 31 W. Va. 16, 6 S. E. Rep. 358.

VI. INTEREST.

No Demand in Declaration.—Judgment cannot be given for interest, if the declaration does not demand interest. Hubbard v. Blow, 4 Call 224. See monographic note on "Interest" appended to Fred v. Dixon, 27 Gratt. 541.

From What Time Allowed.—In an action for damages the judgment should be for the interest on the amount assessed by the jury as damages from the day the judgment is actually rendered, and not from the first day of the term at which the judgment is rendered. Hawker v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 15 W. Va. 628. See Mercer v. Beale, 4 Leigh 189.

Where a judgment or decree is made for the payment of money it shall be for the aggregate of principal and interest due at the date of the verdict, if there be one, otherwise at the date of the judgment or decree, with interest thereon from such date, except in cases where it is otherwise provided. Baer's Sons, etc. Co. v. Packing Co., 42 W. Va. 359, 26 S. E. Rep. 191, citing Hawker v. B. & O. R. Co., 15 W. Va. 628.

Interest Charged from Date of Verdict.—Upon a payment in an action for a tort depending when the act, Code, ch. 177, sec. 14, p. 678, went into operation, it is proper to charge interest from the date of the verdict. Lewis v. Arnold, 13 Gratt. 454.

Judgment on Nil Dicit or Non Sum Informatus.—In a debt on a bill penal, a judgment entered upon nil dicit or non sum informatus, ought not to be reversed on the ground that the declaration, though describing the bill penal correctly as to the principal sum, penalty and date, omits to mention that the debt is payable, "with interest from a day prior to the date," and that the judgment, in conformity with the bill penal, is entered for the penalty, to be discharged by the principal, with such interest, and costs. Harper v. Smith, 6 Munf. 389. See Mosby v. Taylor, Gilmer 173.

Interest on Damages.—Interest is not due on the damages, until after judgment, against a public collector. Gaskins v. Com., 1 Call 194. See also, Gibson v. Governor, 11 Leigh 600.

Interest on Aggregate of First Judgment.—Upon a scire facias against bail, it is error to give a judgment for the aggregate amount of principal, interest, and costs of the first judgment, with interest thereon. Bowyer v. Hewitt, 2 Gratt. 193.

Interest upon Costs.—It was held in McRea v. Brown, 2 Munf. 46, that the 5th section of the act passed January 20, 1804, entitled, "An act concerning the proceedings in courts of chancery, and for other purposes," did not authorize a judgment for interest upon the costs of suit.

Right to Interest as Affected by Verdict.—Where a declaration calls for a sum certain with interest, and the verdict is simply for the amount of the debt mentioned in the declaration, then under sec. 2853, of the Va. Code, the legal effect of the verdict is a finding of interest also. Lake v. Tyree, 90 Va. 719, 19 S. E. Rep. 787.

Replevy Bond—Judgment for Interest.—Judgment ought not to be entered on a three months' replevy bond, for interest from a day anterior to the date of the bond, but it may be for interest from that date, on the rent and costs of the duties added together. And if the bond be taken, including interest from a day anterior to its date, such erroneous interest may be deducted, and judgment entered for the right sum. Williams v. Howard, 3 Munf. 377.

Rate of Interest.—A judgment upon the default of the sheriff, or other officer responsible for fines collected, ought not to be rendered for interest at the rate of fifteen per cent. per annum; but for five per cent. damages, and five per cent. per annum interest, on the whole amount, as in the case of public taxes. Segouine v. Auditor, 4 Munf. 398.

Illustration.—Thus, when a decree is entered in a cause ascertaining and fixing the aggregate amount of the plaintiff's debt and giving interest on such aggregate from the date of the decree, as prescribed by statute (Code W. Va., ch. 181, sec. 16), a subsequent decree cannot be entered in the same cause several years thereafter, to reaggregate such debt by calculating interest on the first aggregate sum to the date of the latter decree, then adding this interest to the sum of the first decree and giving interest on the second aggregate from the date of the last decree. Tiernan v. Minghini, 28 W. Va. 314.

Constitutionality of Statutes.—The 16th section of ch. 181, of Code W. Va. providing, that when a judgment or decree for the payment of money, shall be for the aggregate of the principal and interest due at the date of the judgment or decree, with interest thereon from that date, does not violate the provision of the constitution of the United States, prohibiting any state to pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts. Fleming v. Holt, 12 W. Va. 144.

Abatement of Interest—Absence in Enemy's Lines.—After judgment is obtained for a debt, both principal and interest, the court has no more power to abate any part of the interest, on the ground that the creditor was within the enemy's lines, than to abate the principal. The matter has passed into judgment, and it is too late, then, to raise the question of such abatement. Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625.

"Judgments and decrees for money being contracts of the highest character, of course, and for reasons before stated, to abate any portion of the interest included in them, would necessarily impair their obligation. Moreover by such judgments and decrees, the rights of the parties, in whose behalf they were rendered, to the money ordered to be paid, whether principal or interest, have become vested, and cannot be divested, as provided by the act of the assembly. Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 31." Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt. 207; Merchants' Bank v. Ballou, 98 Va. 112, 32 S. E. Rep. 481.

It was held in Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt. 207, that so much of the act of April 2, 1872, as empowers the courts to review judgments and decrees, upon motion, and to abate interest as provided therein is repugnant to the United States constitution and the constitution of Virginia, and therefore void. See, in accord, Linkous v. Shafer, 28 Gratt. 775; Kent v. Kent, 28 Gratt. 840; Pretlow v. Bailey, 29 Gratt. 212; also, Crawford v. Fickey, 41 W. Va. 544, 23 S. E. Rep. 602.

Entry of Judgment for Interest.—On a motion by a sheriff against his deputy, where judgment has been obtained by the commonwealth against him for taxes, judgment must be entered for the principal sum, and the interest, and not for the penalty to be discharged by that sum and interest. Asberry v. Calloway, 1 Wash. 72.

VII. RENDITION AND ENTRY OF JUDGMENTS.

A. CERTAINTY AS TO PARTIES, AMOUNTS, DATES.—If the entry of the judgment, taken in connection with the record of the case in which it is made, has the requisite certainty of a judgment as to parties, amounts, dates, etc., the judgment is valid. Bank of Old Dominion v. McVeigh, 32 Gratt. 530.

If a declaration in debt be blank as to sums, the date of the obligation, the assignment thereof to the plaintiff, and as to damages, a judgment rendered thereupon is erroneous, and ought to be reversed, and the suit dismissed with the costs of both courts. Blane v. Sansum, 2 Call 495.

Entry for Certificates.—Judgment cannot be entered, in a suit at common law, for certificates. Graves v. Webb, 1 Call 443.

Judgment for Confederate Notes.—It seems that a judgment on a contract for the payment of confederate notes, should be entered for confederate notes; the scale of depreciation must be applied at the day when the money was payable. Dearing v. Rucker, 18 Gratt. 426.

Sheriff Includes His Commissions.—Where before the act of 1794, the sheriff, in taking a forthcoming bond, included his commissions on the debt, judgment should be entered for the sum due without the commissions. Worsham v. Eggleston, 1 Call 48.

Entry of Judgment against Sheriff.—In an action upon a sheriff's bond in the name of the commonwealth, for the benefit of a person aggrieved by the misconduct of the sheriff, the judgment should be entered for the penalty, to be discharged by the payment of the damages assessed and costs, "and such other damages as may be hereafter assessed upon suing out a scire facias, and assigning new breaches, by the plaintiff or any other person or persons injured." Bibb v. Cauthorne, 1 Wash. 91.

Judgment against Sheriff—Return—Escape.—A judgment cannot be entered against the defendant and sheriff, upon his return that the writ was executed on the defendant; the proper remedy against the sheriff for an escape being a separate suit. Waugh v. Carter, 2 Munf. 333.

Entry of Judgments at Different Times.—Where in a proceeding at law against several parties, judgments against one or more are entered at one time, and against others at another time, one execution may be issued against all. Walker v. Com., 18 Gratt. 13.

Mistake in Entry.—In an action on a nonnegotiable note in which the homestead exemption is waived, the statement in the entry of the judgment that the homestead is waived does not vitiate the judgment. The judgment in this respect will be amended and affirmed. Long v. Pence, 98 Va. 584, 25 S. E. Rep. 593.

Judgment in Penal Bond.—Judgment on a penal bond should be for the penalty, to be discharged by the payment of the sum actually due. Moore v. Fenwick, Gilmer 214.

Writ of Inquiry—Joint Assessment.—In detinue for several slaves, if their value be jointly assessed in the verdict, judgment ought not to be entered, but a writ of inquiry to ascertain their respective values should be awarded. Cornwell v. Truss, 2 Munf. 196.

Power of Court.—"In whatever respect the clerk may have erred in entering judgment, the court may on proper evidence, nullify the error by making the judgment entry fully and correctly express the judgment rendered." 1 Green Judgm. sec. 73; Davis v. Trump, 43 W. Va. 191, 27 S. E. Rep. 397.

B. COSTS.—"The general principle is, that costs are considered as an appendage to the judgment, rather than a part of the judgment itself; that they are considered, in some sense, as damages, and are always entered, in effect, as an increase of damages by the court. This doctrine is to be found in 3 Bl. Com. 399." ROANE, J. M'Rea v. Brown, 2 Munf. 47; Douglass v. McCoy, 24 W. Va. 725.

Judgment for Costs in Favor of Successful Judgment.—It was held in Pates v. St. Clair, 11 Gratt. 23, that before the act, Code of Va. 1849, p. 706, sec. 9, providing that where there shall be a judgment for the defendant's costs in a suit brought in the name of one person for the benefit of another, such judgment shall be against that other; a judgment may be rendered for costs in favor of a defendant, against a person for whose benefit a suit was brought, when the defendant succeeded in the case.

C. COIN AND CURRENCY.

Judgment for Sterling Money Value.—In an action of debt upon a protested bill of exchange drawn for sterling money, if the declaration is for the current money value of the sum for which the bill was drawn, the judgment being for the sum so demanded, will be reversed on a writ of error. The suit should have been for the sterling money. Scott v. Call, 1 Wash. 115; Skipwith v. Baird, 2 Wash. 166. In the latter case, Scott v. Call was distinguished on the ground that the damages were considered as being laid in current money, whereas they ought to have been laid in sterling money.

In an action of debt on a bond, the judgment is always entered for the penalty to be discharged by the principal and interest; and if that exceed the penalty, the defendant has his election, and may satisfy it by paying the penalty. Atwell v. Towles, 1 Munf. 175.

A sterling judgment may be reduced into currency at the time of entering judgment on a forthcoming bond. Scott v. Hornsby, 1 Call 41.

Fixing Rate of Exchange.—It is necessary on judgments for sterling money, that the court should fix the rate of exchange. Taylor v. M'Clean, 8 Call 557.

Penalty in Current Money.—After the verdict for the plaintiff, in debt on a bond, the penalty of which was in current money, with condition to pay so much sterling money, the judgment should be for the current money mentioned in the penal part of the bond, to be discharged by the sterling money in the declaration, and the court ought to settle the rate of exchange, which on an appeal should appear on the record. Terrell v. Ladd, 2 Wash. 150.

D. ENTRY NUNC PRO TUNC.—The power of courts to make entries of judgment and orders nunc pro tunc, in proper cases and in furtherance of the ends of justice, has been recognized and exercised from the earliest times; and the period in which the power may be exercised is not limited. Weatherman v. Com., 91 Va. 796, 22 S. E. Rep. 349.

Unlawful Detainer.—Where, in an action of unlawful detainer, the jury finds for the plaintiff, and a stay of the issuance of a writ of possession for sixty days is entered to allow the defendants to apply to the circuit court for a writ of error and supersedeas, and they fail to present their petition therefor during the two following terms, it is proper at the third term to enter judgment nunc pro tunc as of the time the stay was granted, under the provisions of Va.

Code 1887, sec. 8124, which provides that "all causes upon the docket of any court, and all other matters ready for its decision, which shall not have been determined before the end of a term, whether regular or special, shall, without any order of continuance, stand continued to the next term." Van Gunden v. Kane, 88 Va. 501, 14 S. E. Rep. 834.

Entry Nunc Pro Tunc by Justices without Notice.—It has been held where two justices presided at a trial at which a verdict was rendered, but no judgment thereon was entered, and subsequently, nearly two years afterwards, the same justices, without notice, met and undertook to enter a judgment upon the verdict nunc pro tunc, that such entry nunc pro tunc was unauthorized and illegal, and was properly treated by the circuit court as a nullity. See Code of W. Va., ch. 50, sec. 114; McClain v. Davis, 87 W. Va. 830, 16 S. E. Rep. 629.

Signing by Judge.—A judge may sign a day's proceedings in the order book at the next term nunc pro tunc. Weatherman v. Com., 91 Va. 798, 22 S. E. Rep. 849. See Va. Code, sec. 8114.

Judgment on Covenant of Married Woman.—A judgment on a covenant of a married woman against her separate estate may be entered as a personal judgment against her. Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. Rep. 917.

Judgment Erroneously Entered in Singular Number.—The validity of a judgment against two defendants is not affected because of a merely clerical error in entering the same against them in the singular number, "defendant," instead of the plural number, "defendants." Roach v. Blakey, 89 Va. 707, 17 S. E. Rep. 228.

Summary Entry.—A judgment ought never to be given, in a summary way, in favor of any plaintiff who does not bring himself fully within the terms of the act under which he proceeds. Stuart v. Hamilton, 2 H. & M. 48.

E. ENTRY IN VACATION.—A court has no power to enter an order or judgment in vacation, unless so authorized by statute. Kinports v. Rawson, 29 W. Va. 487, 2 S. E. Rep. 85; Johnson v. Young, 11 W. Va. 673; Monroe v. Bartlett, 6 W. Va. 441.

Surplusage.—Where judgment is recovered for a certain sum of money, dischargeable by the transfer and delivery, in six months, of certain stock, and the stock is not delivered within the time, the court cannot, on motion for execution on the judgment, presume that the sum stated in the judgment is the amount the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and rejecting the latter part of the judgment as surplusage, award execution thereon for the money. Orange, etc., R. Co. v. Fulvey, 17 Gratt. 366. But see Ross v. Gill, 1 Wash. 90, in which the judgment was for £490 to be discharged by the payment of £420 and the court held that the latter part was no part of the judgment, but merely surplusage.

Where the judgment directs that the plaintiff shall recover his freedom, "and that he be discharged from the imprisonment in the declaration," the latter clause will be regarded as mere surplusage, as the first part of the judgment had the effect to discharge the plaintiff from the custody of the defendant. M'Michen v. Amos, 4 Rand. 184.

Signing by Judge—Statutes Directory.—"The authorities generally hold that statutes relating to the recordation of deeds and the docketing of judgments are merely directory, and the failure of the clerk or other officer to comply with their provisions cannot affect the rights of parties claiming under such deeds or judgments. In Beverley v. Ellis, 1

Rand. 102, it is decided that where a deed is duly proved, or acknowledged and left with the clerk for recordation, it is considered as recorded from that time, although it was never recorded, but lost by the negligence of the clerk. In Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. Car. 842, it was held that the requirement of the statute that a judge shall sign all judgments rendered in court is merely directory, and his omission to do so will not vitiate it as to strangers." Shadrack v. Woolfolk, 32 Gratt. 718.

VIII. JUDGMENTS ON AWARDS.

Award in Submission in Pais.—An order of a circuit court setting aside an award made by arbitrators upon a submission in pais of matters as to which there is no action pending but which provides that the award shall be made the judgment of the court, is such a final judgment that a writ of error will lie from it to the supreme court. Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 887.

See monographic note on "Arbitration and Award" appended to Bassett v. Cunningham, 9 Gratt. 684.

A. ENTRY.

Entry as Judgment of Court.—If, pending a suit, the parties by an order of the court, refer the matter in controversy to arbitrators, whose award is to be made the judgment of the court; and, afterwards, by an agreement under seal, appoint a substitute for one of them; agreeing that an award, to be made by the remaining referees and such substitute, shall be entered as the judgment of the court; such award may be so entered, without any previous order of the court confirming the appointment of such substitute. Manlove v. Thrift, 5 Munf. 493.

No Pending Suit.—Nor is it essential to give the circuit court jurisdiction to enter an award as the judgment of the court upon a submission in pais of matters as to which there is no pending suit, that the agreement should declare in terms, that the submission shall be entered of the record. Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 887.

Payment to Sheriff.—Where it is agreed in the submission to arbitrators that the money awarded to the plaintiff is to be paid to the sheriff, for the benefit of the plaintiff's creditors, the judgment should be so entered. Conpland v. Anderson, 2 Call 106.

Refusal to Enter Judgment According to Award.—But a court's refusal to enter a judgment according to an award, without proceeding to determine the controversy, is not a judgment, from which an appeal can be taken. Manlove v. Thrift, 5 Munf. 493.

Time of Entry of Judgment.—A submission to arbitration, by rule of court, of a matter of controversy in a suit pending, is not within the statute concerning awards, and so, the court may proceed to judgment on an award at the same term to which it is returned. Wheatley v. Martin, 6 Leigh 62.

Reference Denying Pendency of Suit.—If there be an order of reference made during the pendency of a suit, the award in pursuance thereof, need not lie in court two terms before judgment is entered, as it is not within the act of assembly, upon awards. Holcomb v. Flournoy, 2 Call 433.

Filing Objections—Waiver.—It is not necessary that the award should lie in court two days before judgment, if the party offers exceptions; for that is a waiver. Mitchell v. Kelly, 1 Call 379.

Objections to Entry as Judgment of Court.—But ex parte affidavits may be read against or in support of objections to the entering of an award as the judgment of the court, especially where they are not objected to in such courts, but they should be given much less weight than testimony taken in court or on notice subject to cross-examination. Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 387.

B. DEATH OF PARTY AFTER SUBMISSION.—

After submission to arbitration by rule of court, if the plaintiff dies, and the suit is revived by his administrator and the administrator of the plaintiff and the defendant proceed in the arbitration, without any new submission, and an award is made, the death of the plaintiff does not avoid this submission and the award is good. Wheatley v. Martin, 6 Leigh 62.

IX. JUDGMENTS ON APPEAL.

Leave to Apply to Trial Court for Relief.—Where on a bill for specific performance, the contract proved varies from that set up in the bill, and the contract proved is clear and certain in its terms, and is such as a court of equity might properly enforce, and the court below decrees a specific execution of the contract set out in the bill, the decree must be reversed; but the appellate court will not dismiss the bill; it will remand the cause to the court below, to put the plaintiff to his election, whether to have a specific performance of the "contract as proved," or to have the same rescinded, and the parties put in status quo. Baldenberg v. Warden, 14 W. Va. 397.

A. REMAND WITHOUT DECISION.—But where judgment has been rendered on an indictment for an injury done with intent to maim, etc., the appellate court will not on reversing the judgment enter such judgment as the circuit court ought to have rendered but will remand the case for a proper judgment to be entered on the verdict. State v. Mooney, 27 W. Va. 546.

However, where the circuit court entered judgment for solitary confinement, for a period different from that indicated by the statute, the appellate court will reverse this judgment and enter the proper judgment. Brooks' Case, 4 Leigh 669; Murry's Case, 5 Leigh 720; Hall's Case, 6 Leigh 615.

Rendering Final Judgment.—Where a circuit court, in rendering a judgment against a defendant convicted of a misdemeanor, adds to its judgment an order requiring the defendant to give a peace bond, the case, on writ of error, will be reversed and the proper judgment will be entered by the appellate court without remanding it to the court below. State v. Gould, 26 W. Va. 259.

Relief between Coappellees.—"The decree being deemed right in all respects as it affects the questions in controversy between the appellants on the one hand, and each and all of the appellees on the other, I think the court cannot take cognizance, on this appeal, of any question between the appellees. The power of the court to take cognizance of such questions arises only when, on the questions between the appellants on the one hand, and one or more of the appellees on the other, a decision is made which directly or incidentally disturbs the rights of one or more of the appellees, as settled by the decree appealed from. When such disturbance is the consequence of the decision of the question between the appellants and the appellees, there must necessarily result the questions that arise from the new position in which the rights of the appellees are placed; and of such questions the court of appeals has cognizance, and they should be decided by the court." Powell v. White, 11 Leigh 309.

Explanation of Judgment.—The court of appeals, in affirming a judgment will add any explanation, which may be necessary to make it correctly understood. Mayo v. Purcell, 8 Munf. 248.

Failure to Direct That Evidence Be Received.—But if a superior court of common law, in reversing a judgment and awarding a new trial, assigns the reason to be that certain evidence should have been received on the former trial, but fails to direct that, upon a new trial, such evidence shall be received, the court of appeals, in affirming its judgment, will add the proper direction concerning the evidence. Brooke v. Shelly, 4 H. & M. 206.

B. MODIFICATION AND AMENDMENT.

Power of Court to Modify.—It seems to be the rule that an appellate court may amend or correct a judgment for clerical or trivial errors and mistakes, or may add to its judgment any provision that may be necessary to do justice between the parties, such as where judgment is rendered for more damages than are laid in the declaration, or for a sum greater than the debt. Lewis v. Arnold, 13 Gratt. 454; Alleman v. Kight, 19 W. Va. 201; Linsey v. McGannon, 9 W. Va. 155. See Peters v. Neville, 26 Gratt. 549; Mustard v. Wohlford, 15 Gratt. 329; Stanard v. Brownlow, 8 Munf. 229.

District Courts.—A district court has no power or jurisdiction to reverse, alter or amend a judgment given at a former term of the court, which had been entered on the order book, and signed by a judge in open court. Halley v. Baird, 1 H. & M. 24.

Correction by Same Court.—For an error in the judgment of a court can never be corrected by the same court. Gordon v. Frazier, 2 Wash. 130.

1. TIME OF AMENDMENT—GENERAL RULE.—The rule at common law is that during the term wherein any judicial act is done, the records are in the breast of the court and in their remembrance and may be amended; but after the term no amendment can be made, except of a mere clerical misprision. Ca-wood's Case, 2 Va. Cas. 527; Manion v. Fahy, 11 W. Va. 496; Smith v. Knight, 14 W. Va. 749; Bank v. Jarvis, 26 W. Va. 785; Bunting v. Willis, 27 Gratt. 158; Lingle v. Cook, 32 Gratt. 262; Kelty v. High, 39 W. Va. 381, 1 S. E. Rep. 561; Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. Rep. 588; Barnes v. Com., 92 Va. 794, 23 S. E. Rep. 784.

Generally the judgment of a court is under and subject to its control during the term at which it is rendered, and it may set aside the judgment, at any time before the end of the term without notice, but when that term ends such judgment becomes final and passes beyond the control of the court, unless perhaps a motion be made during such term to set it aside, and such motion is continued until the next term. Green v. Railroad Co., 11 W. Va. 686; Price v. Com., 4 Va. Law Jr. 426, 33 Gratt. 819, 36 Am. Rep. 797.

Judgment Interlocutory.—"Even after the close of the term, however, the court may modify or set aside any judgment or decree made at a former term, if it be interlocutory and not final in character. 1 Black, Judgm. § 308; Wright v. Strother, 76 Va. 857. But, after the term, the court has no power to modify or annul any final judgment or decree, except in law cases for certain causes by writ of error coram nobis or motion, under chapter 184 of the Code, and in chancery for certain causes, and in certain cases by bill of review or motion under said chapter. The final judgment or decree ends the case, and neither the parties nor the subject-matter in litigation are any longer before the court, and, therefore, any subsequent action in the case, being without parties or subject-matter before the court, is null and void unless made under some lawful mode of review. Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279; Crim v. Davisson, 6 W. Va. 465; Hall v. Bank, 15 W. Va. 228; Battaille v. Maryland Hospital, 76 Va. 68; Johnson v. Anderson, 76 Va. 766; 1 Freem. Judgm. § 96." Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. Rep. 588.

Judgment Final.—But a final judgment or decree of one term of a court cannot be impaired or set aside at another term, because of the close of the first term, unless upon such proceedings as the law points out for review. Crawford v. Fickey, 41 W. Va. 544, 23 S. E. Rep. 662.

A court can set aside at one term an order made in the progress of the cause at a former term, which is interlocutory, but not a final judgment. An order which merely sustains a demurrer to a declaration, or strikes out a court or item of claim, but followed by no judgment as to it, is interlocutory in nature, and the count or item of claim may be reinstated in the declaration at a subsequent term. Clarke v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 732, 20 S. E. Rep. 699.

Moreover, until the court adjourns for the term, no one, unless expressly authorized to do so, can act under a decree or judgment entered at that term, except at his peril. During the term all the proceedings are in the breast of the court, and under its control, and liable to be stricken out, altered or amended during the term, and that without notice to the parties. Clendenning v. Conrad, 91 Va. 410, 21 S. E. Rep. 818, citing Green v. P. W. & Ky. R. Co., 11 W. Va. 686.

May Grant Certificate of Judgment.—But the court of appeals will direct their clerk to grant a certificate of their judgment, during term time, if it be absolutely necessary to attain the justice of the case. Brown v. Crippin, 4 H. & M. 173.

End of Term—Modification—Amendment.—After the end of the term, however, the court has no power to modify or annul any final judgment or decree, except in certain causes, by writ of error coram nobis or motion under § 134 of the West Virginia Code. Barbour County Court v. O'Neal, 42 W. Va. 295, 26 S. E. Rep. 182; Crawford v. Fickey, 41 W. Va. 544, 23 S. E. Rep. 662, citing Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279; Morgan v. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 19, 19 S. E. Rep. 589; Wright v. Strother, 76 Va. 857; Green v. R. Co., 11 W. Va. 686.

Judge's Recollection, Evidence Aliunde.—Or unless there is something in the record by which amendments can be safely made, but they cannot be made upon the individual recollection of the judge, or upon proofs aliunde. Barnes v. Com., 92 Va. 794, 23 S. E. Rep. 784.

Omission to State Entry of Plea, Joinder of Issue.—As it is error in a court to amend a record, after the term at which the judgment was rendered, therefore, if the record omits to state that a plea was entered, and issue joined, the court cannot, after the term at which judgment was rendered, direct a plea to be entered, nunc pro tunc, upon the evidence of the clerk that a plea was filed, and issue joined. Sydnor v. Burke, 4 Rand. 161.

Action Presumed Right.—When a judgment is set aside by the court during the term at which it was rendered, the appellate court will presume that it was rightfully set aside, unless the contrary affirmatively appears by the record. Green v. Railroad Co., 11 W. Va. 686.

Correction at Subsequent Term.—On the other hand, that a court has a right at a term, subsequent to the one at which a judgment is rendered, to correct, by an order nunc pro tunc, a clerical error or omission in the original entry, is indisputable. The error, whether of omission or commission, must appear from the record in which the entry of judgment is made. Black, Judgm. 131; McClain v. Davis, 37 W. Va. 330, 16 S. E. Rep. 639.

For example, such a clerical error as entering a judgment in the office without awarding an inquiry of damages, may properly be corrected at a subsequent term. Shelton v. Welsh, 7 Leigh 175.

But if the jury finds a right verdict, and the district court records it wrongly, entering judgment upon it as recorded, they cannot correct the error by the true verdict, at a subsequent term. Freeland v. Field, 6 Call 12.

Discretion of Court.—Until the the term ends, every judgment or decree may for good reason be modified or set aside in whole or in part. The court has a discretion to do this, in the exercise of which the supreme court will not interfere except for the most cogent reasons. Parkersburg Nat. Bank v. Neal, 28 W. Va. 744.

C. CLERICAL ERRORS OR MISTAKES.

Common-Law Rule.—"At the common law, an error committed by the court, not in a point of judgment, but such as might be called a misprision of the court, could be amended; but no misprision of the clerk was amendable after the term." Com. v. Winstons, 5 Rand. 546.

If an error is merely clerical the appellate court will correct and affirm the decree, but if it be judicial, the decree will be reversed, with costs to the appellee in either event. Bee v. Burdett, 23 W. Va. 744. See also, Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 511.

Allowance of Too Much Interest.—Where an action is brought on a note, which was executed at the time when five per centum was the legal rate of interest, upon which the defendant acknowledged the action for the principal with interest from the date of the note; on which acknowledgment a judgment was rendered for the principal, with interest at the rate of six per centum per annum; this is not a mere clerical error, but one which can only be rectified by an appellate court. 1 Rev. Code 512; Bent v. Patten, 1 Rand. 25.

But where a judgment is rendered by default in the general court, upon motion, on a bond due the commonwealth; but the clerk, in entering the judgment, only allows interest from a date posterior to that, from which by the terms of the bond, interest was to run; this error may be amended, upon motion to the general court, at a succeeding term. 1 Rev. Code 512, § 108; Com. v. Winstons, 5 Rand. 546.

It seems, moreover, that where the clerk erroneously enters judgment upon nil dicit in the county court, or an office judgment in the county or circuit courts, for interest from the date of the bond with a penalty, when it should have been with interest from the day of payment, as provided for in the bond, such error is a clerical mistake, amendable by the court, at a subsequent term. Eubank v. Sandige, 4 Leigh 308.

Erroneous Entry at Rules.—A judgment at rules in the clerk's office of a county court ought to be entered as of the last day of the succeeding quarterly term, but, if it be entered as at rules only, it is merely a clerical misprision, and therefore amendable. Digges v. Dunn, 1 Munf. 56.

Where the clerk enters the "common order," when he should have issued a new summons, this is a clerical misprision by the clerk, and the office judgment may be amended under Va. Code 1873, ch. 177, §§ 5 and 6, p. 1135.

Executor—Judgment De Bonis Propriis.—Where a judgment by default de bonis propriis is erroneously entered against an executor, it is a clerical error to be amended upon motion to the lower court, and is not a ground of appeal to the higher court. Sneed v. Coleman, 7 Gratt. 300, 56 Am. Dec. 112.

Error in Order of Court.—But an error in the order of the court, or an omission to make an entry in the order book is not a clerical, but a judicial error. Cawood's Case, 3 Va. Cas. 527.

Failure of Clerk to Notice Memorandum.—Where the clerk enters up a judgment by nil dicti, in debt on bond for the payment of tobacco, without noticing a memorandum indorsed on the bond, such mistake is merely clerical and amendable upon motion, at a subsequent term. Gordon v. Frazier, 2 Wash. 130.

Bond for $188, Declared on as Bond for $108.—On the other hand, where an action of debt is brought upon a bond for $188, but is declared on as a bond for $108, the bond being in fact for $188, this is not such a clerical error as may be amended under the 108th section of the statute of jeofails, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, p. 512. Compton v. Cline, 5 Gratt. 137.

Error Must Be Apparent.—Where, by an error of the clerk, a judgment by confession is entered, instead of a nil dicti, this is not such a clerical misprision as can be corrected by the court at the next term, under either the first or the fifth sections of ch. 181, of the Va. Code, p. 680, which only applies where the error appears in some part of the record. Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

Error Must Appear of Record.—The amendments authorized by Va. Code, ch. 181, § 5, p. 181, providing for the reversal and amendment of judgments in certain cases in the same court, at a subsequent term, or by the judge in vacation, are to be based upon something in the record, and not upon the recollection of the judges who presided at the trial, or by evidence aliunde. Powell's Case, 11 Gratt. 822; Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

Copy of Judgment Does Not Show Where or When It Was Rendered.—It was held in Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 312, that though the copy of the judgment against the high sheriff in the record, does not show in what court or when it was rendered, it is a mere clerical omission in copying the judgments into the record, and if these facts appear from any other part of the record, it will be held sufficient in the appellate court, when the objection was not made in the court below.

Informality in the Entry.—Any informality in the entry of the judgment by the clerk must be corrected in the court below, and is no ground for reversal in the appellate court. Roach v. Blakey, 89 Va. 707, 17 S. E. Rep. 228.

Error in Taxation of Costs.—Where the appellate court has a case before it properly on other grounds, it will correct any error in the court below as to costs, though it would not for that alone reverse. Farmers' Bk. v. Woodford, 84 W. Va. 480, 12 S. E. Rep. 544.

If an appeal is taken from a decree of the circuit court to the court of appeals and the case is within its jurisdiction, the matter in controversy must be inquired into and determined, and if the decree be found to be right, in all other respects, and erroneous as to costs, the court of appeals will not reverse the decree, because of such error, as to costs; but may, in the proper case, correct the decree, as to the error, and affirm it, as corrected. Jones v. Cunningham, 7 W. Va. 707; Railroad Co. v. Harness, 24 W. Va. 511.

A judgment for costs in favor of the "overseers of the poor for the use of the woman," where the case proceeds in the name of the woman, is not an error, of which the defendant can complain. Tennant v. Brookover, 12 W. Va. 338.

Justices' Judgments—Good Grammar—Tenses.—By § 180, ch. 50 of the W. Va. Code, all formalities in the entry of a justice's judgment are dispensed with, and it is sufficient if the truth be stated so as to be intelligible. "Good grammar is not essential to a good judgment. The mistake of a proper tense will not render a justice's judgment unintelligible or invalid. Justices are not usually educated men, learned either in the intricacies of law or grammar, hence their records must be scanned with the greatest leniency." Davis v. Trump, 43 W. Va. 191, 27 S. E. Rep. 397.

Statutory Provisions.—Section 2451 of the Va. Code, provides for the correction of such errors as misprisions of the clerk and what may be termed clerical misprisions of the court. This has been the construction heretofore placed upon the statute. It has no application to errors in the reasoning and conclusions of the court about contested matters. Shipman v. Fletcher, 91 Va. 473, 23 S. E. Rep. 458. See also, Rees v. Conococheague Bank, 5 Rand. 326.

Amendments to Support Judgment.—The amendments authorized by Va. Code, ch. 181, § 5, p. 681, providing for the reversal and amendment of judgments in certain cases in the same court, are amendments to support the judgments, not amendments to give ground for reversing it. Powell's Case, 11 Gratt. 822.

Correction on Motion.—Under Va. Code, 1873, ch. 177, § 5, upon notice to the opposite party, his agent, or attorney at law or in fact, the court wherein the decree is rendered, may on motion, correct such decree as to any clerical error therein where there is sufficient in the record to enable the court to safely amend the same. Dillard v. Dillard, 77 Va. 820.

The power of amendment, allowed by 1 Rev. Code 512, § 108, applies to a motion as well as to an action, and extends to the general court. Com. v. Winstons, 5 Rand. 546.

Applies to Mistakes and Misrecitals.—The second clause of § 5, ch. 184 of the W. Va. Code, authorizes amendments and corrections only in cases of mistakes and misrecitals when the same may be safely amended from some other part of the record. The clause is confined to mere clerical and not judicial errors. Judicial errors, where the judgment is not by default, can be corrected only by an appellate court. Stringer v. Anderson, 23 W. Va. 483. See also, Connor v. Fleshman, 4 W. Va. 693; Railroad Co. v. Harness, 24 W. Va. 511.

Applies to Judgments by Default, and to Decrees Confessed.—Va. Code, § 3451, applies only to judgments by default and to decrees on bills taken for confessed, and to cases of mistake or miscalculation, for which no appeal lies to the supreme court. Thompson v. Carpenter, 88 Va. 702, 14 S. E. Rep. 181; Stringer v. Anderson, 23 W. Va. 482.

D. WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS.

When It Lies.—A writ of error coram nobis lies where some defect is alleged in the process or execution thereof, or some misprision of the clerk, or some error in the proceedings arising from a fact not appearing upon their face, as where judgment is rendered against a party after his death, or who is an infant or feme covert. Gordon v. Frazier, 2 Wash. 180; Bent v. Patten, 1 Rand. 26; Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

When It Does Not Lie.—But a writ of error coram nobis does not lie to correct any error in the judgment of the court, nor to contradict or put in issue a fact directly passed upon and affirmed in the judgment itself. If this could be done there would be no end to litigation, and little security for the titles to property. Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

Insanity.—A writ of error coram nobis, or a motion in lieu of it, is not a proper process to reverse a judgment, because the defendant was insane at the time of its rendition, as the judgment can be attacked for such cause only in equity. Withrow v. Smithson, 37 W. Va. 757, 17 S. E. Rep. 816.

Death before Judgment Obtained.—But an injunction ought not to be granted on the ground that the plaintiff was dead before the judgment was obtained in his name. This error should be rectified by a writ of error coram nobis. Williamson v. Appleberry, 1 H. & M. 206.

Where a clerk commits a merely clerical error in entering up a judgment, the injured party may if he please, proceed by writ of error coram nobis, which is a plain, cheap, summary, and complete remedy at law, but the proceeding now, is merely by motion to the court. Gordon v. Frazier, 2 Wash. 180; Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146.

Limitation to Proceedings.—The statute of limitations of writs of error, if it applies to writs of error coram nobis at all, cannot be relied on without being pleaded. Eubank v. Ralls, 4 Leigh 308.

E. REVERSAL—GROUNDS.

Harmless Error.—Where it is proper that the court, and not the jury, should pass on a matter, and find thereon, but a jury finds upon it, and the court renders judgment; if the judgment is the same as the court should have given if it had expressly found on such matter, this error is harmless, and not a cause for reversal. Miller v. White, 46 W. Va. 67, 33 S. E. Rep. 332.

Nor will judgment be reversed for errors not prejudicial to the complaining party. Johnson v. Jennings, 10 Gratt. 1.

Error of Few Cents.—A judgment regularly obtained should not be set aside for an error of a few cents in the amount for which the judgment should have been rendered. The rule de minimis lex non curat should be applied. Ramsburg v. Kline, 96 Va. 465, 31 S. E. Rep. 608.

Judgment Includes Both Declaration and Bill of Particulars.—A judgment sustaining a demurrer to both the declaration and bill of particulars will not be reversed for having included both, where the counsel agreed in writing that the case as made by both should be considered. King v. Norfolk, etc., Ry. Co., 99 Va. 625, 39 S. E. Rep. 701.

Imperfect Statement in Bill of Exceptions.—In Beattie v. Tabb, 2 Munf. 254, judgment was reversed, because the bill of exceptions stated the facts imperfectly. See also, Barrett v. Tazewell, 1 Call 215.

Refusal to Strike Out Special Plea.—A judgment will not be reversed, on appeal for refusal to strike out a special plea of matter which could have been admitted under the general issue, since a judgment can only operate as an estoppel as to facts which are specially pleaded. C. & O. R. Co. v. Rison, 99 Va. 18, 37 S. E. Rep. 320.

Refusal to Grant Continuance.—But a judgment may be reversed on the ground that a continuance of the cause should have been granted, instead of ruling the party to trial when unprepared. Hook v. Nanny, 4 H. & M. 157.

Jointure.—In averring a jointure in bar of dower, the failure to state in the plea, that the husband "being seized in fee of the premises" made the jointure, is not a substantial defect, nor sufficient to authorize the reversal of a judgment for the tenant, the defendant having failed to assign it as a cause of demurrer. Ambler v. Norton, 4 H. & M. 23.

Erroneous Instruction.—A judgment for the plaintiff ought not to be reversed, on the ground that the court, at the instance of the defendant, gave an erroneous instruction to the jury. Murrell v. Johnson, 1 H. & M. 450; Preston v. Harvey, 2 H. & M. 55.

"A judgment will not be reversed by the appellate court for an erroneous instruction, if it can clearly see that the losing party could not have been prejudiced by it. In Kincheloe v. Tracewells, 11 Gratt. 587, 609, this court said: 'If the questions involved in the instructions, are decided erroneously the judgment should not on that account be reversed, if the court can see from the bill of exceptions that they did not and could not affect the merits of the case before the jury.'" Danville Bank v. Waddill, 37 Gratt. 448; Binns v. Waddill, 32 Gratt. 588, and note.

Judgment Depending on Prior Judgment.—A judgment depending on a prior judgment, which prior judgment is reversed, may be reversed without error apparent on the record of the subsequent judgment, other than the connection between the subsequent and the prior reversed judgment. Conway v. Hall, 1 Va. Cas. 6.

Admission of Improper Evidence.—But a judgment ought not to be reversed on the ground that improper evidence offered to the jury by the appellant, was admitted by the inferior court, where it appears that such evidence did not influence the verdict. Hamlin v. Harriss, 2 H. & M. 550; Harrison v. Brock, 1 Munf. 22.

Admission of Illegal Evidence.—So also, a judgment ought not to be reversed on the ground that the court below admitted illegal evidence, or gave an erroneous instruction to the jury, unless it appears that some injury could possibly have resulted therefrom to the party appealing. Preston v. Harvey, 2 H. & M. 55.

Compelled to Join in Demurrer to Evidence.—Nor ought a judgment to be reversed on the ground that the court erroneously compelled the other party to join in a demurrer to evidence. Harrison v. Brock, 1 Munf. 22. See also, Rheims v. Ins. Co., 39 W. Va. 672, 20 S. E. Rep. 670.

Exclusion of Evidence—Relevancy.—Moreover, the judgment of a court shall not be reversed for excluding evidence, unless the case stated in the record shows the relevancy of the evidence excluded. Rowt v. Kile, 1 Leigh 216.

Re-examination of Witnesses.—And a judgment will not be reversed because the court permitted witnesses to be recalled for further examination in chief, unless the second examination was palpably improper. Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 33 S. E. Rep. 478; Burke v. Shaver, 92 Va. 352, 23 S. E. Rep. 749; Brooks v. Wilcox, 11 Gratt. 411; Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187.

Joint and Several Note of Three.—A judgment cannot be set aside on the ground that the note upon which the judgment was rendered, was the joint and several note of three persons, while the action was brought and judgment obtained against only two of them. No evidence could be introduced on that subject until after the judgment had been set aside. Such evidence might be used after the judgment was set aside in order to prevent a new judgment, but not to set aside a judgment already in force. Ramsburg v. Kline, 96 Va. 465, 31 S. E. Rep. 608.

Effect of Striking Out Part of Erroneous Judgment.—When a plaintiff, who has recovered a judgment which, as rendered, is clearly erroneous, seeks to avoid a reversal by striking out a part of the judgment, it is incumbent on him to satisfy the court either by materials in the record or by fair presumption, that this can be done without injustice to the defendant. If he cannot do this, the defendant is entitled to have the erroneous judgment reversed. Orange, etc., R. Co. v. Fulvey, 17 Gratt. 366.

Rule under Statute.—Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 177, § 1, judgment will not be reversed for any defect, imperfection, or omission in the pleadings, unless, in the court below, there was a demurrer. The statute is held to cure a defective statement of a good cause of action, but will not validate a declaration which does not state any cause of action at all. Roanoke Land & Imp. Co. v. Karn, 80 Va. 589; Laughlin v. Flood, 8 Munf. 273; Boyles v. Overby, 11 Gratt. 202.

1. EXTENT OF REVERSAL.

Reversal of Part of Judgment.—A judgment may sometimes be set aside in whole or in part only. Enos v. Stansbury, 18 W. Va. 477. See also, W. Va. Code, ch. 131, § 19.

Though at common law a joint judgment erroneous as to one must be reversed as to all, still this rule does not apply to void judgments, which are mere nullities. Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

Reversal as to One Party.—At common law, a judgment erroneous as to one is erroneous, and must be reversed, as to all; but in equity, under the statute, if only one appeals from a joint decree, and the rights of the parties stand on different and separable grounds, there may be a reversal only in part. Vance Shoe Co. v. Haught, 41 Va. 275, 23 S. E. Rep. 553; Midkiff v. Lusher, 27 W. Va. 439; Hoffman v. Bircher, 23 W. Va. 587; Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

Where the principal and sureties are sued jointly, and the judgment is erroneous as to the sureties, it must be reversed as to all, although the judgment would have been good against the principal, if he had been sued alone. Munford v. Overseers of the Poor, 2 Rand. 313.

Where an office judgment is obtained against two defendants on a promissory note, and is erroneous as to one, it ought to be set aside as to both. Cole v. Pennell, 2 Rand. 174.

Joint Judgments.—But a joint judgment cannot be reversed as to one defendant, and affirmed as to the other. Jones v. Raine, 4 Rand. 386.

Valid as to One.—Though at common law a joint judgment erroneous as to one must be reversed as to all, yet such is not the rule when the judgment is valid as to one party and absolutely void as to another. Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

Effect on Execution.—When a judgment is set aside, the execution which is issued upon it falls with it, without any express order to quash the execution. Ballard v. Whitlock, 18 Gratt. 235.

Procedure.—A judgment can be set aside or altered only in the mode prescribed, and by the court or officer invested with jurisdiction to do so by law. Marshall v. Cheatham, 88 Va. 31, 13 S. E. Rep. 308.

Disposition of Case on Reversal.—Where the county court has decided in favor of the putative father, and the overseers of the poor have spread the facts upon record by an exception, and taken an appeal to the circuit court, that court upon reversing the judgment of the county court, should not send the cause back for a new trial, but should render a judgment in favor of the overseers of the poor for the amount appearing due, but without interest. Willard v. Overseers of the Poor, 9 Gratt. 139.

If the right judgment be rendered in the county court, and upon an appeal to the district court, the clerk sends up an erroneous record, on which the judgment is affirmed, that court will, upon a view of the record of the county court, reverse that of the district court, and direct them to issue a writ of certiorari for the true record, so that the right judgment may be given. Williams v. Strickler, 8 Call 231.

Where a pecuniary judgment has been rendered against a defendant in a criminal case, and he pays, and upon appeal the judgment is reversed, the cause will be remanded to the court below, for an order of restitution to be made therein, if the money is yet in the hands or power of the court. Old v. Com., 18 Gratt. 915. See Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call 529.

Giving Such Judgment as Inferior Court Should Have.—An appellate court ought not to reverse the judgment, without proceeding to give such judgment as the inferior court should have given. Darby v. Henderson, 8 Munf. 115; Blane v. Sansum, 2 Call 496; Smith v. Walker, 1 Wash. 135. See Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98; Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call 529.

District Court.—A district court ought not, in any case, merely to reverse the judgment of a county court in general terms; but should proceed to render such judgment as the county court ought to render. Mantz v. Hendley, 2 H. & M. 308.

Where the court below has given judgment for the plaintiff in a scire facias, against bail, for too large an amount, the appellate court will reverse the judgment, and enter judgment for the proper sum. Bowyer v. Hewitt, 2 Gratt. 193.

It is the constant course of the court to look into the whole record, and to give the judgment which the court below ought to have given. Baird v. Mattox, 1 Call 257.

"Upon reversing a judgment at law, we must enter such judgment as the court below ought to have entered, and we can entertain no motion here for amendment." TUCKER, P. Wilson v. Bank of Mt. Pleasant, 6 Leigh 570.

Constitutional Law.—Section 35 of art. 8 of the W. Va. Constitution, does not authorize the setting aside of the judgments therein specified and the granting of new trials thereon. The judgments must stand, until by due process of law it is ascertained that they were rendered "because of acts done according to the usages of civilized warfare in the prosecution of the war," and when so ascertained such judgments are nullities. Williams v. Freeland, 19 W. Va. 599; Griffie v. Halstead, 19 W. Va. 602; Peerce v. Kitzmiller, 19 W. Va. 565; White v. Crump, 19 W. Va. 583.

2. AWARD OF DAMAGES ON AFFIRMANCE.

Affirmance—Statute.—The statute allowing damages on affirmance (Acts of 1830-31, ch. 11, § 32, Suppl. to R. C. p. 149), does not apply to the affirmance of a judgment imposing an amercement or fine; the amercement or fine not being a debt or damages, within the meaning of that act. But though the judgment of affirmance in such case awards damages according to law for retarding the execution, yet as no specific damages are thereby adjudged, and the law gives none, the error is merely formal, and the appellate court will disregard it. Abrahams' Case, 1 Rob. 675.

Effect of Statute on Pending Cases.—A statute awarding damages on affirmance does not apply to cases pending when the statute went into effect. Beatty v. Smith, 2 Hen. & M. 395.

Amount of Damages Awarded.—1 Rev. Code, ch. 109, § 32, p. 149, provides that "Henceforth, upon the affirmance of any decree or judgment whatsoever, of any inferior court by any appellate court, no damages shall be awarded to the party prevailing, beyond legal interest on the debt or damages, or profits of property adjudged, and the costs." See Mulliday v. Machir, 4 Gratt. 1, for this statute.

It was held in Guerrant v. Tayloe, 2 Call 208, that if there be a judgment against a sheriff, for the amount of money levied on an execution with the thirteen per cent. damages, and he appeals, the appellee, by waiving the ten per cent. damages, for retarding the execution, and taking a simple affirmance of the judgment, may still have his fifteen per cent. damages, according to the judgment of the court below.

No Damages on the Costs.—Where the appellate court reverses the judgment as to costs, the successful party is not entitled to damages on the costs. Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. 10; M'Rea v. Brown, 2 Munf. 46.

X. JUDGMENTS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

A. PRESENCE IN COURT.—Unless expressly authorized by statute, no court can give judgment of imprisonment, or other corporal punishment, unless the defendant is present in court. Com. v. Crump, 1 Va. Cas. 172; State v. Campbell, 42 W. Va. 246, 24 S. E. Rep. 875.

Rule Modified by Statute.—In Virginia, however, the rule of the common law that judgment for corporal punishment can be pronounced against a man only when he is personally present is, in cases of misdemeanor, modified by Va. Code, § 4076, providing that no capias to hear judgment shall be necessary in any prosecution for a misdemeanor, but that the court may proceed to judgment in the absence of the accused, and if such judgment requires confinement in jail the court may make such order as may be necessary for the arrest of the person, against whom such judgment is, and for the execution thereof. Shiffett v. Com., 90 Va. 386, 18 S. E. Rep. 838; Price v. Com., 33 Gratt. 819.

Therefore, as in a misdemeanor, the personal presence of the defendant is not necessary at the trial; a verdict and judgment for the fine may be found and rendered in his absence; and after the term he must neither move for a new trial nor in arrest of judgment. But until final judgment he may so move. Pifer's Case, 14 Gratt. 710.

Reason for Rule.—"Where a man is to receive any corporal punishment, judgment cannot be given in his absence and the reason is that there is a capias pro fine, but no process to take a man and put him on a pillory." Pifer's Case, 14 Gratt. 710.

Record Must Show Presence.—It seems to be well settled that, in order to sustain a judgment of conviction, the record must show that the prisoner appeared in person, and not by attorney. Sperry v. Com., 9 Leigh 623, 33 Am. Dec. 261; Hooker v. Com., 13 Gratt. 763, and note.

Rendition at Same Term.—But, where, at the same term of the court, it sets aside an erroneous judgment and renders a proper one, it is not necessary that the defendant should be present in court when the second judgment is entered. Price v. Com., 4 Va. Law Jour. 426, 33 Gratt. 819, 36 Am. Rep. 797.

Verdict Wrong—Court Should Render Proper Judgment.—Where on trial of the issue on an indictment for burglary, the jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment, and the prisoner moved in arrest of judgment, which the court overruled, and sentenced the prisoner to the penitentiary, it was held that the judgment could not be rendered on the verdict, and the court should, on the verdict, have rendered a proper judgment for petit larceny. State v. Hupp, 31 W. Va. 355, 6 S. E. Rep. 919.

Sentence by Circuit Court.—A prisoner being sentenced by the court of oyer and terminer before which he was tried, to confinement in the penitentiary for a shorter term than is authorized by the law for the offence of which he was convicted, the circuit court of Henrico county and the city of Richmond may, upon the proper proceedings had before that court, correct the error and sentence the prisoner for the shortest period fixed by the statute for the offence of which he was convicted. Logan's Case, 5 Gratt. 692.

Fine.—Where on a prosecution for a misdemeanor, there is a verdict against the defendant for a fine, and the court enters up a judgment thereon for the fine and costs, and directs a capias ad audiendum against the defendant, and at a subsequent term sentences him to six months' imprisonment in the county jail, it was held that the judgment for the fine and costs was final, and no further judgment could be rendered in the case. The judgment for the imprisonment was therefore erroneous. Pifer's Case, 14 Gratt. 710.

Rendition for Fine Only.—Where an offence is punishable with fine and imprisonment, a superior court may render judgment for the fine only. Com. v. Crump, 1 Va. Cas. 172.

Verdict on Bad Count.—But where the verdict is based on a bad count the court cannot sentence thereon. State v. Cottrell, 45 W. Va. 337, 32 S. E. Rep. 163.

Several Distinct Terms.—A prisoner convicted of several distinct felonies may be adjudged to undergo several distinct terms of confinement in the penitentiary, the several imprisonments to commence respectively, from and after the expiration of prior imprisonments adjudged against him. Com. v. Leath, 1 Va. Cas. 151.

Recital of Judgment.—"It is hardly necessary to say that a mere recital in a felony case that judgment was entered cannot be treated as equivalent to a judgment. The record must affirmatively show the sentence itself. Spurgeon's Case, 86 Va. 652, 10 S. E. Rep. 979. And as this is not shown by the record in the present case, it follows that there was nothing upon which the writ of error from the circuit court could operate, and, consequently, that the proceedings in that court were coram non iudice and vold. Saunders v. Com., 79 Va. 522." Read's Case, 90 Va. 168, 17 S. E. Rep. 855.

Entry of Proper Judgment.—Where the lower court enters an erroneous judgment or sentence, the judgment will be reversed for this error, and the proper judgment entered. Brooks' Case, 4 Leigh 669; Murry's Case, 5 Leigh 720; Hall's Case, 6 Leigh 615.

Case Must Be Remanded.—But under W. Va. Acts 1893, ch. 18, § 19, the circuit court, on reversing the judgment of an inferior court in whole or in part, because erroneous, is not permitted to enter up such judgment as the inferior court should have rendered, but it must "remand the same back" that a final judgment may be entered. State v. Bluefield Drug Co., 41 W. Va. 638, 24 S. E. Rep. 640; State v. Mooney, 27 W. Va. 546. But see State v. Gould, 26 W. Va. 258.

XI. ACTIONS ON JUDGMENTS.

Judgment Conditioned on the Existence of Assets.—An action of debt or scire facias may be brought upon a judgment "when assets," or "if assets"; and if upon the plea of plene administravit, issue is found for the executor or administrator, the plaintiff may take another judgment when assets. Braxton v. Wood, 4 Gratt. 25.

In this case the court said: "The plaintiff in thus proceeding upon his judgment quando acciderint accomplishes one of two objects, both of which are perfectly legitimate. If he can show that further assets unadministered have come to the defendant's hands since the former judgment, or rather since the former plea of fully administered, he converts his qualified judgment quando acciderint into an absolute judgment de bonis testatoris, and thereby obtains priority over other creditors in equal degree who have not recovered judgment. If he fails in this, still he revives and keeps alive his former judgment, so as to enable him to subject any assets which may yet accrue after the second judgment.

There is express authority to prove that in a scire facias upon a judgment quando acciderint, where assets are found as to part, judgment shall be given to recover so much immediately, and the residue of assets in futuro. Perryman v. Westwood, cited in 1 Vent. 95, and Sid. 448; 2 Wms. Ex'ors, 1231; 3 Tidd's Pract. 1019. I have seen no case where upon such a proceeding and no assets whatever found, judgment has been given for satisfaction out of future assets; and I have seen none to the contrary. But there is no reason for a distinction between a partial and a total failure of assets. If the scire facias ought to be barred or abated as to the whole where it is found there are no present assets, the same result ought to follow in regard to any part as to which there is the same finding; and if it is proper to take judgment quando acciderint as to part where there are not present assets to satisfy that part, it is equally proper, the like state of things existing, to take such judgment in regard to the whole."

See monographic note on "Debt, the Action of" appended to Davis v. Mead, 13 Gratt. 118.

A judgment when assets refers to the time of the plea pleaded, and, as to assets received after that time, no enquiry can be made in that suit. Gardner v. Vidal, 6 Rand. 106.

Creditors' Bills.—A foreign judgment is a debt, upon which a suit in equity can be maintained to avoid a fraudulent or voluntary conveyance without first obtaining a judgment at law under Code W. Va. 1868, ch. 133, § 2. Watkins v. Wortman, 19 W. Va. 78.

Effect of Pending Appeal.—An action may be maintained upon a judgment in Virginia, rendered by the court of Texas, notwithstanding the pendency of appellate proceedings of Texas, but the Virginia court may order that no execution shall be issued on the judgment obtained in such action, provided the defendant gives bond and security conditioned to satisfy the judgment and pay all damages, cost and fees, etc., in case the writ of error pending in Texas shall be determined adversely to the defendant. Piedmont, etc., Co. v. Ray, 75 Va. 821.

Record Destroyed Pending Appeal.—Also, where a defendant, against whom a judgment was rendered took an appeal therefrom, but pending the appeal, the record of the judgment was destroyed by fire, nevertheless the plaintiff is entitled to recover by action of debt on the judgment, notwithstanding the appeal taken from the judgment. Newcomb v. Drummond, 4 Leigh 57.

Effect of Supersedeas.—Under art. 4, § 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and the act of congress of May 26, 1790, a writ of error, not operating as a supersedeas, from the supreme appellate court of Texas to a judgment of a district court of that state, will be regarded as having the same effect in Virginia as in Texas. Piedmont, etc., Co. v. Ray, 75 Va. 821.

Issuance of Execution.—1 R. C. 1819, p. 499, ch. 128, sec. 5, declaring that where execution has issued and no return is made thereon, the party in whose favor the same was issued may obtain other executions for ten years from the date of the judgment and not after, does not bar such party from maintaining an action of debt on the judgment after ten years. Herrington v. Harkins, 1 Rob. 591; Fleming v. Dunlop, 4 Leigh 338, opinion of TUCKER, P. But see Dabney v. Shelton, 82 Va. 849, 4 S. E. Rep. 605.

Executors and Administrators.—At common law, joint obligations and joint judgments could only be enforced against the surviving obligors or defendants. The death of any of such obligors, or defendants, absolved their personal representatives from all responsibility. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182.

But under statute, where a joint judgment is obtained against two defendants, and one dies, an action of debt on the judgment lies against the representative of the deceased defendant; the law respecting partitions, joint rights and obligations, 1 Rev. Code 359, being applicable to joint judgments. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182.

Action by Administrator De Bonis Non.—An administrator de bonis non may maintain an action of debt, on a judgment obtained by the executor. Dykes v. Woodhouse, 8 Rand. 287; Wernick v. McMurdo, 5 Rand. 51.

Persons in Representative Capacity.—But a personal judgment or decree against an executor or administrator, or administrator de bonis non, who is sued in his representative character only, is fatally erroneous. Jones v. Reid, 12 W. Va. 350, 29 Am. Rep. 455; Spotswood v. Price, 3 H. & M. 123; Pugh v. Jones, 6 Leigh 299; Wills v. Dunn, 5 Gratt. 384; Humphreys v. West, 3 Rand. 516.

Judgment to Be Discharged by a Lesser Sum.—In an action of debt on a judgment for a certain sum to be discharged by a lesser; if the declaration demands a wrong sum, and no special demurrer is filed, the error is cured by the statute of jeofails, there being enough in the declaration to show the true amount of the judgment. A verdict which finds an erroneous sum, "that being the debt in the declaration mentioned," is substantially good, the sum being surplusage, and the conclusion of the verdict being, of itself, sufficient to show the real sum demanded. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182.

Extent of Recovery.—A high sheriff, against whom a judgment is rendered, for the default or misconduct of his deputy, is entitled to recover of the deputy, not only the amount of the original judgment, but all additions thereto arising from the coroner's commissions included in a forthcoming bond, costs of the judgment on that bond, and costs and damages on appeals, or writs of supersedeas, until its affirmance by the court of appeals. But a judgment in his favor against the deputy, if rendered for more damages than have been recovered against himself, ought to be reversed with costs. Stowers v. Smith, 5 Munf. 401.

Limitation to Sue.—The Act of 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 5, p. 480, limiting proceedings upon judgments, applies to judgments "when assets" or "if assets" and will begin to run from the date of the judgment. Braxton v. Wood, 4 Gratt. 25.

Judgments Quando Acciderint.—But it was held in Smith v. Charlton, 7 Gratt. 425, that a judgment quando acciderint does not come within the operation of the statute of limitations in relation to judgments.

Revival against Personal Representative.—Moreover, a judgment obtained against a testator in his lifetime, and not revived against his personal representative after his death, within five years from the time of his qualification, is barred by the statute of limitations. Peyton v. Carr, 1 Rand. 436.

A. PLEAS.

1. NUL TIEL RECORD.

Foreign Judgment.—If the court rendering a judgment is a foreign court, it is not judicially known by us as a court of record, and its judgments are not considered as records, hence it follows that the plea of nul tiel record is bad, because it is not applicable to foreign judgments. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

"The maxim of the law is, that the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, imports absolute verity, and its truth cannot be questioned, either by showing, otherwise than by the record itself, that the court had no jurisdiction, or that its jurisdiction was fraudulently obtained. Both upon the merits of the cause of action, and upon all jurisdictional facts, the record imports absolute verity in law, and is to be tried by the court upon inspection of the record only. Hence at law, the validity of the judgment can be put in issue by the plea nul tiel record only, and if on inspection it turns out that the plea is not true, there is an end of the controversy. If its validity is to be impeached from without some other appropriate remedy must be found." Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692. See Smith v. Johnson, 44 W. Va. 278, 29 S. E. Rep. 509.

2. NIL DEBET.—The plea of nil debet is not a good plea to an action of debt on a judgment of another state of the Union, for the reason that the judgments of sister states, being regarded as domestic judgments, are conclusive in other states, and hence the merits cannot be re-examined. Kemp v. Mundell, 9 Leigh 12.

In an action of debt brought in Virginia upon a judgment of the circuit court of the District of Columbia, a plea of nil debet is proper, but a special plea, alleging that the judgment was recovered on a bill of exchange drawn while the party was in a state of intoxication is an improper plea. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

District of Columbia.—In was the unanimous opinion of the court in Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628, that the judgments of the District of Columbia are to be regarded as foreign judgments in the courts of Virginia, and hence the plea of nil debet, in action on such judgment, would be a good plea. The court based its opinion on the ground that the full faith and credit clause of the constitution of the United States and the acts of congress did not apply to the District of Columbia but only to the states.

In an action of debt on judgments of the courts of Kentucky the plea of nil debet is not a good plea. That plea assumes that the judgment is not conclusive, and if issue were taken on the plea, the plaintiff would waive the conclusive effect of his judgment; this he can only assert by a demurrer to the plea. Clarke v. Day, 2 Leigh 172.

"It is abundantly clear that the plea of nil debet is, in this view of the case, the proper plea. The proceedings of a foreign court are never looked upon as a record, because they have not the force of a record. This position requires neither argument nor authority for its support." TUCKER, P. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

BROOKE, J., in Kemp v. Mundell, 9 Leigh 17, in referring to his opinion in Clarke v. Day, 2 Leigh 172, said: "I then entertained the opinion I do now,—that the judgments of our sister states, under the constitution of the United States and the acts of congress in pursuance thereof, are to be treated as domestic judgments; and that the effect of such judgments in the state from which they come, is a question of law, not a question of fact as in the case of foreign judgments. And I was surprised to hear it argued to the contrary in this case."

Thus, it will be observed that where the courts decide that a judgment of another state is a domestic judgment, and hence conclusive, the plea of nil debet is inadmissible, but, on the other hand, where they decide that such judgment is a foreign judgment, and for that reason not conclusive upon the courts of the home state, then the plea of nil debet is admissible. Clarke v. Day, 2 Leigh 172; Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

Defence of Want of Jurisdiction.—In any action or proceeding at law upon a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction between the parties thereto, in which such judgment may properly be used as evidence of the right thereby established, the defendant as a matter of defence at law cannot show that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of the defendant, except by an inspection of the record. Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692.

How Plead.—Where the defence of want of jurisdiction is set up, such defence ought to be specially pleaded, and cannot be made under the plea of nul tiel record, nor nil debet. Bowler v. Huston, 30 Gratt. 266.

General Issue.—"In those states, where the plea of nil debet is held to be a good plea to an action of debt on the judgment of a sister state, the defendant may impeach the justice of it under the plea of nil debet, upon the ground that he never had notice of the proceeding. But the party may also plead the matter specially, even in those states. And in those states in which nil debet is not a good plea, it is obvious, that the defendant is compelled to plead the special matter." TUCKER, P. Wilson v. Bank of Mt. Pleasant, 6 Leigh 570. See also, Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

Duplicity in Plea.—In Wilson v. Bank of Mt. Pleasant, 6 Leigh 570, the defendants pleaded that they never executed the power under which the judgment sued on was confessed, and that they had no notice of the commencement or pendency of the suit in the state where the judgment was rendered. The court held that an objection to the plea on the ground of duplicity was not sustainable.

Amendment of Declaration.—Upon trial of the issue of nil tiel record, the court may allow an amendment of the declaration; and, if the defendant consents, may proceed with the trial. But if the suit be in the same court in which the judgment was rendered, it is error to inspect a transcript only, instead of the original record. Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call 529.

Abstracts as Evidence.—An abstract as applied to records means ordinarily a mere brief, and not a copy from which it is taken, and a paper writing being only an abstract of an alleged judgment, and attested as an abstract, although attested by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered, cannot ordinarily be read as proof of the alleged judgment, where the existence of the judgment is denied. Dickinson v. Railroad Co., 7 W. Va. 391.

XII. EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST JUDGMENTS.

A court of chancery, under our system of jurisprudence, is not invested with power to annul a judgment, set aside the verdict of the jury and order a new trial at law. It may act on the parties, but not directly on the judgment, nor on the court which rendered it. A judgment by a court having jurisdiction to render it, can be vacated only by some direct proceeding at law, either in the court in which the judgment was recovered or some other court having appellate jurisdiction. Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811.

Refusal to Decide Points of Law.—Wherever a case is fully and fairly tried in a court of law, the decision is so far binding, that it can only be examined by an appellate court, and the chancery court cannot interfere, but if the court of law refuses to decide points of law, or to reserve them, it will submit such points to the jury, and if they decide inequitably, chancery may interfere. Picket v. Morris, 2 Wash. 255.

Suppression of Evidence.—If the parties in an action at law are at liberty by the issue to go fully into the examination of the evidence, and having done so, a verdict is found, after a fair trial, a court of chancery ought not to direct another trial, unless a part of the evidence was suppressed by the court. Ambler v. Wyld, 2 Wash. 36.

But the rule now is that after the cause has been once fully decided, by a court of common law, equity will not grant relief against the judgment. Terrell v. Dick, 1 Call 546.

Judgment on Forthcoming Bond.—Judgment on a forthcoming bond, cannot be relieved against in equity on the ground that a slave which, by the condition of the bond, was to be forthcoming on a given day, had run away and could not be produced, even if a more valuable slave was offered in his stead. Cole v. Fenwick, Gilmer 134.

Failure to Secure Evidence.—But where the judgment debtor could not secure the evidence for his defence until too late to move for a new trial, relief will be granted against the judgment in equity. Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246; Harvey v. Seashol, 4 W. Va. 115.

Gaming Debt.—A court of equity has jurisdiction to relieve against a judgment founded on a gaming debt, although the party failed to defend himself at law, and gives no good reason for such failure, and though he made no effort to obtain a new trial in the common-law court. Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. 214; White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.

Where a judgment has been obtained against the obligor, on a bond for money won at gaming, and in the absence of any fraudulent representations by the obligor, a court of equity will relieve the obligor against the judgment on the ground of the original turpitude of the transaction. Woodson v. Barrett, 2 H. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612.

Trust and Confidence.—In a case involving trust and confidence, and in which it appears reasonable to allow the complainant the benefit of the defendant's oath, relief may be given in equity, although the party neglected to make the proper defence at law. Spencer v. Wilson, 4 Munf. 130.

Defect of Title.—Where a purchaser comes into a court of equity for relief against a judgment at law, on the ground of a defect in the vendor's title to a part of the tract of land purchased, it is not enough for him to allege such defect or want of title; he must prove an actual eviction, or superior title in some other person. Yancey v. Lewis, 4 H. & M. 390. See Amick v. Bowyer, 8 W. Va. 7.

Remedy by Statute.—Generally, a party to a judgment or decree against him, who has been proceeded against by order of publication must obtain relief, if he has defence against the claim on which the action or proceeding in which the judgment or decree is had, by adopting the remedy prescribed by the statute in such cases. Vance v. Snyder, 6 W. Va. 24.

A. GROUNDS OF RELIEF—GENERAL RULE.—It has become a principle, and maxim of equity, as well settled as any other whatever, that a party will not be entertained in a court of equity, on a bill seeking relief against a judgment at law, which has been rendered against him in consequence of his default upon grounds which might have been successfully taken in the court of law, unless some reason founded in fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the party be shown, why the defence was not made in that court. Alford v. Moore, 15 W. Va. 597; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286; Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 141; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434; Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 509; Smith v. McLain, 11 W. Va. 654; Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79; Alleman v. Kight, 19 W. Va. 201; Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 800; Price v. Harner, 17 W. Va. 523; Sayre v. Harpold, 38 W. Va. 553, 11 S. E. Rep. 16; Haseltine v. Brickey, 16 Gratt. 120; Mackey v. Mackey, 29 Gratt. 158; Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146; Turner v. Davis, 7 Leigh 237; Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336; Vanlew v. Bohannon, 4 Rand. 537; Farmers' Bank v. Vanmeter, 4 Rand. 553; Bierne v. Mann, 5 Leigh 364; Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 13 Gratt. 511; Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 588; Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. Rep. 733; Cabell v. Roberts, 6 Rand. 580; Fenwick v. McMurdo, 2 Munf. 244, approved in Oswald v. Tyler, 4 Rand. 37. See Thompson v. M. & M. Bank, 3 W. Va. 651; Coleman v. Anderson, 29 Gratt. 425; Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379.

"It would perhaps seem strange, that a court of equity should not possess the power of relieving against a judgment at law, obviously unjust, and against the right of the cause. In cases of fraud, surprise, accident, trust, and the like, where that court has complete jurisdiction, it is within its peculiar province to grant relief, where the parties can-

mentioned," is substantially good, the sum being surplusage, and the conclusion of the verdict being, of itself, sufficient to show the real sum demanded. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. 182.

Extent of Recovery.—A high sheriff, against whom a judgment is rendered, for the default or misconduct of his deputy, is entitled to recover of the deputy, not only the amount of the original judgment, but all additions thereto arising from the coroner's commissions included in a forthcoming bond, costs of the judgment on that bond, and costs and damages on appeals, or writs of supersedeas, until its affirmance by the court of appeals. But a judgment in his favor against the deputy, if rendered for more damages than have been recovered against himself, ought to be reversed with costs. Stowers v. Smith, 5 Munf. 401.

Limitation to Sue.—The Act of 1 Rev. Code, ch. 128, § 5, p. 489, limiting proceedings upon judgments, applies to judgments "when assets" or "if assets" and will begin to run from the date of the judgment. Braxton v. Wood, 4 Gratt. 25.

Judgments Quando Acciderint.—But it was held in Smith v. Charlton, 7 Gratt. 425, that a judgment quando acciderint does not come within the operation of the statute of limitations in relation to judgments.

Revival against Personal Representative.—Moreover, a judgment obtained against a testator in his lifetime, and not revived against his personal representative after his death, within five years from the time of his qualification, is barred by the statute of limitations. Peyton v. Carr, 1 Rand. 436.

A. PLEAS.

1. NUL TIEL RECORD.

Foreign Judgment.—If the court rendering a judgment is a foreign court, it is not judicially known by us as a court of record, and its judgments are not considered as records, hence it follows that the plea of nul tiel record is bad, because it is not applicable to foreign judgments. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

"The maxim of the law is, that the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, imports absolute verity, and its truth cannot be questioned, either by showing, otherwise than by the record itself, that the court had no jurisdiction, or that its jurisdiction was fraudulently obtained. Both upon the merits of the cause of action, and upon all jurisdictional facts, the record imports absolute verity in law, and is to be tried by the court upon inspection of the record only. Hence at law, the validity of the judgment can be put in issue by the plea nul tiel record only, and if on inspection it turns out that the plea is not true, there is an end of the controversy. If its validity is to be impeached from without some other appropriate remedy must be found." Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692. See Smith v. Johnson, 44 W. Va. 278, 20 S. E. Rep. 509.

2. NIL DEBET.—The plea of nil debet is not a good plea to an action of debt on a judgment of another state of the Union, for the reason that the judgments of sister states, being regarded as domestic judgments, are conclusive in other states, and hence the merits cannot be re-examined. Kemp v. Mundell, 9 Leigh 12.

In an action of debt brought in Virginia upon a judgment of the circuit court of the District of Columbia, a plea of nil debet is proper, but a special plea, alleging that the judgment was recovered on a bill of exchange drawn while the party was in a state of intoxication is an improper plea. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

District of Columbia.—In was the unanimous opinion of the court in Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628, that the judgments of the District of Columbia are to be regarded as foreign judgments in the courts of Virginia, and hence the plea of nil debet, in action on such judgment, would be a good plea. The court based its opinion on the ground that the full faith and credit clause of the constitution of the United States and the acts of congress did not apply to the District of Columbia but only to the states.

In an action of debt on judgments of the courts of Kentucky the plea of nil debet is not a good plea. That plea assumes that the judgment is not conclusive, and if issue were taken on the plea, the plaintiff would waive the conclusive effect of his judgment; this he can only assert by a demurrer to the plea. Clarke v. Day, 3 Leigh 172.

"It is abundantly clear that the plea of nil debet is, in this view of the case, the proper plea. The proceedings of a foreign court are never looked upon as a record, because they have not the force of a record. This position requires neither argument nor authority for its support." TUCKER, P. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

BROOKE, J., in Kemp v. Mundell, 9 Leigh 17, in referring to his opinion in Clarke v. Day, 3 Leigh 172, said: "I then entertained the opinion I do now,—that the judgments of our sister states, under the constitution of the United States and the acts of congress in pursuance thereof, are to be treated as domestic judgments; and that the effect of such judgments in the state from which they come, is a question of law, not a question of fact as in the case of foreign judgments. And I was surprised to hear it argued to the contrary in this case."

Thus, it will be observed that where the courts decide that a judgment of another state is a domestic judgment, and hence conclusive, the plea of nil debet is inadmissible, but, on the other hand, where they decide that such judgment is a foreign judgment, and for that reason not conclusive upon the courts of the home state, then the plea of nil debet is admissible. Clarke v. Day, 3 Leigh 172; Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

Defence of Want of Jurisdiction.—In any action or proceeding at law upon a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction between the parties thereto, in which such judgment may properly be used as evidence of the right thereby established, the defendant as a matter of defence at law cannot show that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of the defendant, except by an inspection of the record. Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692.

How Plead.—Where the defence of want of jurisdiction is set up, such defence ought to be specially pleaded, and cannot be made under the plea of nul tiel record, nor nil debet. Bowler v. Huston, 30 Gratt. 266.

General Issue.—"In those states, where the plea of nil debet is held to be a good plea to an action of debt on the judgment of a sister state, the defendant may impeach the justice of it under the plea of nil debet, upon the ground that he never had notice of the proceeding. But the party may also plead the matter specially, even in those states. And in those states in which nil debet is not a good plea, it is obvious, that the defendant is compelled to plead the special matter." TUCKER, P. Wilson v. Bank of Mt. Pleasant, 6 Leigh 570. See also, Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 628.

Duplicity in Plea.—In Wilson v. Bank of Mt. Pleasant, 6 Leigh 570, the defendants pleaded that they never executed the power under which the judgment sued on was confessed, and that they had no notice of the commencement or pendency of the suit in the state where the judgment was rendered. The court held that an objection to the plea on the ground of duplicity was not sustainable.

Amendment of Declaration.—Upon trial of the issue of nil tiel record, the court may allow an amendment of the declaration; and, if the defendant consents, may proceed with the trial. But if the suit be in the same court in which the judgment was rendered, it is error to inspect a transcript only, instead of the original record. Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call 529.

Abstracts as Evidence.—An abstract as applied to records means ordinarily a mere brief, and not a copy from which it is taken, and a paper writing being only an abstract of an alleged judgment, and attested as an abstract, although attested by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered, cannot ordinarily be read as proof of the alleged judgment, where the existence of the judgment is denied. Dickinson v. Railroad Co., 7 W. Va. 390.

XII. EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST JUDGMENTS.

A court of chancery, under our system of jurisprudence, is not invested with power to annul a judgment, set aside the verdict of the jury and order a new trial at law. It may act on the parties, but not directly on the judgment, nor on the court which rendered it. A judgment by a court having jurisdiction to render it, can be vacated only by some direct proceeding at law, either in the court in which the judgment was recovered or some other court having appellate jurisdiction. Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811.

Refusal to Decide Points of Law.—Wherever a case is fully and fairly tried in a court of law, the decision is so far binding, that it can only be examined by an appellate court, and the chancery court cannot interfere, but if the court of law refuses to decide points of law, or to reserve them, it will submit such points to the jury, and if they decide inequitably, chancery may interfere. Pickett v. Morris, 2 Wash. 255.

Suppression of Evidence.—If the parties in an action at law are at liberty by the issue to go fully into the examination of the evidence, and having done so, a verdict is found, after a fair trial, a court of chancery ought not to direct another trial, unless a part of the evidence was suppressed by the court. Ambler v. Wyld, 2 Wash. 36.

But the rule now is that after the cause has been once fully decided, by a court of common law, equity will not grant relief against the judgment. Terrell v. Dick, 1 Call 546.

Judgment on Forthcoming Bond.—Judgment on a forthcoming bond, cannot be relieved against in equity on the ground that a slave which, by the condition of the bond, was to be forthcoming on a given day, had run away and could not be produced, even if a more valuable slave was offered in his stead. Cole v. Fenwick, Gilmer 184.

Failure to Secure Evidence.—But where the judgment debtor could not secure the evidence for his defence until too late to move for a new trial, relief will be granted against the judgment in equity. Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246; Harvey v. Seashol, 4 W. Va. 115.

Gaming Debt.—A court of equity has jurisdiction to relieve against a judgment founded on a gaming debt, although the party failed to defend himself at law, and gives no good reason for such failure, and though he made no effort to obtain a new trial in the common-law court. Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. 214; White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.

Where a judgment has been obtained against the obligor, on a bond for money won at gaming, and in the absence of any fraudulent representations by the obligor, a court of equity will relieve the obligor against the judgment on the ground of the original turpitude of the transaction. Woodson v. Barrett, 2 H. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612.

Trust and Confidence.—In a case involving trust and confidence, and in which it appears reasonable to allow the complainant the benefit of the defendant's oath, relief may be given in equity, although the party neglected to make the proper defence at law. Spencer v. Wilson, 4 Munf. 180.

Defect of Title.—Where a purchaser comes into a court of equity for relief against a judgment at law, on the ground of a defect in the vendor's title to a part of the tract of land purchased, it is not enough for him to allege such defect or want of title; he must prove an actual eviction, or superior title in some other person. Yancey v. Lewis, 4 H. & M. 890. See Amick v. Bowyer, 3 W. Va. 7.

Remedy by Statute.—Generally, a party to a judgment or decree against him, who has been proceeded against by order of publication must obtain relief, if he has defence against the claim on which the action or proceeding in which the judgment or decree is had, by adopting the remedy prescribed by the statute in such cases. Vance v. Snyder, 6 W. Va. 24.

A. GROUNDS OF RELIEF—GENERAL RULE.—It has become a principle, and maxim of equity, as well settled as any other whatever, that a party will not be entertained in a court of equity, on a bill seeking relief against a judgment at law, which has been rendered against him in consequence of his default upon grounds which might have been successfully taken in the court of law, unless some reason founded in fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the party be shown, why the defence was not made in that court. Alford v. Moore, 15 W. Va. 597; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286; Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 141; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 484; Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 509; Smith v. McLain, 11 W. Va. 654; Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79; Alleman v. Kight, 19 W. Va. 201; Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 800; Price v. Harner, 17 W. Va. 523; Sayre v. Harpold, 33 W. Va. 553, 11 S. E. Rep. 16; Haseltine v. Brickey, 16 Gratt. 120; Mackey v. Mackey, 29 Gratt. 158; Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146; Turner v. Davis, 7 Leigh 237; Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 336; Vanlew v. Bohannon, 4 Rand. 537; Farmers' Bank v. Vanmeter, 4 Rand. 553; Bierne v. Mann, 5 Leigh 364; Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 18 Gratt. 511; Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 588; Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. Rep. 733; Cabell v. Roberts, 6 Rand. 580; Fenwick v. McMurdo, 2 Munf. 244, approved in Oswald v. Tyler, 4 Rand. 37. See Thompson v. M. & M. Bank, 3 W. Va. 651; Coleman v. Anderson, 29 Gratt. 425; Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379.

"It would perhaps seem strange, that a court of equity should not possess the power of relieving against a judgment at law, obviously unjust, and against the right of the cause. In cases of fraud, surprise, accident, trust, and the like, where that court has complete jurisdiction, it is within its peculiar province to grant relief, where the parties cannot obtain it at law. * * * I admit, that the courts of law and equity should be confined within their proper spheres, and that the line which separates their respective jurisdictions should be carefully guarded." Picket v. Morris, 2 Wash. 272.

It is not the province of courts of equity to see that justice is done, in the abstract. in all possible cases, but only to lend its aid, when from any cause, without his own default or neglect, a party defendant at law, cannot have justice done him in the courts of law; and this is true, where the discounts, abatements or damages, which are claimed to be set off in equity, arise out of a breach of the same contract on which the judgment at law is founded. Cabell v. Roberts, 6 Rand. 580.

Error in Judgment.—But error in a judgment at law, however apparent, is no ground for relief in equity, but the party must show some special equitable circumstances, such as fraud or surprise, to entitle him to the interposition of a court of chancery. Turpin v. Thomas, 2 H. & M. 189.

Mere Error in Law Court.—So chancery will not enjoin a judgment at law and grant a new trial merely for error in the law court, but only because of fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstance unknown to the party before judgment, and beyond his control. Graham v. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 82 S. E. Rep. 245.

Mere Error in Law.—Moreover, a court of equity will not relieve against the judgment, on the ground of error in law only; it must appear that justice requires its interposition, that the party was prevented from obtaining it by the legal forms of pleadings, or by some fraud, accident, or mistake. Kincaid v. Cunningham, 2 Munf. 1.

Judgment Contrary to Equity.—No rule of law is better settled than that a court of equity will not relieve against a judgment on the ground of its being contrary to equity unless the defendant was ignorant of the ground of defence, or was prevented from availing himself of it by fraud or accident, unmixed with fault or negligence on his part. Gentry v. Allen, 32 Gratt. 254; Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548.

Negligence of Agents.—But equity will not relieve against a judgment at law if the omission of the defendant to avail himself of his defence at law was unmixed with any negligence in himself or his agents. Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548.

Thus the negligence of an officer of a corporation, in allowing a judgment to be rendered against his corporation as garnishee when the debt had been previously assigned to another party, and notice thereof had been given to another officer, will exclude the corporation from relief in equity against the judgment. Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548.

Parties Plaintiff.—No person can enjoin a judgment at law, to which he is not a party, but if he is aggrieved, he should pray an injunction to the execution. Jordon v. Williams, 3 Rand. 501.

B. BILLS FOR NEW TRIALS AND INJUNCTION.

1. DEFENCES NOT AVAILABLE AT LAW.—In general, any facts which prove it to be against conscience to execute a judgment, and of which the injured party could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself at law, but was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or agents, will authorize a court of equity to interfere by injunction to restrain the adverse party from availing himself of such judgment. Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. 67.

"It may be stated as a general principle, in regard to injunctions after a judgment at law, that any facts which prove it to be against conscience to execute such judgment, and of which the injured party could not have availed himself in a court of law, and of which he might have availed himself in a court of law, but was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or agents, will authorize a court of equity to interfere by injunction to restrain the adverse party from availing himself of such judgments.

* * * Neither will a court of equity relieve against a judgment at law where the case in equity proceeds upon a defence equally available at law, but the plaintiff must establish some special grounds for relief. And this doctrine goes still further, for it is the general rule that a defence cannot be set up as a ground for a bill in equity for an injunction which has been fully and fairly tried at law, although it may be the opinion of a court of equity that the defence ought to have been sustained at law." Ensign Mfg. Co. v. McGinnis, 30 W. Va. 532, 4 S. E. Rep. 782. See Lewis v. Wyatt, 2 Rand. 114; Stafford v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 63; Franks v. Morris, 9 W. Va. 664; Spotswood v. Higgenbotham, 6 Munf. 318; Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 566.

A court of equity will never enjoin a judgment, on the ground that it would have been reversible if the proper steps had been taken in the court of law, but by mistake a confession of judgment had been entered. Bank v. Vanmeter, 4 Rand. 558.

Plaintiff Entitled to Credits.—Where on a bill of injunction, to stay proceedings on a judgment at law, if it appear from the commissioner's report, not excepted to by the defendant, that the plaintiff is entitled to a credit which the defendant failed to give, the court ought not to set aside the order for account, and dismiss the bill, on the ground that the plaintiff had neglected to carry into effect a previous order referring, by consent of the parties, the accounts between them to a different commissioner; but the last order having been made on the defendant's motion, the report being excepted to for want of notice, to the plaintiff, of the time and place of taking the account, and such exception appearing well founded, a new account ought to be directed. Roberts v. Jordans, 3 Munf. 486.

If a bill of injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment, charges the plaintiff at law with having failed to do an act on which the equity of his claim depends, and in his answer, he takes no notice of that allegation, the court, on the hearing, will consider this an admission that he has not done the act in question, and will decree against him without any exception to the answer, or any interlocutory order taking the bill for confessed in part. Page v. Winston, 3 Munf. 298.

Reasons for Rule.—After a trial at law, new trials should not be granted by a court of equity, merely because injustice may have been done at law. A party, to entitle himself to a new trial, must show that he has been guilty of no laches; that he has done everything that could be reasonably required of him, to obtain relief at law. A bill for a new trial, is watched by equity with extreme jealousy. It must see that injustice has been done, not merely through the inattention of the parties, but for such causes as, in cases of complicated accounts, where the party has not made defence, because it was impossible for him to do it effectually at law, or where a verdict has been obtained by fraud, or where a party has possessed himself improperly of something, by means of which he has an unconscientious advantage at law, which equity will either put out of the way or restrain him from using. But, without circumstances of this kind, equity never interferes to grant a new trial of a matter, which has already been discussed in a court of law, and over which the court of law had full jurisdiction. Per CARR, J. Faulkner v. Harwood, 6 Rand. 125; Arthur v. Chavis, 6 Rand. 144.

Judgment on Fraudulent Deed of Trust.—Where property conveyed by a deed of trust is seized in execution by judgment creditors of the grantor and sold, an indemnity bond being given, and in an action by the trustee on the bond the judgment creditors set up that the deed was fraudulent, but failed to prove it, and judgment is rendered against them, and subsequently they filed a bill in equity on the ground of after-discovered evidence, establishing the fraud as to some of the debts secured, and asking for an injunction against the judgment, that a new trial be granted, for an accounting by the trustee and for general relief, it was held, among other things, that the complainant had a right to call for an account of the trust subject, and to have it disposed of among all the parties according to their respective rights. Billups v. Sears, 5 Gratt. 81.

Trial of Caveat.—Although a party may be let into a court of equity, on grounds which he could not have used on the trial of a caveat, and which, in fact, make another case (in reference to that which he might have availed himself of on such trial), or upon a case suggesting and proving that he was prevented by fraud or accident from prosecuting his caveat: he is not to be sustained in a court of equity on such grounds as were or might have been brought forward on the trial of the caveat. Noland v. Cromwell, 4 Munf. 155. But see Christian v. Christian, 6 Munf. 584.

Right to Redeem Property.—Where a bill shows an equitable right in a wife to redeem her husband's property from a tax sale, under a statutory provision, and the defence could not have been pleaded at law, equity will grant an injunction at her suit against a judgment in ejectment for possession against her husband, based on the tax title. Sperry v. Gibson, 3 W. Va. 522.

Condemnation Proceedings.—A court of equity does not interfere with judgments at law unless the complainant has an equitable defence of which he could not avail himself at law, or had a good defence at law which he was prevented from availing himself of by fraud or accident unmixed with negligence in himself or his agents. Thus equity has no jurisdiction to declare a judgment in condemnation proceedings null and void because it constitutes a cloud upon the title, where the complainant is out of possession of the land. He has a complete remedy at law in an action of ejectment for the recovery of the land. L. & N. R. Co. v. Taylor, 93 Va. 226, 24 S. E. Rep. 1012.

"Now I do not say, that the county court, sitting as a court of law, could not upon motion, in a summary way, try these questions; but I do say, that in that mode, it would not have afforded as safe or as convenient a tribunal for the trial of them, as a court of equity upon regular pleadings and proofs. And this consideration, it will be recollected, forms one of the grounds in equity for assuming jurisdiction. But there is another, perhaps a stronger ground. The indorsement of the execution for Crawford's benefit, gave him nothing but an equitable right, which could have no weight in a court of law, belonged exclusively to equity, and must finally have brought the cause there for decision." Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85.

It is a clearly-established principle, that a judgment of a court of common law, though erroneous, given on a legal question, shall never be corrected or disturbed in equity, upon grounds which were proper for the consideration of the common-law courts, unless the applicant to the court of equity can show some particular circumstances to have taken place, operating as an impediment to his availing himself of those grounds upon the trial at law, for a court of equity, ought not, by a side wind, to undertake to reverse a common-law judgment, although from principles before established in other cases, they would probably reverse the judgment, if regularly brought before them, on the common-law side of the court. And it is better even in the eye of a court of equity, that an individual should suffer an injury, arising from his own acts and conduct, than that court should, with the view of relieving him, usurp a jurisdiction prohibited by law, and break down the partitions wisely established in our judiciary system. Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147.

Judgment on False Return of Process.—"One line of cases holds that a party who had been injured by a judgment rendered in his absence may have relief in equity if he can succeed in showing that he was not summoned, and did not hear of the proceedings in time to make defence or to obtain a new trial, and that he has a meritorious defence. Freem. on Judgm. sec. 495. Another class of cases holds that a court of equity cannot grant relief in such a case unless the false return of service was procured or induced by the plaintiff, or he can in some way be connected with the deception; thus likening the case to those cases in which the defendant has been prevented from setting up his defence by the trickery or fraud of his adversary. The rule of this latter class of cases is perhaps the better doctrine. The risk of opening a judgment or decree on an allegation which, like that of the failure to serve process, or the want of notice, depends upon the uncertain testimony of witnesses, is so great that the injured party should be left to his remedy in the same case where relief can be had in that case, or to his remedy against the officer who has made the false return, unless that return was in some way procured or induced by the plaintiff, or he is in some way responsible for the defendant's want of notice of the suit, or of the proceedings therein." Per BUCHANAN, J. Preston v. Kindrick, 94 Va. 760, 27 S. E. Rep. 588. See Ramsburg v. Kline, 96 Va. 465, 31 S. E. Rep. 608.

Unauthorized Appearance by Attorney.—When a defendant, by bill in equity, seeks to nullify a judgment at law obtained against him without service of process, upon the unauthorized appearance by attorney, to succeed he must have a clear preponderance of evidence sustaining the allegations of his bill. Smith v. Johnson, 44 W. Va. 278, 29 S. E. Rep. 509. See also, Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692.

It was held in Raub v. Otterback, 89 Va. 645, 16 S. E. Rep. 938, that the testimony of one of the defendants was properly admitted, to the effect that he never knew either of the attorneys who appeared in the original chancery proceedings in which the decree was rendered, that he never employed them, and that he never heard of the suit until recently, where, unless counsel did actually appear for him with his authority, the court never acquired jurisdiction.

If it appears by the record that an attorney appeared for the defendant in a court of general jurisdiction, such appearance gives the court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant; and if the attorney so appeared without his authority, that fact cannot be shown as a defence at law in any action or proceeding upon the judgment, where the same may properly be used as evidence of the right thereby established. Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692.

2. DEFENCES AVAILABLE AT LAW OR IN EQUITY.

Usury.—It is well settled in Virginia that a court of equity will interfere with a judgment at law, to relieve against usury. Greer v. Hale, 95 Va. 533, 28 S. E. Rep. 873.

But where relief is sought in equity, against a judgment at law, on the ground of usury, the bill must put the usury directly in issue. Brown v. Toell, 5 Rand. 543. See also, Bloss v. Hull, 27 W. Va. 503.

"The rule is established that a party having a good legal defence shall not, after a judgment at law, come into a court of equity upon the legal matter without alleging and proving good excuse for not using it at law; and moreover a court of equity will not grant relief merely because injustice has been done." Allen v. Hamilton, 9 Gratt. 267; Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40; Ensign Mfg. Co. v. McGinnis, 30 W. Va. 532, 4 S. E. Rep. 782; Collins v. Jones, 6 Leigh 530, 29 Am. Dec. 216; Morgan v. Carson, 7 Leigh 238.

Equity will relieve against a judgment at law, based on a decision that a bond bears more than legal interest, and for that reason is deemed usurious in a court of law, and will decree just compensation, if the transaction be fair. Braxton v. Willing, 4 Call 288.

Effect of Statutes.—And the change in the statute, declaring that usurious contracts shall be deemed for an illegal consideration, instead of void, as formerly, furnishes no warrant for departing from the long-established rule that a court of equity will go behind a judgment, to relieve against usury. Greer v. Hale, 95 Va. 533, 28 S. E. Rep. 873; Bank v. Fugate, 93 Va. 821, 23 S. E. Rep. 884; Young v. Scott, 4 Rand. 415.

Evidence Doubtful—Laches.—But a court of equity will refuse to grant relief on the ground that the judgment is for usury, where the evidence is doubtful and there has been a long delay. Terry v. Dickinson, 75 Va. 475.

Refusal of New Trial.—After a verdict for the plaintiff in an action sounding in damages, and a refusal by the court of law to grant a new trial, a court of equity ought cautiously to interpose. Meredith v. Johns, 1 H. & M. 584.

Refusal to Continue.—If defendant at law be ruled into a trial in the absence of some of the witnesses, to whose materiality he has made affidavit, he may except to the opinion of the court, and proceed to obtain relief in superior court of common law, but not in chancery. Syme v. Montague, 4 H. & M. 180.

Discharge of Bond.—In a suit in equity to obtain relief against a judgment obtained on a bond, if the bond has been discharged, that fact cannot avail the complainant, as he should have set it up as a defence in the action on the bond. Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. Rep. 733.

Failure of Consideration.—Under sec. 5, 6, ch. 126, Code of W. Va., equity has jurisdiction on the three grounds, of failure of consideration, fraud in the procurement of the note, and breach of warranty of title to personal property, and it expressly gives the right to make defence at law, or omit that and go into equity, as the debtor prefers, without giving any excuse for not defending at law. Jarrett v. Goodnow, 39 W. Va. 602, 20 S. E. Rep. 575; Bias v. Vickers, 27 W. Va. 456. See Dorsey v. Shepherd, 9 W. Va. 57.

For a party entitled to plead in an action at law the defences specified in Code W. Va., ch. 126, sec. 5, need not plead them in the action, but may avail himself of them in equity without any excuse for not using them at law. Jarrett v. Goodnow, 39 W. Va. 602, 20 S. E. Rep. 575; Bias v. Vickers, 27 W. Va. 456.

Need Not Allege Excuse.—Where failure of consideration is a defence relied upon against a bond, for the payment of money, such defence is an equitable one, and the party entitled to make it is not bound to make it, in the court of law—it is at his option whether he will make such defence in the court of law or equity, and if judgment had been obtained on the bond in a court of law, it is not necessary to entitle him to make his defence in equity against the judgment, that he should aver in his bill any excuse, for not making such defence in the action at law. Code W. Va., ch. 126, sec. 6; Ludington v. Tiffany, 6 W. Va. 11.

Is Bound by His Election.—Though where statute gives the right to a defendant to defend at law, or obtain relief in equity, and he avails himself of his right to make his defence at law and a judgment is given against him, he cannot afterwards obtain relief in equity. Knott v. Seamands, 25 W. Va. 99; Sanders v. Branson, 22 Gratt. 364; Penn v. Reynolds, 23 Gratt. 518; 1 Barton's Ch. Pr. (3d Ed.) 41; Bias v. Vickers, 27 W. Va. 456.

After a party has been fully heard in a court of law, in a case in which the rule is the same in equity as at law, he shall not be permitted to go into a court of equity on the same controverted points. Morris v. Ross, 2 H. & M. 408.

Fraud, Accident, Surprise, Mistake.—Courts of equity have always granted relief, when it is shown that the reason why the defence was not made at law, was founded in fraud, accident, surprise, mistake, or some adventitious circumstance beyond the control of the party. Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 141; Mason v. Nelson, 11 Leigh 237; Mosby v. Haskins, 4 H. & M. 427; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434; Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546; Erwin v. Vint, 6 Munf. 267; Price v. Fuqua, 4 Munf. 68; Callaway v. Alexander, 8 Leigh 114; Anderson v. Woodford, 8 Leigh 319; Halcomb v. Innis, 4 Call 364; McFarland v. Dilly, 5 W. Va. 185; Thomas v. Jones, 98 Va. 323, 36 S. E. Rep. 332.

"Courts of equity relieve against judgments at law upon the ground that the party injuriously affected thereby has a defence of which he could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself, but was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or neglect on his part. * * * The cases fully establish, that after a trial at law, a party to entitle himself to have a new trial granted by a court of equity, must show that he has been guilty of no laches; that he has done everything that could reasonably be required of him to obtain relief at law. Without such excuse, which is to be judged of according to the circumstances, he cannot get relief in equity." Per STAPLES, J.

Green v. Massie, 21 Gratt. 358; Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 586.

Moreover, it is immaterial that an act was done in good faith and without fraudulent intent, for if by it an advantage has been obtained which it is against good conscience to enjoy, a court of equity will relieve against it. Thomas v. Jones, 98 Va. 823, 36 S. E. Rep. 382, citing Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 141.

Conditioned upon Payment of Costs.—A complainant whose remedy was complete at common law, but who by accident was prevented from making it there, may be relieved against the judgment, but ought to pay the costs in chancery. Degraffenreid v. Donald, 2 H. & M. 10.

Prevented from Suffering Nonsuit.—But where a plaintiff suffers a verdict and judgment to go against him at law, he cannot apply to a court of equity to grant him a new trial, on the ground of his having been surprised at the trial at law, by unexpected evidence, unless he was prevented by fraud or accident from suffering nonsuit. Oswald v. Tyler, 4 Rand. 19; Barrett v. Floyd, 3 Call 581.

Gaming Contracts.—In an action at law on a promise founded on a gaming consideration, if the defendant is surprised at the trial, and there is a verdict and judgment against him, he may come into equity for relief, though he made no effort to obtain a new trial in the common-law court. White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.

Mutual Mistake of Law.—But a court of equity will not relieve against a judgment a party who was prevented from making his defence at law by a mistake of law, although it was a mutual mistake by both parties to the suit. Richmond, etc., Co. v. Shippen, 2 P. & H. 327.

Mistake of Clerk.

Contra.—A judgment, however, against a sheriff, under a mistaken opinion of the clerk as to the law, that the bail piece was insufficient, the counsel having agreed that it might be filed, was relieved against in equity. Smith v. Wallace, 1 Wash. 254.

Mistake by Jury.—So also, a judgment at law may be enjoined on the ground of mistake by the jury, ascertained by after-discovered evidence. Rust v. Ware, 6 Gratt. 50.

Mistake, Miscalculation.—Relief against a judgment at law rendered by a mistake and miscalculation of the jury will be granted by a court of equity, where the evidence of such mistake and miscalculation would, if discovered in time, have furnished a good ground for a new trial. And when the case is one that requires the settlement of accounts, the court of appeals will not direct a new trial at law, but will order a reference to a commissioner, and will itself give the proper relief. Rust v. Ware, 6 Gratt. 50.

Assurances, Promises.—But where the defendant at law has been prevented from making his defence, by the assurances or promises of the plaintiff's counsel, a court of equity will grant relief. Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 136; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546.

Reliance on Statements of Others.—Where a defendant who had an adequate remedy at law, has been prevented from resorting to it, by a fraudulent representation or promise of the plaintiff, he ought to be relieved in equity. Poindexter v. Waddy, 6 Munf. 418; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434. See also, Lee v. Baird, 4 H. & M. 453.

A party against whom a judgment has been entered on a bond cannot obtain relief in equity against such a judgment, on the ground that he was acting as the agent of the judgment plaintiff in the sale of territory in which to sell a patented article, and that such bond was only "a sham," by which to induce others to purchase patent rights, and was never to be enforced against him, this being an attempt to perpetrate a palpable fraud upon innocent strangers, which cannot be countenanced or upheld in equity. In such case, the parties being in pari delicto, the complainant is not entitled to relief. Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. Rep. 733.

Acts and Representations.—The courts of equity do not interfere with judgment at law, unless the failure of the complainant to successfully defend at law was because of the acts or the representations of the opposite party, or his agents, or was the result of fraud, accident, or surprise, or some other adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the complainant. Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 660, 5 S. E. Rep. 697.

Relief will always be granted where failure to defend at law resulted from the acts or misrepresentations of the opposite party, or his agents, or from fraud, accident, surprise, or some other adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the party complaining. Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546; Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Holland v. Trotter, 22 Gratt. 144.

For example, in the case of Moore v. Lipscombe, supra, the defendant brought assumpsit against the complainant, and filed a copy of the account, which was served with the summons on the complainant. At the next term there was a judgment by default, on account of the complainant's absence from the state, and failure to make defence, he relying on the statement of the defendant's attorney, that he might rest assured that there would be no trial at that term as he was incapable of attending the court, by reason of an accident. The complainant obtained an injunction to the judgment, and on the hearing an issue was directed to ascertain the amount, if any, due the defendant from the complainant. On appeal it was held that the case was proper for equitable relief, and the direction of the issue was the proper course. Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546; Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 815.

Sufficiency of Allegations.—Where a bill shows a case for the interference of a court of equity, on the ground that the action at law was not defended because the plaintiff had promised to take no judgment against the party, and assured him that it was unnecessary to employ counsel, and the bill further shows that a plea was put in by counsel for the defendant, without any allegation that such appearance was unauthorized, the bill is fatally defective. Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434.

Injustice Merely.—It is well settled that to entitle a party to relief in equity against a judgment at law, it is not sufficient to show merely that injustice has been done, but the party applying must show that he has been guilty of no laches, and that he has done everything that could be reasonably required of him to render his defence effectual at law. Otherwise relief will be denied, for "it is more important that there should be an end of litigation, than that justice be done in every case." Dey v. Martin, 78 Va. 1; Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. 67; Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40; Bateman v. Willoe, 1 Sch. & Tef. 201.

Although it may be manifest that great injustice has been done a defendant at law, by the verdict and judgment against him there, yet if this injustice has not been produced by any fraud or surprise on the part of the plaintiff, but is the result either of the defendant's own negligence, or of his counsel's ignorance or bad management, a court of equity can give him no relief. Tapp v. Rankin, 9 Leigh 478.

"The grounds on which a court of equity will interfere to grant relief against a judgment at law in the nature of a new trial, are confessedly somewhat narrow and restricted. It is not sufficient to show that injustice has been done, but it must appear also that it was not occasioned by the inattention of the party complaining." LEE, J. Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40. See Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79; Sperry v. Gibson, 8 W. Va. 525.

Insufficient Allegations.—Where a bill in chancery, for setting aside and enjoining a judgment, presents no substantial grounds for equitable interference, it is properly dismissed, as no errors committed by the court can be considered prejudicial to the plaintiff. Rollins v. National Casket Co., 40 W. Va. 590, 21 S. E. Rep. 722.

Insanity.—It is a sufficient ground for a perpetual injunction to a judgment against the defendant in an action of slander, that, at the time of speaking the defamatory words and of the recovery of judgment, he was insane, or partially deranged, on the subject in relation to which the words were spoken. Horner v. Marshall, 5 Munf. 466.

Laches—Eighteen Years.—Where a bill to set aside a judgment on the ground of usury, simply says that the debt is usurious, without stating the usurious interest taken, and the defendant denies the usury and the charge of usury is not sustained by competent evidence, the court will not, after a long delay (eighteen years), set aside the judgment and grant a new trial. Terry v. Dickinson, 75 Va. 475.

So also, one who was defendant in an action to subject property to the payment of a judgment against him may not, after the lapse of twenty-five years after the decree of sale and confirmation, where the land has increased in value and the condition of the parties has changed, reopen the case and relitigate the matters which were fully adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction. Culbertson v. Stevens, 82 Va. 406, 4 S. E. Rep. 607.

Six Years' Delay—Fraud.—So where a bill to obtain relief against a judgment on a bond, which it was alleged was procured by fraud, was not filed until six years after the perpetration of the fraud, relief was refused on the ground of unreasonable delay; the rule being that where a party has the right to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud, he must rescind at once on discovering the fraud, or as soon thereafter as circumstances will permit; for he is not bound to rescind, and any unreasonable delay, especially if it be injurious to the other party, will be regarded as a waiver of his right. Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. Rep. 738.

Delay by Appealing.—If, by mistake of the sheriff, a writ is served on the wrong person, but such person makes no defence at law, and suffers judgment to go against him by default, execution being issued, gives a forthcoming bond, and afterwards delays the plaintiff by appealing from the judgment on that bond, he is not entitled to relief in equity. Chisholm v. Anthony, 2 H. & M. 13.

C. LEGAL DEFENCES.

Allegations.—Where a bill avers that the written agreement between the maker and the payee of the note, in relation to the contract in pursuance of which the note is made, has been lost at the time the judgment was recovered on the note, and without which agreement the maker could not make his defence at law, such bill avers a good ground for the jurisdiction of the court of equity. Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246.

"It is insisted, that as the appellant has obtained a judgment at law, and the appellee comes into equity for relief, he is as much bound to negative facts, which would entitle the plaintiff at law to recover, as to affirm those which it is necessary for himself to prove. This would be against all the rules of pleading in chancery, and would be imposing on the plaintiff an impracticable duty. He may not be cognizant of the facts upon which the plaintiff at law relies, to entitle himself to recover, notwithstanding the matter relied upon by the party seeking relief in equity might, if standing alone, make out a proper case for the interposition of that court. The appellee had a right to rest his case upon the averment of such fraud as vitiates the contract; and of the fact that the security so fraudulently procured, had come to the possession of the holder by assignment. If the circumstances under which the holder acquired the paper, are such as still entitle him to recover from the maker, they must be shown in his answer; and not being responsive to any allegation in the bill, must be proved." Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246.

Relief against Judgment on Gaming Contract—Less Diligence Required.—"The case of a gaming promise or security is an exception to the general rule on the subject, that rule being derived from the obligation of the party in most cases, to avail himself of his opportunity to defend himself at law; whereas, in case of a gaming promise or security he is under no such obligation. And as he may at first waive all defence at law, and seek relief in equity, so when he has been prevented by surprise from making his defence available at law, he is not bound to pursue it further in that forum; but may resort to a court of equity, which had from the beginning a complete and more searching jurisdiction of the controversy, and which treats all judgments founded on a gaming consideration where there has been no defence at law, or where there has not been, from adventitious circumstances, a full and fair trial of the question at law, as mere securities." White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645; Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 154.

Statute of Limitations.—A suit in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment in ejectment, brought immediately after its rendition, cannot be defeated by the plea of the statute of limitations, though the deed to such agent was made more than eighteen years before the institution of the suit. Franks v. Morris, 9 W. Va. 664.

Setting Out Proceedings at Law.—Where the plaintiff in a suit exhibits with and makes part of his bill the record of an action at law, the facts disclosed by such record thereby become averments of his bill to be considered in connection with the other averments. Blas v. Vickers, 27 W. Va. 456.

Adequate Remedy at Law.—"The simple allegation that the judgment upon which the writ of possession issued was erroneous, constitutes no ground for the interference of a court of equity. It is not by injunction that the errors of a county court are to be reviewed and corrected. The law provides another remedy for that purpose—namely by writ of error or appeal." Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 600, 5 S. E. Rep. 697.

Set-Off.—Where a party has been summoned to answer an action at law for the recovery of money, and allows judgment by default to go against him, although at the time of such recovery he had judgments against the plaintiff which he might have pleaded as a set-off, he cannot, on the ground that he mistook the time at which the case was to be tried, combined with the fact of the insolvency of the plaintiff, come into equity to obtain the benefit of such set-off, for there is a plain, complete, and adequate remedy at law, namely by motion, whereby he can have the judgments set off against the judgment of the plaintiff. Zinn v. Dawson (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 784, citing Shield v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 484; Alford v. Moore, 15 W. Va. 597; Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 506; Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379; Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 43; Faulkner v. Harwood, 6 Rand. 125; Perkins v. Clements, 1 P. & H. 141.

But a party is not compelled to plead a set-off in such an action, and if a judgment is obtained against him, and he holds judgments against the plaintiff, he may, on motion in a court of law after notice, have his judgment set off against the plaintiff's judgment. Zinn v. Dawson (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 784. See also, Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 780.

Where a jury have found a verdict for the plaintiff in an action of debt on a bond, an account of a transaction which, although partly subsequent to the date of the bond, is old and stale, ought not to be allowed, for the purpose of obtaining a discount against it. Randolph v. Randolph, 1 H. & M. 180.

Insolvency as Affecting Right of Set-Off.—The mere insolvency of a judgment creditor will not, of itself, justify an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment at law, in order to let in a set-off which might have been pleaded at law at the time such judgment was recovered. Zinn v. Dawson (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 784; Sayre v. Harpold, 33 W. Va. 553, 11 S. E. Rep. 16; Faulconer v. Stinson, 44 W. Va. 546, 29 S. E. Rep. 1011; Finke v. Fleming, 25 Gratt. 707; George v. Strange, 10 Gratt. 499; Barton's Ch. Prac. (2d Ed.) 22.

"Equity will not enjoin a judgment to let in a defence pleadable in the action, where the party has had the opportunity to do so, unless prevented by fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstance beyond the party's control. Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79; Harner v. Price, 17 W. Va. 523, 548. And, as set-offs may be pleaded in defence, or made the subject of another action, equity generally will not enjoin a judgment to let them in. But it will do so where the party owning them is insolvent. Beard v. Beard, 25 W. Va. 486; McClellan v. Kinnaird, 6 Gratt. 352; Marshall v. Cooper, 48 Md. 46; Levy v. Steinback, 43 Md. 212; Lindsay v. Jackson, 2 Paige 581; 2 High, Imp. sec. 243." Jarrett v. Goodnow, 39 W. Va. 602, 20 S. E. Rep. 575.

Right of Sureties.—But the insolvency of one of the parties is a ground upon which a bill may sometimes be maintained by a surety for a set-off, when it clearly appears, that in consequence of the principal's insolvency the complainants can have no adequate remedy at law. Mattingly v. Sutton, 19 W. Va. 19. See also, Hupp v. Hupp, 6 Gratt. 810; Jarrett v. Goodnow, 39 W. Va. 602, 20 S. E. Rep. 602; Shores v. Wares, 1 Rob. 1.

Excuse for Failure to Plead Offsets.—Upon an issue made up on the plea nonassumpsit, there is a judgment for the plaintiff, whereupon the defendant applies for an injunction to the judgment, on the ground that he had offsets which he had intended to plead, but that owing to the sickness of his family at the time when the court sat, and for some time before, he was not able to attend the court or prepare for trial, and that his counsel to whom he had communicated his defence was also absent. But the court held that there was no cause for an injunction and new trial, as it appeared that the offsets were neither pleaded nor filed, and though one of the defendant's counsel was present, no application for a continuance was made, nor was any affidavit filed upon which such an application could have been based. Griffith v. Thompson, 4 Gratt. 147.

Rule as to Admission of Offsets.—Where an injunction to a judgment is granted, and an account between the parties directed, the commissioners ought not to give the plaintiff at law credit for claims not exhibited to the jury, nor mentioned in the answer, and which are prior in date to the commencement of the suit. Lipscomb v. Winston, 1 H. & M. 453.

1. MATTERS OF EXCUSE—FAILURE TO DEFEND.—It was held in Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. 67, that where a party's counsel examines the docket but not the papers and fails to see that the suit he is employed to defend is pending against his client, whereby an office judgment is rendered against this client, equity will not relieve against such judgment, because this was negligence on his attorney's part, not unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself.

"It is well settled that it is no ground for equitable interference that a party has not effectually availed himself of a defence at law. There are cases in which equity will relieve after verdict, although a defence might have been made at law; but only where there has been no fault or negligence on the part of the defendant or his agents. * * * It must appear that the omission of the defendant to avail himself of the defence at law was unmixed with any negligence in himself or his agents. This rule is absolutely inflexible, and cannot be violated, even when the judgment is manifestly wrong in law or fact; or when the effect of allowing it to stand will be to compel the payment of a debt which the defendant does not owe, or which he owes to a third person." Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548; Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 586.

Failure of Sureties of Sheriff to Defend.—Where a high sheriff is sued for the failure of his deputy to make a return of an execution, and a judgment is recovered, a court of chancery will not relieve the sureties against it, where they might have shown facts in their defence on the trial at law, and show no reason for not having defended themselves at law. Bierne v. Mann, 5 Leigh 364.

Failure of Clerk to Defend.—So if a clerk, on a motion against him for the penalty incurred by failing to pay the taxes on law process, fails to make his defence in such action, without a competent excuse, he cannot obtain relief in equity on the same ground. Auditor v. Nicholas, 2 Munf. 81.

Office Judgment.—If judgment be obtained, at the rules in the clerk's office, against the administrator; and he, at the next quarterly court, instructs his attorney to set it aside, and plead payment; and the attorney directs the clerk to set aside the judgment, and enter the plea; but he omits it; a court of equity will direct the plea to be received, the verdict upon the issues to be certified to that court, and on receipt of the certificate, will proceed to a final decree upon it. Mayo v. Bentley, 4 Call 528.

Must Show Cause for Failure to Defend.—Where, in a proceeding by one person against another to recover money which he alleged he paid as the surety for the latter, it was determined that both were principals, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for a moiety of the sum paid, the defendant having made no defence, cannot come into equity and obtain any relief, although he shows that he was the surety, and the plaintiff in the action at law the principal, unless he alleges and proves sufficient reasons for his failure to defend at law. Turner v. Davis, 7 Leigh 227.

Fraud Must Be Alleged and Proved.—"A party who had a defence at law, but failed to make it, and seeks relief in equity against a judgment, whether confessed or rendered on a contest, should allege and prove facts that constitute a fraud perpetrated by the adverse party in procuring the judgment or preventing the defence; or facts that indicate that though the complainant used proper diligence, or such diligence would not have availed, he was, by accident, mistake or surprise, prevented from discovering important facts, or from adducing material evidence and making adequate defence." Morehead v. De Ford, 6 W. Va. 316.

Negligence.—It is well settled that where a party, through his own, or his agent's or attorney's negligence, failed to avail himself of a defence which he might have made at law, he will not be relieved in equity. Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 586.

"The rule is now well settled, that after a trial at law, if there appears to have been no fraud or surprise upon the part of the plaintiff, equity cannot relieve the defendant from the consequences of mere negligence, notwithstanding it may be manifest that great injustice has been done him at law. If it appears that by the use of proper diligence he could have defended himself successfully, however hard his case, equity must not interfere; and this upon sound principles of general policy, which no court is at liberty to disregard." Tapp v. Rankin, 9 Leigh 480.

Absence of Witnesses.—If a defendant has been grossly negligent in his preparations for his trial of the cause, a court of equity will not relieve against the verdict on account of the absence of the witnesses, and especially if the judge who tried the cause, and knew what passed at the trial, twice refused it, upon the same representation. Hoomes v. Kuhn, 4 Call 274.

Merely Writing to Attorney Insufficient.—Merely writing to an attorney asking him to take care of a case is such negligence as equity will not relieve against. Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. 364; Stanard v. Rogers, 4 H. & M. 438.

Neglect.—It is a fundamental principle in equity, that if a party suffer a judgment to pass against him, through neglect, he cannot have relief in equity, for a matter of which he might have availed himself at law. Faulkner v. Harwood, 6 Rand. 125.

Negligent Omission of Declaration.—Where a party brings replevin against the landlord for goods that the latter has distrained, but his action is dismissed for want of a declaration, imputable to his own neglect, whereupon the landlord brings suit on the replevin bond and recovers judgment, the defendant is not entitled to relief in equity on the ground that the goods distrained were in fact his property. Donnally v. Ginatt, 5 Leigh 350.

"It is a general rule that where a party may defend himself at law, equity will not interfere; and where he might have done so but has failed to do it, he shall not have relief by bill in equity unless he was prevented by fraud or accident, or the act of the opposite party unmixed with negligence on his part." MAXWELL, J. Sperry v. Gibson,

8 W. Va. 522. See Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Shippen, 2 P. & H. 327.

Sickness of Party.—A court of chancery may relieve against a verdict and judgment obtained by the plaintiff, where the defendant is taken sick on his way to the trial, and thereby prevented from making certain affidavits necessary to his case. Hord v. Dishman, 5 Call 279.

Sickness of Family.—But it was held in Griffith v. Thompson, 4 Gratt. 147, that the sickness of the defendant's family at the time when the court sat, whereby he was prevented from pleading offsets, was not a sufficient ground for relief against the judgment.

Physical Incapacity.—A bill alleging that the plaintiff has received an accident which has so impaired his mental and physical faculties, as to incapacitate him from attending court, and making his defence, makes a proper case for equitable relief. Alford v. Moore, 15 W. Va. 597.

Ignorance.—But an injunction to a judgment at law will not be sustained where the defendant at law has failed to make his defence at law, from ignorance of the nature of proceeding against him, and a misapprehension of the steps it was necessary to take in order to subject him. Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. 506; George v. Strange, 10 Gratt. 490.

No Knowledge That Suit Exists.—On the other hand a plaintiff will be relieved against a judgment at law where it appears that he had no knowledge of the existence of the suit at law, until after judgment was obtained. Mosby v. Haskins, 4 H. & M. 427.

Surprise.—During the term of court, the counsel representing the parties plaintiff and defendant in a case, in the presence of the regular judge, are talking over the business remaining unfinished, the defendant in the case being present, who understands from the conversation that his case would not be taken up before the next Tuesday for trial, which conversation was on Friday; and under this impression the defendant, with his witnesses, left the court. On Saturday a special judge was elected, who went upon the bench on Monday morning, and tried the case, in the absence of the defendant and his witnesses, and in ignorance of the misunderstanding, although an attorney for the defendant was in town, and had notice that a jury was being called in the case, and refused to go to the courthouse, on account of some feeling existing between himself and the special judge, and on account of his being too unwell to attend to business, and sent another attorney to state the matters to the court in reference to the understanding. The trial is proceeded with, and a judgment is rendered against the defendant, although he claims to have had a good defence. The trial of the cause, under the circumstances, works such a surprise upon the defendant that a motion to vacate the judgment, set aside the verdict, and award a new trial, should have prevailed. Simpkins v. White, 43 W. Va. 200, 27 S. E. Rep. 241.

An action was brought in 1875 in the county court. Two years thereafter, it was transferred to the circuit court. No order except continuances was made in it after such transfer. The judge of the circuit court could not preside at the trial, and in 1887 the plaintiff, in the absence of the defendant, and his counsel, caused a special judge to be elected, and, without the knowledge of the defendant, the case was tried and a verdict and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. The defendant, being notified of such judgment, moved the court to set the same aside because of the facts above stated, and it was held that, upon his affidavit, alleging surprise, and the full payment of the debt sued on, the circuit court properly set aside the judgment, and awarded the defendant a new trial. Bennett v. Jackson, 34 W. Va. 62, 11 S. E. Rep. 734.

Bill of Exceptions Lost or Unsigned.—Where a case is tried before a justice, and a bill of exceptions essential to enable a party to obtain a writ of certiorari is lost, if signed, or, if not signed, the justice sickened and died without signing it, and there appears probable ground for a writ of certiorari, it is a proper case for equitable relief against the judgment, and for retrial. Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Davisson, 45 W. Va. 12, 29 S. E. Rep. 1028.

Fraud.—A bill which alleges fraud as a defence to the original cause of action must show that the fraud is attributable to the judgment creditor. Griffith v. Reynolds, 4 Gratt. 46.

"A party, without showing more will not be permitted to contradict the solemn records of a court, on the ground that the statements therein are false; that they show, that proof was heard, when in fact no proof was heard, and charge that there was consequently fraud in both the party and the court in so entering the judgment. If a party could be heard in a court of chancery to make such charges and by the officers of the court to prove them, there would be no stability in judgments, and the most solemn acts of courts of justice, to which the people must look for the protection of their rights, would be liable to be swept away by mere oral testimony. Such assaults upon the solemn acts of courts of record never have been and never can be successfully made." Per JOHNSON, J. Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286.

Province of Chancellor.—Where an application is made for relief against a judgment, the province of the chancellor is to test the conscience of the parties and not the legality of the judgment, nor to correct the errors, which may have been committed by the court. A different rule would render the jurisdiction of chancery general by converting it into a court, to which an appeal might be had in every instance. Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286.

2. NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.—Chancery will not relieve against a judgment at law, on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, where there is no suggestion of fraud, accident, mistake, or of any other circumstances preventing the party from having made the defence at law. Norris v. Hume, 2 Leigh 334.

Courts of equity, as well as courts of law, sometimes grant new trials on the ground of after-discovered evidence, but always with great reluctance and never except under special circumstances, which may be summed up thus: 1. The evidence must have been discovered since the trial.

2. It must be evidence that could not have been discovered before the trial by the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, by the exercise of reasonable diligence.

3. It must be material in its objects, and such as ought, on another trial, to produce an opposite result on the merits.

4. It must not be merely cumulative, corroborative, or collateral. Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811; St. John v. Alderson, 32 Gratt. 140, and note; Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 13 Gratt. 511.

Cumulative Evidence.—A judgment at law will not be relieved against in equity on the ground of after-discovered evidence, where it appears that such evidence is merely cumulative or merely goes to impeach the testimony of a witness on a former trial. Brown v. Speyers, 20 Gratt. 308, and note; Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 13 Gratt. 511; Bloss v. Hull, 27 W. Va. 508.

What Is Cumulative Evidence.—And evidence newly discovered is said to be cumulative, in its relation to the evidence on the trial, when it is of the same kind and character. If it is dissimilar in kind, it is not cumulative, in a legal sense, though it tends to prove the same proposition. Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811; St. John v. Alderson, 32 Gratt. 140, and note.

Nor will a judgment at law be relieved against in equity on the ground of after-discovered evidence when such evidence relates to a fact in issue on the trial at law, and in support of which testimony was offered on the former trial, unless it is of such conclusive character, that, if it had been offered, it should have produced a different result. Bloss v. Hull, 27 W. Va. 508.

Diligence at First Trial.—Equity will not relieve a party against a judgment at law, on the ground of after-discovered evidence, or of a defence, of which he was ignorant, until judgment was rendered, unless he shows, that by the exercise of due diligence he could not discover such evidence or defence, or that he was prevented from employing the same by fraud, accident or the act of the opposite party, unmixed with laches or negligence on his part. Bloss v. Hull, 27 W. Va. 508; Ludington v. Handley, 7 W. Va. 269; Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434; Hevener v. McClung, 22 W. Va. 81; Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548; Arthur v. Chavis, 6 Rand. 141; DeLima v. Glassell, 4 H. & M. 369.

Illustration.—Though a bill charges that the judgment was recovered without appearance or defence for money which the plaintiff in the judgment alleged he had paid as surety, though he had not in fact paid one cent of the money, but the same had been paid by another surety, against whom there was a joint judgment with the plaintiff at law; and that of this fact the plaintiff in the bill had no knowledge until after the judgment, and therefore could not have defended himself, still this does not entitle the complainant to relief against the judgment, because it does not appear that he has done everything that could reasonably be required of him to render his defence effectual at law, for by the exercise of due and reasonable diligence, and by making proper inquiries in the proper quarters, he might have been readily led to discover whether the surety had in fact paid any of the money claimed to have been paid by him for the complainant, and of this information when obtained he could have fully availed himself in his defence in a court of law. Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40.

But where a bill of injunction to a judgment shows matter sufficient to have defeated a recovery at law, but to which, defence was not made because not discovered until after judgment, and until it was too late to move for a new trial, it is error to dissolve the injunction, provided a sufficient reason is shown in the bill why the matter of defence was not discovered in time to be set up in the action at law. Ferrell v. Allen, 5 W. Va. 48; Harvey v. Seashol, 4 W. Va. 122; Armstrong v. Hickman, 6 Munf. 287; Mason v. Nelson, 11 Leigh 227.

Evidence Obtainable by Bill of Discovery.—If a discovery is necessary to enable a defendant to prove payments or set-offs, which he might have pleaded at law, he should file his bill of discovery in aid of his defence at law, or should file interrogatories to the plaintiff under the statutes, otherwise no relief against the judgment will be given. George v. Strange, 10 Gratt. 490.

See "Bills of Discovery."

Courts of equity relieve against judgments at law, upon the ground that the party injuriously affected thereby has a defence of which he could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself, but was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or neglect on his part. If the facts upon which the application for relief is based, are unknown to the party at the time of trial in the law court, it is his duty to bring them to the consideration of the court, or furnish some reasonable and satisfactory excuse for its failure to do so. Hence, if a discovery from the plaintiff is necessary to enable the defendant to make his defence at law, he must file his bill for the discovery before the judgment has been rendered against him. And he cannot go into equity for discovery and relief against the judgment, after it has been rendered. Green v. Massie, 21 Gratt. 356.

D. VOID JUDGMENTS—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.—A judgment pronounced by a justice, without service of process upon or notice to the defendant is void. But as such a judgment may be set aside, even when rendered upon the verdict of a jury, by the circuit court, upon a writ of certiorari, the defendant in the judgment cannot obtain relief against it in a court of equity. Kanawha & O. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. Rep. 924.

But in Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146, a bill was filed to enjoin execution on a judgment which had been rendered without service of process, or notice of the action. On demurrer to the bill, the court held that, the defendant in the judgment, having had notice of the judgment within the time limited for a motion to quash it, had a remedy at law by such motion and therefore is not entitled to relief in equity.

In Kanawha & O. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. Rep. 924, it was said by SNYDER, J., in referring to High on Injunctions, sec. 230, in which it is said that equity will not relieve against a void judgment where there is an adequate remedy at law: "This it seems to me, correctly states the rule of law on this subject, and especially is it the rule in Virginia and in this state to deny and withhold relief in equity where there is a plain and adequate remedy at law. In Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. 379, the court says: 'It has been a favorite policy in this state, especially of late, not to afford relief in equity except in cases of concurrent jurisdiction. In all other cases he must avail himself of his legal remedy. If, without his default, he be deprived of all remedy at law, equity may relieve him; but if any legal remedy remains to him (that is, adequate remedy), though he may have lost, by misfortune, and without fault of his adversary, other concurrent legal remedies, he must resort to his remaining legal remedies.'" See also, 3 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, p. 1478 et seq.

Perpetual Injunction against Execution.—Where the judgment sought to be enjoined is absolutely void, the cause may be remanded to be proceeded in at law, and a perpetual injunction be granted against the collection of the execution on the judgment. Finney v. Clark, 86 Va. 354, 10 S. E. Rep. 560. See infra, this note "Collateral Impeachment."

E. BILL FOR INJUNCTION.

Uncertain Credit.—Where an injunction has been awarded to stay the collection of a judgment, and it appears from the answer of the defendant that there is a considerable sum in his hands, which he has agreed to apply as a credit in such judgment, and it is uncertain what is the amount which he ought, under an agreement into which he has entered, to credit on such judgment, the court ought not to dissolve the injunction till it has ascertained, by sending the cause to a commissioner, if necessary, the amount of the credit which should be so given on such judgment. Heatherly v. Farmers' Bank, 31 W. Va. 70, 5 S. E. Rep. 754.

Discharge in Bankruptcy.—Where a judgment debtor has obtained his discharge as a bankrupt subsequent to the judgment, he may enjoin the suing out or levy of any execution upon such judgment. Peatross v. M'Laughlin, 6 Gratt. 64.

Where the debtor in an execution objects that a previous execution has been levied by the sheriff upon sufficient property to satisfy the judgment, and that he has improperly misapplied the proceeds of the sale of the property, or if he insists that payment has been made to the sheriff which has not been credited on the execution, if he has an opportunity to apply to the court of law from which the execution issued for redress, he has no right to come into equity for relief. Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625; Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85, and Morrison v. Speer, 10 Gratt. 228, distinguished in Beckley v. Palmer.

1. SATISFACTION BEFORE EXECUTION LEVIED.—It was held in Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh 85, that where a judgment is recovered against a debtor, but before the execution is delivered to the sheriff, the debtor makes satisfaction to the creditor of the full amount of the debt, and receives a receipt therefor, a court of equity has jurisdiction to give him relief by way of injunction to inhibit further proceedings on the execution, though he might have made a motion to quash the execution at law.

But where a party claims that he has not been credited for all the money paid by him to the sheriff, on an execution, he may have any injustice done to him in that respect corrected in the court from whence the execution issued, and it is not a case for an injunction to the judgment and relief in equity. Morrison v. Speer, 10 Gratt. 228.

Whether a bill in equity for an injunction is the proper remedy to prevent a judgment creditor from proceeding to collect anew a judgment which has been in fact satisfied, has been disputed. Some of the cases hold that such an application is meritorious and should be allowed. But the better-considered doctrine upon this subject, and that most in harmony with the general principles underlying the preventive jurisdiction of equity, is that an injunction should not be granted for the purpose of staying or preventing a sale under an execution on the ground of payment, in whole or in part, and that in all such cases the person aggrieved should be left to pursue his remedy at law. Thus, in a case where, by virtue of an agreement between a judgment debtor and a judgment creditor, the judgment ought to be entered as satisfied, but in lieu the creditor has an execution issued and levied upon the goods of the debtor, the latter cannot obtain relief by injunction in a court of equity, for the reason that he has an adequate remedy at law. Howell v.

Thomason, 84 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088; Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544.

Writ of Possession.—Thus, an injunction will not be granted to restrain the execution of a writ of possession, based on an alleged error in the judgment upon which the execution issued, and also upon a judgment in the complainant's favor for possession of a tract of land of which the land in question is a part, the final decision of which is pending on appeal. Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 600, 5 S. E. Rep. 697.

Subsequent Reversal.—But where execution has been levied and returned satisfied, on a judgment which is erroneous and afterwards reversed or corrected, restitution cannot be awarded, unless it appears that the money has been paid to the plaintiff. Eubank v. Ralls, 4 Leigh 808.

Statutory Provision.—See Code of West Virginia, sec. 17, p. 870, which provides that "A motion to quash an execution may, after reasonable notice to the adverse party, be heard and decided by the court whose clerk issued the execution, or, if in a circuit court by the judge thereof in vacation; and such judge or court may, without such notice, make an order staying proceedings on the execution until such motion can be heard and determined," etc. This provision is ample to protect an execution debtor from the levy of an execution upon a satisfied judgment, and is fully as complete and far less expensive and cumbersome than the resort to a court of chancery. Howell v. Thomason, 84 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088.

Audite Querula Obsolete.—A motion to quash an execution issued on a satisfied judgment is the proper proceeding in place of an audite querula, which is now an obsolete remedy, and on such a motion the court may order questions of fact to be tried by a jury. Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 639.

F. EQUITY ACTS ONLY IN PERSONAM.—Chancery cannot reverse or set aside a judgment of a law court for error or other cause, and order the law court to grant a new trial; but it can act on the person of the owner of the judgment by injunction against the enforcement of the judgment, and direct a trial by jury, and, upon verdict, either perpetuate or dissolve, in whole or in part, the injunction. Graham v. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 32 S. E. Rep. 245; Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811.

In strictness, there is no such thing as an injunction to a judgment, because the court of chancery does not act upon the law court, and neither reverses, rescinds nor amends the judgment. It acts upon the party only, restrains him from enforcing the judgment by execution, and punishes him as for contempt for any violation of its mandate. Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625.

"The court of chancery acts in personam, and not upon the court of law, which must decide all cases coming before it according to the legal rights of the parties." Nichols v. Campbell, 10 Gratt. 560.

"The tribunal of the court of equity, does not act immediately upon that of the court of law, nor in any manner disrespectful to it; it only acts upon the party, and for good reasons existing in relation to him, restrains him from proceeding further." Ashby v. Kiger, Gilmer 153.

"That the injunction operates upon the party only, and not upon the court, would seem to be a truism requiring no argument to support it." Epes v. Dudley, 4 Leigh 145.

Jurisdiction.—The several superior courts of chancery have power to grant injunctions to the judgments of all courts of common law within their respective districts, and not otherwise; the place where the court of law is holden, and not the residence of the parties, furnishing the rule of jurisdiction in such cases. Cocke v. Pollok, 1 H. & M. 499.

Anomalous Condition of Affairs.—"The record exhibits the singular case of two chancellors in different districts disclaiming jurisdiction of a case brought before them by a bill of injunction to a judgment rendered in the district court of Charlottesville. The chancellor of the Richmond district, it is alleged in the bill, refused to grant the injunction, although the defendants all resided within his jurisdiction, because the court, whose judgment was sought to be enjoined, was not within his jurisdiction. The chancellor of the Staunton district granted the injunction, but dismissed the bill afterwards, because, although the court which rendered the judgment sought to be enjoined, was within his district, yet none of the defendants resided therein." TUCKER, J. Cocke v. Pollok, 1 H. & M. 499. Thus, it will be seen from this opinion of JUDGE TUCKER, the embarrassments and difficulties which arise under the statute limiting the jurisdiction of chancery to grant injunctions to judgments, the condition of affairs, as presented by him, being truly anomalous.

County Court Judge.—Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 175, sec. 6, the judge of the county court may award an injunction upon a bill addressed to the judge of the circuit court. "Whether the judgment or proceeding enjoined be of a superior or inferior court of his county or district, or the party against whose act or proceeding the injunction be asked, resides in or out of the same; provided such act or proceeding is apprehended, or is to be done, or is doing, in his county or district." Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 600, 5 S. E. Rep. 697.

The circuit court of Richmond city alone has jurisdiction to enjoin or affect any judgment in behalf of the commonwealth of Virginia. Code of Va. 1873, ch. 165, sec. 1; Com. v. Latham, 85 Va. 632, 8 S. E. Rep. 488.

"I have said that the general principle of our laws was that the locality of the law court determines the equitable jurisdiction. There is nothing in the act of January, 1802, singly considered, which abandons this principle; and, on the contrary, the act of February, 1802, seems strongly to support it. In most cases, the restraint upon the clerk of the law court is amply sufficient for the complainant; for without the act of the clerk no execution can go upon the judgment; and, this being the case, the defendants, wherever residing, will find their interest in coming in, submitting to the jurisdiction, and moving to dissolve the injunction. If, before the clerk of the law court receives notice that an injunction is awarded, he has, in fact, divested himself of his power, by actually issuing the execution into another district, beyond the limits of the chancery court, I am not at present prepared to say whether the process of the court may not pursue the execution, on the general principle that, where a jurisdiction exists, every necessary power shall be implied, to carry it into complete effect." Cocke v. Pollok, 1 H. & M. 499.

Venue.—The 41st section of the circuit superior court of law, Supp. to Rev. Code, ch. 109, giving jurisdiction to each of the judges of the circuit superior courts, to award injunctions to judgments rendered or proceedings apprehended out of his own circuit, but directing that, in such case, the order for the process of injunction shall be directed to the clerk of the court of that county wherein the judgment is rendered or the apprehended proceeding is to be had, gives the judge jurisdiction only to award the injunction, not to hear and determine the cause. Randolph v. Tucker, 10 Leigh 655.

The court of one county may, on its equity side relieve against a judgment at law, rendered in another county court, by way of original jurisdiction. And though it cannot award a new trial at the bar of that other court, yet it may direct an issue to be tried at its own bar. And if the relief be afforded without the trial of an issue, where that is proper, the high court of chancery may, upon an appeal, after reversal, retain the cause, and direct an issue to be tried. Ambler v. Wyld, 2 Wash. 36.

G. EXTENT OF RELIEF.

Decree Repayment of Amount Collected.—A court of equity, having dissolved an injunction against the assignee of a bond, because the payments, for which credits are claimed by the complainant, were made to the obligee after notice of the assignment, ought further to decree, that the obligee (being a defendant to the bill) do repay the sum so received by him, so soon as the complainant shall have paid the amount of the judgment to the assignee. Roberts v. Jordans, 3 Munf. 488.

"This bandying of suitors for justice, from court to court, may answer some purposes which, however, I am sure the gentlemen had not in view, but will not produce speedy and substantial justice, the legitimate ends of all courts, and which requires that the decree, in the present instance should be reversed and a perpetual injunction awarded. And I agree with the judge near me, that such be the decree of the court, with this addition, that it shall provide for the repayment of the money, if paid under the dissolution of the former injunction." Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147. A similar order for repayment was made in Stanard v. Brownlow, 8 Munf. 220.

Cannot Enter Personal Decree.—Where upon a bill filed to enjoin a void judgment, the plaintiff is denied all relief for the reason that he has an adequate remedy at law, it is error to enter a personal decree against the plaintiff, for the amount of the judgment enjoined, upon the dissolution of the injunction. In such case, the only power possessed by the court is to dissolve the injunction, and dismiss the bill, with costs. Kanawha & O. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. Rep. 924; Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794, 12 S. E. Rep. 1088.

Relief against Portion of Judgment.—Where a plaintiff agrees to sell to a defendant a certain tract of land for a stated price, and put him in possession of the crops growing thereon, also of a stated value, but violates his agreement as to the crops, whereby the defendant loses them, and afterwards, the plaintiff recovers judgment for the full contract price, but the defendant refuses to pay for the crops, he may have judgment perpetually enjoined to that amount. Booth v. Kesler, 6 Gratt. 350; Sanders v. Branson, 22 Gratt. 369. In the latter case the court said: "The circuit court, after refusing to relieve against the whole claim, had a right, both on the case stated in the bill and the prayer for general relief, to give such relief as was equitable and just." See also, Mason v. Nelson, 11 Leigh 227.

Where a party for himself and others sells a part of a tract of land to another and receives his bonds for the purchase money, and the others refuse to confirm the contract, but sell their interest in the whole to the purchaser, the latter may enjoin a judgment recovered by the first vendor on the purchase money bonds, and be relieved in so far as he has been injured by such vendor's failure to procure the others to execute the contract. Jaynes v. Brock, 10 Gratt. 211.

"The rule has been long established, that a court of chancery will not entertain a bill for the purpose of allowing a man to make a defence, which he might have made in the court of law; unless he shows some good reason why he did not avail himself of that defence in a court of law. This rule is founded on the principle, that there ought to be an end of litigation; and that, consequently, where a matter has been once fairly investigated and decided in one forum, it shall not again become the subject of controversy in another. It was intended as a shield for the party who had prevailed at law, but, if he does not choose to avail himself of its benefit, if he voluntarily goes into the merits of the case, and in his answer, admits facts, which, if they had appeared to the court of law, would have there produced a different result, neither the rule, nor the principle of the rule, is violated by pronouncing a decree, justified by his own admissions." Vanlew v. Bohannan, 4 Rand. 587.

Condition for Relief.—A person coming into a court of equity to impeach a judgment at law, must, on his part, do what equity requires. Lipscomb v. Winston, 1 H. & M. 453; Payne v. Dudley, 1 Wash. 196.

Judgment Stands as Security.—Where there has been a recovery at law, and the defendant seeks relief in equity, in the nature of a new trial, the judgment at law stands as a security for what the plaintiff may be justly entitled to. Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. 212; Bank v. Hupp, 10 Gratt. 33; Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Davisson, 45 W. Va. 12, 29 S. E. Rep. 1028.

"A judgment at law, however obtained, no matter by what fraud, accident or surprise, is allowed to stand as a security for what is justly due, whether that be a part or the whole of the debt recovered." Bank v. Vanmeter, 4 Rand. 552, 555.

Accounts.—Where the subject of the action is accounts, a court of equity will not direct a new trial at law, but will refer the accounts to a commissioner, and itself give the proper relief, but will permit the judgment to stand as a security for the sum ascertained to be actually due. Rust v. Ware, 6 Gratt. 50. See also, Jaynes v. Brock, 10 Gratt. 214.

H. HEARING AND FINAL DECREE.—In Finney v. Clark, 86 Va. 354, 10 S. E. Rep. 569, a bill for injunction against a judgment is brought on the ground that it is void for want of legal service of process, the prayer of the bill being to restrain the collection of the execution, to vacate the judgment, and to give the complainant in the bill an opportunity to make his defence at law, but raises no issue as to the merits. The plaintiff in his answer raised such issue. It was held that as the only question before the court of chancery was the validity, it had no right, of its own motion, to assume jurisdiction in the merits of the cause, but the execution on the judgment should be perpetually enjoined, the judgment vacated, and the cause remanded to be proceeded in at law by an alias summons properly served.

Will Set Aside Judgment in Toto.—When the plaintiff at law recovers more than he is in conscience entitled to, and there is no standard by which a court of equity can ascertain the amount of the excess unrighteously recovered, the court will set aside the verdict in toto. M'Rae v. Woods, 2 Wash. 80.

Trial of Legal Issues in Equity.—Under circumstances, inducing suspicions, that a bond (on which a judgment at law had been obtained against an executor) was counterfeit, or fraudulent, upon a bill filed by the executor, relief was given in equity, by directing an issue to try whether the bond in question was the deed of the testator or not; and, if so, what was the consideration on which it was founded, notwithstanding the trial at law was upon the plea of payment put in by counsel, and a new trial moved for by the complainant was refused by the court. West v. Logwood, 6 Munf. 491.

A court of equity, upon enjoining a judgment at law, may direct an issue to be tried at its own bar, and if relief be afforded without the trial of an issue, when that is proper, the high court of chancery may, upon an appeal, after reversal, retain the cause, and direct an issue to be tried. Counsel need not be alarmed about objections to the form of proceeding, since being an issue out of chancery, and to be certified there, all forms in the proceeding at law will be out of the question. Ambler v. Wyld, 2 Wash. 36; Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. 60.

"There are cases in which the court has required the defendant in chancery to submit to a new trial in the action at law, and restrained him from enforcing the judgment complained of. But the regular course would seem to be for the chancery court to order such issue or issues as may be proper, and to base its decree on the finding of the jury at the hearing, either dissolving or perpetuating the injunction, in whole or in part, according to circumstances. Such was the course pursued by this court in Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. 213. In the present case, if a new trial was proper, the court should have ordered an issue, the same as in the action at law, to be tried as other issues out of chancery are tried, the verdict of the jury, if the trial was in the law court, to be certified in the chancery court, and in the meantime continue the injunction until the hearing of the cause; and if the finding was for the defendant and affirmed, dissolve the injunction; if for the plaintiff, perpetuate the injunction and decree for the complainant according to the verdict." Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811. See also, Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546.

After an injunction has been granted and a trial at law directed, the court may, if satisfied that the injunction ought to have been dissolved, set aside the order for a new trial, and dissolve the injunction, although no verdict has been certified. Vass v. Magee, 1 H. & M. 2.

It is error for a court of equity, on application to enjoin a judgment at law and grant a new trial, to perpetuate the injunction, set aside and cancel the judgment, direct a new trial of the cause which has been terminated, and finally dispose of the suit in equity. The court of equity in such case should have continued the injunction, directed proper issues, and upon the coming in of the verdict perpetuated the injunction, or dissolved it in whole or in part, according to the finding of the jury. Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. 213; Bank v. Hupp, 10 Gratt. 33.

Issues Directed to Be Tried by Jury.—Where a bill is filed to enjoin a judgment on the ground that the debt on which it is founded is for money won at cards, it being doubtful on the evidence, whether such was the consideration, or if it was, whether the plaintiff in the judgment, who was a transferee of the debt, had not been induced to take the transfer of the debt under the belief, induced by the concealment or misrepresentation of the debtor, that the consideration of the debt was good and lawful; the court should continue the injunction, and direct issues to be tried by a jury for the purpose of ascertaining these facts. Nelson v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. 354. See also, Hord v. Dishman, 5 Call 283.

Must Confess Judgment.—The general rule is, that when a party comes into a court of equity, to be relieved against proceedings at law, he must confess judgment at law, and rely solely on the court of equity for relief. Warwick v. Norvell, 1 Leigh 96. See generally, monographic note on "Judgments by Confession," appended to Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

"And even courts of equity themselves admit, that the plaintiff at law may proceed so far, as that he may be at liberty, eo instante that the injunction is dissolved, to take out execution." Epes v. Dudley, 4 Leigh 145.

If proceedings on a judgment at law be enjoined by a court of chancery, and the injunction be afterwards dissolved; and on appeal, the order of dissolution is affirmed in omnibus; an execution may be sued out on the judgment at law, before the decree of affirmance is entered up in the court of chancery. Epes v. Dudley, 4 Leigh 145.

Moreover, the judgment creditor may take any other steps, pending the injunction, so as to place himself in a condition to sue out execution as soon as the injunction may be dissolved. Thus, a party plaintiff, whose judgment has been enjoined, may, upon the death of the defendant pending the injunction, revive it against his personal representative, otherwise he will not be in a situation, upon the dissolution of the injunction, to issue execution, but must then be delayed till he can sue out his scire facias and obtain the order of revival. Richardson v. Prince George County, 11 Gratt. 190.

"There is no hardship in confining a party to one jurisdiction. It is a general principle of equity, that a man shall not be permitted to sue, both in law and equity, for the same thing; this principle has given rise to the practice of requiring a release of errors at law on obtaining injunctions to judgments. It is bottomed on a principle, that a man may waive any particular right or benefit, and on the evident justice of preventing a party from being vexed and harassed in various courts for the same cause, but that he shall stand or fall by the election he has made." ROANE, J. Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147.

Release of Errors.—When a chancellor fails on granting an injunction to require a release of errors, the court of appeals will still respect the principle. Ashby v. Kiger, Gilmer 153. See "Judgments by Confession" appended to Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 53.

If a release of errors be pleaded to a supersedeas, and found for the defendant in error, the judgment should be, not that the judgment of the court below be affirmed, but that the plaintiff be barred of his writ of supersedeas. Hite v. Wilson, 2 H. & M. 268.

XIII. JUDGMENTS BY DEFAULT.

A. IN WHAT ACTIONS APPLICABLE.

Criminal Cases.—At common law no judgment by default could be rendered in a misdemeanor case. State v. Slack, 28 W. Va. 372.

The term judgment by default applies strictly and technically to actions at common law only. Davis v. Com., 16 Gratt. 134.

Effect of Statute.—But sec. 5, of ch. 184, W. Va. Code, includes judgments for fines in misdemeanor cases, as well as judgments in civil cases, where such judgments are entered by default. State v. Slack, 28 W. Va. 372.

Under Code W. Va. 1891, ch. 158, sec. 20, no judgment by default for imprisonment can be rendered for any misdemeanor either under chapters 82 or 151 or for any other statutory misdemeanor, but there may be a judgment for a fine by default. A defendant may appear by counsel in any misdemeanor case, though it be punishable by imprisonment, but in no case can there be judgment of imprisonment without having the defendant present at its rendition. State v. Campbell, 42 W. Va. 246, 24 S. E. Rep. 875.

1. JUDGMENTS BY DEFAULT UNDER STATUTES.—All judgments, where there has been no appearance by the defendant, are judgments by default within the meaning of sec. 5, ch. 184 of W. Va. Code of 1868, and Va. Code, sec. 3451. State v. Slack, 28 W. Va. 372; Adamson v. Pearce, 20 W. Va. 59; Bank v. McElfresh, etc., Co. (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 541; Smith v. Knight, 14 W. Va. 749. But see Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 278; Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 298; Brown v. Chapman, 90 Va. 174, 17 S. E. Rep. 855; Davis v. Com., 16 Gratt. 134; Baker v. Mfg. Co., 6 W. Va. 196; Meadows v. Justice, 6 W. Va. 198; Dickinson v. Lewis, 7 W. Va. 673; Forest v. Stephens, 21 W. Va. 316; Midkiff v. Lusher, 27 W. Va. 439; Higginbotham v. Haselden, 3 W. Va. 269.

Judgment after Withdrawal of Plea.—But a judgment rendered against the defendant after withdrawal of his plea is neither a judgment by default nor by confession. Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 276; Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297.

It is a judgment rendered upon proof of the cause made to the court without issue joined between the parties then before the court. Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297.

A judgment, however, stating that the defendants were solemnly called and not appearing, on motion, etc., is a judgment by default; though it is stated at the foot of the judgment that on the motion of the defendants the execution on this judgment is suspended for sixty days, upon the execution of a suspending bond. Goolsby v. Strother, 21 Gratt. 107, and note.

Office Judgment.—An office judgment by default confirmed in an action of debt, although the service of process be insufficient, is a judgment by default within the meaning of the statute. Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146.

Proceeding by Motion.—"The case of a motion comes within the reason of the statute, and I think the term judgment by default was intended to apply to all judgments where there was a default of appearance." Davis v. Com., 16 Gratt. 134. See also, Preston v. Auditor, 1 Call 471; Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. 189.

Proceeding by Notice.—A proceeding by notice, although not a technical judgment by default at common law, falls within the equity, and was intended to be embraced within the scope of Code of W. Va., ch. 184, sec. 3, 5, 6. Smith v. Knight, 14 W. Va. 749.

Contract Sounding in Damages.—Under Va. Code 1887, sec. 3211, providing that a person "entitled to recover money by or on any contract may, on motion, * * * obtain judgment therefor," one cannot obtain a judgment for a breach of contract on motion in an action sounding in damages. Wilson v. Dawson, 96 Va. 687, 32 S. E. Rep. 461.

But whether the judgment be technically or strictly by default, or merely quasi by default, the effect and the law, and the reason of the law are precisely the same, for all judgments where there has been no appearance by the defendant, are judgments by default within the meaning of the statute, Va. Code, ch. 181, sec. 5, p. 681. Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146; Davis v. Com., 16 Gratt. 134; Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 28 S. E. Rep. 285.

B. PARTIES TO DEFAULT.

1. IN WHOSE FAVOR.

a. Deceased Plaintiff.—A judgment rendered by default in a suit instituted in the name of a dead person is not void but merely erroneous or voidable, and cannot be collaterally attacked, where the defendant is duly served but fails to appear and defend. Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. Rep. 1007; McMillan v. Hickman, 35 W. Va. 705, 14 S. E. Rep. 227. See also, Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107.

2. AGAINST WHOM.

a. Parties Not Named in Writ or Declaration.—In a suit against a mercantile company, if the names of the partners be omitted in the writ and declaration, and the writ be served on a person not named in either, a judgment against the company for that person's failing to appear, cannot be sustained. Scott v. Dunlop, 2 Munf. 349.

b. Infants.—It is error to take judgment against an infant by default, who is not stated on the record to have appeared by his guardian to defend the suit, or that the guardian appointed by the court ever acted, or had notice of such appointment. Fox v. Cosby, 2 Call 1.

And an office judgment against an infant, who in the writ, is named as defendant "by J. K. his guardian," cannot be supported, but must be reversed in toto, if there be nothing in the record to show that J. K. was guardian by testament, or ex provisione legis, or guardian ad litem, appointed by the court. Brown v. M'Rea, 4 Munf. 439.

c. Deceased Defendant.—Where judgment by default is rendered against a defendant after his death, upon due service of process, such judgment is not void, but voidable, and cannot be collaterally attacked. King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601.

d. Executors.—A judgment by default, against an executor, is prima facie admission of assets. Mason v. Peter, 1 Munf. 487.

Disability Accruing Pending the Suit.—The subsequent disability of the defendant does not render void a judgment by default where the court has once fairly acquired jurisdiction of the cause and parties. See Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 480, holding that the judgment could not be collaterally assailed. See also, Turnbull v. Thompson, 27 Gratt. 306.

Joint Judgments.—Where, in a joint action of debt against two, a judgment by default goes against one, and the other pleads to the action, and there is a trial, then there should be one and the same joint judgment against both. Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh 196. See infra, this note, II, D., "Joinder of Parties."

Plea of Nil Debet by One.—Where an action is brought against the makers and endorsers of a negotiable note, and one of the makers files a plea of nil debet, upon which the cause is discontinued as to him, and a judgment by default goes against the others for nonappearance, such judgment is valid against them. Code of Va. 1860, ch. 177, sec. 19; Muse v. Farmers' Bank, 27 Gratt. 252.

3. JOINT PARTIES.

Joint Codefendants—Irregular Service of a Portion.

—A joint judgment by default against several defendants, a portion of whom are not served with process, or if served, the service is irregular, is erroneous, and may be reversed on motion under W. Va. Code, ch. 134, sec. 5, though it has been satisfied by another defendant. Ferguson v. Millender, 22 W. Va. 30, 9 S. E. Rep. 38; Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 799; Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 299; Vandiver v. Roberts, 4 W. Va. 498; Midkiff v. Lusher, 27 W. Va. 428.

If the writ be issued against, and served upon, one person only, who alone appears and pleads, if the declaration be against him and another, and judgment be entered against "the defendants," such judgment is to be understood as against both, and therefore erroneous as to the one who never pleaded. And such erroneous judgment may be reversed (as to the person against whom it is improperly entered), upon appeal taken by the other defendant. Graham v. Graham, 4 Munf. 205.

Partners.—In order for a joint judgment to be rendered against all the partners of a firm, process must be served on all, otherwise such joint judgment will be reversed in toto, under Code of W. Va., ch. 134, sec. 5, on motion. Ferguson v. Millender, 22 W. Va. 30, 9 S. E. Rep. 38.

It was held in Bowles v. Huston, 30 Gratt. 206, that a judgment in New York under the Code of Procedure of that state against the members of a dissolved partnership, one of whom was not served with process and did not appear in person or by attorney in the suit, is not such a judgment as is contemplated by the constitution and act of congress, as to such person.

4. JURISDICTION OF PERSON.—A personal judgment or decree cannot be rendered against a defendant who is not served with process, and who does not appear. McGavock v. Clark, 93 Va. 810, 22 S. E. Rep. 834; Wilson v. Bank of Mount Pleasant, 6 Leigh 574, opinion of TUCKER, P.; Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351; Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. Rep. 447, citing, besides the above cases, Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 147; Wade v. Hancock, 76 Va. 620; Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 135; Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750.

Invalid Service.—An invalid service is the same as no service whatever; and the law is well settled that a judgment rendered without an appearance by or service upon the defendant is void for want of jurisdiction in the court to pronounce the judgment. Kanawha & O. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. Rep. 924; Blanton v. Carroll, 86 Va. 539, 10 S. E. Rep. 329.

Judgment on Void Process.—A judgment on a writ of scire facias, returnable on its face not within ninety days, can only be treated as a judgment rendered without service of process, because rendered on a void process, and is therefore void, because the imperative command of the statute (Code of Va. 1871, ch. 166, sec. 2), is that process from any court whether original, mesne, or final, except a summons for a witness, shall be returnable within ninety days, etc., and hence a writ not returnable within such prescribed time is in violation of the mandatory provision of the statute, and any judgment rendered thereon, is necessarily void. Lavell v. McCurdy, 77 Va. 763; Warren v. Saunders, 27 Gratt. 259.

a. Appearance and Defence as Waiver.—But judgments or decrees in personam may be rendered, by state courts, against nonresident defendants, who are summoned merely by publication, where they appear and defend on the merits, for thereby they submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court. Grubb v. Starkey, 90 Va. 831, 20 S. E. Rep. 784; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, distinguished.

Though where a defendant appears in term to have an irregular process quashed, it is not an appearance to the action which dispenses with further and proper process. Wynn v. Wyatt, 11 Leigh 584.

Appearance Bail Discharged.—If the defendant, in debt on a bond, appears and pleads, without giving special bail, and the court, without ruling him to give such bail, sets aside the office judgment against him, his appearance bail is thereby discharged. Grays v. Hines, 4 Munf. 437.

Foreign Judgments.—If the plaintiff recovers judgment against the defendant, in a suit by attachment, without the defendant's appearance, the judgment will have no effect in another state, as a personal judgment against the debtor. But if the defendant appears and defends himself in person or by attorney, then the judgment will have the same force and effect everywhere, as a judgment recovered in an ordinary suit. In such a case the record may show upon its face that the debtor did or did not appear, and if it does, the judgment will have effect accordingly. If the record does not show whether he did or did not appear, the presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment. Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765.

Effect in Foreign State.—But in such a case, if the record does not state that the debtor did or did not appear, or even if it states that he did appear, in a suit upon this judgment in another state, the defendant may, by his pleading and evidence, aver and prove the contrary. Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765.

Construction of Statutes.—It was held in Gilchrist v. W. Va., O. & O. L. Co., 31 W. Va. 115, that by the construction, which the New York courts put upon the New York statutes authorizing proceedings against foreign corporations, no judgment in personam can be rendered in that state against a foreign corporation, unless it has appeared to the action.

"It lies at the very foundation of justice, that every person who is to be affected by an adjudication should have an opportunity of being heard in defence, both in repelling the allegations of fact and upon matters of law; and no sentence of any court is entitled to the least respect in any other court or elsewhere when it has been pronounced ex parte and without opportunity of defence." Fairfax v. Alexandria, 28 Gratt. 16; Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. 409, and note; Connolly v. Connolly, 32 Gratt. 657.

b. Constructive Service.

Strict Construction of and Strict Compliance with Statute.—"The procedure by constructive service of process in lieu of personal service, is a departure from the common law, and must be strictly followed. And, unless it appears from the record that the return was duly made, the judgment by default is void, and hence, if any prescribed interval of time is required to elapse between the date of service of the process and the return day, or before the judgment by default, it must appear by the record that such required interval did intervene accordingly."

or else the judgment by default is void, not voidable only." 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 647; Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 285.

For instances of the strict construction that has been put upon these statutes, see Lewis v. Botkin, 4 W. Va. 533, 538; Hoffman v. Shields, 4 W. Va. 490; Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750.

Judgment against Nonresident.—A personal judgment by default cannot be rendered against a non-resident defendant, on publication merely; such a judgment is void. "Even if there be attachment of effects of nonresidents, a personal judgment on publication, without service of process or appearance, is a nullity, except as to effects attached. O'Brien v. Stephens, 11 Gratt. 610; Black, Judgm. sec. 231; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 818; Coleman v. Waters, 13 W. Va. 278; Gilchrist v. Oil, etc., Co., 21 W. Va. 115." Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. Rep. 447.

Corporations.—A judgment by default against a corporation, rendered on return of a summons which shows that the requirements of the statute have not been complied with, is a void judgment, and may be assailed collaterally by third parties, and, in the language of Freeman, in his excellent work on Judgments, at sec. 117, "It neither binds nor bars anyone. All acts performed under it, and all claims flowing out of it, are void." Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 285; Va. Code 1887, sec. 3225, 3226.

No Legal Service of Process—Judgment Void.—Where a judgment by default is obtained against a defendant without legal service of process, the judgment, based on such service of process, is void. Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 285; Finney v. Clark, 86 Va. 354, 10 S. E. Rep. 509.

Waiver of Defective Service.—Thus, where a judgment was obtained by default without legal service of process, the request of the attorney for the defendant that an item for attorney's fees, which was improperly included in the judgment, be omitted therefrom, is not a waiver of defective service, because the judgment, being void, could not be ratified. Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 285.

Summons Erroneously Directed.—Where, contrary to law, the summons is directed to the sheriff of another county than the one in which the suit is brought, the judgment by default is erroneous, but not void. Brown v. Chapman, 90 Va. 174, 17 S. E. Rep. 855.

Thus, where in debt against four obligors, one of whom is the high sheriff, the process goes into the hands of his deputy, who serves it upon him as well as the other three, to which he makes no objection; and there is a judgment by default against all of them, the process is properly served and the judgment is valid. Turnbull v. Thompson, 27 Gratt. 306.

Writ Not Signed by Clerk.—A judgment by default rendered upon a writ, a copy of which was not signed by the clerk, is erroneous, but not void. Laldley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 779; Ambler v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677.

Date of Writ Blank.—Moreover, a judgment by default, rendered upon a writ, the date of which is blank, is valid and binding as a judgment, unless set aside by motion to the court or by writ of error. Ambler v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677.

Express Waiver.—Where, upon a motion to reverse a judgment by default for defective service of process on a sheriff by his deputy, the defendant, who was sheriff, says he wishes to take no advantage of such return, if defective, this is a waiver or retraxit of the motion, and a release of error as to him, though he is a plaintiff in the motion to reverse; and, as he alone is prejudiced by the alleged defect, it is no ground for reversal as to any of the defendants. Anderson v. Doolittle, 38 W. Va. 632, 18 S. E. Rep. 726.

Appearance a Waiver.—The object of the service of process is to bring the party into court. A judgment by default, with process badly executed, would not be legal. By appearance to the action in any case for any other purpose than to take advantage of the defective execution or the nonexecution of process, a defendant places himself precisely in the situation in which he would be if process were executed upon him, and he thereby waives all objection to the defective execution or the non-execution of process upon him. Bank v. Bank, 3 W. Va. 386.

When a defendant has not been served with process in the action, and has not appeared to the action, it is error for the clerk to enter office judgment against him for failing to appear and plead, and to award a writ of inquiry of damages; and it is also error under those circumstances for the court to have the damages assessed by the jury, and to enter judgment against the defendant for the damages found by the jury. A defendant in such a case has the right under the statute to move the court, after proper notice, to reverse the judgment and correct the proceedings, and upon the court's refusal to do so, then to bring the matter before the appellate court by writ of error. Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750; Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 135.

Irregularity—Plea to Action as Waiver.—A capias ad respondendum, in debt on bond, returnable to August rules, being returned executed, and the defendant not appearing, the clerk enters the common order; at September rules the defendant appears and puts in special bail, but does not plead; the plaintiff insists that the clerk shall enter a confirmation of the common order, so as to put the case on the office judgment lists of the next term, which the clerk refuses to do; at the next term, the court orders the case to be put on the office judgment, and then the defendant puts in a plea to the action; and at the ensuing term, there is a trial, verdict, and judgment for the defendant. The court held, without deciding whether it was regular or not to order the case to be put on the office judgment list, that the defendant's pleading to the action, was a waiver of objection to the regularity of the order. Powell v. Watson, 8 Leigh 4.

C. WHEN DEFAULT MAY BE TAKEN.

Scire Facias against Bail.—Upon a scire facias against special bail, he obtained a bail piece, arrested his principal, surrendered him to the jailer and took the jailer's receipt for his body, and gave notice thereof to the attorney of the plaintiffs, they not residing in the county. Notwithstanding all this, there was an office judgment upon scire facias against the bail, and he not appearing to defend the case at the next term, the office judgment was confirmed. It was held that equity will not relieve the bail. Allen v. Hamilton, 9 Gratt. 255.

Time for Hearing.—Va. Code 1873, ch. 106, § 6, applies to judgments by default, and, perhaps to decrees or bills taken for confessed and not where the defendants appear and answer; and the thirty days necessary to elapse in order to ripen the cause for hearing on its merits, are thirty days from the service, not the return, of the process. Robinson v. Mays, 76 Va. 708.

1. ENTRY.

When Judgment to Be Entered.—It is error in a court of law to enter a judgment against a defendant, on the day after a conditional judgment has been confirmed at the rules. The defendant has until the next term after the conditional judgment is confirmed in the office, to set it aside, under the act of the assembly. Green v. Skipwith, 1 Rand. 460.

In the case of a judgment by default, final judgment must not be entered against a defendant within one month after he was served with process, for according to the true construction of our statutes, where less than one month has elapsed between the service of process and the end of the succeeding term, the conditional judgment will become final at the term next succeeding the expiration of one month after the service of process. Va. Code 1878, ch. 106, sec. 6; Dillard v. Thornton, 29 Gratt. 392, and note; Robinson v. Mays, 76 Va. 708.

Entry before Return of Writ.—A judgment entered in the clerk's office, before the execution and the return of the writ is erroneous, and cannot be supported by the writs being returned executed to the term when the judgment is made final. Higginbotham v. Garland, 2 Munf. 491; Winchester v. Bank, 2 Munf. 339.

Entry against Defendant and Bail.—It seems that, where a judgment is entered in the clerk's office against the defendant and bail, a copy of the bail ought to be inserted in the record. Shelton v. Pollock, 1 H. & M. 422.

Entry of Judgment Containing Indorsement of Credit.—A judgment by default, for want of appearance, founded on an instrument of writing for the payment of money, on which an endorsement of credit is made by the plaintiff himself, ought to be entered subject to such credit; or if the plaintiff refuses to take the judgment in that way, a writ of enquiry should be awarded. Rees v. Conococheague Bank, 5 Rand. 326.

Appearance Bail.—If an office judgment be set aside and the suit defended by the appearance bail, and he afterwards waives his plea, judgment is to be entered against the defendant as well as the bail. Vanmeter v. Fulkimore, 1 H. & M. 329, and note; Wallace v. Baker, 2 Munf. 334; Lee v. Carter, 3 Munf. 121.

Common Order Entered Prematurely.—It is error sufficient to reverse an office judgment that the common order was entered before the plaintiff filed his declaration. Waugh v. Carter, 2 Munf. 333.

Affidavit.—The proper construction of sec. 46, ch. 125 of the W. Va. Code, is that if the affidavit required by that section is filed during the first term of the court after the office judgment at rules, or at any time during the following vacation of the court, final judgment may be entered during that term in court on or before the fifteenth day thereof, or during that vacation by the clerk. But if the affidavit be not made during that term, or during the following vacation, then the clerk has no authority to enter up final judgment, but the plaintiff must prove his case before the court, before judgment is given him. Farmers' Bank v. Montgomery, 11 W. Va. 109; Hunter v. Snyder, 11 W. Va. 198.

Declaration Defective.—It seems that where an office judgment is reversed on the ground that the declaration is radically defective, the appellate court, if the writ be correct, will not enter judgment for the defendant, but will send the cause back to be proceeded in from the writ. Hill v. Harvey, 2 Munf. 525.

Cause Properly on Office Judgment Docket.—If the common order and the common order confirmed have been regularly entered at rules, the cause is properly on the office judgment docket at the next term of the court; though no endorsement of the proceedings may have been made upon the papers in the cause. Wall v. Atwell, 21 Gratt. 401.

When to Be Placed on Docket.—A capias ad respondendum was issued, returnable to the rules, on the first Monday in April, and on that day common order was entered; the first Monday in May was the next rule day, on which day the common order was confirmed in the office. On the same day the court sat. Held, it was not regular to place that case on the office judgment docket of that term, because 1 Rev. Code 1819, ch. 128, sec. 76, p. 506-7, directs that the docket shall be made out before every term. White v. Archer, 2 Va. Cas. 201.

Irregularity in Proceeding in Office.—But if the proceedings in the office have been so irregular that the cause is not properly on the office judgment docket, the court should remand it to the rules for proper proceedings. Wall v. Atwell, 21 Gratt. 401.

D. ON DEFENDANT'S FAILURE TO PLEAD.

Rule to Plead.—The defendant in ejectment may, upon notice to the plaintiff appear at the next term of the court, and move the court to set aside the judgment by default, and allow him to plead thereon, where the plaintiff has not served the defendant with notice of a rule to plead, as the statute required. Smithson v. Briggs, 33 Gratt. 180.

But the defendant may be ruled to trial in the county court, at the first term after the office judgment. Mandeville v. Mandeville, 3 Call 225.

Interrogatories.—It is proper to permit the answers to interrogatories of one defendant to be read to the jury on the trial of the cause although the judgment has been had against him in the clerk's office, and has become final by the rising of the succeeding term of court, no issuable appeal having been filed. Lazzell v. Mapel, 1 W. Va. 43.

Failure or Refusal to Plead.—Under Va. Code 1887, § 3211, providing for the judgment in fifteen days' notice in an action by a person entitled to recover money, the defendant is not entitled to a jury trial, on failure or refusal to plead. Preston v. Salem Imp. Co., 91 Va. 583, 23 S. E. Rep. 486.

Submission of Issue to Jury.—Where the defendant has not appeared and made defence to a motion, upon notice, against him and his sureties, and judgment is rendered against him by the court at the instance of the plaintiff; and the record of the judgment erroneously states: "This day came the parties by their attorneys, and neither party requiring a jury, all matters of law and fact are submitted to the court," it is not error for the court, upon the motion of the defendant at the same term to set aside the judgment. And the court may do so ex mero motu. Smith v. Knight, 14 W. Va. 749; Ballard v. Whitlock, 18 Gratt. 235.

Craving of Oyer.—If, in an action of debt on bond, the bond or deed sued on is not filed with the declaration, and the defendant appears at rules and craves oyer of it, which the plaintiff does not give, and the defendant will not plead without oyer, the clerk may properly take the rules without regard to the craving of oyer, so that the case may be ready to be disposed of at the next term of the court. Smith v. Lloyd, 16 Gratt. 295.

No Plea in Cause.—If there be an office judgment against the defendant, in an action on the case, and a writ of inquiry, and, afterwards, without any plea in the cause, the jury be sworn as if there were an issue, and a verdict be found for the defendant, the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial directed. M'Millon v. Dobbins, 9 Leigh 422.

Expiration of Time to Plead.—Parties who are proceeded against by order of publication have one month after the order is completed to appear and plead; and it is error to confirm a conditional judgment at rules before the expiration of that time. Higginbotham v. Haselden, 8 W. Va. 266.

E. PLEADING OF DEFENDANT UNDISPOSED OF.

While Demurrer on File—Pending Motion.—"When an answer or other pleading of a defendant raising an issue of law or fact is properly on file in the case, no judgment by default can be entered against him. To authorize a default, the answer or other pleading must be disposed of by motion, demurrer, or in some other manner. For the same reasons, a default cannot be entered while a motion is pending." 1 Black, Judgm. sec. 86. Approved in Johnston v. Bank, 41 W. Va. 550, 28 S. E. Rep. 517.

F. STATUTE OF JEOfAILS.—In general, the statute of jeofails is not applicable in case of a judgment by default for want of appearance; but if the party has once appeared, though he makes default, afterwards, and then there is judgment against him by such default, the statute of jeofails is applicable. Bargamin v. Poitiaux, 4 Leigh 412.

Does Not Cure Errors or Defects in Proceedings.—In cases of judgments by default, the statute of jeofails does not apply to cure errors and defects in the proceedings. Wainwright v. Harper, 3 Leigh 870; Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. 152; Payne v. Britton, 6 Rand. 104, opinion of JUDGE GREEN.

G. WRIT OF INQUIRY.—It is error to enter a judgment on the office without awarding an inquiry of damages. Shelton v. Welsh, 7 Leigh 175.

Common-Law Rule.—According to the common law, as recognized and settled in West Virginia, there can be no final judgment by default in any action at law sounding in damages, in the absence of a writ of enquiry, either in the circuit court or before a justice, when the value in controversy or the damages claimed exceed twenty dollars, and the right of either party, if he demands it, to have such writ executed by a jury, is guaranteed by the West Virginia constitution. This right does not depend upon the condition of the pleadings, or the conduct of the adverse party. It is a right which may be invoked by either party, whatever may be the wishes or the actions of the opposite party. Hickman v. B. & O. R. Co., 30 W. Va. 296, 4 S. E. Rep. 654.

When Writ of Inquiry to Be Executed.—A writ of inquiry cannot be executed in the general court, or a district court, at the term next succeeding the rule day on which the office judgment was confirmed; because the defendant has the whole term to set aside the writ of inquiry, and plead to issue. Craghill v. Page, 2 H. & M. 446. See Va. Code 1887, sec. 3288.

Power of Court to Correct.—But where the clerk improperly enters an order for a writ of inquiry in an action for damages, at rules, the court may correct the mistake, or disregard it, and enter judgment as though no such order had been entered. Anderson v. Doolittle, 38 W. Va. 629, 18 S. E. Rep. 724.

Insurance Policy—Provision as to Adjustment.—It was held in Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. Everhart, 88 Va. 952, 14 S. E. Rep. 836, that a policy of fire insurance, containing a provision that, if there be other insurance on the property, the loss, if any, shall be adjusted among the several insurers, is not a "writing for the payment of money," within Va. Code, sec. 3285, dispensing with an inquiry of damages in an action on such writing in case of judgment by default.

Appearance Bail Not Taken.—If judgment be entered against the defendant and sheriff, in a case in which the sheriff was not required to take appearance bail, the court ought to set it aside as to the sheriff, when this is disclosed before executing the writ of inquiry. Williams v. Campbell, 1 Wash. 153.

Confirmation without Writ of Inquiry.—Where a joint action is brought against the drawers and endorsers of a negotiable note, an office judgment cannot be confirmed against all or either of the defendants, without a writ of inquiry. Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. 152.

Declaration in Debt for Money Lent.—A judgment at rules in the clerk's office cannot lawfully be made final, on a declaration in debt, for money lent, and not alleged to be founded on any specialty, bill or note in writing, until a writ of inquiry has been awarded and executed. Hunt v. M'Rea, 6 Munf. 454; Shelton v. Welsh, 7 Leigh 175.

Intervention of Jury—Ejectment.—An office judgment in an action of ejectment, does not become final without the intervention of the court or a jury, but there ought, in every such case, to be an order for an inquiry of damages. The James River & Kanawha Co. v. Lee, 16 Gratt. 424, and note; Smithson v. Briggs, 33 Gratt. 180; Hickman v. B. & O. R. Co., 30 W. Va. 296, 4 S. E. Rep. 654.

Negotiable Notes.—As a negotiable note is not as to the indorser, a note for the payment of money within the meaning of the act of 1804, judgment consequently cannot be rendered in such case, without the intervention of a jury, and on reversing a judgment by default in such action, the defendant will be allowed to object to the merits in the court below. Metcalf v. Battalle, Gilmer 191.

H. APPLICATION FOR RELIEF.

Form of Notice to Reverse.—A notice to reverse or correct a judgment by default, need not be in writing. All that is requisite is, that there should be reasonable notice. Dillard v. Thornton, 20 Gratt. 392.

Default on Forfeited Forthcoming Bond.—When a judgment and award of execution upon a forfeited forthcoming bond, has been entered by default, upon a day prior to that to which notice is given, the court in which the judgment and award of execution is rendered has jurisdiction on the motion of the plaintiff to set aside the judgment and quash the execution, upon reasonable notice to the defendants. Ballard v. Whitlock, 18 Gratt. 235.

Specified Grounds of Motion Stated.—But a party, who asks the court to reverse the judgment by default on notice and motion under the statute must specify in his notice a particular ground of objection, or he cannot rely upon such grounds before the circuit judge or in the appellate court. Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 779; Coffman v. Sangston, 31 Gratt. 263.

Errors Apparent on the Record.—In Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 801, it was said obiter that the appellate court might look into the errors in the proceedings apparent on the face of the record although not specifically pointed out in the notice as the basis of the motion. But this point was not essential to the decision.

Petitions for Rehearing.—The statutory remedy by motion, is, however, cumulative, and has not superseded or abolished petitions for rehearing, which may still be had according to the course of equity, in the same manner as before the enactment of the statute allowing these motions to be made. Kendrick v. Whitney, 28 Gratt. 646.

1. CAUSES FOR SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT.—After judgment by default has been entered up in court, or an order of inquiry of damages has been executed, under section 46, ch. 125 of the W. Va. Code, it cannot be set aside, and a defence to the action be allowed, under section 47 of the Code, without good cause being shown therefor; and such good cause can only appear by showing fraud, accident, mistake, surprise, or some other adventitious circumstance beyond the control of the party, and free from culpable neglect on his part. Post v. Carr, 43 W. Va. 72, 24 S. E. Rep. 583.

Lack of Jurisdiction.—A judgment by default, rendered without jurisdiction, under ch. 123, Code of W. Va., amended by ch. 46, Act 1897, is void, and may be vacated on motion. Rorer v. People's Bldg. Loan & Savings Ass'n (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 758; Green, Judgm. sec. 98.

Failure of Attorney to Defend.—But it seems that the mere failure of an attorney to defend is not good cause for setting aside a judgment by default. Post v. Carr, 42 W. Va. 72, 24 S. E. Rep. 583; Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 755, 5 S. E. Rep. 867; Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. 364.

Judgment by Default on Defective Return.—On the other hand, where a return of a sheriff on process is fatally defective, and there has been on such return a judgment entered by default, the defendant, under Code W. Va. sec. 5 of ch. 134, may on motion have such judgment set aside for such error, and if the motion is overruled, the judgment will be reversed on writ of error. Midkiff v. Lusher, 27 W. Va. 439.

Endorsement on Writ of Nature of Action.—If a writ be issued without an endorsement of the true nature of the action, the court may, upon inspection of the writ, dismiss the suit, if the motion be made during the term next after an office judgment has been entered, but not afterwards. Williams v. Campbell, 1 Wash. 158.

Illness—Prevalence of Smallpox.—Where it appears that the defendant in an action is dangerously ill, and unable to attend court, and the attorney he relies on is deterred from going to the courthouse on account of the prevalence of smallpox in the town where the courthouse is situated, whereby judgment goes against the defendant by default, such judgment should be set aside on motion, upon the presentation of sufficient affidavits proving the excuses offered for the defendant's and attorney's nonattendance. Johnston v. Bank, 41 W. Va. 550, 23 S. E. Rep. 517.

Mistake of Character of Suit.—In Mosby v. Haskins, 4 H. & M. 427, a judgment by default was opened where the party had made the mistake of supposing that the summons served upon him was process in a pending chancery suit instead of primal process in an action at law, the court further said: "Could there have been a more complete surprise, than in the first instance to have met with an execution instead of a capias. There certainly could not to my mind; and hence a good ground for relief in equity."

Order of Judge Forbidding an Appearance.—Where in a proceeding to confiscate property of a person charged to be in rebellion, the counsel for such person does not enter an appearance for him, because in three cases against the same party, before the same judge, he was informed by the judge from the bench, that it was the rule of his court not to allow an appearance and defence by rebels and traitors, the counsel is not in default for failing to enter an appearance; and the decree of confiscation entered thereon is void and of no effect. Fairfax v. Alexandria, 28 Gratt. 16.

Costs of Protest Not Demanded in Writ.—Where the judgment is by default, the error of claiming in the declaration costs of protest, when those costs are not demanded in the writ, may be taken advantage of. Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. 152. See also, Wainwright v. Harper, 3 Leigh 270.

Reversal of Joint Judgment by Default.—Thus, where a joint judgment is rendered against two by default and for a defective return as to one it is reversed, it must be reversed as to both of the defendants. Midkiff v. Lusher, 27 W. Va. 439; Vandiver v. Roberts, 4 W. Va. 493; Hoffman v. Bircher, 22 W. Va. 557.

Reversal on Motion under Statute.—But where a joint judgment is rendered against two or more defendants by default, it is error to reverse it on motion, under sec. 5, ch. 134 of the W. Va. Code, as to one defendant only, and not as to all. Bank v. McElfresh, etc., Co. (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 541.

Waiver.—Where a judgment by default is set aside to allow the defendant to appear and plead, the latter cannot claim that he was not regularly brought into court. Morotock Ins. Co. v. Pankey, 91 Va. 259, 21 S. E. Rep. 487; Harvey v. Skipwith, 16 Gratt. 414; Va. Code, sec. 3260.

Filing of Affidavit—Partnership.—Upon the hearing of a motion to correct a judgment for being rendered against parties, who had not been served with process, and who had not appeared to the action, it is not error for the court to refuse to permit other parties, who were included in the judgment, but who had been duly served with process in the action, to file a plea or an affidavit denying the partnership. Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297.

Parties to Motion.—It is not necessary to make those defendants, upon whom process has been duly served, and against whom judgment has been rendered, parties to a motion made to correct a judgment by defendants, who have not been served with process, and who have not appeared to the action, but against whom the judgment had also been rendered. Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297.

Joint Codefendants—Portion Not Served.—Where a joint judgment by default is rendered against several defendants, and it appears that the writ, a copy of which was served on some of the defendants, was not signed by the clerk, or where the notice is otherwise improperly executed as against one party, such judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, to be properly proceeded with below. Laidley v. Bright, 17 W. Va. 779; Vandiver v. Roberts, 4 W. Va. 493.

No Service of Process—How Corrected.—Where judgment is given against persons, upon whom process has not been served, and who have not appeared to the action, the proper way to correct the error is upon motion before the court that rendered the judgment. Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 299; Gunn v. Turner, 21 Gratt. 382.

But upon the hearing of a motion made by defendants, against whom the court has rendered judgment, before process has been served on them, and who had not appeared, it is error for the court to remand the cause to rules as to another defendant, upon whom process had been duly served, and office judgment was confirmed, but who had not appeared to the action, and against whom the court had failed to enter judgment. Carlton v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297.

Allowance of Credits—Reformation.—Where certain plaintiffs give notice, that they will move the court to reform an office judgment, by allowing certain credits, and one of the credits claimed is endorsed on the bond, and the plaintiff endorses the other at the time of the motion, the court will refuse to reform the judgment. Gunn v. Turner, 21 Gratt. 382.

Limitation of Motion.—The motion to correct an error in a judgment or decree rendered by default under ch. 1177, sec. 5, Va. Code 1873, or sec. 5, ch. 184, W. Va. Code, is barred after the lapse of five years from the date of such judgment or decree. Kendrick v. Whitney, 28 Gratt. 646; Dick v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 159. See Wrenn v. Thompson, 4 Munf. 377.

2. WHEN MOTION TO SET ASIDE ACTED ON.—Where a motion to set aside a judgment by default and allow the defendant to plead, is made by the defendant during the term at which the judgment is entered, and good cause is shown why that judgment should be set aside and the defendant allowed to plead, the court should act on the motion during the term, and not continue the motion until the next term. Johnston v. Bank, 41 W. Va. 550, 23 S. E. Rep. 517.

Where, in an action of debt, the common order is confirmed at rules irregularly, the defendant having pleaded to a part of the plaintiff's demand, this irregularity cannot afterwards be corrected at rules. Southall v. Bank, 12 Gratt. 312.

When Become Final.—If the term of the circuit court lasts more than fifteen days, all office judgments in which no writ of enquiry is ordered become final judgments on the fifteenth day; and cannot afterwards be set aside by the court. Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 64, and note; Hunter v. Snyder, 11 W. Va. 204; Alderson v. Gwinn, 3 W. Va. 229; Lazzell v. Mapel, 1 W. Va. 43.

No Plea to Issue.—Where there has been a conditional judgment at rules, in an action of debt, and the case is on the docket for hearing, the judgment becomes final on the last day of the next term of court or on the fifteenth day thereof, whichever happens first, if there is no pleading to issue. And the filing of an affidavit, requiring the plaintiff to take the suitors' test oath, where there is no such pleading, is not sufficient to prevent a judgment by operation of law. Alderson v. Gwinn, 3 W. Va. 229.

Several Defendants—Plea to Action by One.—Where one of several defendants appears and files a plea to an action of debt, which sets up no defence as to any one but himself, and no plea is entered for or by the codefendants, the office judgment is not set aside as to any of the parties but the one who moves so to do, and judgment becomes final against all others on the last day of the term at which the case is docketed. Creig v. Hedrick, 5 W. Va. 140.

Where a summons in debt is served on a defendant on the 8d of February, and the judgment by default becomes final on the 3d of March it is a valid judgment, because, under the statute the day of service of the process may be counted, and thirty days have elapsed between the service of process and the judgment. Turnbull v. Thompson, 27 Gratt. 303.

During Term.—A decree by default for the plaintiff, in an action to cancel a conveyance as fraudulent, is not such a final decree as to prevent the court, for sufficient cause shown, from setting it aside during the term. Bierne v. Ray, 37 W. Va. 571, 16 S. E. Rep. 804.

Setting Aside at Subsequent Term.—Where a conditional judgment is entered in the office, in debt on a decree for money without awarding a writ of inquiry of damages, the court, at a subsequent term, may set aside the judgment as irregularly entered. Shelton v. Welsh, 7 Leigh 175. The court in this case distinguished and explained Halley v. Baird, 1 H. & M. 25; Freeland v. Field, 6 Call 12; Digges v. Dunn, 1 Munf. 56; Eubank v. Ralls, 4 Leigh 308. In the first case, i. e., Halley v. Baird, the court decided, in conformity with the common law, and Freeland v. Field, that a judgment entered in the order book and signed by the judge in open court, could not be amended at a subsequent term, these facts were emphatically stated, and seemed to have been considered as vitally important.

Subsequent Term.—Moreover, a final decree by default may be set aside at a subsequent term, for good cause shown, in a case where relief cannot be given by a bill of review, or bill to impeach the decree for fraud in obtaining it. Erwin v. Vint, 6 Munf. 267.

Member of Assembly—Privilege.—Where a suit has been brought against a member of the General Assembly, and the process has been served upon him, and an office judgment has been entered up against him at the rules, whilst his privilege existed, and confirmed, he may, at the next term of the court, though his privilege has then ceased, upon motion, have all proceedings subsequent to the issue of the process set aside, and the cause remanded to the rules. McPherson v. Nesmith, 3 Gratt. 237.

3. ADMISSION OF PLEAS.—After an office judgment, the court has discretionary power to admit any plea which appears necessary for defendant's defence, though not issuable and should refuse it only where delay seems to be intended. Downman v. Downman, 1 Wash. 26.

General Demurrer.—But a general demurrer is an issuable plea, which ought to be received for the purpose of setting aside an office judgment. Syme v. Griffin, 4 H. & M. 277.

Puis Darrein Continuance.—After an office judgment, and before the end of the next quarterly term the plea puis darrein continuance may be pleaded. Hunt v. Wilkinson, 2 Call 50, 1 Am. Dec. 534.

Plea in Abatement.—But a plea in abatement ought not to be received to set aside an office judgment, unless it be of matter which arose puis darrein continuance. Bradley v. Welch, 1 Munf. 284; Hunt v. Wilkinson, 2 Call 49.

A plea in abatement not being an issuable plea, cannot be filed to set aside an office judgment, and must be filed at rules, before office judgment is entered, except where cause, making the filing of a plea in abatement necessary, occurs after the office judgment is entered at rules, in which case it may be filed at the first opportunity afterwards. Hinton v. Ballard, 3 W. Va. 582, citing Wyche v. Macklin, 2 Rand. 426; Hunt v. Wilkinson, 2 Call 49, 2 Tuck. Com. 254. See monographic note on "Plea in Abatement" appended to Warren v. Saunders, 27 Gratt. 259.

Judgment on Docket.—An office judgment cannot be set aside when it stands as an office judgment on the docket of the court, by a plea in abatement. Wall v. Atwell, 21 Gratt. 401.

Statute of Limitations.—The defendant cannot plead the act of limitations upon setting aside the office judgment, after the next succeeding term, unless good cause is shown. Backhouse v. Jones, 5 Call 462.

Defective Plea.—A defective plea, to an action upon an injunction bond, ought not to be received by the court, to set aside an office judgment. Gray v. Campbell, 3 Munf. 251.

Plea to Part of Demand.—If the plea filed by the defendant at rules, does not go to the plaintiff's whole demand, he may sign judgment for so much as is not covered by the plea. Southall v. Bank, 12 Gratt. 312.

Discretion of Court in Receiving Pleas.—Where a plea is offered on setting aside an office judgment, the court may exercise a sound discretion about receiving them; should receive none (if objected to) that do not go to the merits of the action. Wyche v. Macklin, 2 Rand. 426; Downman v. Downman, 1 Wash. 26.

I. RELIEF BY PROCEEDING IN EQUITY.—An injunction will not be granted against a judgment by default upon summons directed to the sheriff of another county than the one where the action is brought, although the summons was issued contrary to law, as the judgment, though erroneous, is not void, and the defendant has a complete remedy at law by motion under Va. Code 1887, sec. 8451. Brown v. Chapman, 90 Va. 174, 17 S. E. Rep. 855.

Grounds for Interference in Equity.—A party cannot get relief in equity, against a judgment by default, upon grounds which might have been successfully taken in a law court, unless some reason founded in fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the party be shown, why the defence was not made in that court. Alford v. Moore, 15 W. Va. 597; Knapp v. Snyder, 15 W. Va. 434; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 286. See infra, this note, "Equitable Relief against Judgments."

Suit in Equity to Enforce Judgment.—In a suit in equity brought for the purpose of enforcing a judgment lien, which judgment was obtained against the defendant by default, the defendant will not be allowed in said chancery suit to make any defence against the judgment which might have been successfully made in a court of law, unless he shows some reason founded on fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstance beyond his control, why the defence at law was not made. McNeel v. Auldridge, 24 W. Va. 748, 12 S. E. Rep. 851.

Scope of Relief.—Where for want of service of process judgment is void, collection of execution should be enjoined, the judgment vacated, and the cause remanded to be proceeded in at law by an alias summons properly served. Finney v. Clark, 86 Va. 854, 10 S. E. Rep. 569.

Relief of Bail.—Bail cannot be relieved in equity against a judgment at law by default, without assigning some good cause why he did not defend himself at law. Brown v. Toell, 5 Rand. 543.

1. APPEAL FROM DEFAULT.

Preliminary Application to Correct.—If a party takes an appeal from a judgment by default before applying to the court in which the decree was rendered, or to the judge thereof to correct the errors of which he complains, his appeal must be dismissed, as improperly taken. Baker v. Western M. & M. Co., 6 W.

Va. 196; Peerce v. Adamson, 20 W. Va. 57; Com. v. Levy, 28 Gratt. 21; Gunn v. Turner, 21 Gratt. 383.

It was held in Peerce v. Adamson, 20 W. Va. 57, that section 85 of art. 8 of the W. Va. Constitution does not authorize the setting aside of judgments therein specified and the granting of new trials therein. The judgments must stand until, by "due process of law," it is ascertained that they were rendered because of acts done according to the usages of civilized warfare in the prosecution of the war and when so ascertained such judgments are nullities.

Supersedeas to Order.—Where a court sets aside an office judgment and the execution which has issued upon it after the fifteenth day of the term, and permits the defendant to plead, the plaintiff may have a supersedeas from the order; and though that part of the order setting aside the judgment is interlocutory, and the appellate court will reverse the whole order. Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. 64, and note; Hunter v. Snyder, 11 W. Va. 204.

Review of Judgments by Default.—In reviewing a judgment by default on a forthcoming bond, the appellate court will compare it with the execution on which it was taken. Glascock v. Dawson, 1 Munf. 605.

By Va. Code 1887, § 8451, "the court in which there is a judgment by default, or decree on a bill taken for confessed, or the judge of the said court in the vacation thereof, may, on motion, reverse such a judgment or decree for any error for which an appellate court might reverse it, as if the following section had not been enacted, and give such judgment or decree as ought to be given." See Brown v. Chapman, 90 Va. 174, 17 S. E. Rep. 855.

Justice's Judgment—Trial De Novo upon Appeal.—The judgment of a justice rendered upon the verdict of six jurors in an action for damages, in which no defence was made by the defendant, cannot be tried de novo by the circuit court upon appeal. Hickman v. B. & O. R. Co., 30 W. Va. 296, 4 S. E. Rep. 654; Vandervort v. Fouse, 30 W. Va. 326, 4 S. E. Rep. 660; Barlow v. Daniels, 25 W. Va. 512.

a. Record on Appeal.

Summons and Return Part of Record.—In all cases of a judgment by default, for want of appearance, the writ with the endorsement is a necessary part of the record, that it may be seen whether there was a proper foundation for the judgment. Nadenbush v. Lane, 4 Rand. 413; Wainwright v. Harper, 3 Leigh 270; Amiss v. McGinnis, 12 W. Va. 374.

Facts Proven—Evidence.—It is not necessary to make the facts proven, nor the evidence, a part of the record, in case of a judgment by default, and if any part of the evidence is referred to in the preamble to the judgment, this, of itself, is insufficient to preclude the fact that other evidence might have been heard by the court, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that this was all the evidence heard by the court. Anderson v. Doolittle, 38 W. Va. 629, 18 S. E. Rep. 724.

Receipt for Executions.—A judgment by default against a sheriff, for fines collected upon executions in behalf of the commonwealth, may be sustained, although his receipt for the execution is not inserted in the record. Segouine v. Auditor, 4 Munf. 398.

Copy of Bail Bond.—A clerk's entering and confirming an office judgment, at rules, against a defendant, and another person, as "security for his appearance," is not sufficient to make such person liable as appearance bail; but a copy of the bail bond should be inserted in the transcript of the record, for want of which, the judgment should be reversed. Quarles v. Buford, 3 Munf. 487.

Record as Evidence.—Notwithstanding the fact that the defendants, in a suit in chancery, are in default, yet the record or proceedings in another suit inter alios, is not competent evidence against them. Frazier v. Frazier, 2 Leigh 642.

XIV. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

A. RES JUDICATA.—A point once adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction, however erroneous the adjudication, may be relied on as an estoppel in any subsequent collateral suit in the same or any court at law or in equity, when either the party or his privies allege anything inconsistent with it, and that, too, whether the subsequent suit is upon the same or a different cause of action; nor is it necessary that precisely the same parties should have been plaintiffs or defendants in the same suit, provided that the same subject-matter in controversy between two or more parties to the two suits, respectively, have been in a former suit directly in issue and decided. The conclusiveness of the judgment or decree extends beyond what may appear on its face, to every allegation which has been made on one side, and denied on the other, and was in issue and determined in the course of the proceedings. If it appears by the record that the point in controversy was necessarily decided in the first suit, whether upon the law on demurrer, or upon the facts in issue, it cannot again be considered in any subsequent suit between any of the parties or their privies. McCoy v. McCoy, 20 W. Va. 794, 2 S. E. Rep. 809; Poole v. Dilworth, 26 W. Va. 583; Corrothers v. Sargent, 20 W. Va. 356; Beckwith v. Thompson, 18 W. Va. 103; Coville v. Gilman, 13 W. Va. 337; Western M. & M. Co. v. Virginia, etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250; Tracey v. Shumate, 23 W. Va. 509; Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 766, 23 S. E. Rep. 476.

Qualification of Rule.—But the law of res judicata is subject to this qualification: no party can be estopped by any judgment or decree if the record of the first suit shows that he had no opportunity to be heard in opposition to such judgment or decree. McCoy v. McCoy, 20 W. Va. 794, 2 S. E. Rep. 809; Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 511; Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 379; Haymond v. Camden, 23 W. Va. 182; Stephens v. Brown, 24 W. Va. 234; Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. 409.

A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties, and involving the same subject-matter, is conclusive. Currie v. Chowning, 2 Va. Dec. 25, 21 S. E. Rep. 809, citing Diehl v. Marchant, 87 Va. 447, 12 S. E. Rep. 803.

Application to Foreign Judgments.—The rule as to res adjudicata applies not only to judgments and decrees of the same state, but to the judgments and decrees of the courts of any state in the Union, whenever questioned in any sister state, provided there was personal service or an appearance of the parties to the suit in the sister state. Sayre v. Harpold, 33 W. Va. 553, 11 S. E. Rep. 16; Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 780.

Suit Construing Deeds.—But, a suit construing certain deeds and the rights of the parties thereunder will not be considered res judicata of an action of ejectment founded on an alleged breach of the conditions of the deeds. King v. Railway Co., 99 Va. 625, 39 S. E. Rep. 701.

Petition to Rehear—Bill of Review—Final Determination.—"The court, before allowing a petition to re-hear, or a bill of review to be filed on the ground of after-discovered evidence, ought to be satisfied that the evidence relied on is new and could not, by ordinary diligence, have been discovered prior to the date of the decree complained of; but when the court is so satisfied, and allows a petition to rehear, or a bill of review to be filed, those questions are finally determined, and are not open when the petition to rehear, or a bill of review is heard on the merits. 1 Bart. Ch. Pr. 332." Craufurd v. Smith, 98 Va. 622, 23 S. E. Rep. 235, 25 S. E. Rep. 657.

Legality of an Authority to Issue Mandamus.—On a rule issued against a county commissioner to show cause why he should not be fined for contempt in disobeying a peremptory mandamus issued against him and others, directing them to settle and sign a bill of exceptions in the manner therein prescribed, he cannot question the legality of the writ, and the authority to issue it, as that matter, as to him, is res judicata. State v. Cunningham, 33 W. Va. 607, 11 S. E. Rep. 76.

Partition.—It was held in Newberry v. Sheffey, 86 Va. 286, 15 S. E. Rep. 548, where a purchaser of land at a sale for partition in a chancery suit was entitled to a credit on his bonds, for his wife's interest in the lands, and he fails to pay his bonds for the purchase money, and judgment was recovered therein against the sureties, execution issued, and a forthcoming bond taken, that in a motion on the forthcoming bond, the court properly refused to continue the case until such interest could be ascertained and credited on the judgment, because the right of the parties, so far as the proceeding at law was concerned, had been settled by the judgment. See also, Cleek v. McGuffin, 89 Va. 324, 15 S. E. Rep. 896; Carter v. Washington, 2 H. & M. 345.

Cloud upon Title.—Thus, where a purchaser of land applies for and obtains an injunction in a circuit court restraining the trustee from selling on account of an alleged cloud upon the title, and the supreme court has, on appeal, reversed the circuit court, and decides that the alleged cloud and defect do not constitute sufficient ground for an injunction and dismiss the bill, the plaintiff cannot bring a second, and precisely similar, suit against the same parties for the same purpose and cause of action; and on a plea of res judicata the plea will be sustained. Kinports v. Rawson, 36 W. Va. 237, 15 S. E. Rep. 66.

Plea of Res Judicata.—If a new suit is brought by the plaintiffs against the same defendant for the same cause of action, and the plea of res judicata is interposed by the defendant, it will bar the action. Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806.

For to obtain the benefit of res judicata it must be pleaded. Beall v. Walker, 26 W. Va. 741; The Western M. & M. Co. v. The Virginia, etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250. See Blern v. Ray (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 521.

Thus a judgment between the same parties, upon the same point, which, if pleaded, would have been a perfect bar is, when used as evidence under the general issue, not conclusive on the jury, but only evidence to be weighed by them. Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. 86.

If in assumpsit, the defendant plead the act of limitations, and the plaintiff would avoid the plea by a former suit having been brought in time, he must reply the former specially; he cannot give it in evidence under a general replication to the plea. Bogle v. Conway, 3 Call 1.

Evidence.—Under a declaration alleging that a certain judgment in a prior suit was rendered on May 30th, a copy of such judgment purporting to have been rendered on May 31st, was admissible in evidence; the record showing that the verdict on which the judgment was based was rendered on May 30th. Sayre v. Edwards, 19 W. Va. 352.

Copy of Judgment.—A copy of a judgment of the general court, upon a case adjoined to it by a superior court, attested by the clerk of the general court, his attestation or handwriting being proved, is competent and sufficient evidence before the same superior court, to prove what it purports to be. Gibson v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 111.

1. PARTIES AND PRIVIES.

a. General Rule as Regards Parties.—It is a well-settled rule of evidence that a verdict and judgment in an action at law, cannot be received in evidence upon the trial of an action between others, not parties to the first, nor standing in privity with those who were, for the purpose of proving any fact upon which such verdict and judgment were founded and which being essential to their rendition, is to be regarded as established by them. Stinchcomb v. Marsh, 15 Gratt. 202; Cady v. Gale, 5 W. Va. 505; Adams v. Alkire, 20 W. Va. 490.

Unlawful Detainer.—It was held in Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354, in an action for damages occasioned by taking out a distress warrant against the plaintiff for rent due in March, 1891, that a judgment rendered in November, 1890, between the same parties, in an action of unlawful detainer, is no evidence as to whether rent was due at the date of the warrant.

Amended Bill—New Parties.—If an amended bill is filed making new parties and additional allegations, and after it is ready for hearing, on this amended bill, a decree is rendered reciting that the cause was heard on the papers formerly read, but not reciting, that it was heard on the amended bill, and the decree is such as might have been rendered on the original bill, nothing being decided with reference to the new allegations of the facts stated in the amended bill, the failure to recite in this decree, that the cause was heard also on the amended bill, cannot be regarded as a clerical error; and the new parties are not bound by this decree as res adjudicata. Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 511.

A plaintiff suing for slaves as administrator of his wife, is not barred by a decision against her, in her lifetime, in a suit to which she was not a party; the ground of that decision having been that, under the act of limitations, the opposite party had obtained a legal title to the slaves by five years' possession commencing during the coverture, during which also the right of the wife accrued, and the husband having never had possession in his character as husband. Blakey v. Newby, 6 Munf. 64.

Improperly Made Parties.—Proceedings by the commissioner of school lands, under chap. 184 of the W. Va. Acts of 1872-73, for the sale of foreign lands for the benefit of the school fund, was never designed to settle the title to land between opposing claimants; and if they are improperly made defendants in such a proceeding, the circuit court has no jurisdiction, in such a case, to adjudge which of such claimants has the better title to the land so as to bind any of such improper parties by such adjudication in any controversy which they might thereafter have, involving the question, who had the better title to the land. McClure v. Manperture, 20 W. Va. 633, 2 S. E. Rep. 761.

Thus the parties to two suits must be regarded as the same, when the complainants in both were certain taxpayers of a municipality suing on behalf of themselves and all other taxpayers, and the defendants in both, though consisting of different persons, were, in each suit, representing and acting for the municipality without any private interest. Gallaher v. Moundsville, 24 W. Va. 730, 12 S. E. Rep. 859.

Description of Parties.—It was held in Fidelity Ins., Trust & S. D. Co. v. S. V. R. Co., 33 W. Va. 761, 11 S. E. Rep. 58, that an attachment against a defendant which summons M, president of the S. V. R. Co., garnishee, to answer what property of the defendant he has in hand, and a judgment is rendered that the plaintiff recover of M, president of S. V. R. Co., garnishee of the defendant, a sum of money, are not an attachment and judgment against the S. V. R. Co., as garnishee, and do not bind property in the hands of the latter company belonging to the defendant; and the sale of the property under execution upon such judgment does not pass title thereto, or bar the defendant, from setting up its claim, to such property against the S. V. R. Co.

General Rule as Regards Privies.—"It is well settled that a judgment is conclusive not only upon those who are actually parties to the litigation, but also upon all persons who are in privity with them. This is not only a doctrine of our own law, but also a principle of general jurisprudence, as appears from the rule of the Roman law that 'the plea res adjudicata is available against him who has succeeded to the rights of ownership of the person who suffered the judgment.'" 2 Black, Judgm. 549; Smith v. Parkersburg Co-Op. Ass'n (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 645; Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354; Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 32 S. E. Rep. 476.

"There is no doubt that a judgment or decree necessarily affirming the existence of any fact is conclusive upon the parties or their privies, whenever the existence of that fact is again in issue between them, not only when the subject-matter is the same, but when the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter, in the same or any other court, except on appeal, writ of error, or other proceeding provided for its revision."

* * * * The principle underlying and supporting all these decisions is that a judgment necessarily affirming or denying the fact is conclusive of its existence whenever it becomes a matter in issue between the same parties or between the parties or their privies with them. Therefore a judgment for the defendant in an action for obstructing a water course, if based upon the ground that there was no water course to be constructed, is, in subsequent actions, conclusive of the nonexistence of such water course; but, if the judgment had been for the plaintiff, it would necessarily have been conclusive in other actions of the existence of the water course and of its obstruction." Freem. Judgm. § 249; C. & O. R. Co. v. Rison (Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 320.

Right of Free Ferriage.—A former adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction in 1810, wherein the question of the right of the ancestor of the plaintiff in the suit, his heirs and tenants, to free ferriage across a stream, and the construction of the deed on which the right was based, was decided in his favor, is binding and conclusive in a subsequent suit involving substantially the same question, not only on the original parties to the deed in the former suit, but also on all those in privity with them. Williams v. Tomlin, 3 Va. Dec. 565, 28 S. E. Rep. 383; Lemmon v. Herbert, 92 Va. 653, 24 S. E. Rep. 249.

Exception to Rule.—"The general rule certainly is, that no person is bound by a judgment or decree except those who were parties or standing in privity with others who were parties. But there are exceptions to the rule of equal authority with the rule itself. Baylor v. Dejarnette, 18 Gratt. 164. It would certainly be unreasonable and unjust that a party having a charge upon an estate affecting the whole fee should be delayed or embarrassed in enforcing his claim because of limitation by way of remainder to persons to whom it might be impossible or improper to make parties to the cause. To obviate this difficulty the doctrine of virtual representation has been introduced by which certain parties before the court are regarded as representing those coming after them with contingent interests." Harrison v. Wallton, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. Rep. 372.

Prison-Bonds Bond—Sheriff Not Party.—The sheriff, in a suit upon a prison-bonds bond, though not a party to the suit on the bond, is bound by the judgment, unless he can prove that it was obtained by collusion. Hoe v. Tebbs, 1 Munf. 501.

Remaindermen.—In Baylor v. Dejarnette, 18 Gratt. 162, the court said: "It is well settled that it is not necessary that remaindermen, after the first estate of inheritance, should be made parties: and where real estate is in controversy which is subject to an entail it is sufficient to make the first tenant in tail in esse, in whom an estate of inheritance is vested, a party with those claiming prior interests without making those parties, who may claim in reversion or remainder after such estate of inheritance. And a decree against such tenant in tail will bind those in reversion or remainder although by the failure of all the previous estates, the estates in remainder or reversion might afterwards become vested." See also, Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 684, 688.

Where the circuit court construes a will as giving a life estate, which construction is not drawn in question on appeal, and which is approved by the appellate court, the question as to what estate passed by the will is res judicata; and the fact that the remaindermen are not parties to that suit is immaterial. Hawthorne v. Beckwith, 89 Va. 786, 17 S. E. Rep. 241.

Presence—A person, not a party to a judgment, is not bound by it, in law or equity, merely on the ground that he was present, and cross-examined the witnesses. Turpin v. Thomas, 2 H. & M. 139.

Decision as to Freedom—Privies.—A judgment deciding in favor of the freedom of persons held in slavery, has no effect against any party, except the defendant and those claiming under him, posterior to the judgment. Kitty v. Fitzhugh, 4 Rand. 600. But see Bensimer v. Fell, 80 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

In an action for freedom, a former verdict which found the mother of the plaintiff to be free, or a slave, is conclusive evidence, where the defendant in the second action claims under the defendant in the former suit. Shelton v. Barbour, 2 Wash. 64. But see Talbert v. Jenny, 6 Rand. 159.

Judgment in Forma Pauperis.—It seems that a judgment, in a suit in forma pauperis brought by negroes to recover their freedom, in which it is adjudged that they are slaves, is not necessarily conclusive of the status of the negroes, in a new controversy between them and the same defendants, and, under peculiar circumstances, may be no bar to the recovery of their freedom. Erskine v. Henry, 9 Leigh 188.

Where a suit in forma pauperis, is brought by negroes to recover their freedom, and it is adjudged that the paupers are slaves, the judgment in the pauper suit is not conclusive evidence, and if the court holds them to be free, the plaintiffs cannot recover them. Erskine v. Henry, 9 Leigh 188.

Assignees.—Where the assignment of a chose in action is absolute in its terms, and judgment has been obtained thereon in the name of the assignor for the benefit of the assignee, which judgment has subsequently been declared void in a suit brought by the assignee to enforce the collection of the judgment out of the lands of the judgment debtor, the assignor of the debt is bound by the decree against his assignee, and is estopped from setting up the judgment as a lien on the lands of the judgment debtor, even though the assignment was merely a collateral security for a debt, or intended to carry only a partial interest. The assignor and assignee are at least privies in the transaction, and the question of the lien of the judgment is res judicata. Cox v. Crockett, 92 Va. 50, 23 S. E. Rep. 840. See monographic note on "Estoppel" appended to Bower v. McCormick, 23 Gratt. 310.

Where, in an action to enjoin a sale under a trust deed on the ground that it has been merged in a judgment on the bond secured by it, a resettlement is asked of the accounts of the defendant's testator or administrator de bonis non because of the recent discovery of a receipt showing assets unaccounted for, and it appears that all these parties were parties to a former suit against the deceased's administrators, in which it was charged that the deceased had not fully accounted for the assets, the judgment in the latter case is res judicata. Gibson v. Green, 89 Va. 524, 16 S. E. Rep. 661.

Determination on Appeal.—Where a question of law or fact is one definitely settled and determined by a decree of the supreme court, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings, a party to the suit cannot, by subsequent pleadings, call in question the conclusiveness of the questions determined by such decree. Seabright v. Seabright, 33 W. Va. 152, 10 S. E. Rep. 265.

A judgment which determines the issue of the legality of a dam, in an action in which such issue is raised by the pleading, is conclusive between the parties or their privies in a subsequent action, since the parties are estopped from denying such facts. C. & O. R. Co. v. Rison, 99 Va. 18, 37 S. E. Rep. 320.

Judgment Creditor—Pendency of Suit.—A judgment creditor is concluded by a decree in a cause in which he is a defendant, though he has, at the same time, a suit depending against the same parties to enforce his prior lien. Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179.

Persons Claiming in Different Rights.—Where the same person has two separate and distinct rights or interests in the subject-matter of a suit and the allegations of the bill comprehend but one of said rights or interests, the fact that such person is made a party to such suit will not estop, conclude or prevent him from asserting or defending his rights or interests in regard to said subject-matter so far as they were not involved or comprehended in the allegations of the bill in such suit. As to the matters not so comprehended in the bill, he will not be regarded as a party to the suit. Thus, if a person is interested in the subject-matter of a suit in two capacities, the one as trustee in one deed of trust and the other as beneficiary in a different deed of trust, both deeds of trust being upon the same property, and he is made a party to a suit brought to set aside the latter trust deed, in which no reference is made to him as trustee in the trust deed, he will not be regarded as a party to that suit in his capacity of trustee in the former trust deed. McNult v. Trogon, 29 W. Va. 469, 2 S. E. Rep. 328. See monographic note on "Estoppel" appended to Bower v. McCormick, 23 Gratt. 310.

Grantor and Grantee.—A grantee of land is not affected by a judgment against his grantor, after the conveyance, merely because of privity in estate. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Trustee and Cestui Que Trust.—Rights of a cestui que trust cannot be cut off by a decree in equity rendered against his trustee in a suit in chancery to which the cestui que trust was not a party. Collins v. Loftus, 10 Leigh 5.

Joint Parties.—Though the statute in relation to joint obligations, gives an action against the personal representative of a deceased joint obligor, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 98, § 3, p. 359; Va. Code, ch. 144, § 13, p. 582, it does not affect the principle that the defect of the remedy against one joint obligor upon a ground not personal to himself, defeats it as to all of the obligors. Brown v. Johnson, 13 Gratt. 644. The court in this case further said: "If a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff against one of several who are jointly bound may be admitted in evidence in an action against another as a bar, it would seem to be a necessary corollary (if the deduction be not a fortiori) that a verdict and judgment against the plaintiff in the former action upon an issue going to the merits and ascertaining that the plaintiff never had any cause of action against that defendant, would be admissible as a bar to a subsequent action against another so jointly bound. For the joint obligation would clearly be at an end as to the former, and therefore, as we have seen, as to all the others."

"At common law a judgment recovered against one of two or more persons on their joint contract was a bar to an action against the others. The entire cause of action was merged in the judgment, and the joint liability of those not sued, or against whom the judgment was not rendered, was extinguished. And upon a joint and several contract the action had to be brought against all jointly, or against one of them singly, and could not be brought against any intermediate number. These rules, however, have been essentially changed by statutes enacted by the legislature." See Va. Code 1887, §§ 3395, 3396, 3312; Cahoon v. McCulloch, 92 Va. 177, 23 S. E. Rep. 225.

Covenant by One Joint Obligor.—A covenant by the obligor in a bond with one of three joint obligors, that if after judgment against all the parties the money is not paid by the other two, he will relieve him from the payment of it, is not a release, and will not bar an action on the bond against all the obligors. Brown v. Johnson, 13 Gratt. 644.

Judgment as between Joint Defendants.—Where in a suit charging two administrators with the joint devastavit of the intestate's estate, and they jointly except to the report wherein they were charged with the devastavit, and the court sustained the exception, one of these administrators cannot afterwards be heard to charge his coadministrators with the same devastavit whereby a debt due by the estate to the allegor was lost. The decree sustaining the exception is the law of the case, binding upon the parties and those claiming under them. Kent v. Kent, 82 Va. 205.

Record as Evidence.—The record of a judgment is evidence in a subsequent suit between the same parties, to the effect that claims asserted in both suits which were disallowed or set off in the former suit are not done. Johnson v. Jennings, 10 Gratt. 1.

The record of the verdict and judgment, upon a writ of inquiry, in a suit by the mother of the plaintiff, against a third person, in which record the ground of the judgment does not appear, may be given in evidence to prove, that the mother had recovered her freedom; not that she was entitled to it. But the questions, upon what ground the judgment in that suit was rendered, and whether the decedent was born after the mother acquired her right to freedom or not, ought to be left open. Pegram v. Isabell, 2 H. & M. 193.

Parties to Record.—A record of one suit cannot be read as evidence in another, unless both the parties, or those under whom they claim, were parties to both suits, it being a rule that a document cannot be used against a party who could not avail himself of it, in case it was made in his favor, nor can it be read in evidence on the ground that the defendant and one of the plaintiffs in the latter suit were parties to the former, and that the same point was in controversy in both, when another plaintiff, and the person under whom both the plaintiffs jointly claim, were not made parties to the former suit. Paynes v. Coles, 1 Munf. 373; Chapmans v. Chapman, 1 Munf. 398. See also, Waggoner v. Wolf, 28 W. Va. 820.

C. REPRESENTATIVE PARTIES.

Judgment against Personal Representative Not Evidence against Heir.—The general doctrine, without qualification or exception, is well settled that there being no privity between the personal representative and the party to whom the real estate passes, a judgment against such personal representative is not even prima facie evidence against the heir or devisee. Bank v. Good, 21 W. Va. 455; Laidley v. Kline, 8 W. Va. 218; Custer v. Custer, 17 W. Va. 124; Mason v. Peter, 1 Munf. 437; Saddler v. Kennedy, 26 W. Va. 636; Foster v. Crenshaw, 3 Munf. 520; Shields v. Anderson, 3 Leigh 736; Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 306.

Not a Lien.—Such a judgment is not a lien on the real estate descended to the heir and does not prevent the statute of limitations from running in favor of the heir wherever real estate descended is sought to be subjected for the debt on which such judgment was obtained. Saddler v. Kennedy, 26 W. Va. 636.

Judgment against Executor Binds Legatees.—But a judgment against an executor is conclusive, both as to the validity and amount of the demand, on both executors and legatees. Hooper v. Hooper, 33 W. Va. 526, 9 S. E. Rep. 937; Corrothers v. Sargent, 20 W. Va. 351; Sheldon v. Armstead, 7 Gratt. 264; Freem. Judm., § 163. See also, Seabright v. Seabright, 33 W. Va. 152, 10 S. E. Rep. 265, in which case it was held that where the question raised by a bill in equity is as to whether certain bonds and notes therein described are a part of the estate of a decedent, or have been disposed of by assignment and delivery, as a gift to two of his brothers, and the property has by a decree of the supreme court been determined to belong to the estate of the decedent, the decision is binding and conclusive upon all the distributees of the estate.

"With the settlement before auditors, the heir as such has no concern, nor can such settlement be evidence against him either prima facie or otherwise. Even a judgment against an executor is no evidence against the heir, of the justice or the amount of the creditor's demand; it is res inter alios acta. Mason v. Peter, 1 Munf. 487. A fortiori, it would seem, that the ex parte report of auditors, appointed only to settle the disbursements of the personal assets, cannot be so. The account in this case, then, was no evidence before the commissioner of the court of chancery, except so far as the acknowledgment of the brothers made it so. But in that acknowledgment the sisters did not join, and it did not therefore bind them. Therefore, it could not avail the administrator; for he could have no decree for a sale of realty without establishing his demand in such mode as would bind all the heirs. It is like the case of a confession of judgment by one of two joint obligors, and a successful defence of the action by the other; in which case, the confession avails nothing, and the judgment is entered for both defendants. The demand is entire and if disapproved as to one, is disapproved as to all, the confession to the contrary notwithstanding." Street v. Street, 11 Leigh 498.

And a judgment or decree against an executor in favor of a creditor, payable out of assets, is conclusive evidence upon the executor and his sureties as to the existence and justness of the demand. Crim v. England, 46 W. Va. 480, 33 S. E. Rep. 810.

Lost Bond.—But a judgment upon an alleged lost bond, against the personal representative of the obligor, is not even prima facie against the heir or devisee of his estate. Board v. Callihan, 33 W. Va. 209, 10 S. E. Rep. 382. See also, Daingerfield v. Smith, 33 Va. 81, 1 S. E. Rep. 599.

Intestate's Bond.—A judgment, however, rendered against an administrator upon the bond of his intestate, is conclusive evidence of the validity of the debt as against the administrator. Montague v. Turpin, 8 Gratt. 453.

Return Nulla Bona.—A judgment against an executor or administrator as such, with an execution, and return nulla bona, are not sufficient to authorize an action on the administration bond, but a devastavit must first be established by a second suit. Gordon v. Justices of Frederick County, 1 Munf. 1. But see Meade v. Brooking, 3 Munf. 548.

Evidence of Debt.—But a judgment against the personal representative of a decedent is not even prima facie evidence of a debt against the heirs of such decedent. McKay v. McKay, 33 W. Va. 724, 11 S. E. Rep. 213; Broderick v. Broderick, 28 W. Va. 878.

In Garnett v. Macon, 6 Call 308, the court by CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL said: "The defendants insist that the decree against a personal representative of George Brooks is conclusive evidence against the devisee of the existence of the debt. The cases cited by counsel, in support of this proposition, do not decide the very point. Not one of them brings directly into question, the conclusiveness of a judgment against the executor, in a suit against the heir or devisee. They undoubtedly show, that the executor completely represents the testator, as the legal owner of his personal property, for the payment of his debts in the first instance, and is, consequently, the proper person to contest the claims of his creditors. Yet, there are strong reasons for denying the conclusiveness of a judgment against an executor in an action against the heir. He is not a party to the suit,—cannot controvert the testimony,—adduce evidence in opposition to the claim,—or appeal from the judgment. In case of a deficiency of assets, the executor may feel no interest in defending the suit, and may not choose to incur the trouble or expense attendant on a laborious investigation of the claim. It would seem unreasonable that the heir, who does not claim under the executor, should be estopped by a judgment against him. In this case, the creditor is bound to proceed against the executor and to exhaust the personal estate, before the lands become liable to his claim. The heir, or devisee, may indeed, in a court of chancery, be united with the executor in the same action, but the decree against him, would be dependent on the insufficiency of the personal estate. Since, then, the proceeding against the executor, is, in substance, the foundation of the proceeding against the heir, or devisee, the argument for considering it as prima facie evidence, may be irresistible, but I cannot consider it as an estoppel. The judgment not being against a person representing the land, ought, I think, on the general principle, which applies to giving records in evidence, to be re-examinable when brought to bear upon the proprietor of the land."

Joint Executors.—"Between the executors of the same decedent in different jurisdictions, there is privity derived from, or through the will of the testator, and a judgment or decree is evidence against the other, and may be enforced against each (see Hill v. Tucker, 3 How. 458), and it is sufficient to ground a suit or action on or against either executor. An administrator with the will annexed is, in legal contemplation, executor of that will, and a decree against the domiciliary executor binds every executor of the same will in every jurisdiction." Garland v. Garland, 84 Va. 181, 4 S. E. Rep. 334.

Sureties of Executor—Virginia Rule.—A verdict and judgment against an executor or administrator are not conclusive evidence against his surety; nor are they conclusive even against the party against whom they are rendered, unless they are pleaded as an estoppel. Craddock v. Turner, 6 Leigh 116; Hobson v. Yancey, 2 Gratt. 73.

Judgment by Default—Heirs Not Parties.—A judgment by default against a personal representative in a suit to which the heirs or devisees of the decedent are not parties, is not evidence against such heirs or devisees in a suit or proceeding by the creditor to subject the real estate, descended or devised, to the payment of the debt, and the reason assigned is, that there is no privity between the representative and such heirs or devisees. Brewis v. Lawson, 76 Va. 41; Watts v. Taylor, 80 Va. 627; Daingerfield v. Smith, 33 Va. 81, 1 S. E. Rep. 599.

And CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL, in delivering the opinion of the supreme court in Deneale v. Stump, 8 Peters 531, said: "It is understood to be settled in Virginia, that no judgment against the executors can bind the heirs, or in any manner affect them. It could not be given in evidence against them." See also, Robertson v. Wright, 17 Gratt. 534, and note; Hudgin v. Hudgin, 6 Gratt. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 124; Stockton v. Copeland, 30 W. Va. 674, 5 S. E. Rep. 143.

Effect of Statute on Rule.—Va. Code 1872, ch. 127, § 2, does not alter the above-stated rule. Brewis v. Lawson, 76 Va. 36; Watts v. Taylor, 80 Va. 627.

"In all cases where the question is, whether a person be a debtor or not, a judgment against him or his legal representative seems to be prima facie evidence of the fact, liable to be controverted upon the ground of fraud, or upon any other just ground, by any one a stranger to the judgment except, in the case of a real and personal representative of the same person.

in which case either the one or the other might have been sued in the first instance." Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 206.

Former Report of an Account.—Where in a creditor's suit against an administrator, to which the distributees are not parties, a master stated and reported an account of the sums collected by the administrator, which report was confirmed, and later the distributee filed a bill against the administrator and his sureties for an account of sums previously collected by him and for payment of the whole, it was held that the former report did not preclude an account of the last, especially where the sums collected, and the dates when, and persons from whom they were collected, are specified in the bill. Hurt v. West, 87 Va. 78, 12 S. E. Rep. 141.

When Judgment against Ancestor Binds Heir.—A judgment against the ancestor in his lifetime, only binds the heir, when it cannot be paid out of the personal estate of the ancestor. Rogers v. Denham, 2 Gratt. 200.

Injunction and Sale of Trust Property.—Where in a bill filed to enjoin the sale of trust property, a resettlement is prayed of the accounts of the defendant's testator as administrator de bonis non, on the ground of the recent discovery of a receipt showing assets unaccounted for, and it appears that all the parties to the bill were parties to a former suit against the decedent's administrators, in which, it was charged that the decedent had not fully accounted for the assets, the matters set up in the bill as to the assets are res adjudicata. Gibson v. Green, 80 Va. 524, 16 S. E. Rep. 661.

d. Joint Trespassers.—A party injured by cotrespassers may sue either one against whom the action may be brought. He is not bound to prosecute all, and neither the omission to sue all, nor if all are sued the dismissal of one of them from the suit, can be pleaded by the others in bar. Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 203.

A plaintiff in action of trespass may sue all, or any, or either of the alleged trespassers, and he is entitled to full satisfaction, but to only one satisfaction; and if the damages have been in part satisfied by payment or compromise with some of the defendants, the plaintiff may still proceed against those who remain on the record. Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 202.

A judgment against one joint trespasser is no bar to a suit against another for the same trespass; nothing short of full satisfaction, or that which the law must consider as such, can make such judgment a bar. Griffe v. McClung, 5 W. Va. 181; Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 1.

(1) Former Judgment.

Former Judgment in Trespass Bars.—A judgment against one of several joint trespassers, whether satisfied or not, is a bar to any action against the cotrespassers. Petticolas v. Richmond, 95 Va. 456, 28 S. E. Rep. 566. See Switzer v. McCulloch, 76 Va. 777. In the latter case it was held the former judgment did not bar the parties because of a compromise after the judgment at law, which had the effect of remitting the parties to their original rights.

Assault and Battery.—In a joint action of assault and battery, a judgment against one of the defendants is a bar to the recovery of additional damages against the rest. Ammonett v. Harris, 1 H. & M. 498; Wilkes v. Jackson, 2 H. & M. 355; Brown v. Johnson, 13 Gratt. 651.

Continuing Trespass.—Where a plaintiff has already recovered damages against the defendant for erecting a dam, thereby causing his land to overflow, in a second suit he can only recover for damages occasioned by the continuance of the dam subsequently. Ellis v. Harris, 32 Gratt. 684.

Right to Appeal.—A plaintiff cannot appeal from a judgment in favor of all the defendants, except one, in a joint action of trespass, until the suit has been abated, dismissed, or decided as to that one. Wells v. Jackson, 3 Munf. 458.

Judgment in Detinue.—A judgment against one person in an action of detinue for a slave, is, while unsatisfied, a bar to another action for the same slave, and by the same plaintiff, against another person. Murrell v. Johnson, 1 H. & M. 450.

After a judgment in detinue, a new action of detinue against the same defendant for the same thing, in which the former judgment is not declared upon, but is only relied on as evidence of title, cannot be maintained. Withers v. Withers, 6 Munf. 10.

After a judgment in detinue for slaves, the plaintiff cannot come into equity for profits accruing afterwards, pending an appeal; nor to recover their increase not included in such judgment; nor to compel the delivery of them by purchasers from the defendant. Alderson v. Biggars, 4 H. & M. 470.

Trover and Trespass for Same Injury.—If a plaintiff brings trover or detinue to recover a horse, and trespass for taking the same horse, a judgment for the defendant in an action of trover or detinue, is a good bar to the action of trespass. Hite v. Long, 6 Rand. 457.

Ejectment.—Where an action of ejectment is brought by an adverse claimant against a tenant to recover possession of the premises, and judgment is rendered for such plaintiff against the tenant by default, and a writ of possession is executed by which the plaintiff is placed in actual possession, the possession is thereby changed, and the landlord is thereby actually turned out; and in a second action of ejectment by the plaintiffs, who derived title from the plaintiff in the first suit, against such landlord, sued as defendant, the record of recovery in the former suit is competent evidence on behalf of the plaintiff in the latter suit as showing or tending to show, that the defendant's possession at that time was ended and changed by the execution of such writ of possession. Clark v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 300, 21 S. E. Rep. 735.

Fictitious Plaintiffs.—But no verdict and judgment in ejectment can be relied on as a bar to a subsequent ejectment though for the same land, and, between the same defendants and lessors of the plaintiff, where the fictitious plaintiffs are not the same. Pollard v. Baylors, 6 Munf. 433.

Adverse Party.—A verdict at law against a party is no bar to a decree in his favor if he is brought into chancery by the adverse party; but it is otherwise, if he is the plaintiff in equity. Jones v. Jones, 4 H. & M. 447.

Opinion as to Safety Does Not Preclude Action for Damages.—Where a jury of inquest in a mill case are induced by the opinions expressed and facts stated by the father of the applicant, to report that no person will sustain damage from the dam allowed to be built; and the inquisition is confirmed by the court; this inquest and judgment is no bar to an action for damages sustained by the father against a vendee of the mill, which were not actually foreseen and estimated by the inquest. Calhoun v. Palmer, 8 Gratt. 88.

Judgment Procured by Fraud.—If it be alleged and proved that a judgment or decree was procured by fraud, it ceases to protect the wrongdoer, or to obstruct the injured party in the assertion of his rights. Francis v. Cline, 96 Va. 201, 31 S. E. Rep. 10; N. & W. R. R. Co. v. Mills, 91 Va. 641, 22 S. E. Rep. 556.

Judgment Setting Aside Homestead.—A judgment setting aside a homestead to a debtor is not a bar to a subsequent action by the party to the judgment to subject the homestead to his claim, after expiration of the exemption. Hanby v. Henritze, 85 Va. 177, 7 S. E. Rep. 204.

Ineffectual Suit to Enforce Lien of Judgment.—Although a judgment is an indivisible cause of action in the sense that it may not be divided or split up into several causes of action, nevertheless a suit brought to enforce the lien of a judgment and prosecuted in good faith, though ineffectually, is not a bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same debtor to enforce the satisfaction of the same judgment. In such cases it will be the duty of the equity court to see that the creditor does not exercise his right capriciously or oppressively, and make such orders or decrees with reference to the imposition of costs as will protect litigants against unnecessary and vexatious suits. In other words the vitality of a judgment is not exhausted by one action thereon, but the judgment creditor is entitled to pursue successive actions until satisfaction is obtained. Kelly v. Hamblen, 98 Va. 383, 36 S. E. Rep. 491.

Joint Assignment of Damages.—A judgment assigning damages jointly, on the breaches assigned in a declaration on an injunction bond payable to several obligees jointly, while it is not a formal ascertaining the damages according to the statute, it is substantially so, and should be held as in full satisfaction and discharge of all the breaches alleged in the declaration, and a bar to any other or further recovery for the same breaches. Peerce v. Athey, 4 W. Va. 22.

Plea of Former Judgment—How Tried.—A plea of former judgment on the same cause of action in bar of the plaintiff's suit, replied to by "No such judgment," should be tried by the court by an examination and inspection of the record, and it is improper to submit the same to a jury. Davis v. Trump, 43 W. Va. 191, 27 S. E. Rep. 397.

How Available.—The mode in which a party must avail himself of a former judgment for the same cause of action is by plea in bar, or in an action of assumpsit, by evidence on the general issue. Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. 86.

Justice's Judgment.—Where the plaintiff already has an intelligible judgment, though defective in form and grammar, against the same parties in the same cause of action, he is precluded thereby from instituting another suit therefor before another justice, or in court. "He should have the defective judgment corrected, which the justice has the right to do on his motion, as to any clerical error committed by him, he being his own clerk." Davis v. Trump, 43 W. Va. 191, 27 S. E. Rep. 397.

2. ISSUES.

a. Must Be Directly in Issue.—A fact which has been directly tried and decided by a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be contested again between the same parties in the same or any other court. It is res judicata. But to make it res judicata it must have been directly and not collaterally in issue in the former suit, and then decided. Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806; The Western M. & M.

Co. v. The Va., etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250; S. V. R. R. Co. v. Griffith, 76 Va. 914; Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230.

If it appears that the issue presented in the latter suit was involved and determined in the former suit, the judgment or decree in such former suit is not only a bar to a second suit, between the same parties or their privies upon the same claim or demand, but also bars a suit between the same parties or their privies upon a different cause of action. Such a judgment or decree is conclusive upon the parties to it until reversed upon appeal, or until set aside or annulled by some proceeding instituted for that purpose. Harrison v. Wallton, 95 Va. 731, 30 S. E. Rep. 372.

It is settled law that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a question directly involved in one suit, is conclusive as to that question, in another suit between the same parties. Corprew v. Corprew, 84 Va. 599, 5 S. E. Rep. 798; Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 658; McComb v. Lobdell, 32 Gratt. 185; Tilson v. Davis, 32 Gratt. 92, and note; Foster v. City of Manchester, 89 Va. 92, 15 S. E. Rep. 497; Fishburne v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 324, 7 S. E. Rep. 361; Diehl v. Marchant, 87 Va. 449, 12 S. E. Rep. 808.

But a former judgment cannot be pleaded in bar unless it was directly upon the same point, and between the same parties or privies. Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. 86.

Certainty.—"It is undoubtedly settled law that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a question directly involved in one suit, is conclusive as to that question in another suit between the same parties. But to this operation of the judgment it must appear, either upon the face of the record or be shown by extrinsic evidence, that the precise question was raised and determined in the former suit. If there be any uncertainty on this head in the record—as, for example: if it appear that several distinct matters may have been litigated, upon one or more of which the judgment may have passed, without indicating which of them was thus litigated, and upon which the judgment was rendered—the whole subject-matter of the action will be at large, and open to a new contention, unless this uncertainty be removed by extrinsic evidence showing the precise point involved and determined. To apply the judgment, and give effect to the adjudication actually made, when the record leaves the matter in doubt, such evidence is admissible." Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. R. 214, 4 Otto 606, approved in Chrisman v. Harman, 29 Gratt. 494, and note, 26 Am Rep. 387; Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 651, 658; Legrand v. Rixey, 83 Va. 862, 3 S. E. Rep. 864.

Record Must Be Set Out.—Where a decision of a former suit is pleaded as an estoppel, so much of the former record must be set out or made part of the pleading, as will show that the precise question has been adjudicated in the former suit. The Western M. & M. Co. v. The Virginia, etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250.

Opinion of Trial Judge.—When a decree in a former suit is pleaded as res judicata, and the decree does not show upon which of the several points in litigation it is based, but refers to the opinion of the trial judge, filed in the case to explain what was determined, such opinion becomes a part of the record and must be looked to, to determine what was the issue and what was adjudicated by the decree. Legrand v. Rixey, 83 Va. 862, 3 S. E. Rep. 864.

Extrinsic Evidence.—Where a judgment or decree is relied upon as an estoppel, and the pleadings and proceedings in the former suit leave it doubtful what was the precise issue or state of facts upon which the judgment or decree was rendered, parol or extrinsic evidence may be received in a subsequent suit to show what was actually in issue and determined on the trial of a former suit. Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 651; Chrisman v. Harman, 29 Gratt. 404; Légrand v. Rixey, 83 Va. 862, 3 S. E. Rep. 864.

Illustration.—If a decree be pronounced by a superior court of chancery, against an executor, in a suit brought against him and his securities, but without charging or exonerating them by such decree, and the executor removes out of the commonwealth, without satisfying the same, a second suit may be brought against him and them in the superior court of chancery of any other district in which the securities reside, to get satisfaction from them. Crutcher v. Crutcher, 4 Munf. 457.

Sureties.—In a suit by a surety to recover for amounts paid by him on behalf of his principal, the defence of res judicata will not be sustained when it appears that the claims brought forward in the present suit were not put in issue in the former litigation, nor were they there made the basis of any prayer for relief, nor mentioned in the decree of the court. Tarter v. Wilson, 95 Va. 19, 27 S. E. Rep. 818. See Niday v. Harvey, 9 Gratt. 454.

Conveyance.—For example it has been held, that a former adjudication, in the suit brought for the sole purpose of determining whether the language in a conveyance of real estate does not create a specific lien or charge on the land, will not estop the grantors in such a conveyance from setting up a personal claim against the grantees or their estates, when such question was in no wise involved in or adjudicated in the former suit. Brown v. Squires, 42 W. Va. 367, 26 S. E. Rep. 177.

Judicial Sale.—The order of a court of chancery directing a writ to issue to place the purchaser at a judicial sale in possession of lands, made after a full hearing, at which the issuing of the writ was resisted on the ground that the purchase had been made in the trust for the original judgment debtor, and under an agreement entitling him to remain in possession, and to a conveyance of the property on his complying with certain conditions, is conclusive against him in a subsequent suit in equity seeking to enforce the same agreement upon which he relied in resisting the application for a writ of possession. Burner v. Hevener, 34 W. Va. 774, 12 S. E. Rep. 861.

Condemnation Proceedings.—Where judgment is rendered for a city in street condemnation proceedings, the landowner cannot, in a prosecution for obstructing the street, defend on the ground that the proceeding was illegal. Foster v. Manchester, 89 Va. 92, 15 S. E. Rep. 497.

Partition.—A judgment in a partition suit decreeing that the defendant is entitled to the plaintiff's share of the property under a deed by the defendant to the plaintiff, the validity of which was not then in issue, is not res judicata against the plaintiff's right in a subsequent action to set aside the deed on the ground that it was made without consideration, and with the understanding that the defendant would reconvey the property to the plaintiff on request. Eaves v. Vial, 98 Va. 184, 34 S. E. Rep. 978.

Illegality of Contract—Authority of Agent.—In a suit upon a judgment, the questions whether it was an illegal contract on which the judgment was recovered, or whether the agent who made the contract was authorized to make it, are concluded by the judgment. Fisher v. March, 26 Gratt. 765.

Right of Widow in Personalty.—Where after the death of the testator, one of the devisees brings suit to obtain a partition of real estate and a distribution of the personal estate, the court assigning the widow dower in one-third of the real estate and decreeing payment to her of one-third of the personal estate by the executor without words of qualification, it is not necessary to determine what estate in the personalty the widow took, she being entitled to the possession of it in any event, and such decree is not res judicata of the quantity of estate in personalty she took under the will. Houser v. Ruffner, 18 W. Va. 245.

Failure of Consideration.—Where, in the court in which the judgment was rendered, the question of the paramountcy of a defendant's homestead has been raised and decided adversely, the same question cannot be raised a second time in another suit brought to ascertain priorities of liens on the defendant's realty, and the defence of failure of consideration must be set up either in the suit wherein the judgment is rendered, or by a chancery suit brought by the defendant for that purpose. Spotts v. Com., 85 Va. 531, 8 S. E. Rep. 375.

Forfeiture of Lease.—When it has been determined that a senior lease has been forfeited by a failure of the lessee to comply with the condition therein, the senior lessee cannot afterwards file a bill against the landlord and junior lessees praying for relief against such forfeiture, because the fact of forfeiture of the senior lease is res judicata, and cannot be brought into question and again litigated in a suit in equity. Hukill v. Guffey, 37 W. Va. 425, 16 S. E. Rep. 544.

Platters Not Submitted on First Motion.—Where the matters involved in a second motion were not submitted to the jury on the trial of the first motion, or if submitted could not have been legally adjudicated by them, no question of estoppel can arise. Allebaugh v. Coakley, 75 Va. 628.

No Decision Necessary to Decide Case.—Where a claim is made in the defendant's answer, but has no connection with the relief sought in the bill, and is not necessary to be decided in passing upon the case so made in the bill, then the decree does not conclude the question when it is afterwards set up by the defendant by a cross bill in the cause, though the court in its decree expressed an opinion in favor of the defendant. Niday v. Harvey, 9 Gratt. 454.

b. What Might Have Been Litigated.—It is well settled that an adjudication by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties is final and conclusive, not only as to the matters actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated, as incident thereto, and coming within the legitimate purview of the subject-matter of the action. It is not essential that the matter should have been formally put in issue, in the former suit, but it is sufficient that the status of the suit was such that the parties might have had the matter disposed of on its merits. An erroneous ruling of the court will not prevent the matter from being res judicata. Rogers v. Rogers, 37 W. Va. 407, 16 S. E. Rep. 633; Sayre v. Harpold, 83 W. Va. 553, 11 S. E. Rep. 16.

When a judgment or decree has been rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in a suit, it is a bar to any further action between the same parties upon the same matter of controversy. 1 Barton's Law Prac. (2d Ed.) 553, 554; 7 Rob. Prac. 172; Findlay v. Trigg, 83 Va. 543, 3 S. E. Rep. 142; Simpson v. Dugger and Boisseau v. Same, 88 Va. 963, 14 S. E. Rep. 760. The decree in the first cause is not only final as to matters actually determined, but as to every matter which the parties might have litigated, within the scope of the pleadings, and which might have been decided Diehl v. Marchant, 87 Va. 447, 12 S. E. Rep. 808; Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 660, 661; Blackwell v. Bragg, 78 Va. 529; Fishburne v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 321, 7 S. E. Rep. 361; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 428; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 357; Wells, Res. Adj. § 252; Stearns v. Beckham, 81 Gratt. 391; Durant v. Essex Co., 7 Wall. 107; Malloney v. Horan, 49 N. Y. 116; Freem. Judgm. §§ 246, 254. In the case of McCullough v. Dashiell, 85 Va. 41, 6 S. E. Rep. 610, the learned judge, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The doctrine of res adjudicata applies to all matters which existed at the time of the giving of the judgment or rendering the decree, and which the party had the opportunity of bringing before the court." Beale v. Gordon, 2 Va. Dec. 35, 21 S. E. Rep. 667.

A judgment upon the merits of the case is a bar or estoppel against a prosecution of a second action upon the same demand, and is a finality to the claim or demand in controversy and concludes parties and those in privity with them, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain and defeat the claim, but also any other admissible matter which might have been used for that purpose; such demand or claim having passed into judgment cannot again be brought into litigation between the parties in proceedings at law upon any ground whatever. These principles apply with equal force as well to judgments of the inferior courts of record of the United States rendered in this state between parties subject to their jurisdiction, as to judgments of the circuit courts of the state. Wandling v. Straw, 35 W. Va. 692; Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806.

Points Essential to Former Judgment.—The doctrine of res judicata embraces not only what was in point of fact adjudicated, but the judgment or decree is conclusive as to all questions in issue, whether formally litigated or not. It is not necessary that the issue should have been taken upon the precise point which it is proposed to controvert in the collateral action. It is sufficient if that point was essential to the former judgment. Every point which has been specifically decided, and, by necessary implication, every issue which must have been decided, in order to support the judgment or decree, is concluded. But where one of the parties to the second suit was not a party to the former suit, and the land sought to be subjected in the second suit was not the same as in the former, the plea of res judicata is not available. Kelly v. Hamblen, 98 Va. 383, 36 S. E. Rep. 491.

Matters Producible by Diligence.—The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the court was actually required by the parties, to form an opinion and pronounce the judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject-matter of litigation and which the parties exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time. State Iron Co. v. Rarig, 93 Va. 595, 25 S. E. Rep. 894; S. V. R. R. Co. v. Griffith, 76 Va. 918; Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 660; McCullough v. Dashiell, 85 Va. 41, 6 S. E. Rep. 610; Fishburne v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 321, 7 S. E. Rep. 361; Osburn v. Throckmorton, 90 Va. 316, 18 S. E. Rep. 285; Beale v. Gordon, 2 Va. Dec. 35, 21 S. E. Rep. 667; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Gratt. 665; Findlay v. Trigg, 83 Va. 543, 3 S. E. Rep. 142; Roller v. Pitman, 98 Va. 613, 36 S. E. Rep. 987; Bradley v. Zehmer, 82 Va. 685; Adams v. S. V. R. R. Co., 76 Va. 918; Legrand v. Rixey, 83 Va. 862, 3 S. E. Rep. 864.

A judgment or decree upon the merits of the case is a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second suit upon the same demand, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim, but also any other admissible matter which might have been used for that purpose. Biern v. Ray (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 530.

In order for the defence of res judicata to prevail, the judgment or decree in the former suit must have been rendered in a proceeding between the same parties or their privies and the matters in controversy must have been the same in the former suit as in the latter, and have been determined on the merits. The adjudication when so made, constitutes a bar not only to the points actually decided, but to every point which properly belonged to the particular matter in litigation, and which the parties might have brought forward at the time, for a party is required to present the whole of his case and not omit a part, which by the exercise of reasonable diligence, he might have brought forward at the time; all those matters which were offered and received, or which might have been offered to sustain the particular claim or demand litigated in the prior suit, and all those matters of defence, which were presented or might have been introduced under the issue to defeat the claim or demand, are concluded by the judgment or decree in the former suit. Dillard v. Dillard, 97 Va. 434, 34 S. E. Rep. 60; State Iron Co. v. Rarig, 93 Va. 595, 25 S. E. Rep. 894; Miller v. Wills, 95 Va. 354, 28 S. E. Rep. 337.

Matters Assumed True.—A proposition assumed or decided by the court to be true, and which must be so assumed or decided in order to establish another proposition, which expresses the conclusion of the court, is as effectually passed upon and settled in that court as the very matter directly decided. Blake v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 963.

Formal Presentation.—But in order that a matter may thenceforth be considered as res judicata, the claims of the respective parties concerning the matter must be formally presented to the court, and duly passed upon. Tarter v. Wilson, 95 Va. 19, 27 S. E. Rep. 818.

Illustrations.—For example, it has been held, when a report of sale which contains a statement of the commissions, charged by the commissioner, has been confirmed by the trial court, and the decree confirming the report is affirmed by the court of appeals, without raising any question as to the propriety of the commission charged, the question becomes res judicata, and the amount of the commission charged, is beyond the reach of judicial inquiry. Roller v. Pitman, 98 Va. 613, 36 S. E. Rep. 987.

Right of Wife to Join by Next Friend.—Where a wife, in a suit by the husband, was required to be made a party, but was not allowed to join by her next friend, and upon appeal, and after petition for rehearing, the decree in favor of the plaintiff was reversed, as the question of the wife's right to join by her next friend, might have been presented upon the first appeal, the adjudication is final, and binding upon her, and a bill brought by the wife alone, concerning the same subject-matter should be dismissed. McCullough v. Dashiell, 85 Va. 37, 6 S. E. Rep. 610.

Where the plaintiff is met, in a scire facias proceeding to revive a decree with the plea of null tiel record and statute of limitations, and upon these issues there is a final, general, judgment in favor of the defendants, this ends all right in the plaintiff to enforce the decree against the defendant, either at law or in equity. Raub v. Otterback, 92 Va. 517, 23 S. E. Rep. 883.

Cross Actions.—If a physician sue for his services and judgment goes by default, for the nonappearance of the patient, defendant in that suit, recovery by the former does not estop the latter from bringing a cross action for malpractice; but if he appear, unless the record shows that it was not to defend, but solely to disclaim the waiver of his own right, he is estopped by the recovery, Holt, J., dissenting. Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 150, 16 S. E. Rep. 564.

But where a party files a bill attacking a trust deed as fraudulent and void, and it is so adjudged by the court, he cannot afterwards file a cross bill to have the deed equitably enforced for his benefit, which he might have set up in the original bill. If such a thing were allowed there would be no end of litigation, and judicial proceedings would be a farce. Simpson v. Dugger, 88 Va. 968, 14 S. E. Rep. 760.

"Whenever a former judgment is relied on as a bar, whether by pleading or in evidence, it is competent for the plaintiff to show that it did not relate to the same property or transaction in controversy, and the question of identity thus raised is a matter of fact to be decided upon the evidence, if the record is itself silent. And so if the cause is divisible or the pleadings involve two distinct propositions, it is competent to show that only one of them was submitted to and passed upon by the jury. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 532; Southside Railroad Co. v. Daniel, 20 Gratt. 344; Kelly v. Board of Public Works, 25 Gratt. 755; Packet Co. v. Sickels, 5 Wall. 580; Chrisman v. Harman, 29 Gratt. 494." Allebaugh v. Coakley, 75 Va. 620.

The contention that a judgment in a condemnation proceeding, which authorized the construction of a dam, established the fact that the dam was lawful, which will defeat an estoppel arising from a subsequent judgment finding it to be legal, cannot be sustained, where the former judgment only authorized its construction, and did not find that the dam actually constructed was lawful. C. & O. R. Co. v. Rison, 99 Va. 18, 37 S. E. Rep. 320.

In Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. 86, the court by CARR, J., said, in regard to unnegotiable bonds which were given but not paid, and judgment was obtained upon them, that: "Here the foundation of the action is the promise, there the foundation is the bond. The issue there, was upon non est factum; that was the point decided, the allegation taken and found; an allegation not put in issue, and which could not possibly be put in issue, in the case before us. If then, the judgment on the bonds had been pleaded, the plea could not have availed; for, if it had stated the record correctly, a demurrer would have lain; and if incorrectly, the replication of nulla record would have overthrown it."

Relief was given in equity, in a pauper's suit for freedom, by awarding a new trial at law and a decree rendered for the plaintiff (a verdict being certified) upon a bill stating, that in the previous proceedings, he had not been permitted to obtain testimony, and on proof now produced in his support of right, notwithstanding the defendant pleaded, in bar to such relief, a former verdict and judgment, by which the plaintiff was declared to be a slave, and a decree of another court of chancery dismissing a similar bill, exhibited on his behalf from which judgment and decree he had not appealed. Isaac v. Johnson, 5 Munf. 95.

If a judgment of reversal states that it "is not to bar or prejudice any future claim for the appellee, made on fuller proof to the auditor," and the new case does not differ from the former, the first judgment concludes the cause. Innis v. Roane, 4 Call 379.

Inference or Argument.—In order that a former decision shall operate as res judicata, it must be certain and clear that the precise question was definitely and finally determined; and it cannot be made out by inference or argument. Winton v. Stewart (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 603.

Illustration.—A suit in chancery and decree therein, can neither be pleaded in bar, nor given in evidence, in an action at law between the same parties, unless the very same matter of controversy was involved in both suits, and unless the court of chancery had competent jurisdiction to decide the matter. For example, where a plaintiff filed a bill in chancery against the defendant, charging fraud practiced by the defendant, in the sale of a slave, and praying that the contract might be rescinded, and that the defendant might be enjoined from taking measures to recover the purchase money of the plaintiff, and the bill was dismissed on a hearing, and then the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant to recover damages for breach of warranty of soundness of the slave, it was held that the proceedings and decree in the suit in chancery could neither be pleaded by C in bar of the action at law, nor was the record thereof admissible evidence on the trial of the action at law. Pleasants v. Clements, 3 Leigh 474.

c. Identity of Issues.—It is essential to estoppel by record that the identical question upon which it is invoked was in issue upon the former proceedings. The rule is thus stated in Black. Judgm. § 610: "There must be an identity of issues, and by this is meant that the issue raised in the second suit, upon which the evidential force of the former judgment is to be directed, must be identical with the issue, or one of the issues, raised and determined in the first action." C. & O. R. Co. v. Rison, 99 Va. 18, 37 S. E. Rep. 320. See also, Sangster v. Com., 17 Gratt. 124; Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 22 S. E. Rep. 354; Currie v. Chowning, 2 Va. Dec. 25, 21 S. E. Rep. 809; Weaver v. Vowles, 2 Rob. 438.

Lands Not the Same in Both Suits.—Moreover a verdict, on which a judgment is rendered, is conclusive evidence in any subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies; the same point coming in question; though the lands or other things in controversy be not the same. Preston v. Harvey, 3 H. & M. 63; Shelton v. Barbour, 2 Wash. 64; C. & O. R. Co. v. Rison, 99 Va. 18, 37 S. E. Rep. 321.

Trust Deeds.—Where a trustee files a bill to enforce a trust deed, and a decree is entered accordingly, and he afterwards files a second bill to set aside the trust deed, on the ground that it is fraudulent, the decree in the first suit is not a bar to the second, because the question whether the deed was fraudulent was not put in issue in the first case, and therefore could not be decided. Quarles v. Kerr, 14 Gratt. 48.

Points Same—Objects Different.—Judgment upon a direct point in a former suit, on a writ of quo warranto, or an information in the nature of said writ, is conclusive upon the same point in a latter suit, though the objects of the two suits be different. Thus, where a plaintiff instituted a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto to try title to an office, against one appointed by the legislature in his place, it was held that a judgment rendered in that proceeding for the defendant was a bar to the plaintiff's proceeding by mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to pay him salary as officer de jure; the writ of mandamus being prayed for on the same grounds set up in the quo warranto proceeding. Shumate v. Fauquier County, 84 Va. 574, 5 S. E. Rep. 570.

A judgment is conclusive if on a direct point, though the objects of the two suits are different. Gallaher v. Moundsville, 84 W. Va. 730, 12 S. E. Rep. 859; Winston v. Starke, 12 Gratt. 317.

Facts Necessarily in Issue.—A fact necessarily involved in an issue, on which there has been a judgment, is thereby conclusively settled in any suit thereafter between the same parties and their privies, but the facts in controversy on the trial of an issue, but not necessarily involved in the issue, though ever so important in its determination, are not settled by a judgment on the issue, but are open to controversy in any other suit between the same parties and their privies. Beckwith v. Thompson, 18 W. Va. 103; Houser v. Ruffner, 18 W. Va. 244; Doonan v. Glynn, 28 W. Va. 715. See Coville v. Gilman, 13 W. Va. 314.

Facts Necessary to Decision.—But a judgment is conclusive by way of estoppel as to facts without the existence and proof or admission of which the judgment could not have been rendered. Blake v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 953.

"Where every objection urged in the second suit was open to the party, within the legitimate scope of the pleadings, in the first suit, and might have been presented at that trial, the matter must be considered as having passed in rem judicatam, and the former judgment in such a case is conclusive between the parties. It is not necessary to the conclusiveness of the former judgment that the issue should have been taken upon the precise point which it is proposed to controvert in the collateral action. It is sufficient if that point was essential to the former judgment. * * * The estoppel is not confined to the judgment, but extends to all facts involved in it as necessary steps or the ground-work upon which it must have been founded. * * * It is not only final as to the matters actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might litigate in the cause, and which they might have had decided." Diehl v. Marchant, 87 Va. 447, 12 S. E. Rep. 803. See Fishburne v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 321, 7 S. E. Rep. 361; Blackwell v. Bragg, 78 Va. 529.

Test.—If it is doubtful whether a second suit is for the same cause of action as the first; it is a proper test to consider whether the same evidence would sustain both, and what was the particular point or matter determined in the former action. Gallaher v. Moundsville, 84 W. Va. 730, 12 S. E. Rep. 859.

d. Must Be on the Merits.—Dismissal of a suit on its merits at the hearing, whether on plea in bar or demurrer for want of equity or cause of action, is a bar to another suit for the same subject-matter between the same parties, unless the dismissal be "without prejudice," etc.; whereas if the bill is dismissed for defect of form or structure, not going to the merits, it is no bar to a future suit for the same subject-matter. Payne v. Grant, 81 Va. 164; Hughes v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 237; Durant v. Essex Company, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 107. See also, Seamster v. Blackstock, 83 Va. 232, 2 S. E. Rep. 36; Cornell v. Hartley, 41 W. Va. 493, 23 S. E. Rep. 789, 1 Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) 358; Burner v. Hevener, 34 W. Va.

774, 12 S. E. Rep. 861; Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692; Riley v. Jarvis, 42 W. Va. 43, 26 S. E. Rep. 306.

"In order that a judgment may constitute a bar to another suit, it must be rendered in a proceeding between the same parties or their privies, and the point of controversy must be the same in both cases, and must be determined on its merits. If the first suit was dismissed for defect of pleadings or parties, or a misconception of form of proceedings, or want of jurisdiction, or was disposed of on any ground which did not go to the merits of the action, the judgment rendered will prove no bar to another suit. Hughes v. U. S., 4 Wall. 237." Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 32 S. E. Rep. 476. See Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548, 23 S. E. Rep. 354.

A judgment for the defendant upon pleadings not going to the foundation of the action, is no bar to the plaintiff's bringing another action for the same cause. Lane v. Harrison, 6 Munf. 573.

Decree Dissolving Injunction.—A decree dissolving an injunction upon the merits, where no relief but an "injunction" is sought, is final, and res judicata. Fluharty v. Mills (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 521; Gallaher v. City of Moundsville, 84 W. Va. 730, 12 S. E. Rep. 859; Burner v. Hevener, 34 W. Va. 774, 12 S. E. Rep. 861.

Sufficiency.—The defence of res judicata, made by answer, is sufficient when supported by the production of the record of the former suit between the same parties, touching the same matter, showing a final decree therein on the merits. 1 Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) § 114; Miller v. Miller, 92 Va. 196, 23 S. E. Rep. 232.

Bar to Recovery in Equity.—A verdict and judgment at law, against a plaintiff, is no bar to his recovery in equity for the same cause of action, where it does not appear that the merits of the controversy were fully and fairly tried and determined at law. Hawkins v. Depriest, 4 Munf. 469.

Petition to Rehear.—Where a petition to rehear is rejected on the ground that it is not accompanied by an affidavit, and because it does not state why the matters set up were not brought to the attention of the court before the decree was rendered, the matter does not become res judicata, and it is error to refuse leave to file a new petition, accompanied by an affidavit that the matter therein set up was unknown to the petitioners, and could not have been known by the use of reasonable diligence. Karn v. Rorer Iron Co., 86 Va. 754, 11 S. E. Rep. 431. See Seamster v. Blackstock, 83 Va. 232, 2 S. E. Rep. 36.

Motion to Reverse Overruled.—Where a party makes a motion, under sec. 5, ch. 134 of the W. Va. Code, to reverse a judgment on the ground that one of several defendants, against whom a joint judgment is rendered, was not served with process, and did not appear, and such motion is overruled, the decision of the circuit court overruling that motion, makes such judgment valid and binding under the doctrine of res judicata, though it was void before, unless such decision be reversed. Ferguson v. Millender, 32 W. Va. 30, 9 S. E. Rep. 38.

It was held in Pettus v. Atlantic Savings & Loan Ass'n, 94 Va. 477, 26 S. E. Rep. 834, that an order of a hustings court, in the exercise of its special statutory jurisdiction, appointing a trustee to take the place of the trustee named in the deed, who has resigned the trust, determines nothing as to the rights of the parties under the deed, nor as to the character of the deed, and will not debar the grantor from asserting its true character.

Nul Tiel Record, Act of Limitations.—Where, to a scire facias to revive a decree, the defendants plead nullius in terra and the statute of limitations, and on these pleas issue is joined, and there is a final general judgment in favor of the defendants, this ends all right in the plaintiff to enforce the decree against the defendants, either at law or in equity. Raub v. Otterback, 92 Va. 517, 23 S. E. Rep. 883.

Demurrer to Cross Bill.—Where a county files a cross bill admitting the validity of certain of its bonds, yet on the ground that the plaintiff has not complied with its contract with the county, the county asked the court to decree that it was not bound, except to bona fide holders of the bonds for value and without notice, the effect of a dismissal of the cross bill on demurrer, when it appears that the demurrer was sustained upon the grounds going to the merits of the question raised by the pleadings, is to adjudge that the county is bound; and such a decree is, as between the same parties, a final determination of the question. W., O. & W. R. R. Co. v. Cazenove, 83 Va. 744, 8 S. E. Rep. 433.

Judgments Must Be Final.—"It is well settled that the doctrine of res judicata applies only to final judgments, not to interlocutory judgments or orders, which the court which rendered has power to vacate or modify at any time." 2 Black, Judgm. § 509, cited with approval in Rhelms v. Ins. Co., 39 W. Va. 672, 20 S. E. Rep. 670; Quarles v. Kerr, 14 Gratt. 48; Yates v. Wilson, 86 Va. 625, 10 S. E. Rep. 976.

A final adjudication of a court of competent jurisdiction upon the merits of the controversy, so long as it remains unreversed, is a bar to any new suit for the same cause of action between the same parties. Burner v. Hevener, 34 W. Va. 774, 12 S. E. Rep. 861.

Suit by Legatees.—It seems that a final decree, in a suit by legatees, for the division of a testator's estate, is a bar to a bill exhibited by the same persons, or their legal representatives, suggesting that the executor had kept back part of the property, but not averring that this was new matter since discovered, or that the decree was obtained by fraud. Legrand v. Francisco, 3 Munf. 88.

Partition—Rights of Children Not Adjudicated.—Where, in partition, the issue was whether the complainants were entitled to the shares of their deceased brothers and sisters, under the will of the complainant's grandfather, or whether such shares belong to their father, it was held that a decree that the complainants were entitled to such shares was binding on the father, who was a party to the suit, since it settled the question that he had no interest in the property, though it did not finally adjudicate the rights of the children as between themselves; and in the absence of fraud, such decree cannot be assailed by the creditors of the father, and the lands subjected to their claims. Gardner v. Stratton, 89 Va. 900, 17 S. E. Rep. 553.

3. COURTS IN GENERAL.—A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction is a bar to a subsequent action between the same parties upon the same matter directly in issue. There is no difference between a judgment in a court of common law and a decree of a court of equity; both stand on the same footing. And as we have seen, the doctrine of res judicata is equally applicable to those matters which have been, and those which might have been, adjudicated. Adams v. S. V. R. R. Co., 76 Va. 913; Blackwell v. Bragg, 78 Va. 529; Burner v. Hevener, 34 W. Va. 774, 12 S. E. Rep. 861; Tilson v. Davis, 33 Gratt. 92; Tracey v. Shumate, 23 W. Va. 474; Western M. & M. Co. v. The Virginia, etc., Co., 10 W.

Va. 250; Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806.

No Difference between Decrees and Judgments.—It is well established law that a final decree in chancery is as conclusive as the judgment at law. A verdict and judgment in a court of record or a decree in a court of chancery puts an end to all points decided between the parties to the suit. There is and ought to be no difference between the verdict and judgment in the court of law and a decree in a court of equity. They both stand on the same footing and may be offered in evidence under the same limitations; it would be difficult to assign a reason why it should be otherwise. There is nothing anomalous or unusual in setting up a former adjudication as an estoppel to an action for equitable relief. The rule is a beneficiary one, and it is a matter in which it is said that the public has an interest as well as the parties, that there should be an end to litigation. Tilson v. Davis, 33 Gratt. 92; Tracey v. Shumate, 23 W. Va. 474; Western M. & M. Co. v. The Virginia, etc., Co., 10 W. Va. 250; Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806.

a. Probate Courts.—When a paper is propounded for probate to the proper court by a devisee, and there is a sentence of the court fairly obtained and pronounced on the merits, excluding the paper from the probate, such sentence of exclusion from probate is conclusively binding upon all claiming under the paper. Schultz v. Schultz, 10 Gratt. 358; Connolly v. Connolly, 32 Gratt. 657; Ballow v. Hudson, 13 Gratt. 672.

The sentence of a court of probate fairly obtained and pronounced upon the merits, by which a paper propounded as a will by the nominated executor is rejected, in a proceeding in which some of the next kin interested to defeat it, are parties defendants, is conclusively binding upon a legatee in the paper, though he was an infant at the time, and no party to the proceeding. And the paper cannot again be propounded by the legatee. It would be intolerable evil, if the controversy could be renewed, from time to time, at the pleasure of the same, or even of other parties. Obvious considerations of justice and sound policy require that in a proceeding of so much publicity and notoriety, intended to sanction or condemn perpetually an important muniment of title; affecting various interests, original and derivative, which time only can fully develop and determining prospectively, channels of succession, powers of representation, and classes of ownership; there should be, as far as practicable, uniformity, consistency and finality. Such a proceeding becomes to a great extent, a matter of public as well as private interest; and both the general good and individual security prohibit that it should be, so far as can be avoided, in any wise uncertain, vacillating or precarious. Wills v. Spraggins, 3 Gratt. 555.

Analogous to Judgments in Rem.—"When a will has been propounded by the party interested, and fairly rejected on the merits, it would defeat the policy of the law, and be productive of many mischiefs, if it could be again propounded by the same party or by others who might be interested, and the contest thus renewed from time to time. The sentence therefore against the will must be regarded as a sentence against all claiming under it. It stands upon a footing analogous to the cases known as judgments in rem, which being adjudications upon the subject-matter are regarded as final and conclusive not only in the courts in which they are pronounced, but in all others in which the same question arises." Schultz v. Schultz, 10 Gratt. 358; Connolly v. Connolly, 32 Gratt. 657.

Pendency of Bill in County Court.—The pendency of a bill in equity, in a county court, after dissolution of an injunction, is no bar to the complainant's obtaining another injunction from the superior court of chancery. Roberts v. Jordans, 8 Munf. 488.

b. Appellate Courts.

Effect on Parties Not Appearing.—It is settled that if a party sues out a writ of error from a judgment against him, and the judgment is affirmed, the judgment of the appellate court affirming the judgment of the lower court has all the force of res judicata, and makes that judgment binding. It is binding as a judgment, even on parties who did not appeal, and were not served with appellate process, if a joint judgment. Ferguson v. Millender, 33 W. Va. 30, 9 S. E. Rep. 38; Camden v. Werninger, 7 W. Va. 528; Armstrong v. Poole, 30 W. Va. 666, 5 S. E. Rep. 257; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Gratt. 649; Board v. Parsons, 24 W. Va. 551; Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230; Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 20 W. Va. 223; Newman v. Mollahan, 10 W. Va. 488.

Where exceptions have been taken to an administrator's account, because, among other things, of payments made to unpreferred creditors, and the account is confirmed, and an appeal therefrom taken to the court of appeals, where the decision of the lower court is affirmed, a bill in equity against the administrator by a party to the former proceeding, charging devastavit on account of such payments, cannot be sustained, although the validity of the payments was not, in fact, questioned in the court of appeals. Findlay v. Trigg, 83 Va. 539, 3 S. E. Rep. 142.

Where a judgment of the circuit court has been affirmed by the supreme court, such judgment cannot be impeached or set aside by a court of equity, in a suit brought for that purpose, upon any ground of error upon the face of such judgment or upon the record of the case in which it is rendered. Armstrong v. Poole, 30 W. Va. 666, 5 S. E. Rep. 257.

Chancery Courts.—Moreover, a court of chancery cannot, upon the same facts, alter a decree of the court of appeals. Price v. Campbell, 5 Call 115; White v. Atkinson, 2 Call 376.

Decision as to Jurisdiction.—Where the court of appeals decides, whether rightfully or wrongfully, that it has jurisdiction of a cause, and orders the trial court to enter judgments therein, after the close of that term, the question of jurisdiction becomes res judicata, and cannot be raised in a subsequent action on the judgment. This rule is established by an unbroken line of decisions. Stuart v. Peyton, 97 Va. 796, 34 S. E. Rep. 696; Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 31; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Gratt. 667; Stuart v. Heiskell, 86 Va. 191, 9 S. E. Rep. 984; Roanoke St. Ry. Co. v. Hicks (Va.), 32 S. E. Rep. 790; Reid v. Strider, 7 Gratt. 76; Bank v. Craig, 6 Leigh 400; Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 537.

Commissioner's Report.—If, in a chancery cause, a commissioner reports that the lands of certain persons not parties to the cause are liable to be sold in the cause, and the court confirms this report and orders the sale of their lands, and they appeal from this decision, and the appellate court on their appeal hears the cause on its merits and affirms the decree, these appellants are bound by this decree as res adjudicata, as the appellate court in so deciding, must have held that it had jurisdiction not only of the cause but of the parties; and this judgment as well as that on the merits of the case is binding on the parties. But if the appeal had been taken in such case not by these persons, but by some other party to the cause, neither the judgment in the court below nor its affirmance by the appellate court would have bound such persons as res adjudicata; for in such case there would be no implied judgment of the appellate court, that it had jurisdiction over such persons as parties to the cause. Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 511.

Questions Decided on Appeal.—It is a settled rule of the appellate court, that a question which has been decided on the first appeal in any cause, cannot be reviewed or reversed in any subsequent appeal in the same cause. Stuart v. Preston, 80 Va. 625; Ins. Co. v. Clemmitt, 77 Va. 366; White v. Offield, 90 Va. 336, 18 S. E. Rep. 436.

Thus, where in a suit to correct a mistake and for an accounting, the court below held that payment by the grantee in a deed of certain incumbrances on the land should be considered payments on the price, which decree was affirmed in that respect on appeal, on a second accounting, under the decree of the appellate court, the question, whether the payments of the incumbrances were payments on the price or to be treated as set-offs, is res judicata. Stuart v. Heiskell, 86 Va. 191, 9 S. E. Rep. 984.

Title to Lands.—Where in the original cause the title to lands was investigated by a commissioner whose report was confirmed by the circuit court and an appeal from its decision to the supreme court was dismissed, a contention that there is a defect in the title will not be considered. Hudson v. Yost, 88 Va. 347, 18 S. E. Rep. 436.

Final and Interlocutory Decrees.—A decree of the supreme court upon a question decided by the court below is final and irreversible; and upon a second appeal in the cause, a question decided upon the first appeal cannot be reversed, being res judicata, and such a decision is alike conclusive whether the decree appealed from is final or interlocutory. Turner v. Staples, 86 Va. 300, 9 S. E. Rep. 1123; Miller v. Cook, 77 Va. 806.

Points adjudicated by the supreme court on a former appeal must be regarded as res judicata during the further progress of the cause. Wick v. Dawson (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 639.

Correction by Rehearing in Lower Court.—Where a decree has been affirmed by the supreme court on appeal, it becomes res judicata, and no error in it can be corrected by rehearing in the court below. Lore v. Hash, 89 Va. 277, 15 S. E. Rep. 549.

Effect of Taking Additional Evidence in Lower Court.—Moreover, the conclusiveness of a decision by the supreme court on appeal, by which the principles of a cause are settled, is not affected by the fact that additional evidence is taken after the case goes back to the trial court. Turner v. Staples, 86 Va. 300, 9 S. E. Rep. 1123.

Important Questions Omitted.—Although the opinion of the supreme court should indicate that important questions involved in the pleadings had been overlooked, which, had they been considered, might have changed the adjudication, nevertheless the decision, when it has been rendered and has become final, settles the rights of the parties in that particular case, and it may be pleaded as an estoppel. Northwestern Bank v. Hays, 37 W. Va. 475, 16 S. E. Rep. 561.

Matters Not Actually Adjudicated.—Matters once determined on appeal in the supreme court cannot be reopened; and this is true whether those matters were actually adjudicated or not. If they could have been adjudicated in that suit they are equally settled. Carter v. Hough, 89 Va. 508, 16 S. E. Rep. 665; Findlay v. Trigg, 83 Va. 539, 3 S. E. Rep. 142; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Gratt. 649.

Matters Contained in Record.—Whatever is contained in the record on an appeal is supposed to have been passed upon, and whatever is passed upon here, and whatever might have been passed upon in consideration of the record, is concluded and settled, and cannot be reopened by the court below. Krise v. Ryan, 90 Va. 711, 19 S. E. Rep. 783; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Gratt. 649.

Construction of Records.—When the supreme court has placed a construction upon the legal character and effect of certified copies of entries or memorandums in certain public records, such construction is res judicata in the supreme court and all other courts of the state, on a second appeal. Holleran v. Meisel, 91 Va. 143, 21 S. E. Rep. 658; Chahoon's Case, 21 Gratt. 822, and note; Campbell v. Campbell, 23 Gratt. 649; Turner v. Staples, 86 Va. 300, 9 S. E. Rep. 1123; Stuart v. Heiskell, 86 Va. 191, 9 S. E. Rep. 984; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Mills, 91 Va. 613, 22 S. E. Rep. 554.

Entry That Plaintiff Takes Nothing by His Motion.—If a judgment on a summary motion be reversed on the ground that the plaintiff's claim is not supported by the evidence, the appellate court should proceed to enter judgment, that the plaintiff take nothing by his motion; such judgment would be a bar to another motion for the same cause of action. But if such judgment be not entered, the judgment of reversal is too imperfect to be a legal bar. Webb v. McNeil, 3 Munf. 184.

4 RETRAXIT.—A retraxit is an open and voluntary renunciation by the plaintiff in open court of his suit, and the cause thereof. A dismissal by a plaintiff who no longer has any interest in the cause of action is not a retraxit, and cannot prejudice the rights of the real owner of the subject of litigation, who is neither a party to the action, nor a privy of the plaintiff. Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 33 S. E. Rep. 476; Wohlford v. Compton, 79 Va. 336.

Maker and Accommodation Endorser.—In an action against the maker and accommodation endorser of a negotiable note by one who held the note as collateral for a debt, the plaintiff having received satisfaction of his debts from his original debtor, dismissed the action at the defendant's costs, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the endorsers, the collateral notes being at the time transferred to the defendant in error who was not a party to the action on them, and had no notice or knowledge of the pendency of the action. Held, the dismissal was not a retraxit, precluding the defendant in error from subsequently recovering from an endorser who was a party, and acquiesced in the dismissal. Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 33 S. E. Rep. 476.

Dismissal of Suit Agreed.—The dismissal of a suit agreed is not a retraxit and cannot be pleaded in bar of a subsequent suit between the same parties, for the same cause of action. MARSHALL, C. J., in Hoffman v. Porter, 2 Brock. R. 156, disapproved in Hoover v. Mitchell, 25 Gratt. 387.

Judgment for Costs.—Also, a dismissal of a suit by the plaintiff's order is no bar to his bringing another suit for the same cause of action, even though there was a judgment by the court for the defendant against the plaintiff for costs. Coffman v. Russell, 4 Munf. 207.

Discontinuance.—A discontinuance is not a retraxit. Muse v. Bank, 27 Gratt. 252.

Must Be Entered in Person.—A retraxit can only be entered by the plaintiff in person, and in open court. Muse v. Farmers' Bank, 27 Gratt. 252.

Damages by Statute.—The damages of five dollars, given by the act of the assembly, in cases of nonsuits, ought not to be awarded in the case of a retraxit. Pinner v. Edwards, 6 Rand. 675.

Retraxit in Criminal Cases.—A dismissal of a presentment is not a retraxit, nor is a retraxit known to the criminal law, where the prosecution is carried on by the commonwealth. This power of a retraxit is a dispensing power, and the law has not entrusted it to a prosecuting attorney. Worham v. Com., 5 Rand. 669.

5. NONSUIT.—A nonsuit is not a final judgment, but the opposite. By suffering a nonsuit the plaintiff ends his present suit without prejudice to his right to bring another. Mallory v. Taylor, 90 Va. 348, 18 S. E. Rep. 438; 4 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 958; Pinner v. Edwards, 6 Rand. 675; Railway Co. v. Long, 26 W. Va. 699.

Must Go to the Merits.—A nonsuit, to be such at all, must go to the whole case, as there is no such thing as a partial nonsuit. Railway Co. v. Long, 26 W. Va. 692.

Nonsuit Ordered by Justice.—A nonsuit ordered by a justice must be regarded, after a trial on the merits, as a judgment for the defendant, and consequently a bar in any other litigation between the same parties (in regard to the same subject-matter), even though the order was made with the consent of the plaintiff. Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806.

Voluntary Nonsuits.—The court may recommend a nonsuit, but cannot direct it to be entered, against the will of the plaintiff. Ross v. Gill, 1 Wash. 87.

Not Appealable.—But if the court directs the plaintiff to be nonsuited, and he submits to it (which he is not bound to do), he deserts his cause, and cannot by an exception, avail himself of any legal objection to the opinion of the court. Thornton v. Jett, 1 Wash. 138.

Omission of Joint Defendants.—If one of several joint contractors be omitted as defendant, and the omission is disclosed only by the evidence, the plaintiff will be nonsuited. Prunty v. Mitchell, 76 Va. 169.

Variance between Allegata and Probata.—If the evidence differs from the statement in the declaration, judgment of nonsuit will be given by the court of error. Calvert v. Bowdoin, 4 Call 217.

Damages in Case of Dismission.—The damages of five dollars, given by the act of the assembly ought to be awarded in all cases of dismissions and discontinuances, produced by a voluntary abandonment of the cause by the plaintiff, after the defendant's appearance, whether in the office, or in court, and such dismissions ought to be entered up as nonsuits. But the dismission of a suit for a failure to give security for costs, is not such a voluntary failure to prosecute, as authorizes the judgment of nonsuit. Pinner v. Edwards, 6 Rand. 675.

Reasons for Suffering Nonsuit.—The nonsuit is resorted to where the plaintiff finds himself unprepared with evidence to maintain his cause, either in consequence of his being ruled into a trial when not ready, or when surprised by the testimony of a witness, or some ruling of the court, or some similar reason. Cahoon v. McCulloch, 92 Va. 177, 23 S. E. Rep. 225.

Setting Aside a Nonsuit.—Where a nonsuit, in a writ of right, has been suffered under a misapprehension on the part of the defendants and their counsel as to the legal effect of an instruction given at the trial, the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, should, on the motion of the defendants, set aside the nonsuit; and if this is not done, the judgment, overruling the motion, will be reversed. Walkers v. Boaz, 2 Rob. 485.

Effect of Nonsuit.—The only effect of a judgment of nonsuit is to put an end to the pending suit, without precluding another for the same cause of action. Cahoon v. McCulloch, 92 Va. 177, 23 S. E. Rep. 225.

Contrast.—In 2 Tuck. Com., p. 251, it is said: "A retraxit differs from a nonsuit in that the one (the latter) is negative, and the other (the former) is positive. The nonsuit is a mere default and neglect of the plaintiff, and therefore he is allowed to begin his suit again upon the payment of costs; but a retraxit is an open and voluntary renunciation of his suit in court, and by this he forever loses his action." Quoted in Hoover v. Mitchell, 25 Gratt. 387. See Pinner v. Edwards, 6 Rand. 675; Railway Co. v. Long, 26 W. Va. 609.

Non Pros. Species of Nonsuit.—The judgment of non pros. for the plaintiff's failure to file a verification does not bar another suit for the same cause, this judgment is a species of nonsuit. "Such a judgment is not regarded as one on the merits, but only as a nonsuit, and, while final in the particular case, is not conclusive upon the matter of action. It is treated as a nonsuit by 3 Bl. Com. 296; by 4 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 867; 2 Black, Judgm. § 702; 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 261. JUDGE SUMMERS regarded it as a nonsuit in Pinner v. Edwards, 6 Rand. 675. All authorities hold that a nonsuit does not bar a second suit for the same cause. The authorities just given say that a judgment on non pros. will not defeat a second suit." Henry v. Ohio River R. Co., 40 W. Va. 234, 21 S. E. Rep. 863.

Where there is a plea of new matter, concluding with a verification, and the plaintiff fails to reply to it, there ought to be a judgment of non prosequitur against him, after a rule to reply, but such need not be served. Henry v. Ohio River R. Co., 40 W. Va. 234, 21 S. E. Rep. 863.

6. DISMISSAL IN EQUITY.—A bill in equity dismissed generally, without any reservation to the plaintiff to sue thereafter, is conclusive between the parties, and those claiming under them, of all the issues made up in the cause, even though there was no jurisdiction in equity because of an adequate remedy at law. Watson v. Watson, 45 W. Va. 290, 81 S. E. Rep. 939; Carberry v. Railroad Co., 44 W. Va. 260, 28 S. E. Rep. 694; Taylor v. Yarbrough, 13 Gratt. 183. See also, Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692; McCoy v. McCoy, 29 W. Va. 794, 2 S. E. Rep. 809.

But the dismissal of a suit, not conclusive on the merits, by one court of equity, will not prevent another co-ordinate court of equity from taking jurisdiction. Carter v. Campbell, Gilmer 159.

Merits.—In order that a judgment may constitute a bar to another suit, the point in controversy must be the same in both cases, and in the first must have been determined on the merits. An order simply dismissing the suit is not a determination on its merits, and so is not a bar to the maintenance of a second suit for the same cause of action. Wilcher v. Robertson, 78 Va. 602. See also, Saunders v. Marshall, 4 H. & M. 455.

Order Dismissing Caveat.—For example, it has been held that an order dismissing a caveat, when not on the merits, is not conclusive of the controversy. Hunter v. Hall, 1 Call 206.

Dismissal of Suit Agreed.—But an order dismissing a case agreed is a bar to another suit on the same cause of action. Pethtel v. McCullough (W. Va.), 30 S. E. Rep. 199; 2 Black, Judgm. § 706.

The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, dismissing a suit agreed, upon the ground that it has been agreed by the parties, is at least prima facie a final determination as to those parties of the matters litigated in that suit. It is virtually an acknowledgment by the plaintiff in open court, as in retraxit, that he has no cause of action, or rather, no further cause of action. It is not merely an abandonment of his suit, by the plaintiff, as in a nonsuit; it is the concurrent action of both parties. Hoover v. Mitchell, 25 Gratt. 387.

Embraces What Might Have Been Litigated.—The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, dismissing a suit agreed, upon the ground that it has been agreed by the parties, is a final determination as to those parties of the matters litigated in that suit, and this principle embraces not only what was actually determined, but also extends to every other matter which the parties might have litigated in the suit. Wohlford v. Compton, 79 Va. 333; Wilcher v. Robertson, 78 Va. 602; Hoover v. Mitchell, 25 Gratt. 387; Siron v. Ruleman, 32 Gratt. 233. These cases were cited with approval in Pethtel v. McCullough (W. Va.), 30 S. E. Rep. 199.

Fraudulent Deeds.—A decree, by a court of competent jurisdiction, dismissing a bill, upon the ground that the deed under which the complainant claimed was fraudulent, is a complete bar to another original bill to try the validity of the same deed; the proper remedy, if such decree be erroneous, being by appeal, writ of error, supersedeas, or bill of review, and not by original bill. Holliday v. Coleman, 2 Munf. 162.

Effect of Order of Dismissal.—It is provided by statute that "after the dismissal of an appeal, writ of error or supersedeas, no other appeal, writ of error or supersedeas shall be allowed to or from the same judgment, decree or order." This statute has been construed to apply as well to an order dismissing an appeal for failure to print the record as to a similar order made on any other ground. Woodson v. Leyburn, 83 Va. 843, 8 S. E. Rep. 873; Barksdale v. Fitzgerald, 76 Va. 892; Beecher v. Lewis, 84 Va. 630, 6 S. E. Rep. 367; Cobbs v. Gilchrist, 80 Va. 503.

It was held in Alvey v. Cahoon, 86 Va. 173, 9 S. E. Rep. 994, if one writ of error be dismissed for matter merely formal, the effect is, so far as any rehearing is concerned, the same as an affirmance in the appellate court.

Effect of Adding "Without Prejudice."—Where an action for damages for breach of the conditions of a written contract is brought before a justice, and upon a general denial by the defendant of the complaint the justice hears the case upon the evidence and arguments of counsel, and enters a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's suit for failure to prove the execution of the contract sued on, with costs, he cannot by adding the words "without prejudice to a new suit" authorize a new suit for the same cause of action. Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. Rep. 806.

7. EVIDENCE.

Judgment of Justice Evidence of Probable Cause.—A judgment by justice, though reversed, is prima facie evidence of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, and it has been thought by some that such judgment is conclusive evidence of such probable cause. Womack v. Circle, 29 Gratt. 192.

Judgment as Evidence between Creditors.—But a judgment in favor of one creditor, declaring a conveyance by the debtor void, is not evidence in favor of or against another creditor. Winston v. Starke, 12 Gratt. 317.

Judgments against Sheriff—Sureties.—So, judgments obtained against a sheriff for breach of duty in an action against his sureties, are not evidence against such sureties. Nor are the admissions of the sheriff evidence against the sureties. M'Dowell v. Burwell, 4 Rand. 317.

On a notice and motion by the administratrix of a high sheriff against a deputy and a surety, for the default of the deputy in not paying over money collected on an execution, the judgment recovered by a creditor, showing that it is for such default of the deputy, is prima facie evidence against the deputy and his sureties, that the administratrix had been subjected to the liability for the default of the deputy, although the deputy was not notified of the action. Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323.

Judgment as Evidence for Officer.—A judgment against an officer is evidence for him in an action against the deputy and his sureties to show that he had been subjected to the payment of money by reason of the default of the deputy. Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323.

Judgment on Official Bond as Evidence of Defalcation.—Judgment against a public officer on his official bond is not only not conclusive evidence of a defalcation, but it is not even prima facie of such a fact. Courtney v. Beale, 84 Va. 692, 5 S. E. Rep. 708.

Mandamus.—Where application is made for a mandamus to enforce a judgment against a town, the judgment conclusively determines that the town is chargeable with the sum, for which the judgment was rendered. Wells v. Town of Mason, 23 W. Va. 46.

a. Chancery Cause as a Title Link.—The record in a chancery cause is legal evidence for the defendant as a link in his chain of title, though the plaintiff was not a party to the cause. Baylor v. Dejarnette, 13 Gratt. 152, and note; Waggoner v. Wolf, 28 W. Va. 85.

An order of court, appointing commissioners to assign the widow her dower, although made ex parte, and on motion, without regular proceedings in chancery, and the report of the commissioners, are proper evidence, to show that the slave was allotted to the widow for life only; especially, where the widow and her second husband were present and consented to the allotment. Hunter v. Jones, 6 Rand. 541.

But a record to which neither the demandant nor tenant was a party, is not even prima facie evidence against the tenant that the grantor in the deed to the demandant was heir at law of the grantee in the patent in which the demandant claimed title. Duncan v. Helms, 8 Gratt. 68.

In tracing the title to land in controversy, a decree in a suit between other parties, is not evidence, against the person claiming under neither of them, that one of those parties was in fact, as therein described, eldest son and heir of the former proprietor; it being incumbent upon the party, wishing to avail himself of such issue to prove it by evidence, alunde, but such decree may be received (as a link in the chain of evidence) to prove the fact that it was rendered. Lovell v. Arnold, 2 Munf. 167.

B. LIEN OF JUDGMENT—ORIGIN AND HISTORY.

1. WRIT OF ELEGIT.—At common law, except for debts due the king, the lands of the debtor were not liable to the satisfaction of a judgment against him, and consequently no lien thereon was acquired by a judgment. This was in accordance with the policy of the feudal law introduced into England after the Conquest, which did not permit the feudatory to charge, or to be deprived of, his lands for his debts, lest thereby he should be disabled from performing his stipulated military service, and which, moreover, forbade the alienation of a feud without the lord's consent. The goods and chattels of the debtor, therefore, and the annual profits of his lands, as they arose, were the only funds allotted for the payment of his debts. This continued to be the law until the passage of the statute Westm. 2. 13 Edward I, by which, in the interest of trade and commerce, the writ of elegit was for the first time provided for. By that statute the judgment creditor was given his election to sue out a writ of fi. fa. against the goods and chattels of the defendant, or else a writ commanding the sheriff to deliver to him all the chattels of the defendant (except oxen and beasts of the plough), and a moiety of his lands, until the debt should be levied by a reasonable price or extent. When the creditor chose the latter alternative, his election was entered on the roll, and hence the writ was denominated an elegit, and the interest which the creditor acquired in the lands by virtue of the judgment and writ was known as an estate by elegit. This statute was substantially adopted in Virginia at an early day, and in consequence of this right to subject a moiety of the defendant's lands, the courts held that a lien was acquired by the judgment, which extended to all the defendant's lands within the state, and which was superior to the claims of subsequent purchasers, though for valuable consideration and without notice. Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 254; Borst v. Nalle, 28 Gratt. 423; Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 367.

Right to Take Out Elegit Not Suspended by Suing Out Writ of Fi. Fa.—"There is no statute in Virginia which, in express terms, makes a judgment a lien upon the lands of the debtor. As in England, the lien is the consequence of a right to take out an elegit. During the existence of this right the lien is universally acknowledged. Different opinions seem at different times to have been entertained of the effect of any suspension of the right. * * * A case was soon afterwards decided in the court of appeals of the state in which this question of the execution law of the state of Virginia is elaborately argued and deliberately decided. That decision is, that the right to take out an elegit is not suspended by suing out a writ of fi. fa., and, consequently that the lien of the judgments continues pending the proceedings on that writ. This court, according to its uniform course, adopts that construction of the act which is made by the highest court of the state." Per MR. CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL in U. S. v. Morrison, 4 Peters 124; Burton v. Smith, 13 Peters 464.

Under Va. Code 1873, ch. 182, sec. 9, a judgment lien may be enforced in equity without a fi. fa. thereon, it being unnecessary for the judgment creditor, under that act, to exhaust his remedies at law before going into equity to subject the land of his debtor, or his fraudulent alienees to satisfy his judgment. Moore v. Bruce, 85 Va. 189, 7 S. E. Rep. 195; Price v. Thrash, 30 Gratt. 515.

Fl. Fa. Need Not Be Returned "Nulla Bona."—Under the statute, Code 1873, ch. 182, § 9, it is not necessary that an execution of fleri facias should have been returned nulla bona, before the plaintiff in the judgment may sue in equity to subject the lands of his debtor to satisfy the judgment. Barr v. White, 30 Gratt. 581.

Right to Go into Equity—Remedy at Law.—It is not necessary since the revision of the law in 1849, that a judgment creditor shall exhaust his remedies at law before going into equity to subject the land of his debtor or his fraudulent alienees to his judgment. The remedy in equity against the real estate is not dependent upon the inadequacy of the legal remedy to satisfy the judgment out of the personal estate, or the insufficiency of such estate for that purpose, but it may always be resorted to whether there is or is not personal estate of the debtor, sufficient to satisfy the debtor. Price v. Thrash, 30 Gratt. 515; Stovall v. Border Grange Bank, 78 Va. 188.

Actual Issuance of Elegit Unnecessary.—The lien on land created by a judgment depends upon the right of the plaintiff to sue out an elegit, and it is not essential to the existence of the lien, that the elegit should have actually issued before the judgment creditor can come into equity for relief. Scriba v. Deane, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 166; Taylor v. Spindle, 3 Gratt. 44. But see Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call 125.

Moreover, judgments do not bind lands after twelve months from the date, unless execution be taken out within that time, or an entry of elegit be made on the record. Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call 125.

Elegit Abolished.—The lien resulting from the writ of elegit was not abolished in Virginia until the revisal of 1849, and a lien given by statute upon the debtor's entire real estate. Gordon v. Rixey, 76 Va. 604; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251.

2. NATURE OF THE LIEN.—Liens of judgments and their priorities and the right to enforce the same, are plain legal rights, expressly created by statute, and cannot be judicially modified to soften the supposed hardship of secret incumbrances. Gurnee v. Johnson, 77 Va. 712.

Judgment Vested Right—Retroactive Law.—A judgment is such a vested right of property that the legislature cannot, by a retroactive law, either destroy or diminish its value. It cannot alter its amount or destroy the effect theretofore given to it as a lien on real estate. The right to the lien upon the debtor's real estate is, in many cases, the sole inducement to the credit, which constitutes the basis of the judgment. Without the benefit of that lien, guaranteed by the law at the time the judgment is taken, the credit would not have been given. Merchants' Bank v. Ballou, 98 Va. 112, 33 S. E. Rep. 481.

3. CERTAIN ESSENTIALS.

a. Specific Sum of Money.—To create a lien the judgment must be for a specific sum of money. Thus, a decree providing that if the defendant does not, in a given time, pay the plaintiff a certain sum, that certain real and personal property of the defendant, on which the plaintiff has a specific lien, shall be sold, is not a judgment which creates a lien on other real estate of the defendant. Linn v. Patton, 10 W. Va. 187.

Insanity.—A judgment against a person insane at its rendition is not for that cause void, and is a lien on land. Withrow v. Smithson, 37 W. Va. 757, 17 S. E. Rep. 316.

Lien of Decree.—A decree in chancery, equally with a judgment at law, creates a lien on lands. Scriba v. Deane, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 166; Lee v. Swepson, 76 Va. 178; Parker v. Clarkson, 4 W. Va. 407. See monographic note on "Decrees" appended to Evans v. Spurgin, 11 Gratt. 615.

b. Docketing of Judgments.—A judgment is not a lien on real estate as against subsequent purchasers for value and without notice, unless it is docketed in the mode and within the time prescribed by statute. Va. Code 1873, ch. 182, § 8; W. Va. Code, ch. 189, § 7; Gurnee v. Johnson, 77 Va. 712; Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 737; Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 367; Hill v. Rixey, 26 Gratt. 72; Gordon v. Rixey, 76 Va. 604. See also, Bankers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Blair, 99 Va. 606, 39 S. E. Rep. 231; Va. Law Reg., April 1902.

But the protection to purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of a judgment given them under sec. 7, ch. 189 of the W. Va. Code, only extends to the land so conveyed to such purchaser, it being liable to the satisfaction of judgments docketed according to law and to such judgments only. Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 367; McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 792.

Where two judgments were recovered, one in 1868, and the other in 1869, and the one last recovered is docketed in 1870, while the one first obtained is docketed in 1871; but both are docketed before a contract in writing or deed to a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice is recorded, the judgment first recovered though last docketed had priority. Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98.

Where a valid judgment has been docketed, it is notice which will affect all subsequent purchasers of land from any of the defendants in the judgment. Redd v. Ramey, 31 Gratt. 265; Sharitz v. Moyers, 99 Va. 519, 39 S. E. Rep. 166.

Subsequent Recorded Mortgages.—And undocketed judgments are subject to subsequent recorded mortgages. Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 730.

Undocketed Deeds.—A deed executed before judgments have been obtained against the grantor, under which the purchaser has been put in possession and paid the purchase money, but which was not recorded until after judgments were obtained, is void as against such creditors, and the land conveyed thereby is subject to satisfy the judgments. McClure v. Thistle, 3 Gratt. 183; Campbell v. Nonparell, etc., Co., 75 Va. 291; Murdock v. Wells, 9 W. Va. 552. See also, Trout v. Warwick, 77 Va. 731; Davis v. Landcraft, 10 W. Va. 718.

Prior Unrecorded Deed of Trust.—A prior deed of trust unrecorded is null and void as to a subsequent judgment; and the judgment is a lien upon the land embraced in the deed. McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. 580. See Hill v. Rixey, 26 Gratt. 72.

If the owner of a tract of land executes a deed of trust, conveying his land to a trustee to secure certain debts, and afterwards a judgment is rendered against him, which is duly docketed, and he then makes a contract with a third party to advance for him the amount secured by the deed of trust, and to secure such advance, mortgages this land to the person advancing the money for him, and such mortgagee pays off the debts secured by the deed of trust, it would be a complete satisfaction of these debts both in law and equity; the deed of trust becomes wholly inoperative, and the mortgagee cannot be subrogated to the rights of the cestui que trust and have the deed of trust kept alive for his benefit, thus securing priority over the judgment debtor. Hoffman v. Ryan, 21 W. Va. 415.

Statutory Provisions.—The act of March 3, 1843, Sess. Acts 1842-3, p. 51, does not apply to purchasers before the passage of the act. As to such the lien of a prior judgment is valid though not recorded. McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. 580.

The act of March 2, 1866, Sess. Acts, 1865-66, p. 191, ch. 7, sec. 1, "to preserve and extend the time for the exercise of certain civil rights and remedies," is retrospective in its operation, and applies in favor of a judgment creditor as to the docketing of his judgment. Hill v. Rixey, 26 Gratt. 72.

Stay Law.—But the act of March 2, 1866, Sess. Acts 1865-66, ch. 69, p. 180, called the stay law, does not apply to a judgment creditor to relieve him from the necessity of docketing his judgment. Hill v. Rixey, 26 Gratt. 72.

Docketing as Affecting the State.—President Johnson, in a dictum, in Hoge v. Brookover, 28 W. Va. 304, was of opinion that the act requiring judgment liens to be docketed in order to preserve them as against purchasers of the property, to which they are attached, does not affect a judgment in favor of the state. See Va. Law Reg., April 1902.

As between Judgment Debtor and Creditor.—Moreover, it has been held that, as between the judgment creditor and debtor the statute requiring the judgment to be docketed has no application or force. Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 367; Grantham v. Lucas, 24 W. Va. 231; McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 792.

Actual Notice or Knowledge of Unrecorded Lien.—Previous actual notice or knowledge by a subsequent purchaser's agent or trustee of a prior unrecorded lien on his real estate, will affect the creditor, provided the notice or knowledge was imparted or given to the agent in the same transaction, unless one transaction is closely followed by and connected with the other. Morrison v. Bausemer, 32 Gratt. 225; Johnson v. Bank, 33 Gratt. 473.

Lands in Another County.—A purchaser of land at a judicial sale in the county where the land lies, under a decree of the circuit court of that county, cannot be affected by constructive notice of a judgment obtained in another county, which is not recorded in the county where the land is situated, before the confirmation of the sale; actual notice or knowledge of the judgment must be brought home to the purchaser before the payment of the purchase money. Logan v. Pannill, 90 Va. 11, 17 S. E. Rep. 744.

Indexing Unnecessary.—It has been decided that indexing is not a necessary part of the docketing of a judgment, but the land is subject to the lien of the judgment without it. These decisions, however, were rendered on account of the particular wording of the statutes. Granite Co. v. Clarke, 28 Gratt. 617; Calwell v. Prindle, 19 W. Va. 604.

Mistake as to Name of Party to Judgment.—Where the plaintiff obtains judgment against Mrs. T. Frank S., which is indexed in the name of Mrs. T. Frank S., on July 31, 1891, but in 1897 is indexed in the judgment lien docket as against May M. S. such docketing and indexing of the judgment are not constructive notice to a purchaser that the judgment constituted a lien on the property of May M. S. in the absence of evidence that the purchaser had actual knowledge of the judgment or knew that Mrs. T. Frank S. and May M. S. were the same persons. Bankers' Loan & Investment Co. v. Blair, 99 Va. 606, 39 S. E. Rep. 231.

Authenticated Copy of Abstract.—An authenticated copy from the recorder's docket of an official abstract of a judgment docketed under the provisions of the 3d and 4th sections of chapter 130 of the Code of 1868 of West Virginia, is evidence that such abstract was docketed, and when, and of notice to purchasers of lands upon which the alleged judgment is claimed to be a lien, when the existence of such judgment is properly proved; but where the judgment is put in issue, ordinarily, an authenticated copy of such abstract, as docketed by the recorder, will not be received as proof of the judgment and dispense with the necessity of producing a properly authenticated copy of the judgment. Dickinson v. Railroad Co., 7 W. Va. 390; Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98.

Purpose of Docketing.—The docketing of a judgment is an act to be done to preserve or prevent the loss of a civil right or remedy, within the meaning of the acts of March 4, 1863, acts of 1861-2, ch. 81, and of March 2, 1866, Code of Va. 1878, ch. 146, §§ 6 and 7, pp. 998-99. And therefore in computing the time within which a judgment is required by § 8, ch. 186 of Va. Code of 1860, to be docketed, in order to preserve the lien of such judgment against purchasers, the period between the 17th of April, 1861 and the 2d of March 1866 is not to be computed as a part of such terms. Borst v. Nalle, 28 Gratt. 423.

Docketing Creditor's Privilege Not Duty.—To docket his judgment is a creditor's privilege, not his duty. If he fails to docket it, he may lose his lien on the real estate aliened to a purchaser for value without notice. Gurnee v. Johnson, 77 Va. 712.

Docketing, Conclusive Notice to All.—The docketing of a judgment is constructive but conclusive notice to all the world of the lien of such judgment. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Charlottesville v. Manoni, 76 Va. 802.

4. INTEREST SUBJECT TO LIEN.

Real Estate.—A judgment creditor has a legal lien on the lands of his debtor, and has a right to rest on that lien without pursuing his debtor's personalty. Blakemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 269, 28 S. E. Rep. 332.

Judgment Regarded as Lien in Chancery.—In equity, judgments are liens on the whole of the debtor's equitable estate; and the whole is first to be applied to the elder judgment, then the whole of the residue to the junior judgment; and in neither case is only a moiety to be applied to their satisfaction. Haleys v. Williams, 1 Leigh 140, 19 Am. Dec. 743. See Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 164; Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407; Parrill v. McKinley, 6 W. Va. 67.

For a judgment creditor has a lien in equity on the equitable estate of the debtor, in like manner as he has a lien at law on his legal estate. Coutts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 268; Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Equitable Interest—Rule in Equity, at Law.—A judgment creditor, who has recovered judgment against the cestui que trust, under a deed of marriage settlement to a trustee, cannot, while the annuitant is still living, subject such equitable interest, at law, to the satisfaction of his debt, but such equitable interest is bound by the judgment in equity, which will apply it to the satisfaction of the debt. Coutts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 268.

Partial Payment for Land.—Where a party purchases land, and pays a part of the purchase money, but fails to pay the balance, whereby the land is resold, he has an equitable interest in the land, which is liable to a judgment subsequently obtained against him by another party, on a debt existing against the delinquent purchaser at the time he made them partial payment on the land. Davis v. Vass (W. Va.), 35 S. E. Rep. 826.

Unrecorded Assignment—Subsequent Judgment.—Where a person has an equitable title to land under an executory written contract, and by written assignment transfers it to another, which assignment is not recorded, and a judgment goes against the assignor, the assignment is void as to such judgment, and the equitable right to the land under the contract and assignment is subject to the judgment, because of failure to record the assignment. Dameron v. Smith, 37 W. Va. 580, 16 S. E. Rep. 807.

Equity of Redemption.—A judgment is a lien upon an equity of redemption in land, and will be preferred to a subsequent purchaser of the equity of redemption not having the legal title. And the lien of the judgment extends to the whole equity of redemption. Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612; Hale v. Horne, 21 Gratt. 112.

Judgment Subsequent to Deed of Trust.—A creditor, whose judgment is subsequent to a deed of trust on the debtor's land, has only a lien on his equity of redemption, and cannot have the deed of trust enforced, and the land sold to pay the debts thereby secured, until default. Wytheville Ice Co. v. Frick, 96 Va. 141, 30 S. E. Rep. 491; Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 657, and note; Wise v. Taylor, 44 W. Va. 492, 29 S. E. Rep. 1008.

Equity of Redemption First Liable.—The equity of redemption in land conveyed in trust by a judgment debtor must first be sold to satisfy a judgment before recourse can be had to aliened lands. McClung v. Beirne, 10 Leigh 894; Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612. See Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 164.

Damages on Dissolution of Injunction.—The damages on the dissolution of an injunction to a judgment become, as to the party obtaining it, a part of the judgment, and are embraced in the lien of the judgment upon the equity of redemption. Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Lien on Curtesy during Wife's Life.—Where property which constitutes a wife's separate estate is conveyed by a deed in which the husband unites, a judgment against him does not constitute a lien on the husband's estate by curtesy in such property, since during the wife's life the husband had no interest in the property to which the judgment could attach. Bankers' Loan and Investment Co. v. Blair, 99 Va. 606, 39 S. E. Rep. 281. See monographic note on "Curtesy."

Interest of Vendee.—Where a party by parol contract conveys property to another, under which the grantee takes possession and holds the property, and pays the purchase money, it will be unaffected by judgment recovered before a deed, made by the grantor to the grantee, is docketed, and the judgment is not a lien on the land, it being well settled that parol contracts are not embraced in the meaning of the registration acts, Va. Code 1873, ch. 182, § 67. Long v. Hagerstown Agric., etc., Co., 30 Gratt. 665; Burkholder v. Ludlam, 30 Gratt. 355; Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401; Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407; Marling v. Marling, 9 W. Va. 79; Hurt v. Prillaman, 79 Va. 257; Powell v. Bell, 81 Va. 222.

So, where the purchasers under a parol contract, take actual, visible, and notorious possession and pay the purchase money in full before notice of the judgment, a subsequent judgment against the vendor of the land, before the deed is recorded, creates no lien thereon. Brown v. Butler, 87 Va. 621, 13 S. E. Rep. 71. See also, Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98.

A purchaser of land by a parol contract, which has been so far executed as to vest the right to compel his vendor to execute the parol contract in a court of equity, has an equitable right in the land so purchased, which a court of equity will fully protect against the lien of a subsequent judgment creditor of his vendor. Snyder v. Martin, 17 W. Va. 276; Pack v. Hansbarger, 17 W. Va. 813; Snyder v. Botkin, 37 W. Va. 355, 16 S. E. Rep. 591; Yonng v. Devries, 81 Gratt. 304.

Where a party sells land, by a verbal contract, to another, without receiving the purchase price, and subsequently becomes surety for his vendee, whereby the vendee agrees to allow his vendor to retain the legal and equitable title to the land until he pays the purchase money and until his liability as surety is discharged, which agreement is not recorded, and later the vendee becomes a bankrupt, it was held that as against the other judgment creditors of the vendee (bankrupt) the agreement between the vendor and vendee is valid though not recorded, and that they only have the equities of the vendee against the vendor. Coffman v. Niswander, 26 Gratt. 737.

Parol Contract Must Be Certain and Definite.—But in order that an equitable right held by a bona fide purchaser, under a parol contract, who has paid the purchase money and received possession, may be preferred in equity to the liens of judgment creditors subsequently acquired against the vendor, the parol contract relied on must be certain and definite in its terms, and sustained by satisfactory proof. Hurt v. Prillaman, 79 Va. 257; Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401; Wright v. Pucket, 22 Gratt. 370.

Adverse Possession for Ten Years.—When the conveyance is by an unrecorded deed, and the vendee has held the property adversely for the period of ten years, before a judgment is recovered against the grantor, the land cannot thereafter be subjected to the lien of such judgment. As soon as such deed is made and delivered, though unrecorded, the holder thereunder will be adverse to the world. Parkersburg Nat. Bank v. Neal, 28 W. Va. 744.

Lands Purchased by Debtor under Executory Contract.—A judgment creditor has no lien on land which his debtor has purchased under an executory contract of sale, where the contract is set aside because of misrepresentation by the vendor, or because of default of the debtor in making stipulated payments, and it is immaterial whether the contract was set aside because of fraud in its procurement or the failure of the vendee to comply with his contract. Nelson v. Turner, 97 Va. 54, 33 S. E. Rep. 390.

When a Lien on Lands in Purchaser's Hands.—On the other hand, a judgment is a lien on the lands of the debtor after they pass into the hands of bona fide purchasers, if at the date of the judgment they were owned by the debtor. Rodgers v. McCluer, 4 Gratt. 81.

Injunction.—A judgment, moreover, is a lien upon land in the hands of a purchaser, though at the time of the conveyance execution upon the judgment was suspended by an injunction. And the lien exists though the judgment was not docketed, the purchaser having had notice thereof. Craig v. Sebrell, 9 Gratt. 131. See Hutsonpiller v. Stover, 12 Gratt. 579.

Judgments Recovered in Decedent's Lifetime.—The judgment obtained during the life of an intestate is a lien upon the lands in the hands of his heirs for the payment thereof, and is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale thereof over a simple contract creditor, who acquired no equal or superior lien for his debt upon the realty during the life of the debtor. Laidley v. Kline, 8 W. Va. 218.

Judgment against Administrator Not Lien.—But the judgment obtained by a creditor against the administrator is not a judgment lien on the realty of the intestate. Laidley v. Kline, 8 W. Va. 218; Woodyard v. Polesley, 14 W. Va. 211.

Judgment Confessed by Administrator d. b. n., No Lien.—A judgment confessed by an administrator de bonis non, is no lien upon the lands of the intestate. And a decree showing upon its face, that it was enforcing such a judgment as a lien against such land, may be reviewed and reversed upon a proper bill of review brought for that purpose by the heirs. Custer v. Custer, 17 W. Va. 113.

Homestead.—While the lien of a judgment which attaches before a homestead in the land is claimed, cannot be enforced during the existence of the homestead, yet it will have priority on the land after the homestead is abandoned over a deed of trust executed during the occupancy of the land as a homestead. Blose v. Bear, 87 Va. 177, 12 S. E. Rep. 394.

Subsequently Acquired Realty.—The lien of a judgment extends to all the land owned by the judgment debtor at the date thereof, or which may have been afterwards acquired. McClung v. Belrne, 10 Leigh 394; Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 81 Gratt. 580, and note.

So long as a judgment may be revived, it is a lien upon a moiety of all the lands owned by the debtor at the date of the judgment, or which are afterwards acquired, in whosoever hands they may have come. Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 44.

The lien of a judgment will attach to after-acquired lands of a debtor. And such lands acquired and liened by the debtor subsequent to the rendition of a judgment, are within the terms and reason of sec. 10, ch. 186, Code of W. Va. 1860. Handly v. Sydenstricker, 4 W. Va. 605.

Judgments for Money.—Judgments for money, whether docketed or not, bind the unaliened lands to the debtor; certainly those owned by him at the date of the judgments, it may be, those subsequently acquired in the order in which the judgments are recovered, and the same is true of decrees for money; and so, though not docketed, they bind the debtor's lands subsequently aliened to a purchaser with notice, even though he be a purchaser for value; but unless docketed, they are not liens on lands subsequently aliened to bona fide purchasers for value without notice, and a trustee in a deed of trust given to secure a debt and the creditor secured are purchasers for value within the meaning of the registration law. Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757; Hill v. Rixey, 26 Gratt. 72, and note.

Personal Estate.—If a judgment creditor (without suing out execution) files a bill in chancery, to get satisfaction out of the real and personal property of the debtor, the whole being conveyed by a deed of trust, executed during the terms in which the judgment was obtained, and providing that the property conveyed may be sold by the trustees to answer the purposes of the trust, the court ought to dismiss the bill as to the personal property, without prejudice to the plaintiff's right, if any, to the residuary money resulting to the debtor, from the sale of that property, after satisfying the deed; but should direct the trustees to sell the lands, and out of the proceeds thereof, to satisfy the judgment in the first place, and afterwards perform the trusts reposed in them by the deed. Mutual Assur. Society v. Standard, 4 Munf. 589.

Purchase Money Bonds.—It was held in Logan v. Pannill, 90 Va. 11, 17 S. E. Rep. 744, that a judgment not docketed in the county wherein the land of the debtor lies, and is sold under a decree in partition, does not, upon being docketed in such county, become a lien upon bonds for the purchase money in the hands of the assignee who has no notice of the judgment, though title to the land was retained by the prior owners as security for the payment of the bonds, because the bonds are personalty, and not subject to the lien of any judgment when no execution is issued out upon them.

So also, a judgment is not a lien on notes given by a purchaser for unpaid purchase money for the land on which the judgment is a lien, nor do such notes, together with the unaliened lands of the judgment debtor, constitute a common fund for the payment of the judgment. Blakemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 209, 28 S. E. Rep. 332.

Equity Jurisdiction.—Section 8 of chap. 180, W. Va. Code 1868, confers upon courts of equity, jurisdiction and authority to enforce judgment liens against the lands of the judgment debtor, whether he has personal property or estate, out of which the judgment might be made by process of execution, or not. Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440; Pecks v. Chambers, 8 W. Va. 210.

Lands Exchanged—Failure of Grantee to Record.—If upon an exchange, the parties executed mutual conveyances, but the grantee of one tract fails to record his deed, judgment against the grantor binds the land so given in exchange as well as that received in exchange, the rights of the parties are not affected by the character of the consideration for the unrecorded deed. Price v. Wall, 97 Va. 334, 33 S. E. Rep. 599.

Principal's Lands—Sureties Secured.—A judgment against the principal debtor and sureties in the debt is a lien on the land of the principal, although the sureties are secured by a deed of trust. Kent v. Matthews, 12 Leigh 573.

Damages and Costs.—A judgment lien includes not only the amount of the original judgment, but also the damages and costs in the court of appeals. McClung v. Belrne, 10 Leigh 394; McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. 586.

5. AMOUNT OF LIEN.—One who purchases land subject to a judgment lien is not affected by a subsequent judgment against the same land, for an amount in excess of such lien to which he was not a formal party and in which the true amount of the first judgment lien was not litigated, and he may satisfy such lien by the payment of the amount called for by the judgment under which he purchased. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

6. TERRITORIAL EXTENT.

Lands in Another County.—Where a creditor has judgments in one county against persons who have an interest in lands in another county, and knows of the pendency of a suit to partition such lands, and he does not intervene in such suit or record his judgments in the latter county till after a sale of the land is confirmed, and does not give the purchaser actual notice of his judgments before the purchase money is paid, he cannot subject the land to the payment of such judgments. Logan v. Pannill, 90 Va. 11, 17 S. E. Rep. 744.

Where a judgment was recovered in the county court of Monroe county, W. Va., in March 1861, against three debtors, W., S. and G., and the latter lived in Bath county, but during the war, died, leaving real estate in Bath county, it was held that the judgment constituted as between the parties thereto, a lien on the real estate in Bath county, whether the judgment was docketed or not, and the lien of the judgment on the lands of G. in Bath county, was neither lost nor impaired by reason of the division of the state of Virginia into two states, and the falling of the county of Monroe into the state of West Virginia. moreover, the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court of Monroe county, West Virginia, of the records of which court the records of the former county court of Monroe form a part, is proper evidence of the judgment. Gatewood v. Goode, 23 Gratt. 880.

7. COMMENCEMENT AND PRECEDENCE OF LIEN.—The statutes give a direct, positive, express, and absolute lien of a judgment against all the lands of or to which the debtor shall be possessed or entitled at or after the date of such judgment, or if it was rendered in court, at or after the commencement of the terms, at which it was so rendered; and such lien continues until it is in some legal manner discharged. Code West Va., ch. 189, § 5; Code Va. 1860, ch. 186, § 6; Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 307; McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 792; Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 780; Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98; Borst v. Nalle, 28 Gratt. 423; Gurnee v. Johnson, 77 Va. 712.

Judgment liens in their priorities should be fixed according to the dates of the judgments. Grant-ham v. Lucas, 24 W. Va. 231.

Forfeited Forthcoming Bond.—A forfeited forthcoming bond has the force of a judgment, so as to create a lien upon the lands of the obligors, only from the time the bond was returned to the clerk's office. Cabell v. Given, 30 W. Va. 760, 5 S. E. Rep. 442; Land Co. v. Calhoun, 16 W. Va. 361; Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 210; Lipscomb v. Davis, 4 Leigh 306.

Though a forthcoming bond is forfeited, and not quashed, yet in equity the lien of the original judgment still exists; and if the obligors in the bond prove insolvent, so that the debt is not paid, a court of law will quash the bond so as to revive the lien of the original judgment. Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179.

Where the only evidence of the time a forthcoming bond was returned to the clerk's office was an indorsement as follows: "Notice proved and docketed in court, 10 October, 1868, and mo. to quash,"—such bond would have the force of a judgment from the date in the endorsements, and the requirement by the statute (Code W. Va. 1860, ch. 189, sec. 2) that the clerk of the court shall indorse on a forfeited forthcoming bond, "the date of its return," is directory. Cabell v. Given, 30 W. Va. 760, 5 S. E. Rep. 442.

Lien Not Divested by Cancellation of Deed of Trust.—A judgment becomes a lien on property conveyed to the judgment debtor as a trustee for his wife, where the husband, who was insolvent, paid the consideration, and such is not divested by a return and cancellation of the deed unrecorded. Kline v. Triplett, 2 Va. Dec. 429, 25 S. E. Rep. 886.

Priority of Judgment Lien Limited to Amount of Judgment.—A purchaser of land which is subject to the lien of a judgment takes it subject only to the amount called for by the judgment, and it is not liable to the judgment, increased by usury, under a subsequent agreement between the creditor and judgment debtor. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Whether Lien Attaches to Fund Received from Sale.—Where a judgment creditor has made an election to receive part of his debt out of the proceeds from the sale of lands on which his judgment was a prior lien, he cannot afterwards enforce his lien against the land. Effinger v. Kenney, 92 Va. 245, 23 S. E. Rep. 742.

Judgment against Sheriff—When Lien Commences.—A judgment against a sheriff is, under ch. 195 of W. Va. Code of 1872, a lien from the time he is served with notice or summons pursuant to which the judgment is afterwards rendered, and is superior to a deed of trust executed by the sheriff after such service of summons. Hoge v. Brookover, 38 W. Va. 304.

Order of Subjection of Lands—Lands Retained by Debtor.—If the judgment debtor retains sufficient lands to pay the judgment they should be first subjected. Blakemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 209, 28 S. E. Rep. 332.

Equity requires, where a judgment lien is sought to be enforced, that the lands owned by the debtor at the time of the attempt to enforce, should be applied to the discharge of the judgment before resorting to land upon which the judgment is also a lien, then in the hands of his alienee. Handly v. Sydenstricker, 4 W. Va. 605.

If a judgment is obtained which is a lien on the lands of the judgment debtor, and the judgment debtor sells and conveys part of it, generally the judgment creditor should be required in the first instance to exhaust the unsold portion. McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 791.

If the first alienee of a portion of the land liable to judgment liens fails to put his deed of record, and a subsequent alienee, who bought another portion of the lands, liable to the judgment liens, puts his deed of record, still the lands of such last alienee must be held liable for such judgment liens before the lands of the first alienee. Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 511.

But if the lands owned by the debtor are not sufficient to satisfy the judgment lien, then the real estate last owned and aliened is liable, until it is fully satisfied. In the suit for the purpose of enforcing the lien, unless it shall appear that the land first liable would be sufficient to discharge it, it would not be error to decree or advertise together the sale of all the lands upon which the lien existed, and then proceed to sell it in the order in which it was liable until a sufficient sum is realized to pay off the suit. Handly v. Sydenstricker, 4 W. Va. 605.

Residue of Land Unaliened First Liable.—Where some of the land conveyed by a judgment lien is included in a deed of trust, subsequent to the judgment and the residue of it is not, such residue, not included, should first be sold to satisfy the prior judgment, and if insufficient to discharge the judgment, then the lands included in the deed of trust should be sold, and so much of the proceeds thereof, as, with the proceeds of the land not included in the deed, amount to a moiety of the whole, should be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment. If there is another judgment having priority over the deed of trust, the proceeds of the other moiety of the land sold, included in the deed of trust, should be applied to satisfy it. Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 164.

Liens of Undocketed Judgments—Proceeds of Land Unsold.—Various judgments are rendered against a debtor, and the junior judgments are docketed, and the senior undocketed, and in this state of things the debtor conveys a part of the land to a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of the undocketed judgments, and the docketed judgment liens are not discharged, the liens of the undocketed judgments must be discharged out of the proceeds of the unsold lands, although the effect might be to require the holders of the docketed judgment to resort in whole or in part to the land so conveyed for the satisfaction of their judgment liens. Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 367; McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 792. See also, Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 730.

Priority over Unrecorded Deed.—A judgment creditor, whose judgment has been duly docketed, and who has brought suit to enforce the lien on the judgment debtor's land, is entitled to priority over a grantee of the judgment debtor claiming under a deed, not recorded until after the commencement of the suit, and after the expiration of twenty months from its execution and acknowledgment; since such a deed is void, under Va. Code, § 2465, as to creditors whose rights have attached before it was recorded. Robinson v. Bank, 1 Va. Dec. 769, 17 S. E. Rep. 739.

Priority of Judgment over Purchase Money Notes.—Also judgments recovered against the vendor of land and docketed before his deed of conveyance to the purchaser is admitted to record, have priority over the notes given by such purchaser for deferred payments on the land, though such notes are secured by a deed of trust made contemporaneously with the deed of conveyance to him, and duly recorded before the recovery of such judgments. Jones v. Byrne, 94 Va. 751, 27 S. E. Rep. 591.

Priority of Trust Deed over Judgment.—Where a party conveys land in trust to secure the payment of a debt, and subsequently sells lands he holds as trustee for his wife and children to pay the debts, the wife and children have an implied trust in their favor on the tract of land deeded to secure the payment of the debt, which refers back to the date of the trust deed, and has priority over judgment creditors who recovered judgments between the recording of the deed and the payment out of the proceeds of the land held by him as trustee for his wife and children, even though the judgments were recovered before the payment by the husband. Warwick v. Warwick, 31 Gratt. 70.

Priority of Vendor's Lien.—Where the vendor's lien is retained in a contract for the sale of land, though the contract is not recorded, the vendor's lien has priority to that of the judgment creditors of the vendee. Shipe v. Repass, 28 Gratt. 716.

As between Principal and Surety.—In a suit to enforce judgment liens on the lands of the principal debtor and his sureties, the principal's lands should be exhausted before subjecting that of the sureties. Wytheville Ice Co. v. Frick, 96 Va. 141, 30 S. E. Rep. 491; Womack v. Paxton, 84 Va. 9, 5 S. E. Rep. 550; Stovall v. Bank, 78 Va. 188. See Horton v. Bond, 28 Gratt. 815; Gentry v. Allen, 32 Gratt. 254. See Ross v. M'Lauchlan, 7 Gratt. 86.

Where judgment is rendered against a principal and his sureties, which is paid by the sureties, the judgment is a lien in favor of the sureties prior to a subsequent trust deed, although the sureties have permitted the proceeds of other property conveyed by their principal in trust for them to be applied in satisfaction of another judgment against their principal. Kent v. Matthews, 12 Leigh 573.

As between Two Trust Creditors of Same Debtor.—As between two trust creditors of the same debtor, secured on separate properties, a prior judgment lien must be first paid out of the proceeds of the property subject to the second trust, to the relief of the property subject to the first, both by reason of the statute and the doctrine of subrogation. First Nat. Bank v. Simms (W. Va.), 33 S. E. Rep. 525. See Woods v. Douglas, 46 W. Va. 657, 33 S. E. Rep. 771; Ball v. Setzer, 33 W. Va. 444, 10 S. E. Rep. 798.

Judgments Superior to Wife's Trust Deed.—Where during the pendency of a suit against an insolvent husband, instituted for the purpose of obtaining a judgment on a note executed by him, the husband executes a deed of trust on his real estate to a trustee, to secure to his wife the payment of a sum of money which she claims she had loaned him, which he had used in his business, and which sum was barred by the statute of limitations when the trust was executed, and amounted to nearly the value of the real estate, such trust deed cannot, as a lien, take precedence over judgments obtained by the bona fide creditors of the husband on debts created before the trust was executed, on the unsupported testimony of the husband and wife. Miller v. Cox, 33 W. Va. 747, 18 S. E. Rep. 960.

Specific Liens Paid First.—The proceeds of lands of a judgment debtor sold by a commissioner must be applied to the satisfaction of specific liens against such lands according to their respective priorities, and a judgment subsequently rendered cannot be made a general lien on such lands until the specific liens are paid. Hutton v. Lockridge, 22 W. Va. 159.

Equitable and Legal Estates on Same Footing.—As to the order of subjecting lands to a judgment lien, those conveyed by an equitable title stands on the same footing as those conveyed by a legal title. Rodgers v. McCluer, 4 Gratt. 81.

a. Lands Subject to Lien in Inverse Order of Alienation.—Lands subject to a judgment lien, parts of which have been aliened at different times, are liable to the satisfaction of the lien in the inverse order of alienation. McClung v. Beirne, 10 Leigh 394, overruling Beverley v. Brooke, 2 Leigh 425; Harman v. Oberdorfer, 33 Gratt. 497, and note; Nelson v. Turner, 97 Va. 54, 33 S. E. Rep. 390; Hutton v. Lockridge, 22 W. Va. 159; Rodgers v. McCluer, 4 Gratt. 81; Alley v. Rogers, 19 Gratt. 389; Jones v. Phelan, 20 Gratt. 229; Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179; Brengle v. Richardson, 78 Va. 406. See Londons v. Echols, 17 Gratt. 20.

"The law is now well settled that where land which is subject to the lien of a judgment or other incumbrance, is sold in parcels to different persons by successive alienations, it is chargeable in the hands of the purchaser in the inverse order of such alienations. This rule is not only established by the decisions of courts of equity, but in Virginia it is prescribed by statute. Harman v. Oberdorfer, 33 Gratt. 497." Per STAPLES, J. Whitten v. Saunders, 75 Va. 567; Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 567. See also, Schultz v. Hansbrough, 33 Gratt. 567; Miller v. Holland, 84 Va. 652, 5 S. E. Rep. 701.

Lands Primarily Liable.—Lands being liable for judgments in the inverse order of alienation, those primarily liable should be first subjected before proceeding against the purchaser whose land is only secondarily liable. Nelson v. Turner, 97 Va. 54, 33 S. E. Rep. 890.

Oldest Unpaid General Lien.—The holder of the oldest unpaid judgment lien is entitled to be first paid out of the property of the debtor, where his lien is a general one. Max Meadows Land & Imp. Co. v. McGavock, 98 Va. 411, 36 S. E. Rep. 490.

Parties to Suit Subsequent to Order for Account of Liens.—Where a judgment creditor brings suit to enforce his lien, and after an account of liens is ordered to be taken by the commissioner and other liens are proved, several other judgment creditors become parties to the suit and prove their liens, they are entitled to have the lands sold for their relief in the order of their respective merits and rights, and each is entitled to relief in the cause according to the merits of his cause, and the lands of the debtor are liable in the inverse order of alienation under Va. Code 1873, ch. 182, § 10. Brengle v. Richardson, 78 Va. 406.

Effect of Release or Waiver of Lien on One Parcel.—A judgment creditor having, by his contract, waived or lost his right to subject the land first liable to satisfy his judgments, is not entitled to subject the lands next liable for the whole amount of his judgment but only for the balance after crediting thereon the value of the land first liable. Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179.

Release of Lands Alienated by Debtor.—The lands alienated by the debtor constitute a secondary fund for the payment of the judgment, and neither a release of these lands, nor the failure to subject certain notes for unpaid purchase money on land is prejudicial to subsequent judgment creditors who obtained their judgments after the alienation, but before the release by the first judgment creditor. Blakemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 269, 28 S. E. Rep. 832.

Effect of Release, by Prior Party of Property Subject to Second Deed.—If a prior judgment lienor releases the property subject to a second deed of trust, the proceeds of which are amply sufficient to satisfy his judgment lien, he cannot enforce payment of such judgment lien out of the property subject to a first deed of trust until such latter trust is fully satisfied. First Nat. Bank v. Simms (W. Va.), 38 S. E. Rep. 525.

A defendant bought a tract of 166 acres of land for $1,400, giving a deed of trust to secure the purchase money. He afterwards paid $800 in cash, in consideration of the vendor's releasing 66 acres of the land, and agreeing to look to the other 100 acres for payment of the balance of $600, for which the defendant executed new notes. These were assigned to the plaintiff, in whose favor the defendant afterwards confessed judgment thereon. Held, that the lien of this judgment extended to the defendant's interest in the whole tract of 166 acres, notwithstanding the release of part of it from the vendor's lien, of which the plaintiff had no notice. McFarland v. Fish, 84 W. Va. 548, 12 S. E. Rep. 548.

Failure to Record—Voluntary Release.—Where a grantee of land fails to record his deed until after a judgment is obtained against the grantor, the lien of the judgment plaintiff will not be postponed, as to other land of the grantor, to the liens of judgments rendered after such deed was recorded, because such judgment plaintiff voluntarily released his lien on the land conveyed. Blakemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 269, 28 S. E. Rep. 832.

Effect of Release of One of Several Joint Judgment Debtors.—One of several joint judgment debtors may be proceeded against to enforce the payment of his part of the judgment, where the complainant has released him on the record from all liability for the shares of the other judgment debtors. Moreover, this objection, raised for the first time in an appellate court, comes too late. Preston v. Bank, 97 Va. 222, 33 S. E. Rep. 546.

Lands Sold Contemporaneously.—Where the different parcels of land are sold contemporaneously, they must contribute pro rata to the satisfaction of the judgment. Harman v. Oberdorfer, 38 Gratt. 497.

Voluntary Purchasers of Land Subject to Lien.—It seems that voluntary purchasers of lands subject to the lien of a judgment are personally responsible in equity to the creditors (the goods and chattels of the debtor being exhausted) for half the profits (or so much of half as may be sufficient to satisfy the judgment) jointly and not pro rata, notwithstanding they hold tracts of unequal values, and by distinct conveyances. Winston v. Johnson, 2 Munf. 305.

b. Doctrine of Relation.—"At common law, all judgments were, by legal fiction, it is said, supposed to be entered on the first day of the term of the court at which they were recovered. This rule has always prevailed in this state whenever the action, in which the judgment was rendered, was in such condition that it might have been tried, if it had happened to occupy the first place on the docket. And the law, not regarding fractions of a day, the lien of a judgment began by relation at the first moment of the first day of the term. The Mutual Assurance Society v. Stanard, 4 Munf. 539; Countts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 208; Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 371; Horsley v. Garth, 2 Gratt. 474; Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407; Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179; Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 31 Gratt. 580; Yates v. Robinson, 80 Va. 475; and Janney v. Stephen, 2 Pat. & H. 11." Hockman v. Hockman, 98 Va. 455, 25 S. E. Rep. 534.

The lien of a judgment upon the lands of the party relates back to the commencement of the term at which it is obtained. Mutual Assur. Soc. v. Stanard, 4 Munf. 539; Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179.

Fractions of a Day.—As a general rule the law does not regard fractions of a day; but this rule is departed from in many cases where the purposes of justice require it. Courts would be very slow to decide that a man by a fiction of law, is to be considered a felon before the conviction has actually taken place. Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 480.

Judgment by Confession in Vacation.—The lien of a judgment or decree begins with the first moment of the day on which it attaches. If it is a judgment by confession entered in vacation, the lien commences with the first moment of the day of such entry, irrespective of the hour at which the entry was in fact made. Hockman v. Hockman, 98 Va. 455, 25 S. E. Rep. 534.

"By reason of this rule that the whole term is one day, the common-law rule was that a judgment rendered on any day has relation to, and is a judgment of, its first day. This doctrine or rule had always been recognized in Virginia before we had a statute, but it is now embodied in a statute, as regards the effect of a judgment as a lien. Code of W. Va., ch. 139, sec. 5." Dunn v. Renick, 40 W. Va. 349, 23 S. E. Rep. 66.

Must Be in Condition to Be Heard.—But though a decree or judgment relates to the first day of the term, yet if the case was not ready for hearing or trial, and therefore no judgment or decree could have been given on such first day had it occupied the first place on the docket, it does not relate to the first day, but has the date of its actual entry of record. Dunn v. Renick, 40 W. Va. 349, 23 S. E. Rep. 66; Yates v. Robertson, 80 Va. 475; First Nat. Bank v. Huntington, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 580, 23 S. E. Rep. 792; Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407; Hockman v. Hockman, 93 Va. 455, 25 S. E. Rep. 534.

A judgment in any case, fully matured, so that it could be tried on the first day of the term, after it had been set for that day, relates to the first day of the term, and this rule applies to a judgment on attachment. Smith v. Parkersburg Co-Op. Ass'n (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 645.

Commencement of Term.—The commencement of the term to which the lien of a judgment has relation is the last day of the term upon which the court sits. Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 271. See Brown v. Hume, 16 Gratt. 462.

But the term is not considered as commencing on the day appointed by law for its commencement, when in point of fact the court is not held until afterwards. Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 271.

Judgments at Same Time Placed on Equality.—An office judgment confirmed on the last day of a term, and a judgment confessed on the first day of the same term, must be treated as judgments rendered on the same day, at the same time, and both judgments stand as of the same date; because of the well-settled rule which has already been set forth, that the office judgment would relate to the first day of the term, the law taking no notice of the fraction of a day. Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 31 Gratt. 580.

Overreaches All Liens, etc., Entered Thereafter.—"It was the rule of common law (and this rule still obtains in some of the states) that the judgments of courts of record all relate back to the first day of the term, and are considered as rendered on that day, and therefore their lien will attach to the debtor's realty from the beginning of the term, and it will override a conveyance or mortgage made on the second or any succeeding day although prior to the rendition of the judgment." Black, Judgm. 441; Smith v. Parkersburg Co-Op. Ass'n (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 645. See also, Mutual Assur. Soc. v. Stanard, 4 Munf. 589; Coutts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 268.

Overreaches a Deed of Trust.—It is well settled, as a general rule, that the lien of a judgment upon the land of the debtor relates back to the commencement of the term at which the judgment was obtained, and overreaches a deed of trust on the land executed by the debtor on or after the first day of the term. Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh 271; Brown v. Hume, 16 Gratt. 462; Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 31 Gratt. 580, and note.

Under Va. Code, § 3567, providing that a judgment is a lien as of the first day of the term at which it was rendered, a judgment rendered after the recordation of a deed of trust, but at a term which commenced prior to such recordation, is prior to the deed. New South Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Reed, 96 Va. 345, 31 S. E. Rep. 514.

Priority over Deed Recorded Same Day.—The lien of a judgment, moreover, has priority over a conveyance recorded on the same day on which the judgment was entered, though the endorsement of the clerk shows that the judgment was, in fact, entered, after the deed was filed for record. Hockman v. Hockman, 93 Va. 455, 25 S. E. Rep. 534.

Relation after Dissolution of Injunction.—Though a judgment is enjoined by a purchaser of land at the time of the purchase, yet, upon the dissolution of the injunction, the lien relates back to the date of the judgment, and so has priority over the equity of the purchaser. Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Relation Allowed in Equity and Law.—A judgment has relation to the first day of the term at which it is rendered, and this relation is allowed in equity as well as at law. Coutts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 268.

Reasons for Rule.—This general principle of the common law, like many others, is of such remote antiquity, and so long recognized without dispute, that the reasons and policy on which it was founded are in a great degree left to conjecture. Coutts v. Walker, 2 Leigh 268; First Nat. Bank v. Huntington, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 580, 23 S. E. Rep. 792; Smith v. Parkersburg Co-Op. Ass'n (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 545.

c. Judgments Obtained at Same Time.

Judgments Obtained at Same Time Share Pro Rata.—When the proceeds of lands, on which several judgments, obtained at the same time, are liens, are insufficient to pay them all, they must be paid pro rata. Janney v. Stephen, 2 P. & H. 11.

As between Judgments and Deeds of Trust.—A decree rendered or judgment confessed in vacation operates as a lien upon the first moment of the day on which the decree is rendered or judgment confessed regardless of the time of the day at which it is actually rendered or confessed, and takes precedence over the deed of trust admitted to record during the same day, though in point of fact the deed of trust may have been recorded before the decree was rendered, or the judgment confessed. The law takes no notice of the fraction of the day as to the decree, while the deed, as against subsequent purchasers for value and without notice, and creditors, is only operative from the time it is admitted to record. Hockman v. Hockman, 93 Va. 455, 25 S. E. Rep. 534.

d. Equitable Interests.

Priority of Lien as against Equitable Interest.—Judgment creditors may, in equity, have satisfaction out of the equitable estate of their debtor, in real estate, according to the order of their judgments in point of time, the oldest having priority over the youngest. Haleys v. Williams, 1 Leigh 140, 19 Am. Dec. 743.

Order of Liability of Equity of Redemption.—The equity of redemption in land conveyed in trust to secure debts, is subject to the lien of judgments subsequently obtained in the order of their priority in date. Hale v. Horne, 21 Gratt. 112; Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Contest between Judgment Creditor and a Purchaser.—If a judgment debtor purchases land and procures it to be conveyed to another as the purchaser, and he conveys it in trust to secure a bona fide debt, and the creditor is not informed that it has been purchased by the judgment debtor and conveyed to another as the purchaser, the judgment creditor has no lien upon the land for his debt as against the creditor under the deed of trust. Moore v. Sexton, 30 Gratt. 506.

e. Superior Rights of Third Persons.—It is well settled that where statute enactments do not interfere, a judgment creditor can acquire no better right to the estate of a debtor than the debtor himself has when the judgment is recovered. He takes it subject to every liability under which the debtor held it, and subject to all the equities which exist in favor of third parties; and a court of equity will limit the lien of the judgment to the actual interest which the debtor has in the estate. Snyder v. Martin, 17 W. Va. 276; Pack v. Hansbarger, 17 W. Va. 318; Snyder v. Botkin, 37 W. Va. 355, 16 S. E. Rep. 591;

Cleavenger v. Felton, 46 W. Va. 249, 33 S. E. Rep. 117; Shipe v. Repass, 28 Gratt. 716, and note; Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401, and note; Borst v. Nalle, 28 Gratt. 423, and note; Sharitz v. Moyers, 99 Va. 519, 30 S. E. Rep. 166. See Powell v. Bell, 81 Va. 232.

Extent of Lien.—"Nothing is better settled in Virginia than that where statutory enactments do not interfere, only the actual interest of the judgment debtor can be subjected to sale to satisfy judgments against him. Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401; Borst v. Nalle, 28 Gratt. 423; Summers v. Darne, 81 Gratt. 800; Coldiron v. Asheville Shoe Co., 93 Va. 364, 26 S. E. Rep. 238; 1 Black, Judgm. sec. 445." Dingus v. Imp. Co., 98 Va. 737, 37 S. E. Rep. 353. It was held in the latter case, that although the judgment debtor held the legal title to land, yet, as it was charged with a trust; it was paramount to the right of its judgment creditors.

"It has been over and over again decided that the judgment creditor can acquire no better right to the estate than the debtor himself has when the judgment is recovered." Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401; Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407, approved.

"It is well settled that ordinarily no greater interest in real estate than the judgment debtor himself has is available for the satisfaction of a judgment against him. In other words, that the right of the judgment creditor is limited to the debtor's interest in the land sought to be subjected. The creditor is in no sense treated as a purchaser, and has no equity beyond what belongs to the debtor. These propositions have often been affirmed by this court. Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. 401; Borst v. Nalle, 28 Gratt. 423; Summers v. Darne, 81 Gratt. 791." LEWIS, P. Cowardin v. Anderson, 78 Va. 88.

"It is well settled that a judgment lien on the land of the debtor is subject to every equity, which existed against the debtor at the rendition of the judgment; and courts of equity will always limit the lien to the actual interest of the judgment debtor. The lien of the judgment creates a preference over subsequently acquired rights, but a court of equity will always protect the equitable rights of third persons existing at the time the judgment lien attaches." GREEN, P. Snyder v. Martin, 17 W. Va. 299. See Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407.

Lands forfeited by nonentry on the assessor's land books under Code W. Va. 1868, ch. 31, § 84, vests in the state upon the forfeiture by the mere force of the statute, and therefore a judgment against the former owner rendered after such forfeiture is no lien on the land. Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 18 S. E. Rep. 807.

Effect of Loss of Security.—Where a deed of trust is given to a creditor as collateral security for the payment of a judgment, and the property is afterwards purchased by the creditor at a sale under the trust deed, but is subsequently taken from him under a vendor's lien existing against the property when the trust deed was made, the debtor is not entitled to credit on the judgment for the price which the creditor agreed to pay for such property, but the judgment creditor may enforce the judgment for its full amount against other property of the judgment debtor. Deaton Grocery Co. v. Pepper, 98 Va. 587, 36 S. E. Rep. 988.

Lien on a Molety.—Though lands are conveyed in trust to secure debts, a judgment having priority to the deed is a lien upon but a molety of the land, except an equity of redemption.

"Where the legal estate is in the debtor at the date of its judgment, the creditor can only subject a molety; and a subsequent alienation by the debtor cannot enlarge his rights." Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. 164; Mutual Assurance Society v. Stanard, 4 Munf. 539; Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh 29, 37; Haleys v. Williams, 1 Leigh 140, distinguished and explained.

If a debtor conveys land fraudulently and retains other lands, on setting aside the conveyance at the suit of a judgment creditor, there will be a decree for the sale of only one molety of the whole, embracing in the molety the land retained by the debtor. M'New v. Smith, 5 Gratt. 84.

Judgment in Favor of Commonwealth.—It was held in Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. 419, that prior to the act of 1822, Sup. Rev. Code, ch. 282, sec. 1, p. 339, the judgment in favor of the commonwealth against his general debtors, only binds one-half the land of the debtor.

But upon setting aside a conveyance of real estate as fraudulent, at the suit of a judgment creditor the court cannot decree a sale of only one molety of the lands to satisfy the judgment. M'New v. Smith, 5 Gratt. 84.

Issuance of Fl. Fa.—Lien of Molety.—Where a fl. fa. has been issued upon a judgment within a year and a day, the judgment is a lien upon a molety of all the land owned by the debtor at the date of the judgment, or which were afterwards acquired, in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, and without notice. Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 44. See Kent v. Matthews, 12 Leigh 573.

Rights of Purchaser of Land Subject to Lien.—The lien of a judgment is a legal lien, and a purchaser of the legal title from the debtor takes it subject to the lien, though he had no notice of it. Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. 419.

Priority of Mortgage Executed Back to Secure Purchase Money.—Where a purchaser, contemporaneously with the delivery of a conveyance of the purchased land, executes a mortgage, trust deed, or other incumbrance to secure the purchase money, he acquires a temporary selsin, and not such an interest in the land as becomes subject to the lien of a judgment against him in preference to the deed of trust. And it applies equally in favor of a third person who advances the purchase money, and at the time of the conveyance takes a mortgage on the land for his indemnity. Cowardin v. Anderson, 78 Va. 88; Summers v. Darne, 81 Gratt. 791, 801; Straus v. Bodeker, 86 Va. 543, 10 S. E. Rep. 570.

Under Code Va. 1873, ch. 182, sec. 6, giving judgment creditors a lien on all realty of or to which the judgment debtor is possessed or entitled, where land is conveyed to a judgment debtor, and so instantly reconveyed by him to a trustee to secure the purchase money, he has no interest subject to the lien of the judgment as against the trust deed. Straus v. Bodeker, 86 Va. 543, 10 S. E. Rep. 570.

Unrecorded Deed.—Moreover, the judgment creditor acquires no preference over the deed of trust, whether the latter be directly for the vendor's benefit or for the benefit of a lender of the money to pay the purchase money, or whether the trust be recorded or not, the latter and the conveyance being parts of one transaction. Cowardin v. Anderson, 78 Va. 88. See Summers v. Darne, 81 Gratt. 791.

Vendor's Lien Reserved on Face of Conveyance.—A vendor's lien reserved on the face of the conveyance will have priority over a judgment against the grantee. Kline v. Triplett, 2 Va. Dec. 429, 26 S. E. Rep. 886.

& EXPIRATION OR EXTINGUISHMENT OF LIEN.

Expiration of Statutory Period.—It is settled law that the lien of a judgment ceases, when the right to sue out execution on the judgment, or to revive it by scire facias, is barred by the statute of limitations. Reilly v. Clark, 81 W. Va. 571, 8 S. E. Rep. 509; Laidley v. Kline, 23 W. Va. 565; Werdenbaugh v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 588; Shipley v. Pew, 23 W. Va. 487. See also, Serles v. Cromer, 88 Va. 426, 13 S. E. Rep. 559; Kennerly v. Swartz, 83 Va. 704, 3 S. E. Rep. 348; McCarty v. Ball, 82 Va. 875, 1 S. E. Rep. 189; Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call 125.

Lien Barred at Law Unenforceable in Equity.—And it seems to be equally well settled that the lien of a judgment is not enforceable in equity after it ceases to be enforceable at law, such a lien being a creature of statute. Sutton v. McKenney, 82 Va. 46; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251; McCarty v. Ball, 82 Va. 872, 1 S. E. Rep. 189; Shipley v. Pew, 23 W. Va. 486.

It has been held, moreover, that courts of equity follow the law as respects Code Va. 1873, ch. 182, sec. 12 and 13, which declares that no execution shall issue, nor any scire facias or action be brought, on a judgment after the lapse of ten years from the return day of an execution on which there is no return by an officer, or after twenty years from the return day of an execution on which there is such return. Hence if a legal claim, barred at law, is asserted in equity, it is equally barred there. McCarty v. Ball, 82 Va. 872, 1 S. E. Rep. 189. See Coles v. Ballard, 78 Va. 149; Rowe v. Bentley, 29 Gratt. 756; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251; Dabney v. Shelton, 83 Va. 349, 4 S. E. Rep. 605.

It has been held that the language of the statute, Code of Va. 1873, ch. 182, sec. 9, "The lien of a judgment may always be enforced in a court of equity," implies only a purpose to confer jurisdiction on courts of equity to enforce the lien, whether the remedies at law are adequate or not. Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251.

Execution Issued and Returned.—Where an action is brought to subject real estate to the payment of a judgment, 10 years after its rendition, it is not barred by the statute of limitations when the record shows that within a year thereafter an execution had been issued and returned, "no property." Kennerly v. Swartz, 83 Va. 704, 3 S. E. Rep. 348; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251, distinguished.

Legal Statutory Lien—Collateral Lien.—It was said, by the court, in Paxton v. Rich, 85 Va. 378, 7 S. E. Rep. 581: "The case of Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251, referred to by counsel, has no application. In that case it was held that the lien of a judgment ceases with the life of the judgment, and obviously so, because the lien is a legal lien, conferred by statute, and is not collateral to, but grows out of the judgment. Hence the lien and the judgment are inseparable, and the extinguishment of the latter is the extinguishment of the former. But not so where there is a judgment for a debt secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, or a vendor's lien. There the lien is collateral to the judgment and may be enforced in equity although the judgment be barred or annihilated."

a. Extension of Lien.

(1) Issuance of Execution.—The lien of a judgment, on which no execution has ever issued, will not be enforced in a court of equity in a suit brought after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment, and where the debtor dies, the time in which it can be enforced may be less as in no case can it exceed five years after the qualification of his personal representative, unless perhaps, it may be kept alive by suing out successive executions after the death of the debtor, or, by having sued out a scire facias, continued his right to do so. Werdenbaugh v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 588.

Where an execution has been issued upon a judgment more than ten years after the return day of the last preceding execution issued thereon, and a suit is brought by the creditor to enforce the lien of such judgment against the real estate of his debtor, the issuance of such execution will not avoid the bar of the right to enforce such lien, notwithstanding the execution is merely voidable, and not liable to be assailed in a collateral suit. Reilly v. Clark, 81 W. Va. 571, 8 S. E. Rep. 509.

Summons by Publication.—Where nonresident judgment creditors are summoned by order of publication and no order is made to suspend the issuing of executions, a suit to enforce a contract for the sale of the judgment debtor's land, is no such "legal process," as under Va. Code 1873, ch. 182, sec. 13, suspends judgment creditors' right to sue out executions and stops the running of the statute of limitations against such judgments. Straus v. Bodeker, 86 Va. 543, 10 S. E. Rep. 570.

Act Requiring Issuance and Return of Pl. Fa.—It was held in Burns v. Hays, 44 W. Va. 503, 30 S. E. Rep. 101, that ch. 95 of the W. Va. Code, Acts 1891, requiring the issue and return of a pl. fa. unsatisfied before a chancery suit to enforce the lien of a judgment, does not apply to suits pending when it went into force.

Execution Issues upon Dissolution of Injunction.—Upon the dissolution of an injunction to a judgment, execution may issue thereon within a year and a day from the dissolution of the injunction, without a scire facias, though the injunction was in force for more than ten years. Hutsonpiller v. Stover, 12 Gratt. 579.

Proceedings to Stay Execution.

Suspension of Limitation—Object of Suit.—In order that a proceeding instituted may have the effect of suspending the right to sue out execution on a judgment, it must be brought for that purpose, and when such is not the object of the suit, the rights of the judgment creditor under his judgment will be unaffected. Dabney v. Shelton, 83 Va. 349, 4 S. E. Rep. 605; Straus v. Bodeker, 86 Va. 543, 10 S. E. Rep. 570.

Under the law of West Virginia, a plaintiff, after obtaining a judgment for his debt can issue a writ of scire facias against the personalty of the defendant; if the execution be returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, and he wishes to reach the land of the defendant, he must file a bill in equity in aid of the execution. Such chancery suit will have the effect of holding the statute of limitations in abeyance until the date of the final decree. Ryan v. Kanawha Val. Bank (W. Va.), 71 Fed. Rep. 912.

Judgment Entered with Stay of Execution.—A judgment, with a stay of execution, creates no lien on land, until the plaintiff has a right to issue execution thereon. Scriber v. Deane, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 166; Enders v. Board of Public Works, 1 Gratt. 373.

But the right to file a bill in equity to enforce a judgment lien is coextensive, as to time, with the right to issue execution thereon; and under Va. Code, sec. 3577, which prescribes the limitation of proceedings to enforce a judgment, in computing time there shall, as to a writ of scire facias, be omitted the time elapsed between January 1, 1869, and March 29, 1871. Hence the limitation to a suit in equity to enforce a judgment obtained June 8, 1870, commenced to run, March 29, 1871. James v. Life, 92 Va. 702, 24 S. E. Rep. 275.

Limitation Not Suspended by Agreement.—In a suit to enforce the lien of a judgment against real estate brought more than ten years after return day of the last execution issued thereon, the creditor cannot avoid the bar of the statute by a parol agreement binding him not to sue out execution or enforce the judgment until within ten years before the bringing of such suit. Reilly v. Clark, 81 W. Va. 571, 8 S. E. Rep. 509.

How Creditor May Avoid Bar of Statute.—To avoid the bar of the statute of limitations in respect to the right to enforce the lien of a judgment, the creditor must bring his case within one of the exceptions declared in the statute, and he cannot, by parol evidence or otherwise, avoid such bar upon any ground not embraced in the statute. Reilly v. Clark, 81 W. Va. 571, 8 S. E. Rep. 509.

Revivor of Judgment.—A judgment creditor may bring his suit in equity against the personal representative and heirs or devisees of his deceased debtor, before reviving his judgment at law. James v. Life, 92 Va. 702, 24 S. E. Rep. 275. See also, Bank v. Allen, 76 Va. 200; Suckley v. Rotchford, 12 Gratt. 60; Burbridge v. Higgins, 6 Gratt. 119.

Entry of Satisfaction—Fraud.—A judgment is recovered and an execution issued thereon, and while it is in the hands of the sheriff, an agreement is made between the creditor and debtor, by which certain claims are transferred to the creditor in satisfaction of the judgment, and thereupon the sheriff, at the instance of the creditor, returns the execution "satisfied," but it appears, that the agreement on the part of the debtor was fraudulent and the execution was not in fact satisfied; the lien of the judgment is not destroyed, and the position and priority is not disturbed, although its payment may affect purchasers of part of the land of the debtor, but it does not appear in the pleadings and proofs, that such return was brought home to the purchaser, and by it he was misled to his injury. Renick v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 367.

Effect of Appeal from Justice's Judgment.—Where an appeal from the judgment of a justice or other inferior tribunal, has the effect of transferring the action to an appellate court for trial de novo, and the controversy is to be settled by a judgment in such court regardless of the judgment appealed from, the appeal operates not only to suspend the judgment of the justice or inferior tribunal, but vacates and sets it aside, so that it cannot be used as evidence or as the foundation of an action in any court. An appeal in such case is very different in its effect from a proceeding, which seeks to review a judgment by writ of error. In the latter case the judgment is merely suspended, but in the former the judgment is vacated and made ineffectual for any purpose. The judgment in legal construction no longer remains in force and cannot be the foundation of a new action. Evans v. Taylor, 28 W. Va. 184.

Effect of Partial Reversal and Affirmance.—It is a familiar doctrine, that where a decree is reversed in part and affirmed as to the residue, the reversal in part does not destroy the lien of so much of the decree as is unreversed or affirmed; and one prominent reason for this is, that equity looks to the substance of things, and not to the mere form. 3 Barton's Ch. Pr. (2d Ed.) sec. 296; Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. 213; Moss v. Moorman, 24 Gratt. 97.

But the rule does not apply to a reversal of judgment and award of a new trial. Shepherd v. Chapman, 88 Va. 215, 2 S. E. Rep. 273.

Where an injunction to a judgment is only perpetuated as to a part of it, or a reversal is only as to a part of a judgment, the lien of the part not affected continues from the date of the judgment. Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Davisson, 45 W. Va. 12, 29 S. E. Rep. 1028; Moss v. Moorman, 24 Gratt. 97; Graham v. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701, 23 S. E. Rep. 245.

Payment Delayed by Injunction.—Where a judgment is rendered for the penalty of a bond, to be discharged by the payment of the principal sum due and interest; and the payment of the money has been delayed by an injunction until the principal sum and the interest exceed the penalty, the lien of the judgment only extends to the penalty, the damages upon the dissolution of the injunction, and the costs at law, without continuing interest. Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Judgment on Attachment—Merger.—On the rendition of a judgment on an attachment the lien of an attachment is merged in the judgment, and the priority of the lien is thereby preserved. Smith v. Parkersburg Co-Op. Ass'n (W. Va.), 37 S. E. Rep. 645.

Joint Judgment—Effect of Service of Ca. Sa. on One.—It was held in Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. 419, that on a joint judgment against several, the service of ca. sa. on one, and the execution and forfeiture of a forthcoming bond by him, does not extinguish the lien of the judgment upon the land of the others.

Effect on Lien of Discharge of Debtor Taken under Ca. Sa.—A judgment creditor, whose debtor, after being taken in execution, has been discharged from custody by the jailer, for nonpayment of the jail fees, is remitted to the lien of his judgment, and will be entitled to satisfaction out of the debtor's land, in preference to creditors claiming under a deed of trust executed by the debtor, conveying the land, but not recorded in the county where it lies. McCullough v. Sommerville, 8 Leigh 415.

Destruction of Lien by Actual Service of Ca. Sa.—A recovers a judgment against B, at the August rules, and sues out a ca. sa. thereon in October, under which B. is taken in execution, and in November takes the oath of insolvency, and is discharged under the statute for the relief of insolvent debtors; and in the interval between the date of A's judgment and the service of his ca. sa. on B, sundry mortgages are executed by B, and duly recorded, to secure sundry debts to other creditors. Held, that by the actual service of A's ca. sa. on B, the lien of A's judgment was destroyed, and A. could then stand on the lien given to the ca. sa. executed by the statute of limitations, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 134, sec. 10, and that, therefore, the mortgagees are entitled to the benefit of their mortgages. Rogers v. Marshall, 4 Leigh 425. See also, Foreman v. Loyd, 2 Leigh 234.

Land, conveyed by deed of trust, which is void as to subsequent judgment creditors, because unrecorded, is subject to satisfy the judgments of a creditor, although he has issued a ca. sa. upon his judgment, whereupon the grantor in the deed is discharged as an insolvent. McClure v. Thistle, 2 Gratt. 182.

Purchase of Lands Subject to Lien of Judgment.—When, after the purchase of land subject to a judgment lien, another creditor brings suit to convene and enforce liens against the lands of the judgment debtor, but not against the land so purchased, and without making the administrator or heirs of the purchaser formal parties, and a personal decree is rendered in such suit against the original debtor, based on the original judgment for the amount thereof increased by usury under an agreement between such debtor and his judgment creditor subsequent to the rendition of the judgment, and that the lands of the debtor be sold to pay that and the other liens conveyed, the administrator and heirs of the purchaser, in proceedings under an amended bill to subject the lands purchased to the payment of the first judgment debt as fixed by the personal decree, are not estopped from showing the usury and disputing the amount of the debt as fixed by such decree, although they proved a claim in the convention of creditors. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Discharge in Bankruptcy.—The lien of a judgment is not defeated by the discharge of the debtor as a bankrupt; it may be enforced in the state courts. McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. 580.

Judgments Acquired Pendente Lite.—Where a suit in equity is pending to enforce judgment liens against a debtor's lands, the fact, that persons after the commencement of a suit have acquired judgments against the debtor, generally does not make it necessary for the plaintiff to file an amended bill, making the answer of such subsequent or pendente lite judgment creditors parties to the suit; nor is it necessary for them generally to file their petitions asking to be made parties, if their judgments are obtained before the order of reference is made in the cause, or in time after the order of reference for them to prove their judgment before the commissioner. For such subsequent judgment creditor may be allowed to prove his judgment before his commissioner under the general order of reference, and thus make himself at least a quasi party to the cause, and be bound thereby as to his debt. Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440.

9. SATISFACTION, BY RENTS AND PROFITS, IN FIVE YEARS.—A judgment debtor's real estate cannot be decreed for sale to pay the judgment liens thereon until the real estate has been properly ascertained, and it appears to the court that the rents and profits thereof will not satisfy the liens within five years, or in a reasonable time. Newlon v. Wade, 43 W. Va. 283, 27 S. E. Rep. 244; Duncan v. Custard, 24 W. Va. 730; Hill v. Morehead, 20 W. Va. 429; Rose v. Brown, 11 W. Va. 123; Horton v. Bond, 28 Gratt. 815, and note; Ewart v. Saunders, 25 Gratt. 203. See also, Cronie v. Hart, 18 Gratt. 739.

"The fact of the insufficiency of the rents and profits to satisfy the judgment within the prescribed period should be made to appear before any sale is made, and if the appellant desires it, he may have an inquiry to determine that fact." Price v. Thrash, 30 Gratt. 580. But see Barr v. White, 30 Gratt. 531.

The debts of both trust and judgment creditors ought to be ascertained, and the property sold, if the rents and profits will not satisfy the liens in five years, and the reference, if it does not appear in the papers, ought to be had to determine this latter question. Laidley v. Hinchman, 8 W. Va. 423.

Presumption of Waiver.—The failure by a defendant to demand an inquiry whether the rents and profits of the land would not satisfy the judgment within a reasonable time, raised a presumption that such right is waived. McClung v. Beirne, 10 Leigh 304.

How Shown.—But the insufficiency of the rents and profits to satisfy the judgment within the statutory period may be shown by the pleadings, by the admissions of the parties, by evidence taken, or by the report of a commissioner on inquiry ordered. Horton v. Bond, 28 Gratt. 815.

Rule under Statute.—Under the Code of W. Va. 1868, it would seem unnecessary to aver, in a bill to enforce a judgment lien, that the rents and profits will not pay the debt in five years. Handly v. Sydenstricker, 4 W. Va. 605.

Account of Rents.—A party coming into equity to enforce the lien of a judgment is not entitled to an account for rents accrued before the decree. Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. 419.

Settlement of Administrator's Accounts.—Generally the court should not decree the sale of the realty of an intestate to pay debts or judgment liens before the accounts of the administrator have been settled and the administered assets ascertained. Laidley v. Kline, 8 W. Va. 218; Martin v. Rellahan, 3 W. Va. 480.

Partnership Accounts.—The court ought not, in a chancery suit brought to enforce the lien of a judgment between partners, order a settlement of partnership accounts with a view of ascertaining the amount for which the lands of each partner should be primarily subject, and with a view to the rendering of a proper decree among the codefendants after such settlement. Kent v. Chapman, 18 W. Va. 485.

Must Ascertain Amount of Liens and Their Priorities.—Where there are various judgment liens on the land of the judgment debtor, it is error to decree a sale of land without first ascertaining the amount of the liens and their priorities; and this should be done in an intelligible manner, for the reason that to decree such sale before ascertaining the amount of the several liens, and their respective priorities has a tendency to sacrifice the property, by discouraging the creditors from bidding, as they probably would, if their right to satisfaction of their debts and the order in which they were to be paid out of the property, had been previously ascertained. Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440; McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 791. See Crawford v. Wells, 23 Gratt. 835.

Ascertaining Value of Real Estate.—In a suit to subject real estate to the payment of the judgment liens thereon, it is not necessary to ascertain the value of the real estate before its sale is ordered. Grantham v. Lucas, 24 W. Va. 231.

Two Judgment Liens.—But it is wholly unnecessary to refer a cause, in which it appears that there are but two judgment liens to a commissioner to ascertain the amount and priorities of liens, where the pleadings and proof show clearly what they are. Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98.

Commissioner's Report of Lien Presumed Correct.—In a suit brought by judgment creditors against the judgment debtor and other judgment and trust creditors, to obtain satisfaction of their several judgments by a sale of the lands owned by said debtor, and the cause has been properly referred to a commissioner to ascertain and report the several liens thereon, and their respective priorities, and also to ascertain and report the lands owned by said debtor, chargeable therewith, and where such commissioner has made and returned such report and no error appears upon the face thereof, it will be presumed by the court, that the character, amounts and priorities of the several liens, as well as the lands owned by the judgment debtor chargeable therewith, are correctly set forth therein "except in so far only, as to such parts thereof, as may be objected to by proper exceptions taken thereto before the hearing" of the cause. Hutton v. Lockridge, 22 W. Va. 159.

10. WHO MAY MAINTAIN SUIT TO ENFORCE.

Judgment Creditors.—A suit to enforce the lien of a judgment, may be maintained by the judgment creditor, during the pendency of an action by attorneys to cancel satisfaction of such judgment, if it should be found to be subsisting in such latter suit; this second action should be treated as a cross bill in the first action. Higginbotham v. May, 90 Va. 233, 17 S. E. Rep. 941.

A judgment creditor has a right to come into a court of equity to enforce his judgment lien against the lands conveyed in a deed of trust prior to the obtaining of the judgment, subject to the debts secured by the trust; and after the debt secured by the trust falls due and no sale is made thereunder, the court will interfere for the benefit of judgment liens younger than the trust, and will direct a sale of the land, and not the redemption alone to satisfy the debts of both classes of creditors. Laidley v. Hinchman, 3 W. Va. 423.

Purchasers of Land.—Where there are several purchasers of land subject to a judgment lien, some may file a bill to question the lien, and if it is valid, asking that the different purchasers may be subjected to pay it. And though they ask for a ratable contribution, this will not prevent the court's subjecting the land last sold to satisfy the creditor. Michaux v. Brown, 10 Gratt. 612.

Special Receiver—Creditors' Bill—Practice.—A special receiver may bring a chancery suit to enforce the lien of a judgment against the judgment debtor's lands, for his own benefit, and that of all the other judgment creditors of the judgment debtor, or he might make other judgment creditors of the debtor defendants, in which case the court would have to audit all the judgment liens against the debtor, before it decreed a sale of the land; and if the special receiver made only the judgment debtor a defendant, and did not bring his suit as a creditors' bill, yet, where the judgment debtor alleges that he has other judgment creditors, the court will convert this suit into a creditors' bill by directing a commissioner to audit all judgment liens against the judgment debtor; but it would do the same had any other judgment creditors, by petition or otherwise, asked the court to do so. Howard v. Stephenson, 33 W. Va. 116, 10 S. E. Rep. 66.

How Suit to Be Brought.—If in a bill brought by a judgment creditor against a debtor to enforce the lien of his judgment against his lands, the creditor should fail to sue on behalf of himself and all other judgment creditors, but the court should afford to all judgment creditors an opportunity to have their judgments audited before a commissioner by directing a publication to be made, calling on them to present their judgments for auditing, the appellate court will regard this as a creditors' bill, the same as if the plaintiff in his bill had sued on behalf of himself and all other judgment creditors except those made defendants. Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 625.

11. PARTIES TO SUIT.

Judgment Creditors.—Judgment creditors are necessary parties in proceedings to subject lands, upon which there are liens, to the payment of other judgment liens. Hoffman v. Shields, 4 W. Va. 490; Snyder v. Brown, 3 W. Va. 143.

It is necessary, in a bill to enforce a judgment lien by a surety, where such surety has paid the judgment, that the original judgment creditors, whose judgment he had paid, be made parties. Hoffman v. Shields, 4 W. Va. 490; Conaway v. Odibert, 2 W. Va. 25.

A creditor, who brings suit against a debtor to enforce against his lands a judgment lien, should sue on behalf of himself and all other creditors excepting those made defendants, and he should make formally defendants in the suit all creditors who have obtained judgments in the courts of record in the county or counties in which the debtor owns lands sought to be subjected to the payment of the judgments, also all creditors who have obtained judgments in courts of records or before justices in any part of the state, and have had them docketed on the judgment lien docket of such county or counties. Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 625; Feamster v. Tyree, 21 W. Va. 83.

Convention of Judgment Creditors.—Where there are several judgment creditors whose judgments are of equal dignity with that of the plaintiff, it is proper that they should be convened in a suit by a creditor seeking to enforce his judgment; but if it appears from the pleadings and proof, that such judgment creditors are enforcing their liens or debts in another court, against the parties liable for such other debts, and that there is a large fund under control of the latter court, applicable to such judgments or debts, it is error to decree a sale of the land, on the failure of the debtor to pay the entire amount of such judgment, without taking any steps to ascertain what would remain unpaid, after the application of such fund to the liquidation of such judgments. Murdock v. Welles, 9 W. Va. 552.

Effect of Failure to Make Judgment Creditors Parties.—If all the judgment creditors are not made parties to a suit by a creditor against a debtor to enforce against his lands a judgment lien, either formally or informally, and this is disclosed in any manner by the record, the appellate court will reverse any decree ordering the sale of the land or the distribution of the proceeds of such sale. Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 625.

Judgment Creditors of Vendee.—Where a vendor of land, who has retained the title, files a bill against the widow and infant children of the vendee, for a sale of land to satisfy his debt, the judgment creditors of the vendee may make themselves parties to the cause, and have the land, subject to the vendor's lien, and the widow's dower, applied to the payment of their debts. Simmons v. Lyles, 37 Gratt. 922, and note.

Judgment Debtors.—But where a special receiver obtained judgment against two debtors in the circuit court of a county, and then brought a chancery suit in that court to enforce the lien of this judgment against the lands of one of the debtors in the county where the judgment was obtained, it was held unnecessary to make the other judgment debtor a party defendant in this chancery suit, as in it the plaintiff sought no redress against him or his property. Howard v. Stephenson, 33 W. Va. 116, 10 S. E. Rep. 66.

Lien Creditors—Trustees.—In a proceeding in chancery by a judgment creditor to subject the real estate of his debtor to the lien of his judgment it is the duty of the plaintiff to make all the lien creditors of the debtor known to him, and which are disclosed by the judgment lien docket, or the records of the court of the counties in which the lands sought to be sold are situated, parties to the suit, and where there are liens by trust deeds the trustees in such deeds must be made formal parties before any sale of the debtor's lands can be ordered, and such trustees cannot be made informal parties by publication. McMillan v. Hickman, 85 W. Va. 705, 14 S. E. Rep. 237; Bilmyer v. Sherman, 23 W. Va. 656. See also, McCoy v. Allen, 16 W. Va. 73.

Prior Liens.—Moreover, in a suit in equity, to sell land to satisfy a judgment lien, or to enforce the payment of the purchase money, if it appears that there is a prior lien for unpaid purchase money on the land, those entitled to the benefit of such prior purchase money lien, should be made parties to the suit. Dickinson v. R. Co., 7 W. Va. 300.

Trust Creditors.—So also, to a bill by a judgment creditor to enforce his lien against the subject of the trust, creditors in interest should be made parties. Laidley v. Hinchman, 8 W. Va. 423.

Trustee and Cestui Que Trust.—And, in a suit to enforce a judgment lien against lands covered by a deed of trust, both the trustee and cestui que trust are necessary parties defendant. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 448, 19 S. E. Rep. 545.

Moreover, a judgment adjudging creditors' liens on land of a debtor will not bar a holder of a debt by deed of trust, who does not prove his debt, from sharing in the proceeds of the sale under the decree, unless the trustee and cestui que trust are made formal parties thereto. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Remaindermen.—On the other hand, the remaindermen are not necessary parties to a bill to subject a life estate to the lien of a judgment. Moore v. Bruce, 35 Va. 130, 7 S. E. Rep. 195.

Assignor and Assignee.—But, the assignor and assignee of a judgment may be properly made coplaintiffs in a chancery suit to enforce the lien of the judgment on the debtor's lands. Neely v. Jones, 16 W. Va. 626.

Personal Representative of Surety.—In a chancery suit however, to enforce the lien of a judgment against a principal and sureties, where it appears that judgment has also been obtained against the personal representative of another surety for the same debt, such personal representative and sole devisee and legatee of the deceased surety are necessary parties in order that the deceased surety's part of the judgment remaining unpaid, after exhausting the realty of the principal, may be ascertained, and his estate subjected to its payment. Wytheville Ice Co. v. Frick Co., 96 Va. 141, 30 S. E. Rep. 491.

But in a suit in chancery to enforce a lien in judgment against the principal and sureties, if other judgments are proved upon which others than those before the court are also bound, it is not necessary to make such others parties. Wytheville Ice Co. v. Frick Co., 96 Va. 141, 30 S. E. Rep. 491.

Heirs of Deceased Purchaser.—Where, in a suit by a judgment creditor to subject lands in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for the vendee, and the purchaser dies pending the suit, his heirs are necessary parties. Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 44.

Creditor Holding Lien against Debtor.—A creditor holding a debt against a judgment debtor constituting a lien on his land, who is not made a formal party to a judgment adjudging creditors' liens on the land of the debtor, and who does not prove his lien in such proceeding, is thereby barred from sharing in the proceeds of the sale under the decree, except in the surplus remaining after the satisfaction of the liens decreed. The debt, as a personal debt against the debtor, is not barred by such proceeding. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Former Owner of Land.—But, a judgment adjudging creditors' liens on the land of a debtor will not bar a lien thereon created by a former owner of the land because of a failure to prove the lien, unless its owner is made a formal party to the proceeding. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Joint Obligors.—Moreover, a judgment at law being obtained against one of two obligors, in a joint and several bond, and no proceedings to enforce it appearing, a court of equity ought not to charge the lands of the other obligor, in the possession of his devisees, without having made the obligor, against whom the judgment was rendered, or his representatives, parties to the suit. Foster v. Crenshaw, 3 Munf. 514.

How Parties Interested May Come into Suit.—When a suit in equity is brought by a judgment creditor to enforce his lien against the land of his debtor, and persons claiming to be purchasers of the debtor's land complain that they were not made parties to that suit, their remedy, if they have notice of that suit, is by motion or petition to be made parties defendant thereto, and not by an independent suit to set aside the decree in the cause, upon the principal ground that the judgment therein sought to be enforced was itself void. Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 480.

Allegation in Bill to Enforce.—It is unnecessary to allege, in a chancery suit, brought by a special receiver, to enforce a judgment lien against the lands of a judgment debtor, that the suit in which the judgment on the common-law side of the court was had, or that the chancery suit brought to enforce the judgment, was brought by the receiver, by the direction of the court which appointed the receiver. Howard v. Stephenson, 33 W. Va. 116, 10 S. E. Rep. 66.

Supplemental Bill.—Where a suit is brought to enforce a judgment lien, and is revived in the name of an administrator d. b. n., who subsequently assigns the judgment to another, and the suit proceeds in the name of the administrator d. b. n., and it is charged in the answer of a defendant that a party other than the assignee of such administrator had become the owner of the judgment, and that it had been paid off and ratified therein, it becomes necessary for the assignee to file a supplemental bill, and it is error in the court to refuse to permit him to do so. List v. Pumphrey, 3 W. Va. 672.

Exhibits.—Where a judgment or decree is obtained for a debt, in a proceeding in chancery to enforce the lien of such judgment or decree against lands, ordinarily it is not necessary that a complete copy of the whole record of the case in the court in which the judgment or decree was had, should be produced or filed, but only a properly authenticated copy of such judgment or decree. In such case a copy of the judgment is an extract from the record of the cause, and not a complete copy of the whole record, and being an extract from the record, and a copy of the judgment, as entered, it may be read as evidence in the cause. Dickinson v. R. Co., 7 W. Va. 300; Sayre v. Edwards, 19 W. Va. 353; White v. Clay, 7 Leigh 68; Wynn v. Harman, 5 Gratt. 157.

Real Estate Held Jointly—Extent of Decree.—Where a suit in equity is brought by a party to enforce his judgment lien against real estate which his debtor holds jointly with another, and both of the owners of the real estate are made parties to the suit, and served with process, although no allegation is made or lien asserted against the party holding the real estate jointly with such judgment debtor, and the cause being referred to a commissioner to ascertain the liens existing against the real estate, and their priorities, who reports a judgment lien existing against the real estate belonging to the party who is not the judgment debtor mentioned in the bill, it is error to decree a sale of the entire property, and such a decree may be set aside by a bill of review filed in proper time. Calvert v. Ash (W. Va.), 85 S. E. Rep. 887.

So also, where a bill to enforce a judgment lien, filed against the judgment debtor, alleges that after the judgment was rendered, the debtor obtained an injunction against the judgment, giving Cl. and T. assurities in the injunction bond, that the injunction was dissolved and the bill dismissed, but the bill only seeks the sale of the judgment debtor's real estate, a personal decree against Cl. for a balance of the judgment, after exhausting the judgment debtor's estate would be proper but, under this bill, a decree for the sale of the real estate of Cl. would be erroneous. Sinnett v. Cralle, 4 W. Va. 600.

Time to Redeem.—It is not per se error to decree a sale of land to enforce judgment liens without giving the debtor time to redeem, as in the foreclosure of mortgages, though such practice ought not in general to be pursued, but where the debtor does not show that he has sustained any damage by the failure to do so, it is not ground for setting aside the sale. Crawford v. Weller, 28 Gratt. 835.

Resistance to Enforcement.—After a judgment has been recovered in an action at law, and a suit in equity has been pending for more than ten years to enforce the lien of the judgment, the defendant cannot prevent the enforcement of this judgment, on the ground that they did not employ counsel to defend them in the action at law, and that their appearance by counsel was false, when it appears in the record of the action at law, in which the judgment was recovered, that the defendant did appear by counsel and file pleas. Cabell v. Given, 30 W. Va. 760, 5 S. E. Rep. 442.

Only Two Judgment Creditors.—Where a suit in chancery is instituted to enforce a judgment lien and the bill alleges that there is but one other judgment lien on the real estate sought to be held liable to the satisfaction of the judgment, and sets it up also as a lien on the land, the decree should provide for the payment of both judgments, if the land is subject thereto. Anderson v. Nagle, 12 W. Va. 98.

XV. COLLATERAL IMPEACHMENT.

A. IN GENERAL.—The judgment of a court possessing competent jurisdiction in the proceeding before it and over the person against whom it is rendered, is binding and conclusive, and however irregular and erroneous it may be, yet so long as it remains unreversed, it cannot be drawn in question in a collateral proceeding, nor can any allegation be made against its validity. Pates v. St. Clair, 11 Gratt. 22; Spotts v. Com., 85 Va. 531, 8 S. E. Rep. 375; Wimblish v. Breeden, 77 Va. 324; Woodhouse v. Fillbates, 77 Va. 317; Wilson v. Smith, 22 Gratt. 493. See Shelton v. Jones, 26 Gratt. 898; Brengle v. Richardson, 78 Va. 406; Adams v. Logan, 27 Gratt. 201; Lawson v. Moorman, 85 Va. 880, 9 S. E. Rep. 150.

Limits to Judgment.—Though the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, yet it is limited in its mode of procedure and the extent and the character of its judgment; and if it transcend such limits, its judgments are void and may be so treated collaterally. Anthony v. Kasey, 83 Va. 338, 5 S. E. Rep. 176.

Want of Jurisdiction Apparent on Record.—While it is well settled that every reasonable presumption will be indulged in the support of the regularity of the proceedings, and the validity of the judgment of a court of competent general jurisdiction when both the subject-matter and the parties are within the territorial limits of the court's jurisdiction; yet, even with respect to such a court, no presumption is allowable when the want of jurisdiction affirmatively appears on the face of the proceedings. Want of jurisdiction makes such judgments null, and they may be so treated by any court in any proceedings direct or collateral. Dillard v. Cent. Va. Iron Co., 82 Va. 784, 1 S. E. Rep. 124.

Must Be Shown by Record.—The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is presumed to be right, but it will not be presumed that a question has been determined, unless it be shown by the record expressly or by necessary implication that it was in fact determined. Wynn v. Heninger, 82 Va. 172; Ferguson v. Teel, 82 Va. 690.

The validity of a judgment cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction, unless the want of jurisdiction appears upon the face of the record. Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692; Smith v. Johnson, 44 W. Va. 378, 29 S. E. Rep. 509.

But, in a collateral attack upon a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, the recital in the judgment that the defendant was duly served with notice as required by law, is conclusive of that fact, unless there is something in the record which plainly shows that the defendant did not have notice, or the character of the proceeding is such as to make it necessary that the evidence of notice should affirmatively appear in the record. Chesapeake & Western R. Co. v. Washington, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway, 99 Va. 715.

"To impeach and overturn judgments of courts of competent jurisdiction involves consequences of too much moment to be lightly regarded; and when a court of general jurisdiction has pronounced judgment, its adjudication should be as conclusive on the question whether a party was duly notified as on any other point necessary to a proper determination of the cause." Ferguson v. Teel, 82 Va. 696.

B. GROUNDS OF ATTACK.—A judgment of a court of record cannot be impeached in another action, except for want of jurisdiction in the court, or fraud in the parties or actors in it. "This is a settled doctrine of the courts. It is not merely an arbitrary rule of law, established by the courts, but it is a doctrine founded upon reason and the soundest principles of public policy. It is one which has been adopted in the interest of the peace of society and the permanent security of titles. If, after the rendition of a judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction, and after the period has elapsed when it becomes irreversible for error, another court may in another suit enquire into the irregularities or errors in such judgments, there would be no end to litigation, and no fixed established rights. A judgment, though unreversed and irreversible, would no longer be a final adjudication of the rights of litigants, but the starting point from which a new litigation would spring up; acts of limitation would become useless and nugatory; purchasers on the faith of judicial process would find no protection; every right established by a judgment would be insecure and uncertain, and a cloud would rest upon every title." Lancaster v. Wilson, 27 Gratt. 624, and note; Woodhouse v. Fillbates, 77 Va. 317; Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351; Lavell v. McCurdy, 77 Va. 763; Blanton v. Carroll, 86 Va. 539, 10 S. E. Rep. 329; Fairfax v. Alexandria, 38 Gratt. 16, and note.

Errors Not Affecting Jurisdiction.—Where a judgment or decree of a court of civil jurisdiction is offered in evidence, collaterally in another suit, its validity cannot be questioned for errors which do not affect the jurisdiction of the court. Hall v. Hall, 13 W. Va. 1; Miller v. White, 46 W. Va. 67, 23 S. E. Rep. 332; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308.

The maxim, omnia presumuntur rite esse acta, applies to sustain the judgments and decrees of a court, rather than forced presumptions to defeat them. Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 671.

"The settled rule of law is, that jurisdiction having attached in the original cause, everything done within the power of that jurisdiction, where collaterally questioned, is to be held conclusive of the right of the parties unless impeached for fraud. Every intendment is made to support the proceedings; it is regarded as if it were regular in all things, and reversible for error." Connett v. Williams, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 249, approved in Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 671.

Judgment Presumed Right.—Where the judgment of, and actions of, the court below is definite, and intelligibly presented in the record, and does not appear from the record to be wrong, it is presumed to be right, and cannot be collaterally attacked. Ramsburg v. Erb, 16 W. Va. 777; Anderson v. Doolittle, 38 W. Va. 629, 18 S. E. Rep. 724; Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323; Shelton v. Jones, 26 Gratt. 891, and note; Ferguson v. Teel, 82 Va. 600; Wright v. Smith, 81 Va. 777; Womack v. Tankersley, 78 Va. 242; Harman v. Lynchburg, 33 Gratt. 37; Shipman v. Fletcher, 91 Va. 473, 22 S. E. Rep. 456; Hill v. Woodward, 78 Va. 765; Sargeant v. Irving, 2 Va. Dec. 338, 24 S. E. Rep. 334.

"Nothing is better settled than that the judgments and decrees of a court of general jurisdiction, acting within the scope of its authority, are presumed to be right until the contrary appears, and are not open to collateral attack; and this is so even though the party against whom, or in whose favor, the judgment or decree was rendered was dead at the time. Such a judgment or decree is irrevocable in a collateral action, not because a judgment rendered without notice is good, but because the law does not permit the introduction of extrinsic evidence to overthrow that which, for reasons of public policy, it treats as an absolute verity. The record is conclusively presumed to speak the truth, and can be tried only by inspection." Pugh v. McCue, 86 Va. 475, 10 S. E. Rep. 715.

The rule was stated thus in Board v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 608: "The principle is universal, that an appellate court in reviewing the decision of the trying court, will always presume that the verdict and judgment were founded upon sufficient evidence unless the contrary is plainly made to appear. This principle is carried so far, that where there is a bill of exceptions professing to state the evidence, this presumption will still prevail, unless it can be fairly inferred that it contained all the evidence adduced at the trial. See Cooper v. Hepburn, 15 Gratt. 551."

Motion to Abate, Bill of Exceptions, etc.—Where there is in the record no motion to abate the attachment, no exception to the rulings of the court below, no bill of exceptions, no certificate of the evidence or of the facts proved, then the supreme court must presume the judgment to be right. Kenefick v. Caulfield, 88 Va. 122, 13 S. E. Rep. 348.

Want of Notice—Onus Probandi.—However assailed, unless want of authority plainly appears on the face of the record, every presumption exists in favor of the judgments of courts of general jurisdiction, and the entire record will be inspected. The same rule prevails where the defendant alleges want of summons or notice, and the onus of showing want of notice is on the impeacher. Mere failure of the record to state affirmatively that notice was given, is insufficient for the impeachment. Hill v. Woodward, 78 Va. 765; Ferguson v. Teel, 82 Va. 600.

Jurisdiction Statutory.—The rule as to the conclusiveness of an unreversed judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, applies with equal force in respect to a judgment where the jurisdiction exercised is purely statutory. Wimblish v. Breeden, 77 Va. 324; Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 671.

Judgment in Personam against Nonresident.—A personal judgment for money against a nonresident on publication, without service of process or appearance is void, is no lien on the land, and may be attacked collaterally. Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. Rep. 447. See also, Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. 351.

Judgment for Costs.—Where a court is wholly without jurisdiction to render any judgment against a party, a judgment or decree rendered by such court for costs is wholly inoperative and void in any direct or collateral suit or proceeding. Hall v. Hall, 30 W. Va. 779, 5 S. E. Rep. 260. See also, Grinnan v. Edwards, 21 W. Va. 347.

Right to Be Heard.—"It is a cardinal principle in the administration of justice, that no man can be condemned or divested of his rights until he has had the opportunity of being heard; and if judgment is rendered against him before that is done the proceeding will be as utterly void as though the court had undertaken to act where the subject-matter was not within its cognizance." Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. 419; Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 285.

Absence in Military Service.—Where process in an action of debt was served upon a defendant whilst he was in the military service of the Confederate States, and there is an office judgment confirmed whilst he is in the service, the judgment is a valid judgment, and cannot be questioned in another suit. Terry v. Dickinson, 75 Va. 475; Turnbull v. Thompson, 27 Gratt. 306.

Mere Absence of Return.—Thus, mere absence of return of service on summons is insufficient for impeachment, where the record shows that at rules the cause was matured as to all the defendants. The assailant must show want of summons. Ferguson v. Teel, 82 Va. 600.

United States Court.—A judgment rendered in a United States district court in 1880 vacating a commission of bankruptcy issued in 1801, cannot now be collaterally impeached. Harman v. Stearns, 95 Va. 58, 27 S. E. Rep. 601.

County Courts.—"The county court is a court of record, and its judgments or sentences cannot be questioned, collaterally in other actions, provided it has jurisdiction of the cause. And this is to be understood as having reference to jurisdiction over the subject-matter; for though it may be that the facts do not give jurisdiction over the particular case, yet if the jurisdiction extends over that class of cases, the judgment cannot be questioned; for then the question of jurisdiction enters into and becomes an essential part of the judgment of the court. Thus, if a county court were to give judgment of death against a white man, the sheriff would have no lawful authority to execute him; or if a court of chancery were to grant probate of a will, it would be ipso facto void, since that court has no jurisdiction in any case of probates. It is held void ipso facto because no inquiry is necessary to ascertain its invalidity. But where the court has jurisdiction of cases ejusdem generis, its judgment, in any case, is not merely void; because its invalidity cannot appear without an inquiry into the facts; an inquiry, which the court itself must be presumed to have made, and which will not therefore be permitted to be revived collaterally." Fisher v. Bassett, 9 Leigh 181. See Devaughn v. Devaughn, 19 Gratt. 556; Shelton v. Jones, 26 Gratt. 891.

Unauthorized Appearance of Attorney.—"It has been contended by eminent jurists, and many adjudicated cases have given color of authority to the proposition insisted upon by the defendant in error here, that where there has been no service of process on the defendant, and he has not personally appeared to the action or proceeding, and the record shows that the defendant 'appeared by his attorney,' in a collateral proceeding founded upon such judgment, or in a proceeding wherein the effect of such judgment properly comes in question, such defendant may in such collateral proceeding impeach such judgment by proving that he did not in fact so appear by attorney, and that the attorney who assumed authority to appear for him, had no authority to do so." Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692.

Courts of General Jurisdiction.—"If a court of general jurisdiction had jurisdiction to render the judgment which it did render, no error in its proceeding which did not affect its jurisdiction will render the proceeding void, nor can such errors be considered when the judgment is collaterally brought in question. Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 690; Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 828; Woodhouse v. Fillbates, 77 Va. 317.

Where the case is submitted to the court in lieu of a jury, upon its merits, it is presumed that the prerequisites necessary to the making of the judgment were complied with by the court, whether the record of the judgment recites the fact or not. Phelps v. Smith, 16 W. Va. 523.

The judgment of the circuit court against a high sheriff is conclusive of its jurisdiction, unless reversed on appeal, and his deputy and sureties cannot question it on the motion of the personal representative of the high sheriff against them. Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 828.

Special Statutory Court.—"Where a court of general jurisdiction acts within the scope of its general powers, its judgments will be presumed to be in accordance with its jurisdiction, and cannot be collaterally impeached. So also, when a court of general jurisdiction has conferred upon it special powers by special statute, and such special powers are exercised judicially, that is, according to the course of the common law and proceedings in chancery, such judgment cannot be impeached collaterally. Pulaski County v. Stuart, 28 Gratt. 872, and note.

But where a court of general jurisdiction has conferred upon it special and summary powers, wholly derived from statutes, and which do not belong to it as a court of general jurisdiction, and when such powers are not exercised according to the course of the common law, its action being ministerial only and not judicial, in such case its decision must be regarded and treated like those of courts of limited and special jurisdiction, and no presumption of jurisdiction will attend the judgment of the court. But in such cases the facts essential to the exercise of the special jurisdiction must appear upon the face of the record. Pulaski County v. Stuart, 28 Gratt. 872.

Degree of Proof Required.—"Mere absence of return of service on summons against husband and wife is insufficient for impeachment, where there is nothing in the record to show affirmatively that process was not served on the wife as well, and where the record shows that at rules the cause was matured as to all the defendants, the court saying, 'To impeach a judgment under such circumstances, it being a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, and the party being within its jurisdictional limits, it is not enough to raise a doubt merely; nor will it suffice that the record fails to show that notice was given, the onus lies upon the party assailing the judgment to show that it is wrong, and it is only when he satisfies the conscience of the court that the judgment is wrong, that it should be disturbed, the recognized rule being that everything must be presumed in favor of the proceedings of a court of general jurisdiction, unless there is a plain excess or want of authority.'" Ferguson v. Teel, 83 Va. 697.

Void Judgments.—"A void judgment is ex vi termini a nullity, and may be so declared and treated by this and every other court when the validity or invalidity of the judgment is a question to be determined; either in a direct or collateral proceeding." BURKS, J. Wade v. Hancock, 76 Va. 620; Lavell v. McCurdy, 77 Va. 763; Hollins v. Patterson, 6 Leigh 457; Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. Rep. 568.

"A void judgment is in legal effect no judgment. By it no rights are divested. From it no rights can be obtained. Being worthless in itself, all proceedings on it are equally worthless. It neither binds nor bars any one. All acts performed under it and all claims flowing out of it are void." Freem. Judgm. § 117; Anthony v. Kasey, 83 Va. 338, 5 S. E. Rep. 176; Wade v. Hancock, 76 Va. 626; Lavell v. Jordan, 77 Va. 763; Staunton Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 93 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 280; L. & W. R. Co. v. Taylor, 93 Va. 228, 24 S. E. Rep. 1013; Grinnan v. Edwards, 31 W. Va. 347; Neale v. Utz, 75 Va. 484.

Jurisdiction of Subject-Matter.—"The general and well-established rule of law is that when proceedings are collaterally drawn in question and it appears upon the face of them that the subject-matter was within the jurisdiction of the court, they are voidable only. The errors and irregularities of any court are to be corrected by some direct proceeding either before the same court to set them aside, or in an appellate court. Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 671; Lancaster v. Wilson, 27 Gratt. 624; Gibson v. Beckham, 16 Gratt. 831, and note.

Judge and Counsel.—"Where a judge sits in an action in which he is or has been counsel, such act renders the judgment voidable only, and not void. The proceedings are good and valid until set aside upon motion to the court in which they were had, or until reversed upon appeal or error by an appellate court. L. & N. R. Co. v. Taylor, 93 Va. 228, 24 S. E. Rep. 1013.

Judgment upon Defective Summons.—"So also, a judgment rendered upon a defective summons after general appearance of the defendant is not void. Blair v. Henderson (W. Va.), 88 S. E. Rep. 552; Brown v. Chapman, 90 Va. 174, 17 S. E. Rep. 855.

Nonresident Heirs.—A judgment or decree authorizing the sale of decedent's lands to pay his debts is erroneous, where it appears upon its face that the affidavit on which rested the order of publication against the heirs as nonresidents was defective and insufficient. Hull v. Hull, 85 W. Va. 155, 18 S. E. Rep. 49.

Process, Notice, Summons.—But, a judgment against a person who has not been served with notice is a void judgment, and is ex vi termini, a nullity. Ferguson v. Teel, 82 Va. 600; Lavell v. McCurdy, 77 Va. 703; Wade v. Hancock, 76 Va. 620.

Notice to Officers—Strict Compliance with Statute.—For example, in a proceeding to confiscate property of a person charged to be in rebellion, the directions of the attorney general are, that the method of seizure of the property shall be conformed as nearly as may be to the state law, if there be such; when therefore the proceeding is to confiscate debts due from a municipal corporation, the notice to the debtor must be upon the mayor or other officer named in the Virginia statute; and notice given to the auditor of the corporation is of no effect; and the judgment based upon such notice is null and void. Fairfax v. Alexandria, 28 Gratt. 16.

Fraud.—But, a judgment, valid on its face, cannot be impeached by other creditors except for fraud; and that cannot be done otherwise than by a direct proceeding brought to set it aside on that ground. First Nat. Bank v. Huntington, etc., Co., 41 W. Va. 530, 23 S. E. Rep. 792.

Thus, where it is sought to set aside or annul a regular judgment or decree upon the ground that it was obtained by fraud practiced by a party, or in prosecuting the suit or obtaining the judgment or decree, it is necessary, it is said, that the plea should state a case of actual fraud; and that the suit should be brought for the express purpose of impeaching the judgment or decree, otherwise it will be regarded as a collateral attack. Harrison v. Walton, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. Rep. 372.

"The rule is, however, settled that unless there is good reason to impute fraud or collusion, a judgment is conclusive of the existence and amount of the debt, and cannot be impeached collaterally either by parties or by strangers." Gentry v. Allen, 82 Gratt. 254.

Fraud and Collusion.—Where a judgment creditor files a bill against a debtor to subject his lands to the lien of his judgment, and makes a trust creditor of the same debtor who holds a deed of trust on the land a party, such trust creditor cannot question the validity of the judgment against the debtor, except upon grounds that would avoid it, between the judgment creditor and the debtor, or on the ground that there was fraud and collusion between them in procuring the judgment. Gentry v. Allen, 82 Gratt. 254.

Mistake, Surprise, Accident.—A judgment of a justice founded on a sufficient summons cannot be collaterally attacked in equity on the ground alone that the cause of action arose in another county, the place of the defendant's residence; he can only be relieved therefrom collaterally on such equitable grounds as fraud, accident, mistake, surprise, or some adventitious circumstance beyond the control of the party. The question is purely legal, and does not give equity jurisdiction to review such judgment.

Newlon v. Wade, 48 W. Va. 283, 27 S. E. Rep. 244. See Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. Rep. 807. See infra, this note, title, "Equitable Relief against Judgments."

Unwarranted Reservation.—Thus, a judgment reserving from sale a sawmill on certain land, though there is nothing on the record to warrant the reservation, is not void, but voidable only by appeal, and cannot be collaterally attacked. First Nat. Bank v. Hyer, 46 W. Va. 13, 32 S. E. Rep. 1000.

Coverture.—On the other hand, a judgment rendered by a court of common law against a married woman, either in her own name or in the name of the company, under which she does business, upon a contract made during coverture, is absolutely void, and an execution or suggestion sued out upon such judgment is invalid and ineffectual for any purpose. Such judgment may be assailed collaterally in proceedings upon a suggestion thereon. White v. Foote Lumber & Mfg. Co., 29 W. Va. 385, 1 S. E. Rep. 572.

Infancy.—It is well settled, as a general rule, that an infant is as much bound by a decree against him as a person of full age. The law recognizes no distinction between a decree against an infant and a decree against an adult. Therefore an infant can impeach a judgment or decree only upon such grounds as would invalidate it in the case of another person, such as fraud, collusion, or error. Harrison v. Walton, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. Rep. 372; Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 688; Zirkle v. McCue, 26 Gratt. 517; 1 Min. Inst. (8d Ed.) 507, 508.

Thus the judgment of the board of commissioners, under the land law, is conclusive and cannot be impeached, notwithstanding the plaintiff was an infant at the time the judgment was given. Stephens v. Cobun, 2 Call 440.

Death.—When there is a joint action against two or more persons, all of whom are served with process, and one dies before judgment, and his death is not suggested on the record, and there is a judgment rendered against all the defendants, such judgment cannot be collaterally attacked. King v. Burdett, 28 W. Va. 601; Watt v. Brookover, 85 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. Rep. 1007, 29 Am. St. Rep. 811; McMillan v. Hickman, 85 W. Va. 705, 14 S. E. Rep. 227; Evans v. Spurgin, 6 Gratt. 107.

Commonwealth's Lien.—Where a bond given to the commonwealth to secure the purchase money of land bought at a sheriff's sale is on default returned to the circuit court from whence the venditioni exponas issued, whereby it acquired the force of a judgment against the principal and sureties, under Va. Code 1873, ch. 40, § 16, the lien of the commonwealth so acquired cannot be collaterally impeached in a suit brought by the trustee of one of the sureties, claiming a homestead under an earlier purchase of the land, to audit the liens of the latter's creditors, in which suit the commonwealth becomes a party. Spotts v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 581, 8 S. E. Rep. 375.

C. WHO MAY IMPEACH.

Strangers.—All strangers are not entitled to impeach a judgment; it is only those strangers who, if the judgment were given full credit and effect, would be prejudiced in regard to some pre-existing right, that are permitted to impeach the judgment. Wilcher v. Robertson, 78 Va. 603; Cecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 659, 30 S. E. Rep. 216.

State.—Where a proceeding is instituted by a commissioner of school lands in a circuit court of a county to sell land forfeited for nonentry in that county, and there is a redemption under it, and the land declared exonerated from forfeiture, and it turns out that no part of the land is in the county of the court rendering the judgment, yet the state cannot, in a collateral proceeding, deny the validity of the judgment or redemption, for want of jurisdiction in the court. Cecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 659, 80 S. E. Rep. 216.

Third Persons.—Though a judgment cannot be collaterally attacked by one of the parties thereto; a third person, whose rights are affected thereby, is not thus precluded. Perpetual B. & L. Co. v. Haden, 92 Va. 201, 23 S. E. Rep. 285.

"The learned judge of the chancery court has declared that neither the judgment nor the substitution of other securities will prevent a court of equity, where a deed is sought to be impeached as voluntary, from looking to the original cause of action in order to ascertain whether it was a subsisting debt contracted at the time the deed was made. The correctness of that proposition will not be controverted; but where the rights of third persons have intervened, as in the case of a settlement upon a wife and children, it is certainly competent for them to show that not only the judgment, but the debt upon which it is founded, has been satisfied and discharged by the substitution of a new security." Morriss v. Harveys, 75 Va. 726.

XVI. CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENTS.

It is a well-established doctrine, that the unreversed judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive, and cannot be collaterally attacked. Hill v. Woodward, 78 Va. 765; Wimblish v. Breeden, 77 Va. 324; Woodhouse v. Fillbates, 77 Va. 317; Fox v. Cottage Association, 81 Va. 677; Wilson v. Smith, 22 Gratt. 493; Howison v. Weeden, 77 Va. 710; Cottom v. Cottom, 4 Rand. 192.

Jurisdiction of Subject-Matter, Parties.—Jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties is essential to the conclusiveness of judgments or decrees. A court may rightfully obtain jurisdiction, and its decrees may be void, because, in the progress of the cause, it has exceeded its jurisdiction. In such case the decrees may be attacked directly or collaterally. Seamster v. Blackstock, 83 Va. 232, 2 S. E. Rep. 36.

"Golden Rule."—The general rule is that verdicts and judgments bind conclusively, parties and privies; because privies in blood in estate, and in law, claim under the person against whom the judgment is rendered; and they, claiming his rights are, of course, bound as he is. But, as to all others, they are not conclusively binding, because, it is unjust to bind a party by any proceeding, in which he has had no opportunity of making a defence, of offering evidence, of cross-examining witnesses, or of appealing if he was dissatisfied with the judgment; and this is called by the court, in Bourke v. Granberry, Gilmer 25, "a golden rule." Munford v. Overseers of the Poor, 2 Rand. 313.

Judgment against Principal—Sureties.—But a judgment against a principal in a bond, is not conclusive evidence against his sureties. Munford v. Overseers of the Poor, 2 Rand. 313.

It was said by JUDGE GREEN in Munford v. Overseers of the Poor, 2 Rand. 313, that, "the question, how far sureties are bound by a judgment, or other evidence against their principal, which estops or concludes him, has never as far as I am informed, been settled in this court, except in the case of Baker v. Preston, Gilmer's Rep. p. 235, decided in the special court."

The books kept by the treasurer are conclusive evidence of the balance actually in the treasury at any given time, both against the treasurer, and his sureties, without being pleaded as an estoppel, so as to charge them with balances carried forward from year to year, as if those balances were actually on hand. "These books thus conclusive against the treasurer, are also conclusive against his sureties. If a judgment against him is to bind them, so also is the evidence on which that judgment is rendered." Baker v. Preston, Gilmer 235.

The admissions of partners are not evidence against each other after the dissolution, though both are bound, and both were conjunct and principals in the partnership transactions. Skelton v. Cocke, 8 Munf. 191; Rootes v. Wellford, 4 Munf. 215.

JUDGE GREEN in Munford v. Overseers of the Poor, 2 Rand. 313, said that these decisions seem to have a strong bearing on the question how far a judgment against a principal is conclusive against his surety.

But it has been held in an action by an execution creditor against the high sheriff for the failure of his deputy to pay over money made on the execution, where the deputy is present at the trial and examined as a witness, but there is verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, that in the subsequent action by the high sheriff against the deputy and his sureties, on their bond with condition to indemnify the high sheriff from all loss and damages for the conduct of the deputy in the office, the judgment against the high sheriff, in the absence of fraud and collusion, is conclusive evidence of the default of the deputy against not only the deputy, but also his surety, even though the declaration in the action by the high sheriff does not allege that the deputy was requested to defend the suit against the high sheriff or had an opportunity of doing so, or had notice thereto, but his presence at the trial and act of defence of the action may be proved by the oral testimony. Crawford v. Turk, 24 Gratt. 176, and note. In this case the court distinguished and explained the cases of Munford v. Overseers, 2 Rand. 313; Jacobs v. Hill, 2 Leigh 308; Baker v. Preston, Gilmer 235; Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323.

Foreign Court of Admiralty.—The judgment of a foreign court of admiralty is not conclusive that the property and owners are enemies, in a suit between the underwriters and insured. Bourke v. Granberry, Gilmer 16.

Where the issue in a cause is one of law and fact namely, whether a judgment pleaded by the defendant as a set-off was assigned to him with the fraudulent intent of depriving the plaintiff of his legal right to exemptions and a second trial is had in a justice's court upon this issue, and judgment rendered, such judgment, rendered in the second trial, is final and irreversible, and conclusive between the parties thereto as to all matters involved in that controversy, and under art. 8, sec. 18 of the Constitution of West Virginia. The facts involved in this issue, having been tried by a jury, cannot be otherwise re-examined than according to the rules at common law, and under sec. 91, ch. 50 of Va. Code, no new trial can be had in a court of equity. Ensign Mfg. Co. v. McGinnis, 30 W. Va. 532, 4 S. E. Rep. 788.

Legally Authenticated Record.—A record legally authenticated, of the proceedings of a court of competent authority, in any other of the United States, is conclusive evidence in the courts of Virginia, to show that a judgment was rendered, and that the party was compellable to pay the amount recovered against him; but it may be opposed by proof of fraud or collusion, or of subsequent payments or discounts. Buford v. Buford, 4 Munf. 241.

Suit to Enforce Judgment Lien.—In a suit in equity to enforce a judgment lien against the real estate of the judgment debtor, the judgment, as between the judgment creditor and other judgment creditors, is conclusive of the justness and amount of the debt. First Nat. Bank v. Huntington Distilling Co., 41 W. Va. 530, 23 S. E. Rep. 792.

Conclusiveness as to Strangers.—Moreover, a judgment for a debt is conclusive, not only between the parties, but also as to strangers, to establish the amount and existence of the debt, and strangers can attack it only for fraud or collusion. Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078.

Judgment Prima Facie Evidence.—Where a creditor, who claims under a judgment at law, comes into equity to enforce his judgment, that judgment is prima facie evidence against the debtor, or mere strangers; unless they can impeach it on the ground of fraud, or by showing that a full defence was not made, and can produce new proof showing that the debt is not due. Garland v. Rives, 4 Rand. 282; Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. Rep. 1078; Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. 384.

XVII. ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

A. GROUNDS OF ARREST.

Errors Apparent on Face of Record.—It seems to be a well-established rule of law that a motion in arrest of judgment lies only to correct an error that is apparent on the face of the record. Gray's Case, 92 Va. 772, 22 S. E. Rep. 858; Hall's Case, 80 Va. 555; Watts' Case, 4 Leigh 672; Stephen's Case, 4 Leigh 679; Hughes v. Frum, 41 W. Va. 445, 23 S. E. Rep. 604; Gerling v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 39 W. Va. 689, 20 S. E. Rep. 691; State v. Martin, 38 W. Va. 568, 18 S. E. Rep. 748; Com. v. Linton, 2 Va. Cas. 476.

Defect in Pleading—Joinder of Parties.—When a person, who ought to join as plaintiff, is omitted, and the objection appears upon the pleadings, the defendant may demur, move in arrest of judgment, or bring a writ of error. Prunty v. Mitchell, 76 Va. 169.

Declaration Sufficient.—But where the declaration sufficiently sets forth a good cause of action, and there is no objection to the form or sufficiency of the verdict, a motion in arrest of judgment will be overruled. Travis v. Ins. Co., 28 W. Va. 584.

Defective Declaration.—Likewise, it is not error sufficient in arrest of judgment, in an action of assumpsit in a superior court of a county, that the declaration lays the venue in a different county and omits to state that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the court. Buster v. Ruffner, 5 Munf. 27.

Profert.—Nor will judgment be arrested for omission to make profert of a bill. Terrell v. Atkinson, 2 Wash. 143.

No Offence Charged.—On the other hand where an information is filed on a defective presentment, but the defendant pleads to the information and there is a verdict against him, he can arrest the judgment because the presentment charged no offence. Com. v. Chalmers, 2 Va. Cas. 76.

Improperly Receiving Juror.—Thus, a motion in arrest of judgment does not lie to correct an error in improperly receiving a juror, where the impropriety, if any, is only shown by a bill of exceptions. Gray's Case, 92 Va. 772, 22 S. E. Rep. 858.

Petty Juror Not a Freeholder.—Nor is it a good reason for arresting a judgment, on a motion in arrest, that several of the petty jury were not freeholders, when this is a matter of fact not appearing on the record. Stephen's Case, 4 Leigh 679.

Juror Pardoned.—So, a motion for arrest of judgment does not lie because a juror, convicted of a felony, had been pardoned in 1868. Puryear v. Com., 83 Va. 51, 1 S. E. Rep. 512; Edwards' Case, 78 Va. 43.

Consideration for Assignment.—But judgment may be arrested, if, in assumpsit against the assignor of a bond, a consideration for the assignment is not set forth in a declaration. Hall v. Smith, 8 Munf. 550.

Statutory Elements Apparent.—Likewise, omission to direct a new venire facias or omission of any statutory essential apparent on the record, is such an error as may be taken advantage of after verdict by motion in arrest of judgment. Hall v. Com., 80 Va. 555.

Action in Requiring Bill of Particulars.—On the other hand, motion in arrest of judgment is not the proper method of raising the question as to the propriety of the court's action in requiring the defendants in ejectment to file the particulars of their defence; the question should be raised by a bill of exceptions. Va. & Tenn. Coal & Iron Co. v. Fields, 94 Va. 102, 26 S. E. Rep. 426.

Failure to Set Forth Award.—A judgment in favor of a plaintiff, ought to be arrested after verdict, where he neglects to set forth the award in his declaration, and reply generally, in debt on bond with condition to perform an award, to be made by certain arbitrators, and aver a breach of the condition by special replication, the conditions being made a part of the record by oyer, and the defendant having pleaded "conditions performed." Green v. Bailey, 5 Munf. 246.

Variance.—However, where a party fails to take advantage in due time of a variance between the presentment of the grand jury and the indictment, a judgment thereon cannot be reversed by the appellate court. Wells v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 333; Com. v. Jones, 2 Gratt. 555; Com. v. Chalmers, 2 Va. Cas. 76.

Objection to Jurisdiction—Nonresidence.—For example, nonresidence is not a ground for arresting a judgment; if it is good ground for objection to the jurisdiction of the court, it must be taken by plea in abatement before the defendant pleads in bar. Washington & New Orleans Telegraph Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. 122. See Va. Code, ch. 171, § 19, p. 648.

Jurisdiction over Felonies.—But if upon an indictment for a felony the prisoner is tried and found guilty in the county or corporation court having no jurisdiction to try the prisoner, the verdict should be arrested, and all proceedings subsequent to the indictment should be quashed. Rider v. Com., 16 Gratt. 499.

After a verdict convicting a prisoner of a felony, a plea in arrest of judgment, that he has not been examined for the offence by a court of competent jurisdiction (alleging that the corporation court, by which he was examined, has no criminal jurisdiction), ought to be overruled; because the said plea suggests matter making no part of the record, but matter which, if true, is proper for a plea in abatement, or for a motion to quash the indictment. Com. v. Cohen, 2 Va. Cas. 158.

Verdict Uncertain and Defective.—But, judgment against a prisoner tried for a felony will be arrested, where the verdict against him is too uncertain and defective to authorize a judgment thereon. Com. v. Hatton, 3 Gratt. 623.

Defective Service of Writ.—So also, if by direction of the plaintiff, the writ be served on one only of two partners in trade, when the declaration shows that the plaintiff knew the names of both, and he gets a verdict upon the plea of nonassumpsit, pleaded by the partner, on whom the writ was served, judgment ought to be arrested. Shields v. Oney, 5 Munf. 550.

Errors of Committing Magistrate.—On the other hand, judgment will not be arrested because of errors in the examination before the committing magistrate, or because he was not examined for the felony of which he is indicted, for such objection comes too late after verdict. Morris v. Com., 9 Leigh 636; Angel v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 281.

Statute of Limitations.—But after verdict for the plaintiff, on the plea of nil debet, it is no ground for arresting the judgment, that the claim, as shown by the declaration, was barred by act of limitations. Murdock v. Herndon, 4 Hen. & M. 200.

Informal Errors.—Where the clerk, in arraigning the prisoner, erroneously states to the jury the maximum punishment for the offence, but the jury fix the maximum punishment, showing that they were not misled by the error of the clerk, such error is not sufficient to set aside or arrest the judgment. Mitchell v. Com., 75 Va. 856. See also, Burgess v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 488.

Arrest of Judgment, New Trial—Order of Consideration.—Where a motion in arrest of judgment and a motion for a new trial are made at the same time, and are acted upon by the court at the same time, the order in which they may be considered by the court is not material, as under such circumstances the motion in arrest of judgment cannot be regarded as a waiver of objection to its verdict, or as an admission that the verdict is unobjectionable. Gerling v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 39 W. Va. 689, 20 S. E. Rep. 691. See also, Sweeney v. Baker, 18 W. Va. 158.

Court May Arrest Ex Mero Motu.—Where the indictment and the verdict are fatally defective, a judgment may be reversed by the appellate court, though no motion in arrest of judgment was made in the court below. Randall v. Com., 24 Gratt. 644; Old v. Com., 18 Gratt. 915.

Anything which is good cause for arresting a judgment, is good cause for reversing it, though no motion in arrest is made. Matthews v. Com., 18 Gratt. 989. See also, Randall v. Com., 24 Gratt. 644.

Effect of Arrest—Discharge of Prisoner.—Where the court, at a trial for murder, overrules a motion in arrest of judgment, but sets aside the verdict the next day ex mero motu, the defendant is not entitled to discharge on the ground that his motion in arrest of judgment has been allowed. Curtis v. Com., 87 Va. 589, 13 S. E. Rep. 73.

Time for Motion.

File Errors at Next Term.—It seems, that the party, to whom a new trial is granted, may, at the next term, without claiming such trial, file errors in arrest of judgment. Hall v. Smith, 3 Munf. 550.

Delay until after Verdict.—Where the objection to sending to the jury an indictment endorsed with verdict of guilty found at a first trial is delayed until after verdict, such error, if any, cannot be remedied by motion in arrest of judgment. Forbes v. Com., 90 Va. 550, 19 S. E. Rep. 164; Angel v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 281.

Where the administrator of a defendant in detinue, who dies pending the action, consents that the cause shall stand revived against him, and instead of pleading de novo, goes to trial upon the plea put in by his intestate, he cannot, after verdict against him, arrest the judgment because of his own failure to plead anew. Greenlee v. Bailey, 9 Leigh 526.

Other Errors after Verdict.—Judgment cannot be arrested, after verdict against a defendant, because the presentment does not state whether the witnesses on whose evidence it was found, were called by the grand jury, or sent to them by the court, or because the name of the prosecutor was not written at the foot of the information. Com. v. Chalmers, 2 Va. Cas. 76.

Practice.—The appellate court, upon overruling a motion in arrest of judgment, will not send the case back for a decision upon the motion for a new trial, but will proceed to give final judgment for the plaintiff. Sims v. Alderson, 8 Leigh 479.

XVIII. SATISFACTION.

A. PAYMENT TO WHOM.

Attorneys.—The payment of a judgment or decree to an attorney of record, who obtained it, before his authority is revoked, and due notice of such revocation given to the defendant, is valid and binding on the plaintiff, so far as the defendant is concerned, and his receipt will discharge the judgment. Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539; Yoakum v. Tilden, 3 W. Va. 167; Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call 147.

Cancellation of Satisfaction by Attorney.—The attorney who obtains a judgment may maintain an action to cancel an indorsement of satisfaction of the judgment, made by them, on the ground that the satisfaction was procured by fraud or mistake. Higginbotham v. May, 90 Va. 233, 17 S. E. Rep. 941. See monographic note on "Attorney and Client" appended to Johnson v. Gibbons, 27 Gratt. 632.

Deposit in Branch Bank.—Where the judgment debtor of a bank deposited money with the branch subject to his own check, and the money was lost by the bank's failure, it was held that the deposit did not discharge the judgment. Spilman v. Payne, 84 Va. 435, 4 S. E. Rep. 749.

Payment to Sheriff after Return Day of Writ.—A payment to sheriff in discharge of an execution, after the return day of the execution is passed, is not binding on the creditor. Chapman v. Harrison, 4 Rand. 386.

Payment to Clerk—Acceptance.—Where a judgment debtor, who is absent in the army, sends confederate money to his son to pay the judgment, and the payment is made to the clerk, who deposits the money in the bank, with an "ear-mark," and subsequently the judgment debtor and his son see the judgment creditor and tell him of this payment, but the latter does not accept in so many terms, such payment to the clerk does not discharge the judgment. Moore v. Tate, 23 Gratt. 351.

B. MEDIUM OF—PAYMENT.

Money.—The payment of the judgment or decree to an attorney of record must be a payment of money, or if not a payment of money, it must be accepted by the plaintiff in lieu of money, or the attorney must have special authority to receive it. Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539; Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh 277.

Confederate Money.—The payment of confederate states treasury notes made to an attorney, without the authority of the plaintiff to receive them, was held not a payment in money that would satisfy a judgment or decree against the defendant. Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539.

Bond.—An attorney at law has no power to receive in satisfaction of his client's judgments a bond from the judgment debtor. Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. 689.

Substituted Note.—When the parties provided for the extinguishment of the judgment it may be fairly presumed they contemplate the extinguishment of the debt upon which it is founded. If the substituted note is accepted in satisfaction of the judgment the presumption is, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that it was accepted in satisfaction of the debt represented by the judgment. Morris v. Harveys, 75 Va. 726.

Faulty Forthcoming Bond.—A faulty forthcoming bond, whilst in force, is a satisfaction of the judgment, and a second execution cannot issue until it is quashed. Downman v. Chinn, 2 Wash. 189; Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757.

Forfeited Forthcoming Bond.—But where judgment is obtained against a principal and surety to a bond, and the latter gives a forthcoming bond, which is forfeited, the original judgment is not thereby satisfied, although any further proceedings on it will be barred, until the forthcoming bond shall be quashed. Randolph v. Randolph, 3 Rand. 490; Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757.

Fi Fa. Returned "No Property."—Where a fi. fa. issued on a judgment based on a forthcoming bond has been returned "no property," equity will regard the bond as a nullity, and the original judgment as in full force. Cooper v. Daugherty, 85 Va. 343, 7 S. E. Rep. 387. The court in this case said: "And in Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 744, it is said by this court: 'When the obligors in a forthcoming bond, which has been forfeited and returned, though solvent when the bond was taken, become insolvent afterwards, the plaintiff may have the bond quashed, and be restored to his original judgment. And though the bond be not quashed, a court of equity will regard it as a nullity, and the original judgment in full force.' Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 211-12; Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. 432; Robinson v. Sherman, 2 Gratt. 178; Garland v. Lynch, 1 Rob. 545; Powell v. White, 11 Leigh 309."

Satisfaction by Set-Off.—The practice of setting off judgments is indicated in 2 Freem. Judgm. § 407, where it is said: "The satisfaction of a judgment may be wholly or partly produced by compelling the judgment creditor to accept in payment a judgment against him in favor of the judgment debtor, or, in other words, by setting off one judgment against another. This is usually brought about by a motion in behalf of the party who desires to have his judgment credited upon, or set off against, a judgment against him. The court in a proper case, will grant the motion. Its power to do this cannot be traced to any particular statute, and exists only in virtue of its general equitable authority over its officers and suitors." See Zinn v. Dawson (W. Va.), 34 S. E. Rep. 784.

In West Virginia, opposite demands arising out of judgments or decrees between the same parties in the right may be set off against each other when it is equitable to do so and when the interests of third parties are not involved, but the court is not bound to set off such judgments in all cases, but in the same exercise of its discretion even when the set-off might be legally made, will not allow the set-off if it clearly appears that injustice will be done thereby. A party entitled to such set-off, having subject to his control a special fund primarily applicable to the satisfaction of the judgment, will not be permitted to avail himself of his right to set off against the assignee of such opposite judgment or decree until such special fund is exhausted, and then only for any unsatisfied balance of his demand. Payne v. Webb, 29 W. Va. 627, 2 S. E. Rep. 330, following Nuzum v. Morris, 25 W. Va. 559.

Judgment Annulled on Appeal.—A debtor cannot set off a judgment which has been annulled on appeal. Magarity v. Succop, 90 Va. 561, 19 S. E. Rep. 200. See Shipman v. Fletcher, 83 Va. 349, 2 S. E. Rep. 198.

Allowance of Set-Off Inequitable.—Where a suit in chancery was pending to subject land to the payment of liens charged thereon, and a decree of sale, and a decree confirmed in the sale were on petition of the debtor reversed in the appellate court and the judgment there entered for the debtor against the first lien creditors, for the costs in the appellate court, which judgment the creditor assigned to his attorney in part payment of his attorney's fee and the cause was remanded, and it appeared that the property was sufficient to pay the first lien, and the court refused to allow the assignee and attorney to be paid out of the fund, but set off the judgment for costs against a part of the judgment against the assignor, it was held, that under the circumstances, the allowance of the set-off was inequitable, and should not have been made; but a decree should have been entered for the whole amount of the plaintiff's claim against the debtor, and then the decree should have required the creditor, out of the money realized, to pay the assignee and attorney the amount of his claim. Payne v. Webb, 29 W. Va. 627, 2 S. E. Rep. 330.

Payments on Reversed Judgment.—If payments have been made on a judgment which has been reversed, they should be credited on the debt on which the judgment was rendered. Effinger v. Kenney, 92 Va. 245, 23 S. E. Rep. 742.

Voluntary Payment—Subrogation.—The voluntary payment of a debt by judgment constituting a lien on land, does not entitle the party paying it, to be substituted to the lien of the judgment creditor, the benefit of the doctrine of subrogation being extended by courts of equity only to those who are bound by law to pay debts or liens, as sureties or otherwise, or are compelled to pay in order to protect their own rights. Janney v. Stephen, 2 Pat. & H. 11.

Promise to Pay—Consideration.—A creditor's forbearance to enforce a judgment against land on which it was a lien is a sufficient consideration for a promise by a subsequent purchaser of the land to pay it, although the landowner was not previously liable for the judgment. Bradshaw v. Bratton, 96 Va. 577, 32 S. E. Rep. 56.

It was held in Rowe v. Hardy, 97 Va. 674, 34 S. E. Rep. 625, that payments made in 1885 on a judgment rendered in 1869, admit that the judgment had not been discharged.

Effect of Releasing Principal.—A recovered judgment against B and C, his surety, and issued execution, which was levied on the property of B. A, on receiving a part payment of the judgment, gave B further time for the payment of the balance, and ordered the property to be released to B. It was held that in consequence the judgment was discharged at law, and the surety, not having assented to, or acquiesced in the agreement, was discharged in equity, and could have an injunction against a second execution. Baird v. Rice, 1 Call 18, 1 Am. Dec. 497.

C. PROOF OF PAYMENT.

Presumption of Payment from Lapse of Time.—Presumption of payment of a judgment cannot arise from lapse of time less than the period of limitation. James v. Life, 92 Va. 702, 24 S. E. Rep. 275. See monographic note on "Laches" appended to Peers v. Barnett, 12 Gratt. 410.

Legal and Natural Presumption.—Upon a scire facias to revive a judgment which had been suspended by an injunction for forty-six years, issue was made up on the plea of payment and upon the trial the court instructed the jury, that the pendency of the injunction cause repelled the legal presumption of payment which would have arisen from lapse of time if the injunction had not been pending, and it was held that such instruction was proper, and it was not necessary to distinguish to the jury between legal presumption and natural presumption arising from lapse of time. Hutsonpiller v. Stover, 12 Gratt. 579.

Lapse of Twenty-Three Years.—It was held in Brown v. Campbell, 88 Gratt. 402, that under the circumstances of the case, the proof is sufficient to establish the payment of a debt on which judgment had been rendered and execution issued twenty-three years before the filing of a bill to enforce the payment of the judgment. See also, Cox v. Carr, 79 Va. 28.

Insufficient Proof of Payment.—Where a defendant testified that he had satisfied a judgment filed in a creditors' suit, with a debt due him from the plaintiff, who swore the contrary, and showed by receipts how he had paid the debt, and that at the time of the alleged satisfaction the judgment had been assigned as collateral to a third party, by whom it was subsequently reassigned, it was held that a confirmation of a commissioner's report, showing the judgment unpaid, was proper. Barrett v. Wilkinson, 87 Va. 442, 12 S. E. Rep. 885.

Indorsement on an Execution.—It was held in Saunders v. Prunty, 89 Va. 921, 17 S. E. Rep. 231, where an execution issued on a judgment was indorsed levied, April 14, 1861, on a negro named Wyatt, and was returnable on the first Monday in May following, that there was no prima facie presumption that the judgment was satisfied by such levy as the stay law was passed on the 30th of April, 1861, which fully accounts for no sale having been made, and a succession of stay laws prevented the sale of the slave, until the property was destroyed by emancipation. See also, Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Gratt. 211; Hamilton v. McConkey, 83 Va. 533, 5 S. E. Rep. 724.

Misrepresentation or Fraud.—A charge that a confession of judgment was obtained by fraudulently representing that the lien on the defendant's land, for which lien the judgment was confessed, was still in force, when in fact, it was at the time barred by the statute of limitations, of which the defendant was ignorant, is not sustained when it appears that, while the lien was in force, the defendant, for a valuable consideration, gave the plaintiff a promise in writing to pay the lien, for this he might have been compelled to do. Bradshaw v. Bratton, 96 Va. 577, 32 S. E. Rep. 56.

Arrest on Ca. Sa.—If a debtor be arrested on a ca. sa. and discharged by order of the creditor or his agent, no other execution can be had on the same judgment or decree. Windrum v. Parker, 2 Leigh 361.

But the taking in execution the bond of one of two joint obligors is no satisfaction of the debt, and does not bar an action against the other obligor. Atwell v. Towles, 1 Munf. 175.

But a judgment or decree authorizing the sale of decedent's lands to pay his debts, but not declaring upon its face what particular debts are to be paid, or fixing their order or priority, is erroneous, and will not support a sale thereunder. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 18 S. E. Rep. 49.

Decree of Sale to Satisfy Judgment.—It is a settled practice in Virginia, to entertain the suit of the judgment creditor for relief in equity, when the debtor has, subsequent to the judgments, conveyed his land in trust for the payment of debts, or on other trusts authorizing the sale of land. And in such case, the court will decree a sale to satisfy the judgment. Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 44.

XIX. FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

While the judgment of a competent court of any state that has jurisdiction over the person or subject-matter is conclusive upon the merits of the controversy in every state, a court of another state has not the power, without service of process or voluntary appearance, to render a judgment on a contract, which is absolutely void, under the statute of the state where it is made. Stewart v. Northern Assur. Co., 45 W. Va. 734, 23 S. E. Rep. 218.

"Jurisdiction of the cause and parties is essential to the conclusiveness of the judgment or decree. To acquire jurisdiction of the defendant, it is necessary that in some appropriate way he be notified of the pendency of the suit. If upon inspection of the record, it appears that no such notice had been given, the judgment or decree is void. On the other hand, if it be a judgment or decree of a domestic court of general jurisdiction, and the record declares that notice has been given, such declaration cannot be contradicted by extraneous proof. * * * The record is conclusively presumed to speak the truth, and can be tried only by inspection. * * * And especially is this so in respect to decrees under which sales are made to bona fide purchasers." Wilcher v. Robertson, 78 Va. 602.

In order that the judgment of one state may have in another the effect provided for by the Constitution of the United States, art. 4, § 1, and the act of congress made in May 26, 1790, the court in which the judgment was rendered must have had jurisdiction of the case when it pronounced the judgment. Bowler v. Huston, 30 Gratt. 266.

Presumption as to Jurisdiction.—If the court of another state, which rendered a judgment sought to be enforced in the home state, is a court of general jurisdiction, the presumption is that it had jurisdiction of the particular case, and to render the judgment void, this presumption must be overcome by proof. Gilchrist v. W. Va. O. & O. L. Co., 21 W. Va. 115; Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167.

Inquiry as to Jurisdiction.—Where the judgment of a sister state is sought to be enforced in the home courts, the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment may be inquired into, and if it appear that the court had not jurisdiction, the judgment will be void. Crumlish v. Cent. Imp. Co., 38 W. Va. 390, 18 S. E. Rep. 456; Gilchrist v. W. Va. O. & O. L. Co., 21 W. Va. 115; Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167.

Where a court of law in the state of Maryland, having jurisdiction of the subject and person of the citizen, renders judgment in the cause, therein pending against such citizen, for money, the validity of such judgment, rendered by such court, cannot be questioned in the courts of West Virginia; nor will the courts of that state look into the transaction upon which the Maryland judgment is founded, in order to ascertain if that judgment ought not to have been rendered by that court. But while this is true generally, a judgment of the court of law rendered in West Virginia based upon a judgment of the court of law of Maryland, may be inquired into for equitable causes and equities, and, if not for all, for most of the causes, which would authorize an injunction in equity to a judgment of a court of law of West Virginia. Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 780.

Judgment having been obtained in Louisiana against executors, and only partially satisfied by them, it is competent to pursue the assets in the hands of heirs and legatees in Virginia, and the Virginia court will only look at the Louisiana judgment, and not go behind it into the merits of the case. DeEnde v. Wilkinson, 2 Pat. & H. 663.

Partners Not Served with Process.—A judgment rendered in another state, against all the former members of a dissolved partnership, will not personally bind one of the partners who was not served with process and did not appear, although by the law of that state such judgment is enforceable against the joint partners; and in an action on such judgment in Virginia, such partner may show that he was not served and did not appear, although the record states that he was summoned and appeared. Bowler v. Huston, 30 Gratt. 266.

The following language was used by TUCKER, P., in delivering the opinion of the court in Wilson v. Bank of Mt. Pleasant, 6 Leigh 574: "It seems to be agreed, on all hands, that the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgments of the respective states, is to be taken with the qualification that where the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter or the person, or where the defendant has no notice of the suit, or was never served with process and never appeared to the action, the judgment will be esteemed of no validity."

"It is not a question of state policy, whether we will or will not give effect to the judgments of courts of competent jurisdiction of other states. It is a question, whether he will in good faith live up to the constitutional obligations, which we have assumed." Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167.

Illustration.—Where the plaintiff's intestate is killed, through the defendant's negligence, in West Virginia, and the plaintiff institutes his action in Virginia to recover damages therefor where the defendant is found, a judgment of the Virginia court would be a bar to an action by an administrator appointed in West Virginia, brought in that state against the defendant, the rights of the parties being determinable by the laws of that state, which do not provide that suit shall be brought only by a personal representative appointed there. Nelson v. C. & O. R. Co., 88 Va. 971, 14 S. E. Rep. 838.

A. JUDGMENTS OF SISTER STATES.—It is well settled that the judgment of a sister state must be accorded in the home state the same faith and credit which it has in the state where rendered. Wells-Stone Mercantile Co. v. Truax, 44 W. Va. 531, 29 S. E. Rep. 1006; Crumlish v. Imp. Co., 38 W. Va. 390, 18 S. E. Rep. 456; Gilchrist v. W. Va. O. & O. L. Co., 31 W. Va. 115; Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167.

But a judgment in a court of a sister state, without service of process in any manner, and without appearance, is void in the home state. Crumlish v. Cent. Imp. Co., 38 W. Va. 390, 18 S. E. Rep. 456.

Judgments of Sister States Are Domestic Judgments.

—Under the provision of the Constitution of the United States, art. 4, § 1, judgments of another state of the Union, are not to be regarded in Virginia as foreign judgments, but have the same effect as judgments of our own courts. Clarke v. Day, 2 Leigh 172.

"In American state courts, the unbroken current of decision has been that foreign judgments, as contradistinguished from the judgments of the courts of a sister state, are not conclusive." PARKER, J. Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh 637.

"It seems beyond controversy that the validity of the contract upon which a judgment is rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in a foreign state is established by the judgment, and the judgment must be given the same credit and effect in the state, in which it is sought to be enforced, as it had in the state where rendered. 3 Black, Judgm. § 925; Clarke v. Day, 2 Leigh 172; Dicey, Confd. Laws 435." Vaught v. Meador, 99 Va. 509, 30 S. E. Rep. 235.

It was held in Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 780, that the defendant to a Maryland judgment, to whom a day and opportunity has been allowed to make his defence in the court of law in Maryland, which rendered the last-named judgment, against the demand, for which such judgment was rendered, but who has wholly failed to avail himself of them, will not be entertained in the court of equity of West Virginia on a bill seeking relief against a judgment rendered by a court of law, based upon said Maryland judgment, rendered in consequence of his default, upon the ground, which might have been successfully taken in the Maryland court of law, unless some reason founded in fraud, accident or surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of such defendant, be shown why the defence was not made in the Maryland court.

Does Not Affect Land Elsewhere.—A judgment or decree of a court of another state has no effect to pass title to or affect land in West Virginia, nor can a sale or conveyance under it by a trustee or commissioner appointed by it do so. Wilson v. Braden (W. Va.), 36 S. E. Rep. 367.

"No court, which is but a creature of the state, can, by its judgments or decrees, directly bind or affect property beyond the limits of that state; and hence it is axiomatic that no writ of sequestration, or execution, or order, judgment or decree of foreign court, can be directly enforced against real estate situate without the limits of the foreign state." Wimer v. Wimer, 82 Va. 890, 5 S. E. Rep. 536. See also, Dickinson v. Hoomes, 8 Gratt. 410.

Foundation of Right.—The seizure of the property of the defendant under the proper process of the court, is generally the foundation of the court's jurisdiction in proceedings in rem, and defective or irregular affidavits, though they might reverse a judgment or decree in such case for error, in departing from the directions of the statute, do not render such a judgment or decree, or the subsequent proceedings, void. Hall v. Hall, 12 W. Va. 1.

Statute of Limitations.—It was held in Watkins v. Wortman, 19 W. Va. 78, that a judgment obtained in Ohio, if no bar there, is no bar in West Virginia, under § 18, ch. 104, Code W. Va. 1868, which provides that, "Every action upon a judgment or decree rendered in any other state or country shall be barred, if by the laws of such state or country such action would there be barred, and the judgment or decree be incapable of being otherwise enforced there."

A judgment or decree against heirs in a suit in one state, authorizing the sale of decedent's lands situated there to pay his debts, will not prevent the running of the statute of limitations against the suit in another state to subject the land situated therein to the payment of the same debts. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 13 S. E. Rep. 49.

Construction of Statutes.—If the validity of a foreign judgment depends upon the construction of the statutes of the state in which the foreign court rendered the judgment, the home courts will adopt the construction put upon the statutes by the courts of the state which enacted them. Gilchrist v. W. Va. O. & O. F. Co., 21 W. Va. 115.

Conflict of Laws.—In an action brought in Virginia, on a judgment obtained in North Carolina, the act of limitations of North Carolina cannot be pleaded in bar; but the law of the former must prevail: the act of limitations affecting the remedy, and not the right. "I consider the law as clearly settled, that whatever relates to the essence of the contract, is to be governed by the law of the place where the contract was formed; but that which relates to the remedy for enforcing the contract is to be governed by the law of the place where the contract is sought to be enforced." Jones v. Hook, 3 Rand. 308.

Merger.—A judgment in Maryland upon a covenant, binding upon the covenantor's heirs, is not so merged with the covenant (the execution thereon having been returned "no effects") as to prevent the covenantee from proceeding upon the covenant against the heirs of the deceased covenantor or in respect to real assets in Virginia. Beall v. Taylor, 2 Gratt. 532.

Federal Judgments.—Code of West Virginia 1868, ch. 130, § 5, applies as well to the record of the district court of the United States, held within the state, as to the records of the courts of the state; and the copy of the judgment rendered in a district court of the United States, in the state of West Virginia attested by the clerk of that court according to the statute above mentioned, will ordinarily be received as evidence of the existence of such judgments; but sec. 19 of ch. 130 of the W. Va. Code 1868, does not apply to the records and judicial proceedings of the district court of the United States, held within the state of West Virginia. Dickinson v. Railroad Co., 7 W. Va. 390.

Evidence.

Admiralty.—Quare, how far is the sentence of a foreign court of admiralty, or other foreign tribunal, to be regarded as evidence by the courts of Virginia. Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. 53. See also, Bourke v. Granberry, Gilm. 16.

Authentication.—For a discussion of what is sufficient evidence to authenticate, in the courts of this country, the sentence, or act, of a foreign tribunal, or government, after the destruction of such government by revolution or conquest, see Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. 53.

Where in a suit pending in the court of probate of New Orleans, against the executors of a Louisiana testator, a certified copy of the record of a suit in Virginia against the administrator of the decedent, appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction in Virginia, is offered in evidence, and is held by the supreme court of Louisiana to be proper and sufficient evidence of a debt due from the estate, the court of Virginia cannot question the propriety of that decision, but must give effect to the judgment rendered in accordance with it. DeEnde v. Wilkinson, 3 Pat. & H. 663.

Judgment against Decedent.—A record of a judgment against heirs in one state, authorizing the sale of decedent's lands situated there for the payment of his debts, is not admissible as against such heirs in an action in another state to subject lands of decedent situated therein to the payment of the same debts, either for the purpose of establishing them or fixing their amounts. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 13 S. E. Rep. 49.

So also, a judgment or decree rendered in one state, authorizing the sale of decedent's lands there to pay his debts, but which is void as to his heirs, is not admissible against them in a suit in another state to subject the lands of the decedent situated there to the payment of the same debts. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 13 S. E. Rep. 49.

Pendency of Suit in Foreign State.—It seems to be well settled that the pendency of a suit for a matter in a foreign state or territory is no bar to an action for the same matter in another state, either at law or in equity. The states in a jurisdictional sense are foreign to one another. The judgment of the court of another state does not merge the original cause of action in the home state. Davis v. Morris, 76 Va. 21; Beall v. Taylor, 2 Gratt. 532.

XX. CONSTRUCTION.

A judgment in the name of the commonwealth, for W, treasurer of C county, founded on a notice in the name of the commonwealth proceeding by W, late treasurer of C, against F, the collector of township M, and his sureties, upon his official bond, is a judgment in the name of the commonwealth. On such a judgment the commonwealth, at the relation of the auditor of accounts, may maintain a suit against F, collector of township M, and his sureties. Com. v. Ford, 29 Gratt. 683. See also, Brown v. Greenhow, 80 Va. 118.

Judgment in General Terms.—In an action against several defendants, the captas being returned executed in part only, who appeared and defended the suit, and a discontinuance as to the rest having taken place, by a failure to take out a further process against them, a judgment against the defendants in general terms, must be understood as against those only who appeared, notwithstanding the declaration charged them all as "in custody" etc., and the caption of the entry of the judgment in the order book mentioned the names of all. Moss v. Moss, 4 Hen. & M. 293; Graham v. Graham, 4 Munf. 205.

When the writ and declaration in the cause are against two defendants therein named, and the record shows that the defendants appeared in court by their attorney, and pleaded in bar to the declaration, and that the defendants made a motion, at the same time to the court in the cause, and afterwards, at another term of the court, the record recites, "this day came the parties," etc., and judgment is rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants, it must be taken that the judgment is against the defendants mentioned in the writ and declaration. Perry v. McHuffman, 7 W. Va. 306.

A judgment on a verdict virtually overrules all demurrers to the declaration, and each count thereof. Fleming Oil & Gas Co. v. South Penn. Oil Co., 37 W. Va. 645, 17 S. E. Rep. 203; Hood v. Maxwell, 1 W. Va. 219.

Dismal Swamp Land Co. v. A. Macaulay's Adm'r & als.

April Term, 1851, Richmond.

(Absent CABELL, P., and MONCURE,* J.)

1. Deeds of Trust—Sale of Land—Misapplication of Trust Fund—Liability of Co-trustee.—A person named trustee in a deed to secure debts, unites in sales necessary in the execution of the trust, and other formal acts, but he receives none of the trust funds; they being received by his co-trustee; and he is guilty of no fraud in relation thereto. Held: He is not responsible for the misapplication or waste of the funds by his co-trustee.

2. Same—To Secure Creditors—Statement of Amount of Debts—Effect.—A trust deed to secure creditors reciting the amount of the debts due to the different creditors, is not conclusive, even as against the grantor and his administrator, of the amount of the respective debts.

3. Same—Evidence—Books of Grantor—Admissibility.† —Under the circumstances, the books of the grantor in the deed of trust are proper evidence of the amount of the debts due to the creditors secured by the deed.

4. Same—Trustee—Estimated Rents.—Trustee not responsible for estimated rents when he has received none, where his delay in selling the property arose out of the difficulty of finding a purchaser.

5. Same—Creditor's Right to Show Intention of Grantor.§ —A creditor of the grantor in a deed to secure creditors, may shew by proofs that his debt was intended to be secured under the provision for another creditor.

6. Same—Same—Delay—Case at Bar.—Under the circumstances such creditor not barred by the delay from asserting his claim and obtaining relief.

7. Partnership—Incorporation—Suit for Debt—How Brought.—A debt is due to a partnership, and the partners are afterwards incorporated, and the debt then becomes the debt of the corporation. Held: It is competent to sue for it in the corporate name in a Court of equity.

*The case was argued before his appointment.

†Deeds—Recitals.—On this subject, see principal case cited in foot-note to Monteith v. Com., 15 Gratt. 172.

§Same—Evidence—Books of Grantor—Admissibility.—In Cann v. Cann, 40 W. Va. 188, 20 S. E. Rep. 917, it is said: "That original entries on plaintiff's books may, in certain cases, be evidence for himself, see Downer v. Morrison (1845), 2 Gratt. 250. See also, Griffin v. Macaulay (1851), 7 Gratt. 476."

§Same—Creditor's Right to Appear before Commissioner.—In Feamster v. Withrow, 9 W. Va. 328, it is said: "In all cases of this sort, each creditor interested in the trust subject, and who is a party, should be allowed to appear before the commissioner, and should be permitted, there, if he chooses, to contest the claim of any other creditors. Stor. Eq. Jur. vol. 1, sec. 548; Wilkins v. Gordon and Wife, and Others, 11 Leigh 547; Griffin's Ex'r et als. v. Macaulay's Adm'r, 7 Gratt. 476, 2 vol. Robinson (old) Practice 46." See also, citing the principal case, Conrad v. Buck, 21 W. Va. 411.

477 *8. Deeds of Trust—Construction—Case at Bar.—

Under the words in a deed of "all debts due the grantor," the indebtedness of a partner of the grantor to the partnership will pass.

9. Same—Same—Same.—Under these words, a claim which the grantor has on a foreign government for damages for the detention of his ship, will pass.

10. Assignor and Assignee—Evidence—Answer—Case at Bar.—Under the circumstances, the answer of the assignor of a claim held to be competent evidence against his volunteer assignee, in a controversy between said assignee and third persons.

By deed bearing date the 15th of November 1797, Alexander Macaulay of the town of York, in order to secure the payment of the following debts, that is, in the first place, to secure the payment £ 2000. to Dr. Corbin Griffin of the town of York; in the second place, to secure the payment of £ 5000. to John Jamieson of the county of Culpeper; and in the third place, to secure the payment of £ 3000. to Francis Jerdone of the county of Louisa, conveyed in trust to Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, a tract of land in the county of Warwick, lots in the town of York, tenements and lots in the town of Norfolk, lots and tenements in Hanover town, thirty slaves, all the stock, furniture, tools, &c., upon or belonging to the land in Warwick county, the stock and furniture in Yorktown, which was specified, including all his household and kitchen furniture, all his goods in his store in the town of York, one ship called the Charles Carter, one rig called the Helen, one sloop called the John, ten shares in the Dismal Swamp Canal Company, one half share in the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and one moiety of a tract of eight thousand acres of land lying in the county of Norfolk, held in company with Isaac Sexton, deceased. And he assigned to the same persons "all debts due to him;" all of which debts were stated to be expressed in a schedule annexed to the deed; but there was in fact no such schedule.

478 *The trusts declared in the deed were, that the trustees should, as soon as they conveniently could, proceed to sell the property at public auction, and out of the moneys arising from the sale, should, after paying the expenses attending the execution of the trust, first pay the debt above mentioned to be due to Corbin Griffin, and fully indemnify him in all sums and charges in which he was or might be bound as security of Alexander Macaulay; in the second place, to pay the debt above mentioned to be due to John Jamieson, and fully to indemnify him as Macaulay's security; and in the third place, to pay the debt above mentioned to be due to Francis Jerdone, and fully to indemnify him as Macaulay's security; and to apply the residue of the money arising from the sales of the property, if any residue there should be, to the use of any other creditors of Macaulay.

It appears that Macaulay, with the consent of the creditors, retained the trust property in his possession, and managed it for the purposes of the trust until his death, which occurred in July 1798. After his death the trustees took possession of all the property they could find; and it was sold in 1798, 1799, 1800 and 1801; except the Hanover town property, which was sold in 1811 for £ 49. 10. Although the trustee Nelson joined in advertising the property for sale, in giving Corbin Griffin a power of attorney to sell the Norfolk property, in conveying the land sold, and perhaps in some other formal acts, yet in fact none of the proceeds of the sales went into his possession; and he died late in 1803. Thomas Griffin was the acting trustee. He commenced to make payments to Corbin Griffin in September 1798; and these were continued until the 23d of November 1800. This was the date of the last payment made to Corbin

Griffin during his life, though he lived 479 until 1813. In December 1801 *the trustee Griffin commenced to make payments to John Jamieson; and in that month paid him £ 2297. Of this sum, £ 750 was the price of the one half share of the stock of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, which was purchased by Jamieson; and £ 1200 was the price of the moiety of eight thousand acres of land in Norfolk county, which was also purchased by Jamieson. On the 11th of February 1804, Jamieson executed two papers, admitting he had bought this property to satisfy a debt due himself, which was discharged, or nearly so, and afterwards for the Dismal Swamp Land Company. And in July 1809 he conveyed the property to the company by two deeds, in which he recited that Jamieson was a manager of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and the intention of the deed of November 1797 was, after paying a private debt due from Macaulay to Jamieson, to pay a considerable debt due from Macaulay to the Dismal Swamp Land Company; and that the trust had been completely executed as to the claims of Corbin Griffin and John Jamieson as individuals.

In 1815 Robert Anderson, who had married Mrs. Peyton Southall, a daughter of Alexander Macaulay, qualified as administrator de bonis non upon his estate; and in July 1819 he exhibited his bill in the late Chancery court at Williamsburg, against Thomas Griffin in his own right and as administrator of his father Corbin Griffin, Carter Berkeley and Frances his wife, who was Frances Nelson, the administratrix of Thomas Nelson, John M'Neale executor of John Jamieson, and the sheriffs to whom the estate of Alexander Macaulay had been previously committed. In his bill he states that his intestate, Alexander Macaulay, a merchant of long standing and extensive dealing, having a short time before his death encountered considerable losses in his shipping business, by reason of captures at 480 sea and mercantile failures, found himself, after many years of *laborious enterprise, involved in difficulties and perplexities, from which he was unable with promptitude to extricate himself. These captures and losses having temporarily drawn from their usual course of trade so great a portion of his funds, he was unable to meet with his accustomed punctuality, the payment of all his moneyed engagements; and as is usual in such cases, many of his creditors pressed him with the lashes of the law. Owning and possessed of a very considerable estate in lands situated in various parts of the country, vessels and cargoes at sea, and in ports foreign and domestic, slaves, merchandise, debts, and numerous other personal estates, he could not justly, and therefore did not, apprehend that his creditors were jeopardized by his situation, although he had to encounter such numerous and extensive difficulties. Confident of his ability in time to command his funds, which were in amount beyond the just demands of his creditors, indulgence was all he wanted; but by many this was denied him. And in order to place his creditors on a more general and equal footing than some of them were willing to remain on, he conveyed to Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson as trustees, by deed dated on the 15th of November 1797, the greater part of his estate.

After stating the trusts of the deed, the bill charges that Macaulay, at the time of its execution, was not indebted to Corbin Griffin as much as £ 2000., or anything near that sum; and that he never was so largely indebted to him: and of the debt which he did owe him at the time of executing the trust, a considerable part of it was paid to him between that period and Macaulay's death. That Macaulay was indebted to John Jamieson in only a small sum, at the time of executing the trust deed; and that he did not become more so after its date. The plaintiff believed that the debt of £ 3000. secured by the deed to Francis Jerdone was really due to him, and perhaps a 481 greater sum; but that *neither Jerdone or Jamieson was bound as security for Macaulay for a cent when the deed was executed, or became so bound afterwards. That Corbin Griffin was bound as Macaulay's security in several instances at the time of executing the said deed; and that he probably became a further security for him after its execution; but that from the debts for which he was bound as surety for him before the execution of the deed, Macaulay afterwards released him in a great degree, by the settlement of the debts before his death. And thus the sums of £ 2000. to Corbin Griffin, and £ 5000., to John Jamieson, were in a great degree merely nominal debts; and the £ 5000. to Jamieson almost entirely so. In order to secure these three sums however, amounting nominally and really together to ten thousand pounds, Macaulay had conveyed to Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, by the said deed, property to an amount of more than five times the sum; most of which the plaintiff charged had been, could be or would have been realized by the proper diligence of the said trustees.

The complainant then proceeded to state the death of Macaulay, in July 1798, leaving a widow and four infant children. That the trustees took possession of all his property, and also of all his books and papers. That since his qualification as administrator, he called upon Berkeley, the administrator of Nelson, and upon Thomas Griffin, for an account of their actings and doings in execution of the trust, but had not obtained any satisfactory account. And after stating at great length, the property which he charged had gone into the hands of the trustees, and interrogating them with great minuteness, upon all the subjects embraced in the bill, he asked for an account of their transactions, and a payment to himself of the amount which might be ascertained to be in their hands, and for general relief.

482 *Thomas Griffin filed an answer to the bill, which was excepted to by the plaintiff, for his failure to respond to some of the allegations and interrogatories of the bill; and some of the exceptions being sustained, he filed an amended answer. He stated that some of the property mentioned in the bill, the trustees had never been able to find. That such was the fact as to the ships Helen and John. That the ship Charles Carter had been sold by a decree of the United States court, at the suit of Thomas Lane, who had a lien upon it. That other property mentioned in the deed had been sold by Macaulay, in his lifetime, who remained in possession of the property up to the time of his death, by the permission of the creditors. That he had never seen the schedule of debts mentioned in the deed. That the trustees proceeded soon after the death of Macaulay, to sell all the trust property they could find, and had applied the proceeds as stated in the account presented to the complainant.

The defendant further stated that the books of Macaulay shewed that he was indebted to Corbin Griffin at his death; and also that said Griffin was bound as his surety for a large amount. Of the debt due from Macaulay to Jamieson and Jerdone, the defendant Griffin knew but little, except that Macaulay during his life, frequently informed him that he was indebted to Jamieson for large sums of money, which Jamieson, as agent of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, had suffered Macaulay to receive, and for which Jamieson was bound to account to the company; and that Jerdone had lent him a good deal of money in his distress. But that, however all that might be, he conceived the trustees had nothing to do with this part of the case, for the trust deed itself acknowledging the existence of the debts therein mentioned, and directing payment thereof by the trustees, it was not for them to enquire whether and powers committed to them, in order to the satisfaction of these demands. He did not admit that Macaulay ever made any other payments to Corbin Griffin after the execution of the deed, than such as appeared on Macaulay's books, or that Macaulay relieved him from his liabilities as his surety.

483 the debts were due or not; but their business was to *execute the trusts

The defendant Griffin further said that he knew nothing of the accounts between Macaulay and Corbin Griffin, except what was disclosed by Macaulay's books; but as these books shewed a much less balance due at the time of the execution of the deed of trust that was therein stated by Macaulay himself, the defendant always conceived, that as trustee he was bound to settle with the creditors mentioned in the deed, according to its directions, and not according to the appearance of accounts existing prior to its date, and not then closed; and under these impressions all payments were made by the trustees, to Corbin Griffin and Jamieson.

M'Neale, the executor of Jamieson, also answered the bill. After admitting the execution of the deed of trust, and that it secured to Jamieson £ 5000., he said that he did not admit that Macaulay was indebted to Jamieson in a small sum only; nor had he been able to discover the evidence of his being indebted to Jamieson in a sum less than the whole amount, although it was probable that such was the case; which, if it were so, ought to be shewn, as the deed was a solemn instrument, and carried upon its face evidence that the whole sum was due. That from the best information he had been able to obtain, Macaulay was considerably indebted to Jamieson, if not to the whole sum of £ 5000. He had been informed and believed that part of the sum of five thousand pounds consisted of £ 3000. or upwards, belonging to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, which was loaned by Jamieson to Macaulay some time in the year 1796; and that the other part of the 484 debt secured by the deed of trust, to be paid to Jamieson, *was a private debt due from Macaulay to Jamieson; but as Jamieson was a careless accountant and kept no books, and had left no account of the transactions between him and Macaulay, the defendant was not enabled to say from anything derived from that source, what was the amount of the debt due from Macaulay to Jamieson; but from an account taken from the books of Macaulay, by Corbin Griffin, and furnished to the defendant, it appeared that on the 15th day of May 1797, a few months before the execution of the trust deed, Macaulay was indebted to Jamieson in about the sum of £ 173. 10. 7. And although it was probable that these two sums with the interest due thereon, formed the aggregate, to secure the payment of which the said deed of trust was given, the defendant could not admit it was the case, and it was probable that Macaulay might have been indebted to Jamieson on some other account that did not appear.

In October 1819, Elizabeth Macaulay, the widow of Alexander Macaulay, exhibited her bill in the late Williamsburg Chancery court, against Thomas Griffin, as trustee in the deed from Alexander Macaulay, and as executor of Corbin Griffin, Carter Berkeley and Frances his wife, late Frances Nelson, widow and administratrix of Thomas Nelson, M'Neale as the executor of John Jamieson, and the sheriffs to whom the estate of Macaulay had been committed before Robert Anderson qualified as administrator, in which, after setting out the deed executed by Macaulay to Thomas Griffin and Nelson, she alleges that Francis Jerdone was her brother, and that he had assigned to her all his right in the £ 3000. secured to him by the deed aforesaid.

The charges as to the debts of Corbin Griffin and Jamieson, the conduct of the trustees, and the property conveyed, are substantially the same as in the bill of Anderson, administrator of Macaulay; 485 but there is nothing *said as to the embarrassments of Macaulay, or his motives or objects in executing the deed.

The bill further charged, that independent of the claim which the plaintiff had upon the trustees in virtue of the assignment to her by Francis Jerdone, she had claims upon them and upon others who had since held the lands, for money due from them to her in right of her dower in the lands conveyed to the said trustees by Alexander Macaulay; for that the annual profits of a portion of the said real estate so conveyed were considerable, until the sales were all received by the trustees, and that she had as yet received from them only a portion of what came to their hands of the said dower interest.

The prayer of the bill was, that the Court would decree the defendants to render on oath, proper accounts of their and each of their transactions, and that the plaintiff might be paid the amount of her said several claims, and for general relief.

To the bill of Mrs. Macaulay, Griffin and M'Neale, answered substantially as they did to the bill of Anderson as administrator of Macaulay. Berkeley and wife answered that they knew nothing of the transactions in the bill mentioned, further than that Thomas Nelson was named a trustee in the deed of the 15th of November 1797; but they believed he never acted under the deed, except to join in certain formal acts to which his assent was necessary; and that Thomas Griffin had been the sole acting trustee.

In 1820, the president and managers of the Dismal Swamp Land Company instituted a suit in the Chancery court of Williamsburg, against Alexander Macaulay's administrator, Thomas Griffin, as trustee of Macaulay and executor of Corbin Griffin, Jamieson's administrator, Berkeley and wife, Jerdone, and Turner Christian, executor of William B. Christian, which, owing 486 to some error in the institution of the suit, was *permitted to abate. And then in 1823 the company instituted another suit in the same court against the same parties. In their bill they state that as owners of a large tract of land in the Dismal Swamp, the members of the company had for many years derived a profit from working the timbers on said land into shingles, which operation had been attended to by agents under the immediate control of directors, until 1814, when by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, the company was incorporated. That in the year 1793 and until 1797, Alexander Macaulay was a member and director, and as such had an equal control with other directors over the funds and property of the company. That during this period Macaulay as director, with the consent of John Jamieson, also a member and director, received and applied to his own use at different times, large sums of money, which with the interest, amounted in the month of November 1797, to the sum of 13,395 dollars 69 cents, with interest on the several items from their respective dates, at which time the affairs of Macaulay becoming embarrassed, he executed to Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson of York, a trust deed conveying an immense property to secure Dr. Corbin Griffin in the sum £ 2000., with other liabilities, said John Jamieson in the sum of £ 5000. and Francis Jerdone in the sum of £ 3000. and any balance for the benefit of his creditors generally.

They charge that at the time of executing this deed, Jamieson was still a member and director of the company; and that it was the object and intention of Macaulay to secure to the members of said company, through their director John Jamieson, the sum of money due to them; and that in fact the £ 5000. was intended to cover that sum, and a small debt due to Jamieson individually; and although the deed does not state the fact, they have abundant evidence to prove it, obtained through the frequent acts and acknowledgments of 487

*Jamieson himself. And they exhibit two deeds dated July 20th, 1809, by one of which Jamieson conveys to William Nelson and others, members of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, a moiety of eight thousand acres of land; and by the other he conveys to the same parties a half share of the stock to the company. And they charge that in both these deeds, Jamieson expressly acknowledges that the deed of trust was intended, after paying a small debt to Jamieson, to pay a large debt due the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and that the trust was completely executed as to the claim of Corbin Griffin and the individual debt due to Jamieson. That all parties have tacitly acknowledged the claim of the company through Jamieson. That they have not been disturbed in the enjoyment of the property transferred to them by the deeds aforesaid; and the trustee himself, a member of the company, not only in the full knowledge of these facts, but for two years past, had induced the company to believe that a large portion of the balance due to them would be paid by him out of funds still held by him as trustee. They charge that Griffin had been guilty of gross negligence and mismanagement in his execution of the trust. That he had failed to collect debts that he might have collected. That he had allowed property to waste without selling it. That he had not paid over to the proper parties the proceeds of such property as he did sell. And that he paid himself as executor of Corbin Griffin, more than he was properly entitled to under the deed of trust. They charge that Thomas Griffin had expressly promised to pay to them a sum of upwards of 5000 dollars, which he received in 1819 from the government of the United States, as due to Alexander Macaulay's trust fund, and that he deceived them. And they charged that there was a large debt due the trust fund from the estate of William B. Christian and others.

488 *The plaintiffs refer to the suit of Anderson as administrator of Macaulay against Griffin and others, in which he claims any balance in the hands of the trustee as well as to collect all debts due the estate of Alexander Macaulay; and they insist that they are first entitled to any balance in the hands of the trustee, and to any fund which may arise out of the property conveyed in the trust deed until they are paid. They call upon the defendants to answer as to the facts stated in the bill. They ask that Griffin shall give an account of the trust fund and his administration of it. That Anderson shall exhibit an account of his administration of Macaulay's estate, shewing the money and property he has received, and the debts he has collected. That M'Neale say what he knows of the claim secured to Jamieson, and whether he does not know that a great portion of the sum of £ 5000. was secured to him as a manager of the Dismal Swamp Land Company; and if from the books of Jamieson he can ascertain how much of said money was due to Jamieson individually. That Francis Jerdone say if he has received any portion of his debt due from Macaulay, and how much; and that Turner Christian, executor of William B. Christian, may shew what property he became possessed of as executor, and what disposition he had made of it. And that the plaintiffs may be considered as interested in the decision of the suit of Macaulay's administrator.

In July 1824 Anderson answered the bill. He admitted that Macaulay had been a member of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, but did not admit that he was a director of the company; or if he was that he had control over the funds of the company during the period referred to in the bill, equal to that exercised by their directors; but he alleged that a certain John Brown, then a member of the company, was the treasurer, and received and disbursed its funds. He denied that his intestate ever 489 did, during the said period, either with or *without the consent of John Jamieson, receive from the company and apply to his own use, either at different times or at any time, either large sums or any sum of money, other than such as may have been his dividends.

The defendant admitted the execution of the deed of trust by Macaulay to Griffin and Nelson, but believing as he said, that his intestate was not indebted at all to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, he denied that Macaulay had any such object or intention in view as to secure to said company through said Jamieson or otherwise any sums of money whatever; or that the said £ 5000., or any part thereof, was intended to cover or secure any sum of money whatever to the company. He said that Macaulay's debt to Jamieson was less than £ 200., and as he believed was paid off in 1801.

The defendant charged that the trustees had sold the property at most inadequate prices, and had conducted the sales improperly; allowing Corbin Griffin to sell for them, and to buy at most inadequate prices, at his own sale. That Corbin Griffin and Jamieson were managers of the company, and Thomas Griffin the acting trustee under Macaulay's trust deed, these parties claiming too under the trust deed £ 7000.; and yet under these circumstances, the company lay still for five and twenty years without making one effort to secure their alleged debt, which they now say amounted in November 1797 to the enormous but precise sum of 13,395 dollars 69 cents.

He denied that the trustees became assignees of all debts due to Macaulay at the time the trust deed was executed. He alleged that there was a schedule of such debts as Macaulay conveyed by the deed, and that the surviving trustee withheld it as defendant believed, because he had collected many of those debts, of which no discovery ever would be made without its production. But if the deed passed all the debts then due to Macaulay, the defendant insisted that the claim which 490 *his estate had on William B. Christian would not be embraced therein; for Macaulay and Christian were partners in a mercantile concern in Hanover, and Christian survived Macaulay, who lived more than eight months after the date of the trust deed. That the partnership went on as usual, Macaulay continuing to supply the store with merchandise. That the concern had not been settled up, but a suit was then pending for that object; and that in that case the surviving trustee, Thomas Griffin, had filed an answer in which he disclaimed all right under the deed to claim any sum that might be found due to Macaulay on a final settlement of that concern.

Finally, the defendant denied that Macaulay owed the Dismal Swamp Company anything. But if he did, he denied the right of the company to claim payment through Jamieson, under the trust deed or otherwise. And he moreover denied their right to claim of him at all in a Court of chancery. He insisted that their recourse against him, if any thing was due, was in a Court of law: and in either case he pleaded the lapse of time as a complete and final bar to any claim which the company had or might set up against his intestate.

Griffin in his answer to the bill said that he had received no money from the United States government "under the treaty of peace with France." That he had received money arising from the sale of the trust estate, the collection of debts and other sources, all or nearly all of which had been administered by him, and paid away as directed by the deed. That he had paid to the executor of Corbin Griffin, the first named creditor in the deed, the balance which appeared to be due to his estate. That he did this because he was advised by counsel that the trust deed ought to be his sole guide: that this deed expressly acknowledged a debt to be due to Corbin Griffin of £ 2000., and directed *the same to be paid. That the deed fully indemnified Corbin Griffin for his sureties for Macaulay; and that said Corbin Griffin had been compelled to pay considerable sums of money as the surety of Macaulay. That he was advised by counsel that the debt due from the estate of William B. Christian did not come within the deed, because that could only include such debts as were then due to Macaulay; and that the partnership of William B. Christian & Co. continued, and their operations proceeded until the death of Macaulay. That this debt arose out of this partnership, and became a debt only at the dissolution thereof.

Francis Jerdone in his answer said that there was no debt due to him individually from Macaulay. That he had been informed and believed that Macaulay in his lifetime had transactions with a certain William Douglass; and received from him timber and produce from an estate at that time managed by said Douglass, of which estate defendant was half owner; and that Macaulay was indebted to Douglass and defendant on account of that timber and produce; but to what amount he was unable to say. That no payment had been made to him on that account either by Macaulay in his lifetime or by any one since. That since the death of Macaulay he had assigned to Mrs. Macaulay, his sister, the debt aforesaid, and that he therefore had no claim against Macaulay's estate.

M'Neale in his answer said that he had been informed and believed that a part of the debt secured by the deed to be paid to his testator, consisted of the sum of £ 3000. or upwards, belonging to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, which was loaned by his testator to Macaulay, and for which Jamieson feared he had incurred a personal responsibility. That the other part of the sum secured, or a considerable part thereof, was a private debt due from Macaulay to Jamieson; but his testator was careless and kept no books, and therefore 492 *he could not say from any thing derived from that source, what was the amount of the debt due from Macaulay to Jamieson: but from an account taken from the books of Macaulay by Corbin Griffin, and furnished to the defendant, it appeared that Macaulay was indebted to Jamieson, on the 15th day of May 1797, a few months before the deed was executed, in the sum of about £ 173. 10. 7. And although it was probable that these two sums formed an aggregate, to secure the payment of which the deed was given, the defendant could not admit it to be the case, as it was probable that Macaulay might have been indebted to Jamieson on some other account also.

The defendant stated the purchase by Jamieson of the moiety of the tract of eight thousand acres of land, and the half share of the stock of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and his conveyance of these to the company in 1809, for the purpose of reimbursing them for the aforesaid £ 3000. He also stated certain sums of money he had received in 1801. He further stated that since the death of Jamieson the defendant had settled his account with the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and had obtained from the company a complete discharge and release of and concerning the premises.

In July 1823, the two first of these causes were removed to the Chancery court at Richmond; and on the 18th of March 1825, the case of E. Macaulay against Griffin and others came on to be heard, when the Court made a decree directing the defendant Thomas Griffin to render before one of the commissioners of the Court accounts of the joint transactions of himself and Thomas Nelson, during the lifetime of the latter, as trustees of Alexander Macaulay, and of his own transactions as surviving trustee of said Alexander Macaulay, since the death of said Nelson; and that he produced before the said commissioner, under oath if required, all the books and papers of every description, in his possession or 493 *power, belonging to the estate of Alexander Macaulay; and that he moreover, if required, submit to be examined in solemn form touching the said books and papers, and his joint and separate transactions as trustee of said Alexander Macaulay. That he render before said commissioner accounts of his testator Corbin Griffin's transactions with the said Alexander Macaulay, during their joint lives, and with the estate of the latter after his death; also an account of all receipts or collections made by the said Corbin Griffin of the debts or effects of Macaulay individually, or as agent of said Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, jointly or separately, as trustees of said Macaulay; and that he also render before said commissioner an account of his actings and doings as administrator of the said Corbin Griffin.

And the Court further decreed Carter Berkeley and Frances his wife to render before the same commissioner an account of their intestate Thomas Nelson's joint and separate transactions as a trustee of Alexander Macaulay deceased; and also accounts of their administrations of the estate of Thomas Nelson deceased.

And the Court further decreed the defendant John M'Neale to render before the same commissioner accounts of his testator John Jamieson's transactions with Alexander Macaulay during their joint lives, and with the estate of the latter after his death; and that he also render an account of all moneys and effects of said Alexander Macaulay which came to his said testator's hands, either direct from the said Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, or from either of them, as trustees of the said Alexander Macaulay or otherwise; and that he also render before the same commissioner an account of the dividends, proceeds and profits of the lands and Dismal Swamp Land Company's shares, of the said Alexander Macaulay, which came to the possession, or whilst they remained under the direction of the said 494 *John Jamieson or his agents. And that he also render an account of his transactions as executor of said John Jamieson.

On the 25th of March, the Court, on the motion of the defendant Griffin, ordered that the cases of A. Macaulay's administrator against Griffin and others, and of E. Macaulay against Griffin and others, should be consolidated, and thereafter prosecuted as one suit; and that the foregoing decree entered in the last of the causes, should be considered as entered in both.

In obedience to the foregoing decree, commissioner Baker in October 1826, made a report containing numerous statements of the accounts directed by the decree; and to this report the plaintiffs and the defendants filed many exceptions.

The case of the Dismal Swamp Land Company against Macaulay's administrator and others, was removed to the Chancery court at Richmond by an order made on the 19th day of July 1825. And on the 7th day of March 1827, the three causes came on to be heard together; and after argument they were continued until the 29th of June 1829, when the Chancellor held that Anderson, as administrator of Macaulay, was not the proper plaintiff in the first of these suits; but that it should have been brought in the name of the widow and heirs of Alexander Macaulay. As to Mrs. Macaulay's claims, he held that she not having joined in the trust deed, she was entitled to dower; and that so far as the trustees had sold any of Macaulay's lands, she might waive her claim for dower therein, and might upon a proper bill for that purpose, be allowed compensation out of the purchase money, perhaps, in lieu of dower; or she might be allowed the benefit of any contract in relation thereto. And he also held that she was entitled as the assignee of Francis Jerdone, to the full amount assigned by him to her, as fixed by the deed. And he

495 left it to her counsel to *say how far her bill made a proper case as to her rights, except as assignee as aforesaid, to any other matter or right she had under the said Alexander Macaulay. Wherefore the Court, setting aside so much of any order made in these causes, before or since they were consolidated, or any report under the same as conflicted with what followed, decreed that the bill of the plaintiff in the first suit be dismissed with costs. And that leave be given to the plaintiff in the second suit to amend her bill and make new parties within thirty days; and if not done within that time, that so much of her bill stand dismissed as an act of this day. And it was ordered that the second and third of these causes be so far consolidated as to render it unnecessary to take the account of the trustees in relation to the whole of the trust subject in both. And the accounts were referred to a commissioner with instructions.

On the 2d of July 1829, the three causes were again brought on, when the following decree was entered in them:

"The parties, by their counsel, having consented, as hereinafter mentioned, the decree pronounced in these causes on the twenty-ninth day of June last, is set aside; and by consent of parties, in the first of these causes, in writing, Robert Anderson and Helen M. his wife, Robert Anderson, administrator of Alexander Macaulay jr., and of Francis Macaulay deceased, Patrick Macaulay and Elizabeth Macaulay, (which said Helen and Patrick are, and the said Alexander jr. and Francis were the children, and the said Elizabeth is the widow of Alexander Macaulay deceased, and his only heirs and distributees,) are admitted parties plaintiffs in the first of these causes; and by like consent the bill therein is amended so as to add to it a prayer, that the balance of the trust subject that may be found in the hands of either or any of the defendants, or with which either or any of them may be chargeable directly or indirectly, *may be decreed to the parties

496 now admitted as plaintiffs, in their rights as heirs and distributees aforesaid, if the same should not be decreed to the administrator of said Alexander Macaulay deceased; and by like consent, the answers heretofore filed are to stand as answers to the bill in which the said parties are as aforesaid admitted plaintiffs, and which is amended as aforesaid, and the first of these causes heard on the bill so amended as aforesaid, the said answers with general replications thereto, the examinations of witnesses, exhibits and accounts heretofore filed or returned, without any further proceedings at rules. And thereupon these causes came on this day to be again heard together on the papers formerly read, and the pleadings amended in the first of these causes as aforesaid, and were argued by counsel: On consideration whereof, the Court doth recommit the reports made by commissioner Baker, with the several exceptions thereto, to any other commissioner of the Court, for him to re-state and settle the accounts between the parties, and make report thereof to the Court, with any matters specially stated deemed pertinent by himself, or which may be required by the parties to be so stated. It will not escape the attention of the commissioner, that in taking the accounts of the trustees, they should not be taken jointly unless they so expressly acted: it will follow, therefore, that where they did not so expressly act, each will be held to have acted for himself, and liable accordingly; and that whether one or more of the trustees permitted the said Corbin Griffin, in his lifetime, to interfere with the books of the said Alexander Macaulay deceased, he or they must be liable for his acts.

"The commissioner, in the absence of all other proof, will resort to the trust deed as fixing the debts therein enumerated to be first charged on the trust fund, subject to be controlled by legal proofs in relation to the same. He will not be misled by the 497 imaginary claims *of any party blotted out by time, but will suffer all such to sleep undisturbed. The trustees, however, cannot be protected, as to any of their own acts, by lapse of time.

"And the Court doth give leave to the plaintiff in the second of these causes, to amend her bill in relation to her dower claim, if she shall be so advised within thirty days from this day; and if not done within that time, so much of her bill is to stand dismissed as an act of this day. But if the plaintiff in the second of these causes, shall so amend her bill, the re-settlement of the accounts before the commissioner is not to be delayed thereby."

The causes having been transferred by operation of law to the Circuit Superior court for the county of Henrico, on the 24th of November 1832, on the motion of the plaintiffs in the first suit, so much of the order made in these causes on the 29th of June 1829, as recommitted the report of commissioner Baker, with the exceptions thereto, was set aside. And Elizabeth Macaulay having died, the second suit was revived in the name of her executor, Robert Anderson; and on the 3d of December 1833, the first two causes came on again to be heard upon the papers formerly read, when the Chancellor—Brockenbrough—delivered an opinion in which he passed upon all the exceptions to commissioner Baker's report. The most of these exceptions it is unnecessary to notice; but the opinion of the Judge presents the questions which arise in the cause, and gives the facts in relation thereto; and will save the necessity of any other statement of them. That part of the opinion is as follows:

"The first question which arises in this case is, what was the extent of the debt due from Macaulay, at the time of the execution of the deed (that is, on the fifteenth 498 day of November, one thousand seven hundred *and ninety-seven,) to the three preferred creditors, Corbin Griffin, John Jamieson and Francis Jerdone? I am not disposed to admit that the deed furnished conclusive evidence of the extent of that debt, as the counsel of Griffin contends. I have always supposed that in a Court of equity especially, it was allowable for either party to aver and prove that the true consideration of a deed is different from that expressed in the deed. This position is recognized to be correct by Judge Tucker, in the case of Duval v. Bibb, 4 Hen. & Munf. 113; and in the case of Epps v. Randolph, 2 Call 185, a different and additional consideration was allowed to be proved than that expressed in the deed; and in the case of Harvey v. Alexander, 1 Rand. 219, the Court decided, that where there was a good consideration, and a valuable consideration of only one dollar expressed in the deed, parol proof was admissible to prove other valuable considerations. If in those cases the true consideration may be proved, I do not see why a grantor in a deed of trust, or his representatives, may not be allowed to prove that the debts which he intended to secure, are not so large as is shewn by the recital of the deed.

"Again, I do not think that there is any distinct affirmation in this deed that the sums specified are actually due to the three preferred creditors, Griffin, Jamieson and Jerdone. In the beginning of the deed, it recites the purposes for which the subsequent conveyance of the mass of the grantor's property, real and personal, is made; it witnesseth, that the grantor, 'in order to secure the payment of the following debts, that is to say, in the first place to secure the payment of two thousand pounds, current money of Virginia, to Dr. Corbin Griffin,' &c. &c. This is not a direct affirmation, like an obligation by which he binds himself to pay the money, or a promissory note by which he promises to pay 499 it, but a mere recital that he intends to secure the *payment of a debt, from which the inference is that he does owe it. And in so declaring the duties of the trustees, it directs that they shall proceed 'the debt to pay, above mentioned to be due to the said Corbin Griffin,' &c. This is not a simple affirmation, as in the before mentioned obligation, but a recital merely, from which it may be inferred, however strongly, that he does owe those sums to those persons. Would the grantor be estopped in any proceeding at common law, to deny that he owed those sums? I think not; for we have the highest authority for saying, that 'every estoppel must be certain to every intent, and not to be taken by argument or inference.' And again, 'every estoppel ought to be a precise affirmation of that which maketh the estoppel, and not to be spoken impersonally,' &c. Neither does a recital conclude, because it is no direct affirmation. Co. Litt. 352 c. If this be true in common law, much more is it true in equity.

"In perusing this deed, it strikes the mind as a remarkable circumstance that Alexander Macaulay should be in debt, on the 15th day of November 1797, in the round sum of ten thousand pounds, to his three friends; and not only so, but that that sum should be composed of a round sum due to each of them; to one two thousand pounds, to another five thousand pounds, and to the third three thousand pounds. Is it possible, that to neither of them a few pounds, shillings, pence or farthings, less or more than the exact sums of two, three or five thousand pounds, were due on that day? Were those precise sums lent to him on that day, and no more or less? Or if the money lent, or articles sold, were advanced at previous times, did the interest on the advances, when added to the principal, make an aggregate of principal and interest, in each case, on that day, of the exact sums specified in the deed? It is not to be believed. The mind is necessarily drawn to the conclusion, that there were debts due to those three gentlemen *on that day, but that there was no settlement of accounts between them, no calculation of principal and interest; (if there had been, where are the settled accounts, the bonds or the notes?—none such are produced;) that the grantor was anxious to secure those particular creditors, in preference to others, who had not equal claims on him, and that sums were mentioned which were amply sufficient to embrace the whole amount due to each and all of them, leaving it to a future settlement to ascertain the precise amounts due to each.

"Having thus ascertained, at least to my own satisfaction, that the nominal sums recited in the deed are not those which are really due, and Dr. Corbin Griffin having left no bond, note or settled account of his debtor, and the defendant Thomas Griffin, either as trustee of Macaulay, or administrator of his father, having produced none, the next enquiry is, whether the mercantile books of Macaulay can be resorted to as evidence for the purpose of ascertaining the amount really due? Under particular circumstances, I think it is clear that the books, or even an account of a merchant, may be adduced as evidence in his behalf, against his debtor, and that they may form at least very strong presumption against him. If it be proved that a customer is in the habit of dealing with a merchant, and the latter render an account of items, which is delivered to the customer, with a request that he examine them, and he retains the account for that purpose, and makes no objections to the items, or makes objection to some of them, that account rendered is competent evidence to charge him. In this case, the deed of trust was executed on the fifteenth day of November 1797, and the grantor died on the seventeenth day of July 1798. During that period, it appears that Dr. Griffin had frequent access to the books of Macaulay, and particularly had a full view of his own account, and that he even made *entries in his own account on Macaulay's books, at the request of Macaulay; that the books were taken possession of by the trustees, after the death of Macaulay, and that the practice was continued by Dr. Griffin, with the permission of the trustees, of making such entries in those books, and he was appointed by the trustees their agent in assisting Miller Brown, the clerk, to post up the books.

"Nothing can be more clear, than that Corbin Griffin and the acting trustee, his son, were perfectly acquainted with the fact that he stood creditor on those books for a much smaller sum than the two thousand pounds mentioned in the deed. Would not this circumstance create uneasiness in the mind of Dr. Griffin, even during the lifetime of Macaulay, if he were really a creditor to that extent? Would he not have expressed that uneasiness to Macaulay, and insisted strenuously on the account in the books being rectified, and made to consist with the true state of affairs between them? It seems to me that any prudent man having the least regard to his own interest, would have required it; and his failure to make complaint of the books and to require their correction, affords a strong presumption that in his own estimation they were right.

"There is another circumstance which appears to me to be strong, if not irresistible, to prove that the sum recited in the deed was not the actual sum due, and that the books shew the real amount of the debt. Corbin Griffin was the preferred creditor of Macaulay, over all others. Jamieson was, according to the deed, (and in fact, so far as the Dismal Swamp Land Company's claim extended,) a larger creditor, but in point of preference he was second to Griffin. At a very early period it was evident to the trustees, as well as to Dr. Griffin, that there would be very great difficulty, from the proceeds of the trust fund, to pay the preferred creditors their debts, and to secure them in their *liabilities for Macaulay. Dr. Griffin had every motive to wish for a speedy payment of his debt, and for his complete indemnification. If the large sum of two thousand pounds were actually due to him, it is not credible that he would be willing to see the greater part of that debt jeopardized by permitting the trustees to pay over to the second creditor the greater part of the large sum of three thousand pounds, in preference to his own. Yet such was the fact. The trustees, or one of them, certainly paid over to Jamieson large sums of money, with the full knowledge of Dr. Griffin, between the years 1800 and 1809, whilst they do not appear to have paid any thing to Dr. Griffin after the year 1800, in payment of his large debt, during the residue of his life, which continued some twelve or thirteen years. They not only paid Jamieson, but they pressed him, by letters, to assert his claim, and to attend at some of the sales. This knowledge and acquiescence on the part of Dr. Griffin, prove to my mind, very satisfactorily, that he was conscious that he had been paid all that was due, and that the books of Macaulay were to be relied on as evidence of the actual state of the debt.

"Connected with this question of the amount due from Macaulay to Corbin Griffin, is the subject of two payments made to Benjamin Waller, as attorney for Joseph Holmes & Co., in the lifetime of Macaulay, and which two sums are claimed by Thomas Griffin, as having been paid by Corbin Griffin as security for Macaulay, and as such within the deed; one of whose objects was 'to indemnify him (Corbin Griffin) in all sums and charges in which he stands, or may be bound as security to the said Alexander Macaulay.' These two sums are £ 250. paid to Waller on the nineteenth day of March 1798, and £ 300. on the twenty-second day of May 1798. It seems that Waller gave receipts to Corbin Griffin for these two sums, and hence the 503 *claim set up to charge them against Macaulay. But in the document furnished by William Waller, executor of Benjamin Waller, marked WAC, these two sums are stated to be received from Alexander Macaulay. The difficulty then is, to ascertain whose money it was by which these two sums were paid. As to the £ 300., there seems to be not much dispute, from the document WAD, in Thomas Griffin's handwriting, it appears that six slaves of Macaulay's were sold by himself, 'and money appropriated to discharge in part the debt due to Holmes & Co., with Corbin Griffin security £ 300.' In this instance then it clearly appears that although Benjamin Waller gave a receipt to Corbin Griffin on the twenty-second day of May 1798 for £ 300., yet that money was raised from the sale of Macaulay's own slaves, and consequently the receipt to Corbin Griffin is not conclusive to shew that he ought to charge that sum to Macaulay. The probability is, that as Corbin Griffin was security for the debt, and at that time, by request of Macaulay, made entries in the books of Macaulay, he was also requested to receive this money from the purchase of the slaves and pay it over to Macaulay's creditor. As to the sum of £ 250., there is more difficulty, but I think an attention to the documents will clear up the difficulty. It seems that Benjamin Waller, as attorney for Holmes & Co., gave a receipt to Corbin Griffin, bearing date the nineteenth day of March 1798, for £ 195. 9. 2., on account of a judgment on a forthcoming bond obtained against Macaulay, with Corbin Griffin and Thomas Griffin as securities; and on the back of another bond, gave a similar receipt to Corbin Griffin for the sum of £ 54. 10. 10., in full of that bond which had been given by Macaulay, with Corbin Griffin as security. These two sums make £ 250. It further appears that on that very day Alexander Macaulay executed a bond, with Corbin Griffin as security, for the same

504 sum of £ 250., to *Philip Tabb of Gloucester. Hence, a very strong presumption arises that the money paid on that day to Waller for Holmes & Co. was the money borrowed by Macaulay from Tabb, and that Corbin Griffin was the bearer of it to Waller, and took the receipt in his own name. This presumption is much strengthened by the document WAB., furnished by William Waller, in which is this entry made by his father:

'Holmes & Co. v. Macaulay,
£ 250, settled with Mr. Tabb
the small bond,	54 10 10
Towards the second bond, . . .	195 9 2
	<hr/>
	£ 250 00 00

March 19, 1798.'

"So far then, I think the commissioner right in considering the two sums as paid to Waller for Holmes & Co., out of Macaulay's own money, notwithstanding the receipts to Corbin Griffin. But in the further progress of this debt of £ 250., I think the commissioner most decidedly wrong. Macaulay, it is true, borrowed this sum from Tabb to pay a debt for which Corbin Griffin was secured, and against which he was indemnified by the deed of trust. To pay Tabb, Macaulay gave a new bond, with the same Corbin Griffin as security, who paid off that bond. The commissioner himself, shews in page thirty-three of his report, (note to account F,) that Corbin Griffin, after the death of Macaulay, on the sixth day of May 1799, paid £ 150., and on the twentieth day of August 1799, paid the further sum of £ 119. 10. 2., in full of the principal and interest of that very bond given on the nineteenth day of March 1798 to Philip Tabb. Surely then, Corbin Griffin ought to have credit with Macaulay's estate for these two sums paid by him in discharge of the said bond. But the commissioner rejected these credits, and excluded 505 them from the account F, on the *ground 'that the trustees were not authorized to pay them under the trust deed.' In this matter I differ with the commissioner in opinion. The original bonds due to Holmes & Co., in which Corbin Griffin was security, were expressly embraced by the deed. The borrowing a part of the sum due on those from Tabb, and giving Corbin Griffin as security to him, could not place Griffin in a worse situation than he was before, if in fact he afterwards paid off the new bond. That fact is not doubted by the commissioner. According to every principle of justice and equity, it is of no importance whether Corbin Griffin paid off from his own money the sum of £ 250., on the nineteenth day of March 1798, or the same sum, with its interest, on the sixth day of May and twentieth day of August 1799. The account F must be corrected in this particular.

"The next question to which I have turned my attention is, what are the principal subjects with which the trustees are to be charged. The account marked B, in the commissioner's report, charges them with four principal subjects, that is, the value of the ship Charles Carter, of the brig Helen, the value and rents of the Norfolk property, and the rents of the Hanover town property. I have reflected on each of these subjects, and will briefly state the result of my reflections on each. And first, as to the Charles Carter. This ship, with all her tackle, apparel and furniture, was conveyed by the deed. It was dated on the fifteenth day of November 1797, though not recorded in York, until the nineteenth day of February 1798; the ship then lying in James river. It does not appear to have been recorded elsewhere than in York at any time. On the seventh day of January 1798, two executions were levied on the ship, by the marshal of the circuit court of the United States, in behalf of Robert Burton, and Donald & Burton; and on the nineteenth of the same month, a libel was filed against her by Thomas Blane, on two bottomry 506 *bonds, in the Federal District court then sitting at Williamsburg. To that libel Alexander Macaulay himself was made a party respondent, and he filed his answer on the eighth day of February. He does not, in his answer, set up the claim of his own trustees, nor make any mention of the deed; but he gives the history of the bottomry bonds, and seems to admit the claim of the libellant to be a just one. But William Nelson and others, styling themselves the Dismal Swamp Land Company, did file their counter-claim, under the said deed of trust. The ground of their claim was, that the object of the deed of trust, inter alia, was to secure John Jamieson a large sum of money, which debt to Jamieson, consisted in reality, for the most part, of a debt due from said Macaulay to the said company, and so they were beneficially included in the said deed. This claim brought directly before the District court the question as to the validity of the deed, and which of the three liens was the preferable one. The District court decided in favour of the libellant, and dismissed the claim of Nelson and others, and the ship was sold in March 1798. The case was carried by appeal to the Circuit court, where the claim of Nelson seems not to have been prosecuted, and that Court reversed the decision, and decided in favour of Donald & Burton, which decree was affirmed by the Supreme court, in February 1808.

"It is sought to charge the trustees with the value of this vessel, on the ground that they neglected to prosecute the claim by appeal. It does not appear by any means certain, that if they had done so they could have succeeded. But the claim under the deed was asserted (though not by them), before the District court, and adjudged against it, and I do not know that it can be required of trustees to subject the trust fund to the expense of carrying on a litigious controversy in appellate courts, and where the result is very uncertain, the 507 *inferior court having decided against the claim. But however this may be, Macaulay was then alive; there is not the least reason to suppose that he wished the trustees to interpose this claim. Notwithstanding the deed, he acted almost until the day of his death, in transacting his own affairs, and (as the plaintiffs themselves contend,) disposed of some of the property, and discharged some portion of the debts without their interference. The proof in the cause is not sufficient to satisfy the mind of the Court, that the trustees actually accepted the trust, until after the death of the grantor, notwithstanding the remark made by the defendant Griffin, that 'the trustees used their best exertions' to prevent the sale. The Court cannot think it would be equitable to charge them with the value of this ship, seeing that they have not received one cent of the proceeds of the sale; that they did not at that time act as trustees, and consequently, could not be chargeable with neglect; and that the grantor under whom the plaintiffs claim, and whom they represent, neither required, nor wished that they should assert any claim.

"Next as to the brig Helen: She too was conveyed by the deed, and a document returned by the commissioner, proves that she cleared out from City Point, on the twenty-fifth day of June 1798. This was before the death of Macaulay, and before the trustees accepted the trust. I have seen no proof to shew that the trustees ever received anything on account of the brig or her cargo; and none that they were guilty of gross negligence in not recovering possession of her. I am of opinion that they should not be charged with her value.

"The next question sought to be charged against the trustees, is the Norfolk property. This property is conveyed to the trustees in the following terms: 'doth grant, bargain and sell unto, &c., all those messages, tenements and lots, situate, 508 lying and being in the town *of Norfolk,' &c. The deed, by its terms, would seem to be a conveyance of the lots, &c., in fee simple. In point of fact the grantor had no fee simple property in Norfolk, and consequently could convey none. As I understand it, the following was the condition of that property: One Andrew Martin had leased, in March 1786, to Patrick Macaulay, the lot in question for the term of twelve years, at the annual rent of £ 40. and the taxes; to which lease there was a covenant, that at the end of the term, Martin might take the tenement, on paying for the improvements erected by the said Macaulay, or if he did not think proper to take them, then Macaulay, or his executors or administrators, might retain possession of the lot, paying the sum of £ 40. annual rent. In March 1796, Alexander Macaulay, as surviving partner of Patrick Macaulay & Co., conveyed these leasehold premises to John Nivison, in trust to pay the sum of £ 500., which the said Alexander owed to David Patterson, and to secure the further sum of £ 210., for which Patterson was bound as surety for said Alexander Macaulay, to one Wallace. On the seventh day of July 1798, ten days before the death of Alexander Macaulay, he executed another deed as administrator of Patrick Macaulay, to Nivison as trustee. This deed recites, that John Hamilton had become his security in two bonds of £ 250. each, with interest from September 1796, to David Patterson, and to indemnify the said Hamilton the deed conveys to the trustee his leasehold interest in the said lot, with all the accruing rents and profits, with power to sell on ten days notice, for ready money, on default of payment of the first bond. This deed, as well as the former one to Nivison, was recorded in Norfolk. What estate or right passed to the trustees Griffin and Nelson, on the day that they accepted the trust, under the deed of November 1797? They did not accept until after Macau-lay's death. Before that period he had, in the double character of surviving 509 *partner and of administrator of Patrick Macaulay, parted with the chattel interest belonging to his brother's estate. The legal title was in Nivison, and I do not perceive that their equity, or that of their cestuis que trust was superior to that of Nivison, and his cestuis que trust; if they could object to the Norfolk deeds that they passed Patrick Macaulay's property to pay a debt of Alexander Macaulay, the very same objection might be made by Nivison, Patterson and Hamilton, to the Yorktown deed. Nivison then having the legal title, and at least equal equity, Griffin and Nelson could only have an equity of redemption in the Norfolk property; or if Nivison should sell as the trustee under either deed of trust, they could only have a right to the surplus of the proceeds of the sale, after paying off the debt for which the said property was conveyed in trust.

"What then became of this property? It must be remembered that Macaulay died ten days after the last deed to Nivison. He had previously conveyed all of his property real and personal, to trustees; there was nothing left that was tangible, for an administrator to act on, and accordingly his estate was committed to the hands of the sheriff of York. Patterson was obliged to look to Hamilton the surety of Macaulay, for the payment of his £ 500. with the accruing interest, for it could not be got from Macaulay's estate, and Hamilton would rely on the deeds to Nivison for his indemnity. The first bond to Patterson became due on the seventh day of July 1799, and Hamilton, on paying it off, might immediately call on Nivison to sell the leasehold interest for cash, on ten days notice. It is probable that this was the course of things, and accordingly, although no deed is produced from Nivison to any purchaser, yet we find that on the twenty-second day of April 1802, John Hamilton as attorney in fact for Thomas Hamilton, conveyed this very chattel interest to James Caton & Co., for the 510 *consideration of two thousand and twenty dollars, less than the amount of Macaulay's bonds to Patterson, for which John Hamilton had been security. This deed recites that Nivison had sold the property under the deed of trust to him, and that Thomas Hamilton had become the purchaser. By the sale from Thomas Hamilton to Caton & Co., John Hamilton most probably became indemnified. There is nothing to shew that Macaulay's debt to Patterson was overpaid by the sale to Thomas Hamilton, and if there was no surplus, Griffin and Nelson could get nothing from the Norfolk property. They had not the legal title, and their equitable claim could produce no fruit; and yet the plaintiffs claim, and the commissioner reports a large sum against them, on account of this property. I am of opinion that this claim should be totally rejected.

"The next subject, though of inferior importance, is the Hanover town property. The lot there was owned by Macaulay, and passed by the deeds. It was the duty of the trustees, or of the one who acted, to sell this property. It was not done until October 1811, when it was sold for £ 49. 10. The defendant Griffin alleges, that he offered it for sale in 1799, but was only offered one hundred dollars for it, and allowed it to remain in the possession of William B. Christian, who then occupied it, and who had occupied it from a previous period, namely 1796. Christian had been the partner of Macaulay, and continued on the premises until his death in 1805, without paying rent. Griffin says he left Christian in possession to take care of them; and takes credit for obtaining more for them when sold, than he was offered at the previous period. The allegations of Mr. Griffin on this subject, are not proved; but it is proved that the property was very unsaleable in that rapidly decaying village. Although Mr. Brand averaged the rents at forty dollars for the first part of the term, and thirty dollars for the residue, yet 511 he does not say that it *was easy to get a tolerable tenant for it at any time, and we know that in such a place it must have been extremely difficult. What then should be the price that Mr. Griffin should pay for his neglect in not selling this property at an early period? I do not think that he ought to be required to pay the estimated annual rent; the interest of the money for which the property sold, appears to me to be a better criterion. The charge against the trustees for the rents should be struck out, and they should be charged with interest on £ 49. 10., (the price for which it was sold,) from the end of one year after the death of Macaulay, till the day of sale.

"The next question which I shall consider is, whether the money received by Mr. Griffin from the treasury of the United States, on account of the unlawful seizure and detention of the ship Louisa, by the embargo of the French government of 1794, and for which compensation was allowed by the commissioners sitting under the Louisiana convention between France and the United States, passed or not, under the deed of the fifteenth day of November 1797, to the trustees of Macaulay. The words of the deed are, 'the said Alexander Macaulay, by these presents, doth assign and grant unto the said Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, &c. all debts due to him the said Alexander Macaulay, &c., all which debts are in a schedule hereto annexed, expressed.' There was no schedule annexed to the deed. Either all of his debts of every description passed by the deed, or none whatever passed. The first part of the clause is sufficient to pass all his debts, and the subsequent clause, stating that they are expressed in a schedule, is merely an untrue affirmation, which is therefore inoperative, and ought not to be allowed to qualify and limit the general assignment of all his debts. Then the question arises, whether his claim on the French government for the illegal 512 detention *of his vessel, be a debt due to him which was assignable?

"I am saved the trouble of a laborious and unprofitable discussion of this subject, by the recent decision of Maitland v. Newton, 3 Leigh 714, founded on the decision of Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Peters' R. 193. In the former case, the debtor had assigned 'all his estate real and personal, upon trust, that the trustees shall collect all debts due, or to become due to the grantor, on account of transactions prior to the deed, shall sell the real and personal estate, and institute suits at law, or in equity, for the recovery of the debts,' &c. This deed was executed in 1809. The board of commissioners under the treaty of 1819, between Spain and the United States, awarded to the administrator of the grantor, a sum of money, on account of claims on the Spanish government, for spoiliations before the date of the deed. The Court decided that that money passed by the deed. Judge Carr said that he had no idea of a right or interest vested in a man, which would not pass under a conveyance of all his real and personal estate. Upon what ground, I would ask, is it that such a claim, as is the subject of controversy in that case, would be embraced by the terms, 'all his personal estate?' Upon what other ground than that such a claim is a debt, which although it cannot be enforced in a Court of justice, yet is something due from the government that does the wrong to the citizens of the other country who sustained the loss, and who is therefore entitled to remuneration. In that point of view, the claim of Mr. Griffin as trustee, to this money, may I think be supported. The money was properly paid to him, and he is bound to apply it to the objects specified in the trust deed, and as such to account for it."

The Chancellor then proceeded to consider the exception of Thomas Griffin, and 513 having passed upon *them, he took up the exceptions of M'Neale. Upon his first exception, he says:

"As to the exceptions of the defendant John M'Neale, executor of John Jamieson: This defendant excepts, in the first place, to account N, because the commissioner regards alone the evidence furnished by the books of Macaulay of the amount due to Jamieson, and disregards the evidence of the deed of trust as establishing the sum of £ 5000. to be due him. The Court has already expressed its belief that the sums recited in that deed were not the sums really due to the preferred creditors. The Court is strongly impressed with the belief that the sum of £ 173. 10. 7. was all that was due from Macaulay to Jamieson on the fifteenth day of May 1797, on private account. That is the balance appearing on the books of Macaulay, and a copy of the account shewing that balance is admitted by the defendant M'Neale, to have been made out by Corbin Griffin and transmitted to him; that act of Corbin Griffin affords a strong presumption that the said Griffin believed that balance to be the true one, and M'Neale has not been able, from the books or papers of his testator, to charge Macaulay with a cent more on private account. But the Court is of opinion that the papers in these causes exhibit strong evidence to prove that Jamieson did lend to Macaulay, in the year 1796, or 1797, a large sum of money, probably £ 3000., of the funds of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and that the deed of trust was intended to secure to Jamieson the re-payment of that sum, with interest, as well as of the private debt aforesaid, with interest. This exception, therefore, so far as it objects to the failure to bring the Dismal Swamp Land Company's debt into the account N, ought to be sustained, but so far as it makes any other objection it should be overruled."

514 *Having passed upon all the exceptions, the Chancellor recommitted the report of commissioner Baker with instructions to reform the same according to the opinion of the Court; and Thomas Griffin was directed to render accounts of his administration of Corbin Griffin's estate, and also a continuation of his account as trustee. And M'Neale was directed to render an account of all moneys loaned to or received by Alexander Macaulay from the Dismal Swamp Land Company by direction of his testator, and for which Jamieson may have been in any way responsible to said company. And the commissioner was directed to state whether there was any evidence shewing that the trustee Thomas Nelson took any active part in the execution of the trust created by the deed of November 15th, 1797; and if any how far he was chargeable.

In 1836 Thomas Griffin died, and in 1837 the suits of A. Macaulay's administrator and E. Macaulay's executor, were revived against Robert P. Waller, executor of said Thomas Griffin, and as administrator de bonis non of Corbin Griffin.

In December 1837 commissioner Baker returned another report in the cause; but he having gone out of office before the report was completed, it was objected to by the defendant on that ground, and the Court sustained the objection, and directed one of the commissioners of the Court to perform the order of the 3d of December 1833. And it was further ordered, that the defendant Robert P. Waller render before the commissioner all the accounts and statements required of his testator Thomas Griffin deceased, by the order aforesaid; that he produce before the commissioner all the books and papers of Alexander Macaulay, Corbin Griffin and Thomas Griffin, which may be in his possession or under his control, and in relation to such accounts and statements, books and papers, he submit to *be examined in solemn form 515 before the said commissioner, if he shall be required.

In obedience to this decree, commissioner Shore, in December 1838, made his report. He reported that it did not appear that the trustee Nelson took any active part in the execution of the trust created, other than uniting with his co-trustee in a power of attorney to Corbin Griffin, to make sale of the shares of the Dismal Swamp Canal, and to sell some Norfolk property, and in advertising property for sale and in uniting in conveyances therefor. It seemed probable that all the trust funds received during his life were accounted for. And that all these funds had been received by Griffin, or directly by Jamieson.

The commissioner reported that it appeared from the books of Macaulay that he was debtor to Jerdone, September 25th, 1795, £ 347. 00. 9½., and that he was debtor to Jerdone, Holt & Douglass, £ 1139. 16. 3½. in September 1794, and to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, on the 23d of June 1797, £ 536. 1.

The commissioner reported statement A, being an account of the trustees with the estate of Alexander Macaulay, making the balance against them on the 31st of December 1803, 1659 dollars 74 cents, of which 1361 dollars 57 cents was principal. Statement B was the same account, increased by a single additional charge, making the amount due thereon at the same date, 2040 dollars 64 cents, of which 1684 dollars 37 cents was principal. In these statements interest on the amount of the sale of the Hanover town property was charged from one year after A. Macaulay's death. Statement C was an account of Thomas Griffin, surviving trustee of A. Macaulay. In this account the trustee is charged with interest upon the amount of the sale of the Hanover town property, from 17th of July 1803 until 17th October 1811, the time when it was sold.

And the commissioner excluded a credit 516 claimed by Griffin of *4100 dollars paid to Corbin Griffin's administrator, in July 1819, on account of the debt stated in the deed of 1797 to be due to him for Macaulay. This sum Thomas Griffin had received about the time he credited it in his account, from the government of the United States, on account of the ship Louisa, belonging to Alexander Macaulay, detained by the French government in the lifetime of Macaulay, and for which compensation was allowed under the treaty for the purchase of Louisiana. It was excluded on the ground that Corbin Griffin had been fully paid as early as November 23d, 1800, all that was due to him from Macaulay, either for a debt due or for money paid by Corbin Griffin as his surety. The amount due on this account was 7367 dollars 28 cents, of which 5336 dollars 91 cents is principal.

Statement E was an account taken from the books of Alexander Macaulay, shewing how much was due from Macaulay to Corbin Griffin according to these books. This statement shewed that there was due to Corbin Griffin at the date of the deed, the sum of £ 254. 15. 3¼. That there were debits for merchandise on the same books, at sundry times between the date of the deed and the death of Macaulay on the 17th of July 1798, £ 16. 8. 3., leaving due £ 238. 7. 0¾., = 794 dollars 51 cents. There was a further credit to Corbin Griffin upon the books of Macaulay, of £ 630. 16. as of the 24th November 1798, which was excluded by the commissioner on the ground that Thomas Griffin admitted in his answer to Anderson's bill, that it was advanced to the trustees. The commissioner states that the defendants' counsel relies on the fact that the entry on the books of Macaulay, was made by Miller Brown, the clerk of Macaulay, who was then dead. Statement G is an account of the debt due from A. Macaulay to C. Griffin, according to Macaulay's books, and of the moneys paid by Griffin 517 as surety of Macaulay; and *the payments paid by the trustee to said Griffin. On this account from which the payment in July 1819 to Corbin Griffin's administrator, who was Thomas Griffin, and the sum of £ 630. 16., above mentioned, were excluded, Corbin Griffin was found indebted on the 31st December 1801, 2997 dollars 80 cents, of which 2849 dollars 61 cents was principal. By this account the debt due to Griffin, and the money paid by him as surety of Macaulay, amounted to 5026 dollars 66 cents, and the payments made to him by the trustees amounted to 7876 dollars 41 cents.

Griffin's administrator excepted to the report for failing to credit his intestate for various sums which he claimed to be due to Corbin Griffin from Macaulay. Among them was, 1st. The item of £ 630. 16., appearing by Macaulay's books to be due to Corbin Griffin. 2d. That the commissioner should have treated the claim of £ 2000., referred to in the deed of trust of November 1797, as due to Corbin Griffin from Macaulay, as really and bona fide due to him. 3d. That he should have debited the trust subject with 4100 dollars paid on 26th July 1819 by Thomas Griffin, in part satisfaction of the debt due to Corbin Griffin from Macaulay. 4th. To all the items in account G, bearing date more than five years before the death of Corbin Griffin, and which, after deducting the debits, constitute the aggregate balance of principal and interest of that account reported against him of 2997 dollars 80 cents, the defendant Waller excepted, because the same were barred by the statute of limitations; and that the statute required the Court to strike them out of the account. These items were from September 21st, 1798, to December 31st, 1800. Corbin Griffin lived until 1813, and the suit was not brought until 1819.

Anderson, administrator of Macaulay, also excepted to the report; but it is not necessary to notice his exceptions.

518 *In March 1839, Waller, as the executor of Thomas Griffin, and as the administrator of Corbin Griffin, answered the bill of Anderson as administrator of Alexander Macaulay. He says, That in regard to any payments which have been made by Thomas Griffin the trustee, to Corbin Griffin, on account of his debt secured by the deed of trust of November 1797, whether in fact due to the said Corbin or not, they cannot now be recovered back by the plaintiff, because the claim is barred by the statute of limitations, which is relied on as if formally pleaded; and he insists that all payments made by the said Thomas Griffin the trustee, according to the provisions of the trust deed under which he acted, are valid payments, and that the estate of said Thomas Griffin cannot be required to refund them; for whose estate the defendant also claims the benefit of the act of limitations as if duly pleaded.

Waller also answered the bill of Elizabeth Macaulay, relying upon the same grounds of defence as in the case of Anderson, administrator of A. Macaulay.

On the 3d of February 1841, the Court refused a motion of the defendant to compel the plaintiffs to make the Dismal Swamp Land Company, Jerdone and others, parties defendants to their suits. And on rules severally made upon the plaintiffs and defendants, the Court, on the 8th of February, allowed the plaintiffs to prove by oral testimony in Court, the assignment by Jerdone to Elizabeth Macaulay, of the debt secured by the deed of November 1797; and allowed the defendant Waller to file in the cause the papers in the case of the Dismal Swamp Land Company against Macaulay's administrator, saving to the plaintiffs the right to object at the hearing to said papers as evidence. And it was admitted by the plaintiffs that the signature "Francis Jerdone," to his answer in said cause, was in the handwriting of said Jerdone. And thereupon the plaintiffs urging the Court to proceed with the trial of these 519 *causes, the defendant Robert P. Waller, executor and administrator de bonis non of Thomas and Corbin Griffin, applied for a continuance of the causes until the next term, upon grounds stated in writing; but which it is not necessary to state: And the Court having refused the continuance, the said Waller, and William Major sheriff of the county of Culpeper, and as such administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of John Jamieson deceased, severally filed their petitions for a rehearing of the decrees made in these causes on the 29th of June and 2d of July 1829, and on the 3d of December 1833. The grounds assigned by Waller, are that:

1. The whole of the said decrees are erroneous so far as they recognize, admit or establish, a right in the administrator or distributees, or either of them, of A. Macaulay deceased, to call in question the validity of the deed made by the said A. Macaulay, on the 15th of November 1797, under the circumstances disclosed by the pleadings and evidence in the case in which they are plaintiffs.

2. So far as they recognize, admit or establish, a right in Elizabeth Macaulay, as assignee of one of the creditors and cestuis que trust provided for in said deed, to call in question the validity thereof.

3. So far as they reject the claims of Corbin Griffin and John Jamieson to the sums of £ 2000. and £ 5000., respectively admitted by said deed to be due to them.

4. So far as they recognize the remaining books of A. Macaulay, (though it is proved that most of his books were lost or destroyed at the two fires in York, of 1804 and 1814,) as "the books of A. Macaulay."

5. So far as they establish a charge against Thomas Griffin, trustee, &c., of 9 dollars 90 cents per annum, from July 17th, 1799, to October 17th, 1811, as and for, or in lieu of, the yearly rents and profits of the house and lot in Hanover town, 520 sold by the trustee *Thomas Griffin in the year 1811, in the face of evidence that the house and lot were not, and could not be rented out during that time, or sold before that time.

6. So far as they direct an account to be taken of the assets of Corbin Griffin's estate, when it appeared on the face of the pleadings and on the evidence, that every item of charge which arose or could arise against Corbin Griffin's estate, arose and accrued more than five years before his death, (in fact, more than twelve years.) And

7. Because it appears by the deed of 1797, that the trust funds, after satisfying the preferred creditors, were to be applied to the satisfaction of the other creditors of Macaulay, and those creditors have neither been made parties, nor has any provision been made in the said decrees, nor steps taken before the commissioner to contend said creditors before the Court, or the commissioner, and allow them to prove their several demands.

It is unnecessary to state the grounds for a rehearing assigned by the administrator of Jamieson, except that the suit was defective for want of parties; and that the decrees disaffirm the validity of the deed of November 1797, and permits the plaintiff to introduce the books of Macaulay as evidence to impeach it.

The causes were argued at the November term 1841, and came on for decision in January 1842, when the Chancellor—Robertson—after discussing the principles of law on the pleadings and proofs, and holding that the deed of the 15th of November 1797, was not conclusive as to the amount of the debts due to the preferred creditors, proceeded:

"It remains to consider what is the extent or mode of relief which this Court may properly administer? What were the debts really due to preferred creditors at the date of the deed? To what extent have they been paid? What sums are now due 521 from the parties *before the Court?

And to whom are the balances payable? These are the enquiries to which the Court is now to direct its attention.

"First then, as to the claims of the preferred creditors. There are three reports of commissioners among the papers. That of commissioner Baker of October 1826, under the decree of Chancellor Taylor, of March 1825; a second one of the same commissioner, made in 1836, under the decree of Judge Brokenbrough, of December 1833; this being regarded informal, a third was made and returned by commissioner Shore, in November 1838, under the order of Judge Nicholas, of July 1838, directing him to perform the decree of December 1833. Pursuing the directions of this last decree, commissioner Shore has regarded the deed of 1797 as prima facie evidence merely, and resorted to the books of Macaulay to ascertain what sum was due the preferred creditors. The debt due Corbin Griffin, instead of £ 2000., 6666 dollars 67 cents is stated, as it appears on Macaulay's ledger E, according to the commissioner's view of the entries at 794 dollars 51 cents. By another statement embracing all payments subsequent to the deed by Corbin Griffin, on account of suretyship, and all payments to him out of the trust subject, a balance is shewn against him of 2997 dollars 80 cents, with interest from the thirty-first of December 1800, on 2849 dollars 61 cents. Satisfied as I am from all the facts and circumstances in proof, that the sum mentioned in the deed was neither due to nor claimed by Corbin Griffin, I concur in Judge Brockenbrough's opinion, that the books of Macaulay under the circumstances, were proper evidence. The representative of Corbin Griffin has produced no account or memoranda whatever shewing the nature or amount of the debt, but relies solely on the deed, though in his first answer he cautiously abstains from asserting a belief that the amount nominally inserted in the 522 deed was *really due; contending himself with remarking that the deed itself acknowledging the existence of the debts therein mentioned, it was not for the trustees to enquire whether the debts were due or not, but merely to execute the trusts. The amended answer is nearly as vague and unsatisfactory. In that he says, 'there appeared on Macaulay's books a balance due Corbin Griffin of , but he does not know that more was not due; on the contrary, he has every reason to believe that the sum of £ 2000. provided for by the deed, was actually due,' and then proceeds to assign reasons entirely inconclusive, namely: first, that he cannot imagine that Macaulay would by his own deed, shew a greater amount against himself than actually existed; and 2dly, because the plaintiff himself admits that amount when he says, that to secure certain sums of money amounting nominally and really to £ 10,000., Macaulay conveyed by deed of trust, property more than ten times that amount. Thomas Griffin was the acting trustee in the deed, shewn to have had some knowledge of the affairs of Macaulay, at least as far back as 1789. He was the son and only child of Corbin Griffin; resided with him, and after his death qualified as his administrator. In his first answer, he says that Macaulay frequently told him that the persons named in the deed, Corbin Griffin, Jamieson and Jerdone, had been very friendly to him by lending him large sums of money, and becoming his sureties, and then adds: that as to Corbin Griffin, this respondent knows, certainly, that at time of the execution of the deed of trust, the said Alexander Macaulay was indebted to him in the sum of , as fully appears by the books of the said Macaulay himself, from which a copy of the account of the said Corbin Griffin with the said Macaulay has been extracted, and is hereto annexed, marked B. Corbin Griffin is proved to have stood high in the confidence of Macaulay; and both he and

523 Thomas *Griffin must have had access to the books of Macaulay, both before and after Macaulay's death. This appears by their entries in ledger E. All the books and papers of Macaulay, as well as those of Corbin Griffin, are proved, or must be presumed, after their deaths, to have come into the hands of Thomas Griffin. If he either could not, or would not, produce any account, memoranda or evidence to ascertain the nature and amount of the debt, every principle of justice seems to require that the books of Macaulay himself should be resorted to as the best guide, though perhaps not an unerring one, to conduct us to the truth. What is the balance shewn by those books, is itself a matter of contest. The apparent balance is considerably more than stated by the commissioner. I dissent with the commissioner, and consider the apparent balance as that for which Corbin Griffin's estate should have credit. The account as appearing upon ledger E, excluding all entries made subsequently to Macaulay's death, sustains the commissioner's statement. It consists of numerous debits against Corbin Griffin, commencing January 7th, 1793, and ending April 1798, for merchandize, the eight last of which, from October to April 1798, inclusive, are proved to be in the handwriting of Thomas Griffin. All the residue as well as the credit of £ 694. 8. 9¼., posted under date of January 1, 1793, seem to be in the handwriting of Macaulay's regular clerk, Miller Brown. Besides the credit just mentioned, there is another of £ 630. 1. 6., posted immediately before the first, under the date of twenty-fourth November 1798. The commissioner allowed the first only £ 694. 8. 9¼., and deducting the aggregate debits down to April 1798, £ 4556. 1. 9., made the balance in favour of Corbin Griffin, £ 238. 7. 0¼., or 794 dollars 51 cents, as stated in his report. The second credit seems to have been disallowed, either because it was posted

524 after the death of Macaulay, or because supposed to be in *the handwriting of one of the Griffins, or for the reason stated by commissioner Baker. Thomas Griffin, in his examination before commissioner Baker, says in answer to the 35th interrogatory, that it is in the handwriting of Miller Brown. This is probably the fact, though Shield's deposition would seem to ascribe the entry to Corbin Griffin. The journal and day book of that year are lost or destroyed. Whether the items composing it, and which may have been various, (the entry as posted is 'sundries,') bore date before or after Macaulay's death, July 1798, they may have been for money advanced under the trust deed to Macaulay, or to pay debts for which Corbin Griffin was bound as surety, and consequently a just charge against the trust fund. If in the handwriting of Brown, the clerk of both Macaulay and of the trustees, the entry ought certainly to be received as correct; even if in the handwriting of Corbin Griffin, who seems also to have been authorized, both by Macaulay and his trustees, to make entries, the entry ought not to be discredited on the supposition that he abused the trust reposed in him. Commissioner Baker in his first report, assigns a different reason for rejecting this credit, namely: the supposed admission of Thomas Griffin, in his answer, that the money was advanced by Corbin Griffin to the trustees after Macaulay's death, and their failure to credit it in their account. If true, this might be a reason for charging them, but not for refusing the credit to Corbin Griffin, whose funds may have been so advanced and applied. But this alleged admission is stated as a matter of belief only, qualified by the remark, that he can give no information of the particulars of the entry, and a positive disclaimer, on oath, in answer to the 35th interrogatory, of any knowledge of the transaction. Admission of a personal representative to bind his testator's or intestate's estate, ought to be unqualified and positive.

But I feel constrained to say, without 525 relying *on the evidence recently thrown into these causes by Thomas Griffin's executor, tending to convict him of utter incapacity for business, that the defect of his memory and the inaccuracy and inconsistency of his statements, to say the least of them, are too often manifested in these causes, to allow much weight to any admission of his affecting the estate or character of another. The credit in question cannot be refused without reflecting harshly upon the integrity of Corbin Griffin, as well perhaps as affecting considerably the pecuniary interests of his estate. If denied, it throws upon him the imputation of making a false entry to swell his claim against the estate of a deceased friend; and moreover, unless the £ 2000. mentioned in the deed was really due to him, fixes upon him the guilt of receiving largely more than the just amount of his claim. I am strongly impressed with the belief, that Corbin Griffin at the time of his death, owed nothing to the estate of Macaulay, but that his account was finally closed at the date of his last receipt, twenty-third November 1800, on an estimate of his debt, assuming the apparent balance in his favour in ledger E, and adding thereto his payments as surety for Macaulay. There are strong circumstances independently of the high character of Corbin Griffin for integrity, or rather consistently with that character, to sustain this view. Corbin Griffin died in 1813. The last payment he appears ever to have received from the trustees of Macaulay, was made on the twenty-third of November 1800. Up to that time all payments to him, for which his receipts are produced, amounted on a rough estimate (without adding interest,) to 7,876 00

His payments on account of suretyship, (without interest added,) 4,129 00

Balance due him by ledger E, as stated by commissioner Shore, 794 51

4,923 51

526 *Shewing an excess overpaid, by this statement, of 2,952 49

Allow the rejected credit, £ 630. 1. 6., 2,106 00

And there is an excess only of $852 49

But this balance will be still farther reduced by allowing interest on the credit, £ 630. 1. 6., and probably entirely extinguished by allowing interest on the credit of £ 694. 8. 9¼., posted under the date of 1st January 1793, stating an interest account according to mercantile usage, or the method generally adopted in such cases by the commissioner of the Court. To present another view, take the balance by commissioner Shore against Macaulay, on the 23d November

1800,. 2,849 61
Deduct credit of £ 630. 1. 6., 2,100 25

Leaves, $ 749 36
Deduct further interest on the 2100 dollars,

(£ 630. 1. 6.,) and on £ 694. 8. 9., and the balance will probably be extinguished or turned in Corbin Griffin's favour, according to the date assumed for commencing the interest. His receipt for the last payment made him, 23d November 1800, has manifestly been erased and altered in several places. Among other alterations, the words 'in part' have been substituted for some others, not now distinguishable. The solution offered, that the words erased might have been 'on account,' and the change made to avoid the repetition of the same word, which occurs immediately after 'of my account,' does not seem to accord with the appearance of the paper; nor is it probable that so suspicious an erasure and alteration would have been hazarded merely for the sake of euphony.

527 *'Again, very shortly after that date, namely, in December 1801, payments were made to Jamieson, apparently in cash, to the amount of 1156 dollars 66 cents, and in property, to the amount of 6500 dollars, embracing very nearly the whole trust subject. This is said, by Thomas Griffin, to have been done with the assent of Corbin Griffin; but is it probable, that Corbin Griffin, acquainted as he was with the condition of Macaulay's affairs, would have given such assent, unless his prior claims had been satisfied? Is it credible, if he really claimed the £ 2000. mentioned in the deed, more especially, if, upon the basis of that claim and others, there was, as is made to appear by one of the statements of Thomas Griffin, at the date of the receipt of November 1800, and after deducting the payment therein mentioned, a balance due him of upwards of (£ 1840.) 6000 dollars? At that time the recovery of the claim of Macaulay's estate for French spoliations in 1794, could not have been anticipated. It does not seem to have been known to Thomas Griffin, until 1813, and was not received until 1819. But for its fortunate recovery, this supposed balance due Corbin Griffin in 1800, would have remained, as at his death thirteen years after, forever unextinguished. His assent to the payments of Jamieson, over whom he had preference, would have been, under the circumstances, a gratuitous surrender of the entire amount. The conduct of Thomas Griffin himself, the contradictory statements in which he has involved himself, by attempting to establish a larger balance in favour of his father's estate, at the date of the receipt just mentioned, are circumstances too significant to be overlooked. As early as August 1799, in a letter to Jamieson, he expresses his hope that the trustees will be enabled to close the accounts between Macaulay's estate and his father's soon. In his first answer to the bill of

Anderson administrator, &c., filed in 528 1820, he admits that *upon a settlement of the trust transactions, there will be found a balance in his hands, yet undisposed of, of ; which he says, 'is claimed by the Dismal Swamp Land Company, as well as by Mrs. Macaulay, both of which parties have forbidden this respondent to pay the same to the other. This respondent has therefore hitherto omitted to discharge the same, and prays the decree of the Court in the premises.' In his answer to Mrs. Macaulay's bill, there is a similar admission. With his first answer he filed an account, (A,) in which the trustees are credited, under date of 26th July 1819, as follows: By cash paid T. Griffin, balance due estate of C. Griffin, as his administrator, £951. 13. 9. This exhibit he withdrew from the papers, and in lieu of it filed with his amended answer in 1825, another account, in which the credit under the same date is thus altered: By cash paid T. Griffin, administrator of Corbin Griffin, £1230, making a difference in the credit of £278. 6. 3., and in effect changing the character of the credit to a payment on account, or in part, instead of a payment in full, without suggesting any reason for the change, or even noticing it. On a rule, in March 1829, to produce the original exhibit (A) and other papers withdrawn by him, he returned it with an affidavit, that he verily believed it was in the exact condition in which it was when he withdrew it; yet, comparing it with an official copy, it appears to have undergone very material alterations; the item of credit of the 26th July 1819 having been altogether suppressed or omitted, together with some other items. In the same affidavit he says that the exhibit filed with the amended answer, with some slight differences, and some explanations, is the same with the original exhibit, (A,) as far as the first goes; yet, as already stated, the substituted account augments the credit in July 1819, 270 odd pounds, and changes the form and meaning of the entry in the original exhibit, (A,) a payment 529 *of the balance due his father's estate in July 1819. Satisfied with the sum of £951. 13. 9., and admitting in his first answer, a balance of the trust funds in his hands, subject to the claims of the Dismal Swamp Land Company or Mrs. Macaulay, he exhibits a statement, (C,) founded on the alleged balance in 1800, and shewing, after crediting the amount in the substituted account of £1230., in July 1819, a balance at the last date due Corbin Griffin, of £2740. 2. 9. The entry in the substituted account of £1230., has been altered, as well as the same sum in the account (C) just mentioned, and the date of his own receipt to himself for that sum, is changed from 26th July 1819 to 26th July 1820. The whole sum recovered on account of French spoliations was but little upwards of 5000 dollars; very insufficient to pay the balance pretended to be due in 1800; yet there are several depositions or affidavits, those of Page, Wilson, Butler, &c., going very strongly to prove that just previous to its receipt he procured the Dismal Swamp Land Company to join him, as sureties in a bond, to enable him to receive it, on the suggestion that the whole, or a considerable portion at least, would properly belong to them, under the provision of the deed nominally securing Jamieson, and that he afterwards declined paying them, allowing that he had paid about 2500 dollars to his father's estate, while one of his accounts shewed a payment of £951., (3344 dollars 33 cents), and the other of £1230., (4100 dollars.) These affidavits are excepted to; but the exceptions made for the first time, in October 1841, seem to be too late; the affidavits appearing to have been before commissioner Baker in 1826, and as to two of them, Wilson's and Brown's, the objection urged, of interest, does not apply, since they held shares only in a fiduciary or representative character.

530 *'Before leaving the subject of Corbin Griffin's claims, I should not omit to notice the credit claimed for his estate, by his administrator, founded on the receipt of Benjamin Waller, for £195. 9. 2. and a credit on the back of a forthcoming bond; both of which are given for payments, by Corbin Griffin, on 19th March 1798. These sums, amounting, together, to £250. seem to have been, on that day, borrowed of Philip Tabb, and a bond given for the amount by Macaulay, with Corbin Griffin, as surety. The bond was afterwards paid by Corbin Griffin, £150. 10. 2. on 6th May, and £119. 10. 2. 20th August 1799. The administrator, Thomas Griffin, unjustly, it seems, claimed a credit, both for the sum paid with the money borrowed, and that paid to Tabb, on the bond; and the commissioner, as erroneously refused to credit either. But Corbin Griffin is not shewn to have claimed both; nor do I presume that he committed, or meditated injustice, by taking the receipts in the first instance, in his own name. It is true, the money borrowed would appear to be Macaulay's, as he was the principal in the bond to Tabb. But it was borrowed to pay off a debt, for which Corbin Griffin was surety, and he also became a security in the new bond, which he afterwards paid. He might have taken the receipt in his own name, and claimed the credits at once, with the full expectation, as Macaulay was much embarrassed, if not insolvent, that he would be compelled to take it up, indeed, with the understanding of all parties, that he would do so; or he might have feared, that the change of the debt might endanger his security, under the deed; a danger, shewn not to be wholly ideal, since, in point of fact, the commissioner has taken that view, rejecting the credit in the first instance, because the money was Macaulay's, and in the second, because the new bond was not provided for by the deed. All that, as an honest man, it would have been incumbent on Corbin Griffin to do, if *he claimed the credit on the first payment, was to protect Macaulay against the new bond, which he did, and not claim credit for the second payment, which there is no reason to believe he ever intended. Judge Brockenbrough corrected the error of the commissioner, by directing the credit to be given once; and as to the effect, the result is the same, whether it be credited as of the first date, or of the second. Justice requires me further to say, that I see no reason to draw unfavourable conclusions against Corbin Griffin, from the fact of his taking a receipt in his own name, for the £300. paid Waller, May 1798, and for which his estate has been denied a credit, on the ground, that this sum was the price of Macaulay's slaves, sold to pay that debt. The receipt might have been literally and honestly according to the fact. Corbin Griffin might have paid the amount in anticipation of the sale, or if the sale was on credit, in anticipation of the payment, and with no view or purpose of making a fraudulent charge. It does not appear, that he ever set up a claim founded on that receipt against the trust fund.

"As to the debt secured by the deed to Jamieson, all concerned seem to have concurred in repudiating the deed, as evidence, either of its true character or amount. The sum specified in the deed, as due to him, is £5000. (16,666 dollars 67 cents). In December 1801, he received from the trustees, two payments, amounting to 1156 dollars 66 cents, probably in money, and during the same month, in addition, a half share in the Dismal Swamp Land Company, valued at 2500 dollars, and 4000 acres of land, purchased at the price of 4000 dollars, all trust funds, amounting to 7656 dollars 66 cents. In his receipt to the trustees, for the half share, and land, dated 17th December 1801, and again, in an acknowledgment under seal, dated 11th February 1804, he admitted the purchase of this property to be for the benefit of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, *and by deeds dated 20th July 1809, conveyed it to them; reciting, that the purchase was intended, after satisfying an individual debt due to himself, to pay a considerable debt due them; and also, that the debts due to himself and Corbin Griffin, individually, had been fully satisfied. These deeds were duly recorded. Corbin Griffin was named among the grantees. Neither he, nor the company of which he was a member, appear ever to have disclaimed the deed; on the contrary, the company, in their bill filed in 1823, which is made an exhibit in these causes, allege that they have never been disturbed in their enjoyment of the property. They allege also, that Thomas Griffin was a manager, and for the two years preceding their bill, the president of the company. The presumption is, that both Corbin and Thomas Griffin, have received their proportion of this property; could they have done so without conceding the right of Jamieson, so to dispose of the trust subject; and would Corbin Griffin have done so, unless his prior individual claims had in truth been satisfied?

"In 1811, a settlement was made between the company and M'Neale, executor of Jamieson, in which the payments to Jamieson, of 1156 dollars 66 cents, together with money received by him from Grimes in 1804, arising from profits of the land, were charged to his estate, and credits given for money paid Mrs. Macaulay, (her dower interest for dividends, and for his claim against Macaulay,) thus stated: 'By cash due Colonel Jamieson, from the trust on Macaulay's estate, with interest, 687 dollars 50 cents.' On the account thus stated, a balance appears against Jamieson's estate, of upwards of 1000 dollars, which the company released, by an agreement, under sale, dated at the time of the settlement, (28th May 1811,) and referring to it. The copy of this agreement filed, is verified by the signature of 'Corbin Griffin, one of the managers,' with whom the settlement was made. Now of the £5000.

*mentioned in the deed, all that was apparently ever claimed by the company, or admitted by Jamieson, was £3000., their money, as was alleged, lent by him, on their account, to Macaulay. If the deed had been regarded as fixing the real sum due, it follows, that the residue, £2000., was due to Jamieson. Had he claimed that amount instead of a balance of more than a thousand dollars, against him, on the account just mentioned, there would have appeared a much heavier balance in his favour, against the trust fund. But it appears from the entry in that account, that his claim, with interest added, against the trust on Macaulay's estate, was only 687 dollars 50 cents. The precise period to or from which the interest was computed, is not given; but computing interest on the balance appearing by Macaulay's ledger E, due from Macaulay's estate, to Jamieson, £173. 10. 3½., 578 dollars 40 cents, either from May 1797, when it seems to have been due, or from the date of the deed, November 1797, and the close approximation of the sum to that in the settled account, renders it well nigh certain, in connection with other facts in the case, that Jamieson's claim was adjusted, not according to the deed, but according to Macaulay's books. According to the deed, Jamieson's estate would have been entitled to 6666 dollars 67 cents, in 1797. His executor settles the debt as amounting in 1804, to 687 dollars 56 cents, and in his answer to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, states that the account of his testator was taken from the books of Macaulay, by Dr. Corbin Griffin; he relies on the settlement just mentioned, and affirms, that it does not appear from any thing he has been able to discover, that his testator has ever received from the sale of the trust funds, on his own account, more than his said debt of £173. 10. 7., with the interest due thereon, nor does it appear that the said trust fund has been made chargeable by his testator with any other or 534 greater sums than his *said debt, and the said sum of £3000. with the interest due, &c.

"Judge Brockenbrough laid some stress upon the circumstance that the sums provided for by the deed, were all in round numbers: And I must acknowledge, notwithstanding the severity of the strictures upon the suggestion, that this circumstance is not without its influence on my mind, connected with the array of facts and circumstances forced upon its attention by the course of the argument, or my own examination. It is passing strange, to say the least, that debts due to three different individuals, composed evidently of various items, should, with interest added to the same date, eventuate in round thousands precisely, and two of them (deducting the claim of the Dismal Swamp Land Company from the aggregate secured to Jamieson,) in the same sum, £2000. each. But throwing this out of view: The circumstances under which the deed was executed; the cotemporaneous exposition of the parties, evidenced by their acts and admissions; the fact that Corbin Griffin received no payment after the date of his receipt of 23d November 1800; the appearance of that receipt; his acquiescence in, and ratification of, payments from that time to creditors (over whom he was entitled to priority), of almost, if not entirely, the whole trust fund then existing, or expected to be realized, amounting to upwards of 7500 dollars; when, if the deed really recited his debt, he was himself entitled to much the larger part of that sum: The repeated acknowledgments of Jamieson, in his receipt to the trustees; his sealed obligation of February 1804, and his deeds of July 1809; and the subsequent settlement of his executor, M'Neale, with the Dismal Swamp Land Company, in 1811, by which Jamieson's debt was estimated at something upwards of 500 dollars, in place of £5000.: The failure of all the preferred creditors, their representatives, and the trustees, the 535 latter having possession of *Macaulay's books, to produce any book, settlement, memorandum, account or evidence, shewing the origin, nature or amount of the debts to be different from that exhibited by the books of Macaulay: The withdrawal and alteration of some of the exhibits filed in these causes; the mutilation of others; and the confused entries made and obliterated, or cancelled, after Macaulay's death, in his ledger E, the only one of his books—except a tattered day book, apparently of 1788, recently produced—which the flames, or the negligence of Thomas Griffin, has suffered to escape;—all tend to impress upon me, without being conscious of a disposition to draw overstrained inferences, or indulge in undue suspicion or harsh epithets, a settled conviction that the deed of 15th November 1797, was not designed, nor understood by the parties, to ascertain the sums due the several preferred creditors, and that the contradictory account and statements of the defendant Griffin, by no means conduce to disclose, if they were not fabricated to conceal, the truth of the transactions to which they relate.

"The claim of Jerdone, the last of the preferred creditors, assigned to his sister, Mrs. Macaulay, the original plaintiff in the second of these causes, appears to rest on a common ground with that of the two first, as respects the evidence of its amount, notwithstanding the expression of a belief by Anderson, in his bill, that the £3000. secured to Jerdone by the deed, and perhaps a greater sum, was really due to him. It is not necessary now to state minutely the reasons for my opinion. It rests in part upon the circumstances already commented on, and partly on the evidence more directly bearing upon that claim. No party in these causes, except Anderson, the representative of Macaulay, seems to have any right or interest in this question; that claim being confessedly postponed to those both of Jamieson and Corbin Griffin. The general 536 creditors under the deed, or of the estate *of Macaulay—or even his distributees, if no such creditors appear—may have an interest; that interest it is the duty of the administrator to protect. But no such creditor or distributee asserting a claim, and no party before the Court being injured, this Court perhaps can object to no disposition of any remaining fund, should there be such a fund, after satisfying the parties claiming under the deed, as may be asked by Anderson, who unites in himself the character of executor of the assignee of Jerdone, and administrator of Macaulay, upon his responsibility, in case of any future claim of creditors or distributees. This subject will be hereafter provided for.

"Considering that the account of Corbin Griffin, with the trustees, was finally and fairly closed on the 23d November 1800, and that if, in the absence of the statement according to which payments or adjustments were made of his claim, a balance should appear against his estate, after the lapse of nearly 19 years, a settlement apparently fair and final with the authorized trustees, should not be set aside, there seems to be no necessity to delay these suits by directing a new account upon the principles now stated, with a view to ascertain how the balance would stand. The decree to be rendered may at once assume that there is no balance either way, since the Court is satisfied that this is the proper conclusion, and the means are wanting upon which a precise adjustment could now be made.

"But as to Jamieson, he himself conceded what is indeed abundantly proved, that he had received a very large sum over and above what was due to him individually. The excess, he admits, was received in a fiduciary character, and the whole, or nearly the whole, was turned over by him to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, to whom he admitted it belonged. Without deciding whether his estate may not be responsible eventually, it rests primarily upon the 537 company who actually received *and enjoyed this excess, to account for it. They are not before the Court, although they appear to be prosecuting a claim in this Court against the trustees of Macaulay, or rather their representatives, and others, claiming a balance to be still due to them under the provision of the deed in favour of Jamieson. The record in that suit is made an exhibit in these causes. For the present, all that can be done, or seems proper, is to direct an alternative statement to be made by a commissioner, crediting Jamieson's estate with the amount appearing on Macaulay's books, (by which he and his executor seem to have abided,) and with any just payment by him to Mrs. Macaulay, and charging him with all money or property received from the trust subject, and after applying these payments so as to extinguish his claim, balance his account by a transfer of the excess to the debit of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, in their account with the trustees, hereafter to be adjusted.

"The next enquiry is, for what amount are the estates of the trustees, jointly or severally, responsible. Nelson is shewn to have taken some part in the execution of the trust; but his acts seem to have been chiefly, if not exclusively, intended merely to give effect to those of his co-trustee. It does not appear that he received any part of the funds, money arising from sales, or otherwise. Besides this, the account rendered by Thomas Griffin to Anderson in 1817, of the trust transactions, is rendered in his own name as acting trustee, and all commissions credited to himself. In those exhibited with the original and amended answers, although rendered in the name of both the trustees, the commissions on the whole amount of the receipts are stated as T. Griffin's, and in the last, specially stated as on the amount, £ 7219. 9. 10., received and disbursed by him as trustee, &c. Here again, without finally deciding that Thomas Nelson's estate may not be eventually 538 *liable for the acts performed jointly or severally by him, or upon further proofs to contribution in respect to such acts, the primary responsibility attaches, I think, most clearly to Thomas Griffin for whatever balance may be due on account of the trust. It remains to ascertain what that balance is. Commissioner Shore's report, made under the decree and opinion of Judge Brockenbrough, pronounced in December 1833, presents three statements of the trust transactions:

"1. Statement A, shewing a balance due from the trustees jointly, on the 31st December 1803, principal and interest, of 1659 dollars 74 cents.

"2. Statement B, a balance, same date, against the same, 2040 dollars 64 cents.

"3. Statement C, a balance against T. Griffin, surviving trustee, 31st December 1824, 7367 dollars 28 cents.

"After attentively examining the numerous exceptions of all the parties to the original report of commissioner Baker, the comments of Judge Brockenbrough upon them, and the reformed report of commissioner Shore, I am of opinion that these statements ought to be sustained, and that the two last statements exhibit the balance for which Thomas Griffin, the surviving trustee, should be held liable."

The Chancellor then proceeds to consider other exceptions to the report, which it is unnecessary to notice.

The decree of the Court is as follows:

"This day came the parties, by their counsel, in these causes, which were fully heard together on the eighth day of November last, and time then taken by the Court to consider of its judgment to be given in the same, and the Court having maturely considered the records and the arguments of counsel, is of opinion: First, that the deed of trust executed by Alexander Macaulay to Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, trustees, on the fifteenth day of November one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, does not furnish conclusive 539 evidence *of the extent of the debts thereby intended to be secured to the three preferred creditors, Corbin Griffin, John Jamieson and Francis Jerdone, but that it is competent for the parties to shew, by other evidence, that the said debts were of less amount than the sums specified in the said deed. Secondly, that under the circumstances, the books of Alexander Macaulay are admissible evidence against Corbin Griffin and John Jamieson, and their representatives, in ascertaining and fixing the several amounts due to them from the said Alexander Macaulay, and intended to be secured by the said deed. Thirdly, that all claims or demands of the said Corbin Griffin against the said trust fund, under and by virtue of the said deed, and intended to be secured thereby, were finally closed and fully satisfied by the last payment to him, evidenced by the receipt purporting to be dated the twenty-third day of November, one thousand eight hundred, so that there is no balance due either to or from the said Corbin Griffin's estate on account of the said trust matters. Fourthly, that the book of Alexander Macaulay, (ledger E, folio one hundred and six,) exhibited the true amount of his indebtedness to John Jamieson, on individual or private account at the date of the said deed, and consequently that his individual claim under the trust deed has been greatly overpaid, but as it appears that the greater part, if not the whole of the excess, after satisfying his individual debt, was paid over by the said Jamieson to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, on account of a claim alleged to be due to them for moneys of the said company advanced by Jamieson to Alexander Macaulay, and as the said Dismal Swamp Land Company are prosecuting a suit in this Court for the establishment of their said claim, and the recovery of a balance still claimed to be due to the said company on account of the moneys so advanced, it is not proper at this time to decree the 540 payment of such balance as may *be due on account of such over payments to the said Jamieson, but that branch of these causes should be reserved for the future action of this Court. Fifthly, that as Thomas Griffin appears to have been the principal acting trustee, and the acts of Thomas Nelson seem to have been intended merely to give effect to those of his, the said Griffin, who received and disbursed the trust funds, the primary responsibility for whatever balance that may be due on account of the trust, attaches to the said Thomas Griffin, and should be decreed against his estate in the first instance, as well the balance due on the joint account of the said trustees as that due on account of the surviving trustees; without however, now deciding that the said Thomas Nelson's estate may not be eventually liable for the acts performed jointly or severally by him, or upon further proof to contribution, in respect to such acts. For these and the reasons more fully set forth and contained in a written opinion this day pronounced in these causes, which opinion is ordered to be filed with the papers and made a part of the record in these causes, but is not to be spread at large on the order book, the Court rejecting and overruling all exceptions and petitions, and setting aside all reports and statements of the commissioners, and all orders and decrees heretofore made in these causes, so far as the said exceptions, petitions, statements, orders and decrees may conflict with the said opinion and this decree, and affirming and sustaining the residue, would now proceed to dispose finally of the trust funds remaining due from the trustees, Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, jointly, according to statements A and B of commissioner Shore's report, and from Thomas Griffin, as surviving trustee, according to statement C of commissioner Shore's report, but that it appears by evidence in these causes, that the Dismal

Swamp Land Company are now prosecuting a suit in this Court to subject the said
541 trust funds to the payment *of an alleged claim or demand said to be secured, or intended to be secured by the said trust deed, in consequence of which said suit, the Court is of opinion that the said trust fund should be decreed to be paid into bank, to await the decision of the said Dismal Swamp Land Company's suit, or such further action of the Court in these causes as may hereafter be deemed proper. And the plaintiffs being willing for the present, to take such a decree against the defendant Robert P. Waller, as executor of Thomas Griffin, deceased, de bonis testatoris, with liberty, should such a decree prove unavailing, to apply to this Court for further relief in the premises against the said defendant, Robert P. Waller, executor as aforesaid: The Court therefore, doth adjudge, order and decree, that the said defendant, Robert P. Waller, executor of Thomas Griffin, deceased, out of the assets of his said testator, in his hands to be administered, if so much thereof he hath, and if not, then so much thereof as he may have, pay into the Exchange Bank of Virginia, at Richmond, to the credit of this Court, in these causes, and subject to the future order thereof, the sum of two thousand and forty dollars and sixty-four cents, with interest on one thousand six hundred and eighty-four dollars and thirty-seven cents, part thereof, to be computed at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the thirty-first day of December one thousand eight hundred and three, until paid, being the balance due by the said statements A and B of commissioner Shore's report, from the joint trustees, Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson; also, the further sum of seven thousand three hundred and sixty-seven dollars and twenty-eight cents, with the like interest on five thousand three hundred and thirty-six dollars and ninety-one cents, part thereof, from the thirty-first day of December one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, until paid, being the balance due by the said statement C of commissioner Shore's report, from the 542 said *Thomas Griffin, as surviving trustee; which said several sums of money, with interest as aforesaid, or so much thereof as he may have, the said Robert P. Waller executor as aforesaid, is ordered to pay as aforesaid, on or before the first day of April next, having been served with a copy of this decree, at least sixty days prior to that day, or that he then shew cause to the contrary. But nothing in the said opinion or this decree contained, is to be held in any manner as deciding the validity of the alleged sale by the trustees, Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, of the half share of Dismal Swamp Land Company stock and the individual moiety of eight thousand acres of land, conveyed by the said trust deed of the fifteenth day of November one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven, or as settling or in any manner affecting any question arising in the said suit of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, herein before referred to as depending in this Court. And the Court doth further adjudge, order and decree, that the bills of the plaintiffs respectively be dismissed as to the defendant Robert P. Waller, in his character of administrator de bonis non of Corbin Griffin deceased."

From this decree Waller as executor of Thomas Griffin and administrator de bonis non of Corbin Griffin, applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

After the above decree was made, the Dismal Swamp Land Company obtained leave of the Court to file a supplemental bill in their case; and it was filed at July rules in 1841. In this bill they say that in October 1828 they were informed by their counsel that there was another suit pending in the Court, brought by Macaulay's administrator against Griffin, claiming an account of the trust fund, and in which an account had been rendered setting forth Mr. Griffin's claim to the money; and that in that case the justice of his claim was litigated. That 543 in this state of the case it was *determined to bring the case of Macaulay's administrator v. Griffin, first to a hearing. If Griffin was entitled to the money, the creditors would have nothing to dispute about. If that point was decided against Griffin, then the rights of the respective creditors would come up for consideration.

They state the joint proceedings in the three causes in 1829; the setting aside of that decree and the opinion and decree of Judge Brockenbrough in 1833; giving extracts from his opinion upon the exceptions of Jamieson's executor to the commissioner's report. They complain that account of moneys belonging to them, received by Macaulay from Jamieson, were directed in causes in which they were no parties. They say that they had been apprised of these proceedings for the first time at the previous April term, when they employed counsel and asked leave to file this supplemental bill.

They charge that there is a considerable debt due from Alexander Macaulay to them; and that it had been clearly shewn that the deed of November 1797 was intended to secure the payment of that debt. They refer to the deeds of Jamieson of 1809, conveying to the company the moiety of the tract of 8000 acres of land and the half share of the stock of the company, and to the admission therein contained, that his debt, and also the debt to Corbin Griffin, had been paid; and they allege that Corbin Griffin, as one of the members of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, was one of the grantees in these deeds. That he had been as much in the enjoyment of the property thus conveyed to them, and of the profits thereof, as the other grantees; and being one of the managers of the company, he knew that the fact of his payment was stated in the deeds; and he also knew the truth of the statement.

They charged that Thomas Griffin knew that Corbin Griffin's claim had been

gress of the 20th of February 1819, appropriating 5209 dollars 20 cents, for the value of the ship Louisa and cargo, and his failure to pay to the company the money received under that act, especially after the promises he had made them, was an act which could not be justified.

They charge that Anderson, as administrator of Alexander Macaulay, had obtained a decree against the executor of William B. Christian for 10,504 dollars 63 cents, with interest from the 31st of December 1829, and that he had received the whole amount. And they insisted they had a right to have this money applied to the payment of their debt; the said Christian having been indebted to Macaulay at the time he made his deed of the 15th November 1797, by which Macaulay assigned for the purposes of the trust, all debts due to him. And making Anderson as administrator of Alexander Macaulay, and as executor of Elizabeth Macaulay, Robert P. Waller as executor of Thomas Griffin and administrator de bonis non of Corbin Griffin, Frances Berkeley administratrix of Thomas Nelson, and William Major sheriff of Culpeper county, and as such administrator de bonis non of John Jamieson, parties defendants to their bill, they asked that an account might be taken of the debt due from Alexander Macaulay to the complainants, and also accounts of all property, moneys and effects, out of which that debt ought to be paid; that they might have a decree against the party properly liable for the debt, or for payment out of the property liable for it; and for general relief.

Waller as the executor of Thomas Griffin answered, saying he had no personal knowledge of the transactions spoken of in the bill; and referred to the answer of his testator. He also answered as administrator de bonis non of Corbin Griffin. He said that though no decree was asked against his intestate's estate, either in the original 545 or supplemental bill, he felt it his *duty to put in issue the allegation that Corbin Griffin's claim on the estate of Alexander Macaulay had been paid before the 20th July 1809. He called for better proof of the fact than the recital in Jamieson's deed of that date. That Corbin Griffin was not estopped by the recital in that deed from denying the fact. He did not sign the deed, and as he was then a very old man, he probably never knew of the recital in the deed, if he ever knew that such a deed was made. And he pleaded the statute of limitations in bar of the complainant's claim.

The administrator of Jamieson professed to know nothing personally of the matters stated in the bill; and he referred to and relied upon the answer of M'Neale, executor of Jamieson, to the original bill.

Anderson answered as administrator of Alexander Macaulay and as executor of Elizabeth Macaulay. He admitted the statements as to the previous joint action of the Court in the causes. He insisted that the opinion expressed by Judge Brockenbrough, respecting the probable indebtedness of Macaulay to Jamieson for money of the complainants lent by Jamieson to Macaulay, was not sustained by any sufficient evidence in the said suits. That the suit of the company was not then ready for a decision for want of proper parties; and no decision could have bound the company, and therefore no opinion of the Judge could bind any other party. He denied that Jamieson ever was treasurer or cashier of the company, or had control of the money of the company; or ever was authorized to settle the accounts of the company with their debtors, and take security for the amount due from them; and especially to take such security in his own name.

He complained that though he was a member of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and asked to be allowed to examine their records, he had been refused. He brough directed M'Neale, the executor of Jamieson, to render an account of all moneys loaned to or received by Macaulay from the Dismal Swamp Land Company by the direction of Jamieson, and for which Jamieson may have been in any way responsible to the company; but that M'Neale had never attempted to render this account; nor did he ever attempt to shew that there was any thing due from Macaulay to Jamieson on that account. And the reason why he could not render the account was that in truth no such money had ever been lent by Jamieson to Macaulay, or received by him under authority derived from Jamieson. He insisted that what M'Neale said in his answer on the subject was not evidence against Macaulay's representative. He did not pretend to have received his information from Macaulay, but referred to a letter of John Brown of Richmond, who was one of the company. That no bond, note, receipt, or other evidence is referred to, to prove that the loan was made; and there was no proof, if a loan was ever made by Jamieson, it was made to Macaulay.

He insisted that the advice of their counsel was no sufficient excuse for the delay of the plaintiffs in preparing their case. That no obstacles had been thrown in the way of their progress, their bill had been answered by all the parties in 1824 and 1825; and if they had applied to the Court after July 1829, when the order of the previous June had been set aside by their consent, they would either have had an account directed or their bill dismissed; which latter result the defendant believed they expected. That all the books, papers and accounts, as well as all the property of Alexander Macaulay, as early as the latter part of the summer of 1798, on his death passed into the hands of Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson, the trustees in the deed of November 1797.

547 That after the defendant's *marriage with the daughter of Macaulay he was denied access to the said books and papers by T. Griffin, and denied access also to the books, papers and accounts of the Dismal Swamp Land Company. And in this state of things, well known to Thomas Griffin, the surviving trustee, and the president of the company, their suit had been permitted by them to lie dormant for a long course of years, that the defendant at great expense of money and labour might bring a reluctant trustee to account, and shew the amount actually due from him; and that then the complainants might come in and sweep away the whole by means of a very vague, indefinite, contingent and stale claim; not as yet supported by evidence sufficient to shew any debt to be due from Macaulay to the complainants. And he relied on the statute of limitations, and also upon the lapse of time and the staleness of the demand of the complainants, in bar of their claim.

The defendant further objected that the complainants were not authorized to sue for the claim they had set up, because if there was such a debt due, it was due before the complainants were incorporated; and should be sued for in the name of the survivor of the old company or his representative. He denied further that the trustees had ever sold the moiety of the 8000 acres of land and the half share of the company to Jamieson. He said that they knew they had no right to pay to Jamieson, out of the proceeds of the trust estate, more than the sum of £173. 10. 7., and its interest; and that they had no right to pay any part of the proceeds of sales to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, as there was nothing due to them from Macaulay at least under the trust deed. They therefore never conveyed the said land and stock to the said Jamieson or the company.

As to the claim to the amount recovered by the defendant from William B. 548 Christian's executor, he relied on *all the grounds before taken by him in his former answer, and on the grounds of defence taken hereinbefore.

The papers filed by the plaintiffs shewed that Alexander Macaulay had received in the years 1795, 1796 and 1797, of the moneys of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, some thirteen thousand dollars; but as he was a director of the company, and there is evidence in the record that he acted in the management of the affairs of the company, it does not certainly appear what part of this money he received to be dispensed for the company, or what part he received as a loan. There is, however, an account filed made out by Thomas Griffin when he was president of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, which charges Macaulay with these moneys, amounting to 13,395 dollars 69 cents, and credits him with the price of the land and half share of the stock of the company conveyed to them by Jamieson. And there is also evidence of a settlement between the company and M'Neale, the executor of Jamieson, by which they take this land and stock in full of all claims they have upon him for moneys of the company received by him.

On the 29th of October 1841 the plaintiff filed in the cause a copy of the record in the shew that the company about July 1796, had upwards of £3000. they were desirous of putting at interest, and the disposal whereof seems to have been given to Jamieson, and is of opinion, that the loan of it must have been made at least 12 months anterior to the deed of trust. He states that Jamieson was a careless accountant, kept no books, and has left no account of the transactions between himself and Macaulay, and the 552 defendant *has no means of saying what was the debt due from the latter to the former, but from an account taken from the books of Macaulay, and furnished by Corbin Griffin, it appears to have been £173. 10. 7., on the 15th May 1797. This defendant adverts to the sales made to his testator, by the trustees of Macaulay in 1801, for an undivided moiety of 8000 acres of land, and a half share of company stock, and payments of money to and receipts by Jamieson from the trustees, and 2000 dollars from Grimes, &c.; and states the conveyance by Jamieson in 1809, of the 4000 acres of land to the company, and the said half share of stock, without any other consideration, as he believes, than the £3000. and interest, lent by him to Macaulay (for the company). Finally, he relies on a settlement with the company and discharge in May 1811. This cause was brought to a hearing, together with two other causes pending in this Court, namely, Anderson, administrator, &c. v. Griffin, &c., and Macaulay (Mrs.) v. the same, and in June 1829, an order was made in the two last causes recommitting certain accounts to another commissioner. The order of commitment was set aside in November 1832. In December 1833, Judge Brockenbrough delivered an opinion in the two causes just mentioned. This cause appearing to have been left at rest, in consequence of the advice as it seems by a supplemental bill recently filed, of the plaintiffs' counsel, who thought it proper as the suit of Macaulay's administrator would call for a settlement of the trust subject and decide upon the trustee's claim to keep the money, on the ground of his father's claim (C. Griffin) to wait until that point should be settled. The plaintiffs have again put their cause in motion by filing in July 1841, a supplemental and amended bill, and by taking sundry depositions returned September 1841; answers have been filed by Macaulay's administrator, by T. and C. Griffin's representatives, and by Jamieson's administrator.

553 *It is not necessary at this time to set forth their answers in detail. The plaintiffs now ask a decree, at least for an account, and if their prayer be granted, this account is now for the first time to be settled, after the lapse of 45 years from the time of the death of the supposed debtor, 46 years after the date of the deed under which the plaintiffs claim as secret incumbrancers, and a still longer period from the date of the transactions on which their alleged claim is founded; after the death of all the original parties to the deed, including both trustees. It is an account now to be made up, after Macaulay's representatives have, not only by death of parties and witnesses, lost the benefit of testimony which might have thrown light upon these very obscure transactions, but has been deprived by the act of God, or the fraud or neglect of those who took possession of his books and papers, of all the aid they might have derived from that source, and this not only without the production of any bond or note executed by the supposed debtor evidencing the amount of debt, but without production or exhibition even of an account or statement by the plaintiffs themselves during the whole progress of this long litigation, or of any evidence establishing their demand, except the inferences deducible from the deed and statements of Jamieson and his executor, and the evidence introduced recently in the cause (in 1841). The excuse offered in the supplemental bill does not appear to me to justify the course which the plaintiffs have pursued. Their claim was an adversary claim, both to that of Corbin Griffin and of Macaulay's administrator. To the former, not upon the ground of priority, it is true, but upon the ground of satisfaction, and they were not justified in laying by while the controversy was carried on by Macaulay's administrator, with a view to sweep the fund in case the latter should succeed in establishing the liability of Griffin the

554 trustee, especially as this course subjected *the estate of Macaulay to all the disadvantages of meeting their claim arising from lapse of time, a period now as already said, of 40 odd years from the date of the transactions. Nor would any decree in the case of Macaulay's administrator v. Griffin, &c., have been evidence in favour of these plaintiffs against Griffin, and it was the more incumbent upon these plaintiffs to bring their case speedily, or at least with ordinary diligence, to a hearing, not only because of the antiquity of their claim, its unascertained amount, and the secret nature of the trust; but because they themselves alleged in their bill, that he trustee Griffin had been guilty of gross negligence and misapplication of the trust subject. As to the trust itself, there is a strong objection to the attempt at any time, and especially after a long time has elapsed, to a parol proof of a secret trust. I do not think the admissions of Jamieson or his executor, are proper or sufficient evidence under the circumstances, on which this Court should set it up. I am strongly inclined to the opinion that something, possibly the whole amount claimed by the plaintiffs, was intended to be embraced in the provision for securing Jamieson £5000. But this impression is not, I think, the result of adequate legal proofs. It may be difficult to believe that Jamieson would admit a debt nominally due himself to be due to another, if it were not so; but that does not make the admission—not taken in the form of a deposition—evidence against the grantor. Besides, there is evidence too strong for my mind to resist that the deed did not correctly set forth the sums due the several incumbrancers. As to the amount secured to Corbin Griffin, Thomas Griffin seems to rest his defence for paying it upon the sole ground that the deed acknowledged it. Jamieson's debt is hardly pretended to have exceeded the sum mentioned in Macaulay's book—something upwards of £170—though stated as £5000.

And Jerdone expresses a belief that 555 something, *he does not know how much, was due to him, as part owner of a tract of land with another, from which Macaulay received timber and produce. The debt secured to him by the deed, separately, was put at £3000.

"All these sums were put down in round numbers; and while the fact may very possibly be accounted for without imputing fraud to Macaulay, and indeed it is difficult to impute fraud to him without implicating in the charge all the cestuis que trust; yet, as already remarked, my mind cannot resist the conclusion, that the sums were in a great degree nominal.

"It is further to be remarked, that the company, through the agency of the trustees and Jamieson, have already received a very considerable part of the property conveyed by Macaulay; property sold apparently at a great sacrifice; bought in by Jamieson, and suffered by the plaintiffs to remain in his hands unconveyed, notwithstanding the trifling amount of his claim, for eight or nine years after the purchase.

This property consisted of 4000 acres of land, sold at 1 dollar per acre,	4,000
And a half share of stock, (in 1811, M'Neale sold Jamieson's half share at 5000 dollars, see C. Griffin's letter with defendants' depositions,)	2,500
It seems that Jamieson also, about the same time, received from the trustees,	1,156

Making, $7,656

While his own private debt was £173. 10. 7.

"Finally. Without going into other litigated questions, touching the right of the present plaintiffs, as an incorporated body, to succeed to the rights of the old unincorporated company, or adverting to the want of sufficient evidence to establish the items of the account accompanying the depositions returned in 1841, I am *of 556 opinion that this old litigation ought to be brought to a close, and that less injustice is likely to arise from the dismissal of the bill, than from any decree founded upon the evidence now to be obtained. The delay of the plaintiffs does not seem to me to be justified by the reasons assigned. The necessity of a settlement of their accounts with Macaulay's estate was apparent from the terms of their bill, to entitle them to any relief. The Court has indicated the necessity of such an account, even while the plaintiffs seem to have withdrawn themselves from the controversy, by directing Jamieson's executor to render an account of the amount due from Macaulay to Jamieson, as treasurer of the Dismal Swamp Land Company. The plaintiffs complain of this direction, as interfering with their claim in suits to which they were not parties, and of which proceedings they had no notice. But they did know of the pendency of these suits; and made the proceedings in them a reason for omitting to proceed with their own. Had they been active, the Court would most probably, at an early period, have directed the account they now ask, and which it does not now seem, can be directed with justice to the representatives of Macaulay. Without deciding that the admission of Jamieson, even though not in the form of a deposition, is incompetent or insufficient evidence that the debt, or a part of it secured to him, was actually due to the plaintiffs, or that the plaintiffs might not, as against Griffin, have claimed an account of his trust transactions, had the amount of their debt been clearly stated in the deed, or proved to have been liquidated and ascertained at the date of the deed, or at the period of Macaulay's death; and without deciding that the vouchers and evidence recently filed are insufficient to establish a claim to the amount thereof, or to any part, against Macaulay, (although the debt, if established by them, is very different from that supposed by Jamieson's executor, who represents 557 Macaulay *as a borrower of a specific sum of about £3000. in the hands of the company for investment in 1797, whereas the vouchers in question are for various sums received at different times, and from different persons;) passing over these objections, the prevailing argument with the Court for refusing the accounts is, that unliquidated as it has been suffered to remain now for a period of between 40 and 50 years, no adjustment of it upon safe and proper principles is to be expected, and that the delay is justly ascribable to the plaintiffs. While the Court does not, upon the pleadings and evidence, feel justified in this suit in disturbing the plaintiffs in the enjoyment of what they have received and been permitted to retain of the estate of Macaulay, it feels equally restrained from affording them, under the circumstances, the decree they now ask for further accounts;—leaving the parties upon the ground on which they stood, and seemingly acquiesced in, from the sale to Jamieson in 1801, or at least from the conveyance to the Dismal Swamp Land Company in 1809, up to the institution of the present suit, a period in one view, of 14 years, and in the other, of two and twenty."

In pursuance of this opinion the Court dismissed the bill with costs. Whereupon the plaintiffs applied to this Court for an appeal, which was allowed.

The three causes came on to be heard together in this Court.

Patton and Cooke, for the appellant Wal-ler executor of Griffin.

It is now fifty-three years since the deed which gave rise to this controversy was executed. That deed was executed in November 1797, and Macaulay died in July 1798. In one year after his death the trustees had proceeded to execute the trust, and to sell all the property conveyed, except an interest in the Dismal Swamp 558 *Land Company, and some Dismal Swamp land; and these were sold in 1801.

By 1801 Corbin Griffin had received, beside the amount he had paid as surety for Macaulay, a sum greater by upwards of 2000 dollars, than the amount which the appellees say was his real debt. And by 1804 Jamieson had received 2500 dollars more than the amount to which the appellees may say he was entitled.

From 1804 until 1819 there was no sale or transaction in execution of the trust, except the sale of a house and lot in Hanover town, and the payment of a small debt for which C. Griffin was the security. And there were the two fires in the town of York, one in 1804, and the other in 1814, in which the books and papers of Macaulay were scattered, and many of them irretrievably lost.

At the date of his deed Macaulay was overwhelmed with debts, all of which have been lost to the creditors. And in 1815, after his estate had been again and again committed to sheriffs because of its supposed insolvency, Anderson qualified as administrator de bonis non. In 1819 the claim upon the French government for the capture and detention of the Louisa was discovered, and the amount, upwards of 5000 dollars, was paid to Thomas Griffin, the trustee.

The deed of 1797 provided for the payment to Corbin Griffin of a debt of £2000, and although Macaulay lived for eight months after the execution of that deed; although there were many creditors whose debts were lost; although Mrs. Macaulay's bed was sold under this deed for the payment of this debt, yet neither Macaulay in his lifetime, nor these desperate creditors, nor Mrs. Macaulay herself, nor her daughter and her first husband Peyton Southall, were ever heard to doubt the validity and justice of Corbin Griffin's claim, until Anderson, who had married Mrs. South-

559 all, filed his bill *as administrator of Macaulay, seeking to impeach the debt due to Griffin, and to set up that of £3000. to Jerdone. His bill was filed in 1819. That of the Dismal Swamp Land Company was commenced in 1820; but for some error in the institution of the suit it was temporarily abandoned, and was recommenced in 1823. As to the consolidation of the causes, the case of Claiborne v. Gross, 7 Leigh 331, shews it cannot be done.

The bill of Anderson as administrator of Macaulay against Thomas Griffin as trustee under the deed of 1797, ought to have been dismissed for want of proper parties, on the final hearing; the objection for want of parties having been made and insisted on in the progress of the cause. These necessary parties were Jerdone, or Mrs. Macaulay claiming as his assignee, who was named cestui que trust in the deed, and the Dismal Swamp Land Company, which was known to be a beneficiary under the provision for Jamieson; and as Jamieson's debt was assailed, it was peculiarly proper that they should have been parties to defend their interests. It is true that the causes were heard together in 1829; but afterwards even this ceremony was dispensed with. Moreover Griffin stood as the holder of alleged trust funds; and he had a right to insist that all the beneficiaries, especially those to whom payments had been made, and whose debts were impeached, should be made parties. Indeed the decree of the Court shews that the Judge below thought that justice could not be done so as to protect Griffin until the case of the Dismal Swamp Land Company was settled. Besides this there was a trust for the creditors generally; as to whom there is not even a suggestion that they have been paid; and yet no reference is had to them in the pleadings or in the decree of the Court. We understand the rule to be imperative that all creditors specifically provided for shall be made parties; and especially when their claims are disputed. Sheppard v. Starke, 3 Munf. 29; Jamieson's adm'r v. Deshields*, 3 Gratt. 4; Finch's Prec. 207; Clark v. Long, 4 Rand. 451. But the bill should have been dismissed on another ground, as a matter of course, when it appeared that the debt of an acknowledged creditor, Jerdone, for more than sufficient to absorb the whole trust fund, was unsatisfied; and that creditor no party to the cause. Ricks v. Commonwealth, 1 Gratt. 416; 2 Rob. Pr. 263; Ward v. Van Bokkelen, 2 Paige's R. 289.

We come next to enquire whether the deed of 1797 is a valid and bona fide deed so far as the debt of Corbin Griffin is concerned. We say that neither Macaulay's administrator, nor Jerdone or his assignee, nor Jamieson, nor the Dismal Swamp Land Company, had a right to question the amount of Corbin Griffin's debt in 1797. No bill to impeach a bond or deed can be entertained except for fraud, accident or mistake. No fraud, mistake, secret trust or error is charged in either bill as to the debt of Corbin Griffin. The only fraud charged is the fraud imputed by Macaulay's administrator, Anderson, to Macaulay in making the deed to delay, hinder and defraud creditors. It is not alleged there was any mistake in the grantor or ignorance on his part, nor fraud on the part of the grantee, in fact nothing is alleged which can justify the Court in going behind the deed. Thompson v. Jackson, 3 Rand. 504; Slee v. Bloom, 20 John. R. 669, 685; Chambers v. Goldwin, 9 Ves. R. 254; Kinsman v. Barker, 14 Ves. R. 578. If errors are relied on they ought to be specified. If the amount mentioned in the deed was put in to cover the balances when ascertained, or advances to be thereafter made, such fact could not be shewn without an allegation in the bill to that effect. Taylor v. Haylin, 2 Bro. Ch. Cas. 310; S. C. 1 Cox's Cas. 435. It must be alleged, and it must be proved, that there was error, or mistake, or fraud, and it must be shewn why the bond was given for 561 £2000., if so much was *not due.

Johnson v. Curtis, 3 Bro. Ch. Cas. 266. There is not a shadow of proof of any mistake in the settlement of their accounts. The probability is that the transaction was a loan of £2000. at one time to relieve Macaulay from his embarrassments.

No case, English or American, can be found to justify the bill in this case. It is true that cases may be shewn of guardian and ward, and trustee and cestuis que trust; but the principles governing these cases do not apply. The cases are exceptions to the general rule. Lewis v. Morgan, 3 Anstr. R. 769. Certainly the deed must operate as strongly in favour of the grantee to establish the debt admitted therein to be due to him, as would a settled account. And it is settled that the acknowledgment of a debt as one item may be recovered under a count for an account stated. Knowles v. Michel, 13 East's R. 249; Highmore v. Primrose, 5 Maule & Sel. 65. There ought not to have been any account ordered going behind the deed as to Corbin Griffin's debt. And in fact the order made in 1825 does not embrace any such account. The just construction of the order is, that the £2000. was to be taken as an item of credit to Corbin Griffin, which was to be diminished by payments made, moneys received of the trustees, &c.

Corbin Griffin died in 1813, some six years before any bill was filed to impeach his debt of £2000. The plaintiff and those having a right to sue were under no disability, and therefore the great lapse of time between the date of the deed and its impeachment is strong, if not conclusive, to shew that the parties interested knew that the debt was just. It is true the trustee was bound to account for any balance in his hands after paying the debt. But after such a lapse of time the acts of the trustee would be regarded by a Court of equity with the greatest indulgence, instead of being subjected to the rigid scrutiny justified 562 in recent transactions. *But Corbin

Griffin was no trustee, but a creditor, whose debt is assailed by his grantor and another cestui que trust. The lapse of time is therefore a bar. Carr v. Chapman, 5 Leigh 164; Lacon v. Briggs, 3 Atk. R. 105; Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. R. 97; Gregory v. Gregory, Cooper's Ch. Cas. 201; Hovenden v. Ld. Annesley, 2 Sch. & Lef. 607; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. R. 168. If a bond or promissory note is called for as evidence of the debt due from Macaulay to Corbin Griffin, the Court may properly presume that it has been executed and is now lost. 1 Ch. R. 40. Now these cases are cases of trusts; and the rule is much stronger as between mere creditor and debtor, where there is no fiduciary relations between the parties. Ray v. Bogart, 2 John. Cas. 432; Coleman v. Lyne, 4 Rand. 454; Bolling v. Bolling, 5 Munf. 334; 1 Story's Equ. Jur. § 523, 529; Atkinson v. Robinson, 9 Leigh 393; Caruthers v. Trustees of Lexington, 12 Leigh 610; Stearns v. Page, 7 How. Sup. Ct. R. 819; Prevost v. Gratz, 6 Wheat. R. 481.

We insist that no grantor in a deed or obligor in a bond can be permitted to impeach it on the ground that the deed or bond is without consideration, or that the real amount due is less than it calls for. It is true that a general recital in a deed does not estop the grantor, but the recital of a particular fact does. Huntington v. Havens, 5 John. Ch. R. 23; Stoughton v. Lynch, 2 John. Ch. R. 209; Rainsford v. Smith, 2 Dyer's R. 196 a. Then is there not in the deed of November 1797, a distinct recital of the debt of £2000.? And in the granting part of the deed and the declaration of trusts, is not the debt clearly recited and affirmed? Powell v. White, 11 Leigh 309.

If a grantor in a deed has been imposed upon, or if by mistake in a settlement of accounts, the deed is made for too 563 much, or it is made for a nominal *sum to cover what shall afterwards be found due, then on proper allegations in the bill, the true state of things may be proved, notwithstanding the deed. But no such thing is alleged here. Apart from a fraudulent design on the part of the grantor, there is no hypothesis consistent with the facts, or which can be plausibly maintained, except the real existence of the debt as recited in the deed. Harvey v. Alexander, 1 Rand. 219. This and the cases like it shew that it is competent for a grantee to shew that there were other considerations than those stated in the deed. But they do not shew that a grantor may dispute or diminish the amount recited in the deed to be due. 7 John. Ch. R. 340; Schermerhorn v. Vanderheyden, 1 John. R. 139; Clarkson v. Hanway, 2 P. Wms. 203; Peacock v. Monk, 1 Ves. Sr. 128; Filmer v. Gott, 4 Bro. Par. Cas. 230. All these cases shew that the grantor cannot avoid his obligation or deed by alleging that so much was not due as is called for by it. Why a mere voluntary bond may be enforced by the obligee. 1 Fonb. Equ. ch. 5, § 1, p. 254, note a; Boughton v. Boughton, 1 Atk. R. 625. If suit had been brought for the £2000. by Corbin Griffin, can any one doubt that he might have recovered a judgment for the amount. This doctrine is fully developed in the case of Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. R. 656, and is discussed with great ability in Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 John. Ch. R. 329. And we refer also to Jackson v. Ashton, 11 Peters' R. 229; Knox v. Smith, 4 How. Sup. Ct. R. 298.

A grantor or a volunteer under him cannot impeach his deed on the ground that it was made to delay, hinder or defraud creditors. The bill in this case whilst it does not in express terms, does impliedly, charge that the deed was made to bring the creditors to terms. The allegations do in effect, amount to a charge that the deed was made to hinder, delay and embarrass the creditors of Macaulay. Could there have 564 been an honest *intent on the part of the grantor in making this deed, if the fact be true, which it is the effort of the plaintiff below to prove? It is impossible. We refer to Austin v. Winston, 1 Hen. & Munf. 32; a strong case in support of the general principle; but making an exception where there is imposition, or oppression on the part of the creditor grantee. Starke v. Littlepage, 4 Rand. 368; Jones v. Comer, 5 Leigh 350; Bird v. James, 8 Leigh 510; Owen v. Sharp, 12 Leigh 427; Reichart v. Castator, 5 Binn. R. 109; Jackson v. Garnsey, 16 John. R. 189.

Again, no party to a deed claiming under it can impeach it. The Dismal Swamp Land Company do not controvert the debt of Griffin; but Mrs. Macaulay assignee of Jerdone does. She has no right to be here, except by virtue of this deed. She therefore cannot impeach it; Corbin Griffin could not prove his debt to be more than £2000., nor can she shew it to be less. Collins v. Janey, 3 Leigh 389. The only evidence by which Griffin's debt can be reduced are Macaulay's books. And by the same books it appears that there is nothing due to her.

The books of Macaulay were not admissible as evidence for the purposes for which they were introduced. It is said that Corbin Griffin had access to and made entries in these books. Of what importance to Corbin Griffin was it that Macaulay's books did not credit him for the £2000., when he had a deed of trust from Macaulay to secure it? Of what value are such books, when it is shewn that Macaulay had received at least 13,000 dollars of money belonging to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and yet the books shew nothing of it? There is nothing in the books as to the item of £250. now acknowledged or proved to be a proper credit to Corbin Griffin. There is no proof that Corbin Griffin ever made any entries in the books in the lifetime of Macaulay. It is true that 565 Thomas Griffin makes an *admission to that effect in his answer; at least admits of such entries in the ledger; but Thomas Griffin evidently founds his admission on the books alone. Now these entries were of course made in the ledger after the items were charged in the journals. Corbin Griffin made these entries after the death of Macaulay. He then, it is true, added up the accounts, made entries, &c., with a view to the collection of the accounts then appearing to be due.

Stanard and R. T. Daniel, for Macaulay's administrator.

We say that neither the Dismal Swamp Land Company nor Corbin Griffin's administrator have shewn any right to the fund in the hands of the trustee Thomas Griffin. What is the bill of Macaulay's administrator but a bill by this grantor against the trustee and others for an account of the trust fund, and an execution of the trust according to its true meaning? Such a bill will lie, even though it contains an express allegation that the deed was made to delay and hinder creditors. The case of Austin

v. Winston certainly cannot be relied on by the appellants. And the case of Starke v. Littlepage was a case at law in which it was held that the deed, though fraudulent as to creditors, was good between the parties.

But we go further and say that an express trust will be executed, though the deed was made to delay, hinder and defraud creditors. Bird v. James, 8 Leigh 510. In this case both parties were held bound, the one to his grant of the slaves, and the other to his payment of the bond given for the pretended purchase money. So Owen v. Sharp, 12 Leigh 427, establishes that the parties to an express trust will both be compelled to execute it. And in Turner v. Campbell, 3 Gratt. 77, though there was no trust expressed on the face of the deed, yet as the trustee admitted the trust and dis-566 claimed *all beneficial interest, this Court entertained a bill for the settlement and execution of the trust. And to the same effect is Lewin on Trusts, 24 Law Libr. 84.

But does the bill in fact allege any fraud, or does it make any statement from which fraud is to be inferred? The fraud which prevents a party's seeking the aid of a Court of equity is moral, not constructive fraud. M'Cullough v. Somerville, 8 Leigh 415. Here the deed is made a part of the bill; does any fraud appear on its face? There is certainly nothing there appearing to delay or hinder creditors. Does the expression of a belief that the round sums of £2000., &c., were not due at the time the deed was executed, amount to a charge of fraud? There is no charge of an intent to delay. And there was no secret trust reserved for the benefit of the grantor. Indeed no objection of this kind was made until 1841. On the contrary Griffin went on to account, and is found asking for a decree.

Having seen that our bill can be maintained, we come next to enquire into the claims of the cestuis que trust under the deed. And we say that the deed does not conclude the grantor as to the amount of the debts secured thereby. On this question we refer to Johnson v. Little, 14 John. R. 212; Duval v. Bibb, 4 Hen. & Munf. 113; Wilson v. Shelton, 9 Leigh 342; Radcliff v. High, 2 Rob. R. 271; 1 Greenleaf's Evi., § 26, note 1, § 285; Haigh v. Brook, 37 Eng. C. L. R. 108. A recital to estop a party to the deed, must be certain to every intent. Does the deed necessarily import that the round sums of £2000., of £3000. and £5000. were fully due in addition to the liabilities of the cestuis que trust as sureties? By no means. These sums were intended to cover both. Thomas Griffin does not pretend there is due to Corbin Griffin £2000. besides the amount appearing to be due by Macaulay's books. Corbin Griffin never in his lifetime treated this £2000. as a certain, fixed, 567 settled debt. On the contrary *all the acts of Corbin and Thomas Griffin are disclaimers of any such pretension. Is there any rule of law or equity which requires this Court to shut its eyes and ears to these disclaimers. Look at the conduct of Corbin Griffin and the trustees after the death of Macaulay. From the period of his death in 1798 down to November 1800 all the payments from the trust fund were made to Corbin Griffin. After that date down to 1813, the time of his death, no further payments are made to him. In December 1801 the payments to Jamieson commenced, and were made with the knowledge of Corbin Griffin. By the arrangements made in 1801 with the full knowledge of Corbin Griffin, nearly the whole remnant of the trust fund in hand and the property left, was transferred and conveyed to Jamieson, and by him to the Dismal Swamp Land Company. At this time the claim upon the French government was wholly unknown; and Christian's debt was considered and admitted by Thomas Griffin, the trustee, not to be a part of the trust fund. So that there remained of that trust fund some small debts and property not amounting all together to 1000 dollars, which was all that was left to pay Corbin Griffin's debt, though according to the pretensions now set up for him, his demand against the trust fund was for more than 3000 dollars. And in 1811 as one of the managers of the Dismal Swamp Land Company he personally settled the account of Jamieson and the company, with the trust fund, thus bringing home to him knowledge, if he did not have it before, of the manner in which the fund had been disposed of. But we will not pursue this question further. The record seems with facts all leading irresistibly to the same conclusion that Corbin Griffin had been fully paid off in November 1800; and that it was so understood by himself and the trustee.

568 *As to the lapse of time, and the right of Anderson the administrator of Macaulay, at the late period of filing his bill, to go into the questions we have been discussing, we have to say that lapse of time was never relied on until 1838. Thomas Griffin set up no such defence in his answer. On the contrary if not in terms, he does impliedly assent to an account. And thus the case is brought within the principle of Mason v. Dunn, 5 Gratt. 384. But if the defence of lapse of time had been made by Thomas Griffin in his original answer, it would have been of no avail when relied on under the circumstances of this case, by a trustee who has never before rendered an account.

Let us now look into the case of the Dismal Swamp Land Company. Their bill was filed in 1823. They claim under the provisions of the deed of 1797 made for the benefit of Jamieson. What right has the Dismal Swamp Land Company, which was not incorporated until 1814, to ask for the execution of a trust made for the benefit of an unincorporated association in 1797? Even upon the supposition that the latter could claim under Jamieson's name, it must be shewn that the present corporation has succeeded to the rights of the association or partnership. This question is distinctly raised in the answer of Anderson. Does the acts of incorporation transfer the debts due to the association to the company incorporated by them? There is nothing on the face of the charter to make the transfer. If the act had incorporated exactly the same individuals who constituted the association, the act would not of itself have transferred their debts. Leffingwell v. Elliott, 8 Pick. R. 455; Scots Charitable Society v. Shaw, 8 Mass. R. 532; Head & Amory v. Providence Ins. Co., 2 Cranch 127. But in fact the individuals are not identical. Bellows v. Hallowell and Augusta Bank, 2 Mason's C. Ct. R. 31.

569 *But if these rights are vested in any corporation they are vested in the Dismal Swamp Land Company; and not in the president and managers of the Dismal Swamp Land Company. The act of 1820 speaks of it by the former name, and this act repeals the act of 1814. A corporate company can only sue by its corporate name, unless especially authorized to sue by some other name. The President & College of Physicians v. Talbois, 1 Ld. Ray. 153; Porter v. Nekervis, 4 Rand. 359; Mason v. Farmers Bank, 12 Leigh 84; Bank of Virginia v. Craig, 6 Leigh 399. This last case shews that the same principles are as rigidly adhered to in equity as at law. If the suit was brought originally in 1823 by a wrong name, the error cannot be cured by an amended bill in 1841 in the right name.

Let us look to the deed under which, if at all, the company must sustain its claim. What, according to a fair construction of the deed, was the debt due to Jamieson, in whose name the benefits of the trust are conveyed to the company. The real object of the deed was to secure to Jamieson what was then due to him, or might become due to him on account of responsibilities incurred in behalf of Macaulay, either to the Dismal Swamp Land Company or any other person. The company in their bill evidently take this view of the subject. When then they released Jamieson from all responsibility in 1811, can they still insist on recovering any further against the fund which is only responsible to them because of Jamieson's responsibility; and for whose responsibility alone it was the purpose of the deed to provide an indemnity. Indeed after getting this security provided by Jamieson in 1811, nothing further is heard of this claim of the company until 1823. If they had a right to anything further from the trust fund, why was not that claim asserted at an earlier day? This claim arising in 1797 is never asserted until 1823.

Never until that period had the 570 *representatives of Macaulay or his creditors an opportunity to contest the claim or its amount. Neither Corbin Griffin or Jamieson had any interest in contesting this claim, as they were to be first paid; and it was in fact the interest of Thomas Griffin as a member of the company that the claims should be sustained.

Upon what principle is it that dealings between Jamieson and the company are to affect the rights of Macaulay's representatives? Even in the case of an assignment the admissions of an assignor, no matter when made, cannot be brought to bear in favour of his assignee. But if Jamieson's admissions can be used do they prove any specific amount; or the extent of the claim of the Dismal Swamp Land Company? A "considerable debt" may be 1000 dollars or 5000 dollars. In contemplation of law an English sixpence is "a large sum of money."

In the case of the Commonwealth v. Ricks, 1 Gratt. 416, the admissions of a trustee in favour of the cestuis que trust were discarded by this Court. The admissions of Thomas Griffin, therefore, made at a time when as a cestui que trust he was interested in establishing this claim cannot be used against Macaulay's representative. The bill of 1823 does not pretend to fix the debt due, but asks for an account. That is, it does not claim the difference between the debt due to Jamieson and the £5000. The trust in favour of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, if to be set up at all, is to be set up as a parol trust in contradiction of the express terms of the deed. And it was the duty of those claiming the benefit of the trust to have filed their bill at an early day, in order that the parties interested in opposition to the trust might have an opportunity to contest it while the facts were recent and the parties cognizant of the transaction were here to explain it. But the bill was not in fact filed until 1823, after the death of Macaulay and 571 Jamieson: Mrs. Macaulay the assignee of Jerdone was not made a party until 1841, nor were the items composing this large claim brought into the record until the same year. Even after the suit was brought the company were guilty of gross laches in its conduct. Though an answer was promptly filed calling for the items of the account, the proof of their debt and the right of the plaintiffs to assert their demand, no order was made in the cause until 1827; another order was made in 1829 which was set aside in 1832; and this was the last order made or act done in the case until 1841; when leave was given to amend the bill and to make Mrs. Macaulay assignee of Jerdone a party. From 1832 to 1841 there is strong evidence to shew that the parties regarded the suit as abandoned. As to Mrs. Macaulay no suit can be said to have been commenced until 1841; and yet as far back as 1820 the company knew that Mrs. Macaulay was the assignee of the debt. Now this Court has held that laches in the conduct of a suit may be made the ground of rejecting a claim. Hayes v. Goode, 7 Leigh 452; Caruthers v. Trustees of Lexington, 12 Leigh 610. And the Court must be satisfied that it can extend the relief sought without the hazard of doing injustice to the defendant. And what sort of an account is filed at last? Some of the items, the Court will see upon the face of the matter are not due. Several other items it will be seen are such as if the account had been presented at a proper time, might in all probability have been explained away. Macaulay was an acting manager of the company at the time the money was received, and it must therefore be uncertain whether he received the money as manager and expended it for the uses of the company, or whether all or a part, and if a part, how much was borrowed by him or applied to his own use. It will be seen too that in 1798 the company in the case of the libel of the ship Charles Carter stated their claim as being at least 9000 dollars; 572 *but now, upon these same evidences of debt, it is spoken of as having then been upwards of 13,000 dollars.

The claim upon the French government was not a part of the trust fund. It is true that Judge Brockenbrough regards it as passing by the deed, and relies on Maitland v. Newton, 3 Leigh 714; and Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Peters' R. 193, as authority for his opinion. By the deed Macaulay assigns "all debts due to him." Was this a debt due at the date of the deed? The two cases cited do not sustain the Judge. It was under the broad terms, "all estate and interest real and personal," that the fund in the first case was held to pass. The case in 1 Peters was decided under the broad provisions of the bankrupt law; and even in that case it was contended with great force that a claim like this did not pass.

It is objected that there were not proper parties to the bill of Mrs. Macaulay and Alexander Macaulay's administrator. On this point we refer to Mitford's Pleadings 233. As to Jerdone he had assigned his interest absolutely, and therefore was no necessary party. 2 Rob. Pr. 272. As to the Dismal Swamp Land Company they do not appear by the deed to be interested, nor does it appear that Mrs. Macaulay knew in 1819 that they claimed to be prior incumbrancers.

And why should Anderson have made Jerdone a party to his bill? Jerdone has never to this day questioned the validity or amount of the incumbrances prior to his; and in fact has assigned his debt absolutely to Mrs. Macaulay. As to the Dismal Swamp Land Company if it cannot recover in its own suit, there can be no necessity for making it a party in this. Besides, Jamieson's ex'or was a party, and the fact that the company might call Jamieson to account did not make it a necessary party. Mayo v. Murchie, 3 Munf. 358, 401. Jamieson was the party representing the debt, and he not only might but did represent the company. Indeed the company re-573 fused *in 1820 to go into any settlement with Anderson because suits were pending by which all the questions would be settled: thus submitting to the representation of their interest by Jamieson. But this objection comes from Thomas Griffin. The company have never asked to be made a party. On the contrary, the case of the company was allowed to sleep for years whilst the other two cases were progressing and until the appeal was taken to this Court. As to Griffin the order of the 2d July 1829 was made by his consent in all these causes, and after that consent order no objection for want of parties can be properly heard. Mayo v. Murchie, 3 Munf. 358, 401.

This question about parties was never raised until 1841, sixteen years after the order of consolidation made on the motion of Griffin, in the two first of these suits, and twelve years after the consent decree made in all the causes; when it was raised by Waller executor of Thomas Griffin. So far as the motion was to make Anderson a party to Mrs. Macaulay's suit and vice versa, the rule of consolidation made at the instance of Thomas Griffin himself is an answer to it.

It is said that the decree was erroneous in not requiring an enquiry before the commissioner as to the creditors of Macaulay. The general creditors provided for in the deed must have been creditors before the 15th of June 1797. Is it to be supposed that now in 1850 there is any danger of their appearance in any way that could affect the interests involved in these suits.

The proposition that a party cannot claim under and against a deed does not apply to a case like this. There is no claiming against the deed by the appellees, but it is only asked that the deed shall be made to speak and to operate according to its true intent and the purpose and objects of the grantor. The case of Tate v. Liggatt & Mathews, 2 Leigh 84, does not apply to this case. Here is not a conveyance of an equity of redemption *but of all the estate. 2 Story's Equ. Jur. § 1092.

The doctrine on this subject is explained in Clark v. Guise, 2 Ves. sr. 617. Suppose that the prior debts had been paid. would not the subsequent incumbrancers or creditors be entitled to the whole subject. They would be entitled to the whole subject because the whole estate and not the equity of redemption was conveyed. In Tate v. Liggatt & Mathews, 2 Leigh 84, and Spengler v. Snapp, 5 Leigh 478, the creditor bought or took his conveyance of only the equity, and if the prior debts had been paid he could still have had only what he purchased, to wit, his equity of redemption.

As to Christian's debt. Could the Dismal Swamp Land Company have sued Christian alone? And is it any better when they join the trustees? Is not the bill multifarious? Mitford's Pl. 159. No collusion is charged against the trustees and Christian. How again can they join Anderson as to this subject? There is a joinder of subjects and parties which the rules of equity do not permit.

The statute of limitations is a protection to Anderson as to this debt of Christian. He had recovered and held the debt adversely to the trust for more than five years. Nor did this debt pass by the deed. Collins v. Janey, 3 Leigh 389.

Robertson and Morson, for the Dismal Swamp Land Company.

The justice of the demand of the Dismal Swamp Land Company was admitted by Macaulay in his lifetime, by Thomas Griffin the trustee, and by Jamieson; and until 1824, there never was a question of the justice of their claim. In the lifetime of Macaulay, and with his knowledge, the company asserted their claim under the deed of 1797, by their answer in the libel suit in relation to the ship Charles Carter. Thomas *Griffin made off the account of the company from the same vouchers now in the record, making that account precisely what is now claimed; and Jamieson, by his receipts dated in 1804, and by his deeds in 1809, in the most solemn form, admitted that the £5000. secured to him by the deed of 1797, was intended to cover a large debt due to the company; and these admissions are competent evidence of the fact. 34 Eng. C. L. 35; Starkie on Evi. part 2, p. 291. Judge Brockenbrough in his opinion in 1832, recognized it as a just debt; and Judge Robertson, whilst he dismissed their bill in 1841, on the ground of their laches, admitted that their claim was originally just: And indeed the evidence in the record is abundant to establish the fact.

It is however objected that the Dismal Swamp Land Company cannot claim as cestuis que trust, under the deed of 1797, because not named in it. This question was submitted to the late Chief Justice Marshall in 1799, when he was at the bar, and his opinion was in favour of the company. But surely we need not argue at this day their right to claim through Jamieson.

It is argued on the other side, that the release by the company to Jamieson, is a bar to the prosecution of the claim against Macaulay's estate. But a discharge of Jamieson the surety, does not discharge Macaulay the principal. Here is no express undertaking by an obligation, to which the principal and surety are parties. The responsibility of Jamieson is merely of a collateral or accessory character. But in fact no such release of Jamieson is given as is supposed.

Have the company lost any of their original rights by laches? Thomas Griffin the trustee, cannot and does not deny their right to call on him for an account of the trust fund. They claim under a direct trust, and in such a case the trustee cannot defend himself by setting up the laches of the cestuis que trust. 2 Rob. *Pr. 256, 257, where the distinction is taken between direct and implied trusts.

But in fact the company has not been guilty of any laches. There were but three years between the date when the trustee promised to account to the company for the trust subject and the commencement of their suit in 1820; and certainly no charge of laches can be predicated on that delay. Nor was the conduct of the suit such as to justify the charge. The failure to bring the suit to an end, was in part imputable to Anderson, if any body, and not to the company.

It is also made a question whether the Dismal Swamp Land Company as a corporation can sue for the debt due to the individuals before their incorporation. At law there might be something in this objection. If the suit was at law, perhaps it would be necessary to sue in the name of the members of the partnership for the benefit of the corporation. The case cited from 5 Mass. R. goes to this extent and no further; and the case from Alabama is to the same effect. In a Court of equity the rule is different. The exclusive beneficial owner has a right to sue. If therefore the corporation has the beneficial ownership of the debt, the corporation alone is the proper party to sue. Anderson has recognised the right of the corporation to the rights and property of the old company. Why did he call upon them to account with him, if they had not succeeded to the rights of the old partnership.

Again: The possession of all the deeds, muniments of title, &c. by the corporation, is circumstantial to shew the succession by the present company; Anderson has impliedly admitted it; Griffin the trustee has again and again recognised their rights. But if any doubt exists on this subject, proper bonds might be required for refunding to the proper claimants, or for indemnifying the trustee. The Court has frequently required bonds in cases of analogous character.

577 *But it is said, if the company had any right to sue they have sued in the wrong name. They ought, it is said, to have sued in the name of the Dismal Swamp Land Company, and not of the President and Managers of the Dismal Swamp Land Company. But in fact they may sue in either name. It is said the act of 1820 repealed the charter of 1814. In both acts the company is styled the Dismal Swamp Land Company; and in both the "president and managers" are authorized to sue. 2 Bac. Abr. title Corporation, letter C, p. 256; Angel & Ames on Corporations, § 62, 510, 514. But if there has been any mistake in this respect, it could only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, and there is no such plea in the cause. Angel & Ames on Corporations, § 582-586; Mason v. Farmers Bank, 12 Leigh 84.

Upon what principle is it that the debt recovered by Anderson from William B. Christian's estate is not a part of the trust subject? The debt was created before the date of the deed of November 1797; and all debts were transferred by the deed. The case of Collins v. Janey, 3 Leigh 389, has been referred to by counsel on the other side to shew that the claim did not pass by the deed. In that case the debts transferred were "the debts now due." Here the deed transfers "all the debts."

But it is said Anderson is protected by the statute of limitations. This however cannot avail him. The suit by the Dismal Swamp Land Company has been pending ever since 1823. Anderson is a party to it, and has had full notice of the claim of the company to this debt.

It is argued also, that the claim upon the French government does not belong to the trust fund; that it is no debt; that it is a mere claim for damages arising out of a tortious act. It is enough to refer, 578 in reply, to Dunlop v. Keith, 1 Leigh 430; 2 Rob. Pr. 200, 201; Williamson v. Bowie, 6 Munf. 176.

As to the debt of Corbin Griffin, we may well leave it upon the argument of the counsel of Macaulay's administrator, without detaining the Court to add anything to it.

As to Mrs. Macaulay's claim as assignee of Jerdone, it is not necessary to say much, as if the company recovers, there will be nothing left for her. If the company cannot claim under the deed, how can Mrs. Macaulay. Jerdone admits he has no debt due to him individually; but claims under the trust for a debt due the firm of Douglass & Co., of which he was a member.

As to the claim of Anderson as administrator of Macaulay, he of course cannot touch the fund until all the creditors of Macaulay are satisfied.

Finally the decree in the first causes was erroneous, if for no other cause, because the three causes were not heard together. If the omission to make the Dismal Swamp Land Company a party could be cured, it could only be by bringing on the causes to be heard together; and we ask that in this Court they may be so heard, and that one decree may be entered in all of them.

ALLEN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion, that as it appears that Thomas Griffin was the acting trustee under the deed of trust executed by Alexander Macaulay, on the fifteenth day of November 1797, to Thomas Griffin and Thomas Nelson; that he received the proceeds arising from the trust fund, and disbursed the same so far as they have been accounted for; that although the said Thomas Nelson joined in the execution of the trust by uniting in the sales made necessary to accomplish the purposes of the trust, there is nothing to impute to him any fraud in any of the transactions 579 connected therewith; *and as it is not shewn that there is any part of the trust funds in his hands, the parties interested in said trust fund, and the representatives of said Macaulay, have made out no case for charging him for any of his acts as trustee, separately or jointly with his co-trustee, Thomas Griffin. The Court is therefore of opinion, that the bills should have been dismissed as to the representatives of said Thomas Nelson.

The Court is further of opinion, that there is no error in so much of the decrees appealed from as decided that the said deed of trust does not furnish conclusive evidence of the extent of the debts thereby intended to be secured to the three preferred creditors, Corbin Griffin, John Jamieson and Francis Jerdone, and that it was competent for the parties to shew by other evidence that the said debts were of less amount than the sums specified in said deed.

The Court is further of opinion, that there was no error in so much of said decrees as decided that all claims or demands of said Corbin Griffin against the said trust fund, under and by virtue of the said deed, and intended to be secured thereby, were finally closed and fully satisfied by the last payment to him, evidenced by the receipt purporting to be dated the twenty-third day of November 1800; so that there is no balance due either to or from said Corbin Griffin's estate, on account of the said trust matters.

The Court is further of opinion, that there was error in overruling the exception of the executor of said Thomas Griffin deceased, to the charges against him, contained in commissioner Shore's report, for thirty-nine dollars and sixty cents, and eighty-one dollars and sixty-seven cents, interest on forty-nine pounds ten shillings, the sale of the Hanover town property,—the Court being of opinion, that the trustee was not responsible for interest on the estimated value of said property, or for the rents thereof, it appearing that no 580 rents were in *fact received, and it not being shewn that the trustee was in any default in not making sale of the property at an earlier period. Deducting said charges of thirty-nine dollars and sixty cents and eighty-one dollars and sixty-seven cents, and correcting commissioner Shore's report, statements A, B and C, in this respect, the true balance due upon said statements A and B would be two thousand and one dollars and four cents, with interest on one thousand six hundred and eighty-four dollars and thirty-seven cents, part thereof, from the thirty-first day of December 1803, until paid, and the true balance due on statement C will be the sum of seven thousand two hundred and eighty-five dollars and sixty-one cents, with interest on five thousand three hundred and thirty-six dollars and ninety-one cents, part thereof, from the thirty-first day of December 1824, until paid;—which sums, with the interest thereon as aforesaid, constitute the true amount of the trust fund remaining due from the acting trustee, Thomas Griffin, and for which his estate is responsible to the parties entitled thereto. And all exceptions, petitions, statements, orders and decrees conflicting with this opinion in regard to the amount of the trust fund remaining due from the acting trustee, are overruled, and those conforming thereto are sustained and affirmed.

The Court is further of opinion, that under the circumstances appearing in this case, the amount due to John Jamieson, on his individual account, must be taken to be one hundred and seventy-three pounds ten shillings and four pence half-penny, amounting, with the interest thereon, to the sum of six hundred and eighty-seven dollars and fifty cents, as appeared upon the settlement made with the Dismal Swamp Land Company. The said Jamieson, by his deeds to said company dated the twentieth day of July 1809, having acknowledged that the trust in the deed of Alexander Macaulay to Thomas Griffin and 581 Thomas Nelson had *been completely executed as to the claim of said Jamieson as an individual, and the representative of said Jamieson not having produced any evidence shewing anything more to be due to his testator as an individual, the sum so appearing on the statement aforesaid, made the basis of the settlement with the Dismal Swamp Land Company, must be taken as the true amount of the debt due to said Jamieson, and intended to be secured by the said deed of trust; and all exceptions of the executor of said Jamieson in conflict with this opinion, in regard to the amount of said debt, are overruled.

For the excess over said sum of six hundred and eighty-seven dollars and fifty cents, paid to said Jamieson out of the proceeds of the trust fund, after crediting him with the sum paid to Mrs. Macaulay for her dower interest, his estate would be responsible, but for the settlement with and release by the Dismal Swamp Land Company.

And the Court is further of opinion, that it satisfactorily appears that the provision in said deed for the benefit of John Jamieson was intended to secure the individual debt of said Jamieson, and also the debt due by said Alexander Macaulay to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, an association of which said Jamieson was a member. The interest of the company in said deed was asserted shortly after its execution, and in the lifetime of the grantor, and in his own name, in connection with the other members of the association, he being also a member, by the claim preferred in the Federal court in the case of the libel against the ship Charles Carter and said Macaulay. The right of the company was recognized by the said Jamieson and the trustees, and the creditor first preferred; payments ceased to be made to the preferred creditor, Corbin Griffin, after the year 1800, and soon thereafter purchases were made by said Jamieson of valuable property belonging to the trust subject, which property was 582 purchased for the Dismal *Swamp Land Company on account of the claim so as aforesaid recognized to be due to the company; and the property being afterwards conveyed to the company, has been held, so far as the record discloses, without controversy ever since. After such repeated recognitions by all connected with the transactions, and the acquiescence by all interested in controverting their right to claim under the deed, it is too late to raise the objection now.

Nor can laches be imputed to the company so as to defeat their right to recover. Their right to claim under the deed having been acknowledged as aforesaid, payments to and acquisitions of property by them, in satisfaction of their claim, having been acquiesced in, there was no necessity for, nor would there have been any propriety in the institution of proceedings to assert a right under the deed, after such acts of recognition and acquiescence, and when the same had never been controverted. The trustee, the party directly accountable, has not denied, and could not deny, his liability to account for his manner of administering this direct trust, and when the cestuis que trust were apprised of the receipt of a large sum by him, and of his refusal to pay the proceeds over, suit was instituted within a reasonable time thereafter.

The delay which occurred after the institution of the suit, is accounted for in part, by the temporary loss of papers, the improper conduct of the other claimant in setting aside the order recommitting the causes, after the three causes had been heard together, and the order had been made recommitting the three suits to settle the accounts between the parties. Nor is there anything in the evidence on which the claim of the company depends, which renders an account improper. The vouchers filed by them, furnish prima facie evidence of the amount due, and under the circumstances, should be so received. subject 583 to the right of the contesting *parties to shew that the funds belonging to the company and received by Alexander Macaulay were paid over or applied by him to the use of the company.

The Court is further of opinion, that it sufficiently appears that the claim originally belonging to the association has been turned over to and is in fact the property of the incorporated company, and said incorporation being now the real owner of the debt, it was competent to sue for and recover the same in the corporate name, in a Court of equity:—more especially as the trustee and the representative of said Jamieson are parties to the suit, and the latter has not controverted the right of the company, in its corporate name, to recover the fund intended to be secured by the deed by the provision in favour of his testator.

The Court is further of opinion, that there is nothing in the pleadings or proofs to justify an enquiry into the regularity of the sales of the one half share in said company, and the moiety of the tract of eight thousand acres, purchased at the trustees' sale by said Jamieson, and by him conveyed to the company by his deeds of the twentieth day of July 1809. In adjusting the amount due to the said company, it should be charged with the price paid for said property, and also with the amount of the trust fund received by said Jamieson, over and above the sum of six hundred and eighty-seven dollars and fifty cents, the individual debt due said Jamieson, and the sums paid to Mrs. Macaulay for her dower interest, the excess being the balance for which said Jamieson would have been responsible, but for the release and acquittal of the company, given on the twenty-eighth day of May 1811; but the trust fund, notwithstanding such release, is to be credited as against the claim of the company, with the sum for which said Jamieson would have been responsible. And for the amount which upon an account to be taken upon

584 the principles aforesaid, may appear to be due to the company, *with interest, the said company is entitled to be first satisfied out of the trust funds ascertained to be due from the estate of Thomas Griffin, surviving trustee, as aforesaid.

And as to the claim of said Francis Jerdone, the Court is of opinion, that there is no satisfactory evidence shewing what, if anything, was due to him. The answer of said Jerdone, which under the circumstances, is proper evidence against the volunteer, claiming by virtue of a gift and transfer from him, states that there was no debt due to him individually from the estate of Macaulay; and there is no evidence whatever in the record of the debt which he had been informed was due to himself and William Douglass.

The Court is further of opinion, that the debt due from William B. Christian was embraced by the deed of the fifteenth day of November 1797, and passed to the trustees for the benefit of the creditors therein named, or provided for, and if the fund ascertained to be in the hands of the trustee should be insufficient to discharge their claims, or prove unavailing, they will be entitled to a decree against the administrator of said Alexander Macaulay, for the amount of the debt collected from Christian's estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge their claims.

And the Court is further of opinion, that if none of the general creditors secured by the deed of the fifteenth day of November 1797 should appear, make themselves parties, and establish their claims within a reasonable time, to be prescribed by the Court, the residue of the trust fund, ascertained to be due by this decree from the estate of Thomas Griffin, should any remain after satisfying the amount ascertained to be due to the Dismal Swamp Land Company, should be paid over to the administrator of said Macaulay.

The Court is therefore of opinion, that the decrees aforesaid, so far as they conflict with the principles *above declared, are erroneous; therefore it is decreed and ordered, that the same in those particulars be reversed and annulled, and the residue thereof be affirmed; and also that the appellees, who are executors and administrators, out of the estates of their testators and intestates in their hands respectively to be administered, and the other appellees in their own right, do pay unto the appellants respectively their costs by them expended in the prosecution of their appeals aforesaid here. And it is ordered, that the causes be remanded to the Circuit court of chancery for Henrico county, with instructions to direct an account of the claim of the Dismal Swamp Land Company upon the principles herein indicated, and for all necessary steps in the mean time, to enforce the payment, and for the security of the trust fund, until the causes are matured for a final hearing, and for further proceedings in order to a final decree according to the principles of this opinion and decree.

Which are ordered to be certified to the said Circuit court.

589 *Nichols' and Janes' Case.

June Term, 1850.

Lewd and Lascivious Cohabitation—Indictment—Allegations as to Time.*—In an indictment for lewd and lascivious cohabitation, the offence is charged from a day prior to the day when the statute went into effect, but as continuing to a day after the commencement of the act. The indictment is good.

At the April term 1849 of the Circuit court of Scott county, James Nichols, sr., and Rena Janes, were indicted for that they being white persons, on the 1st 590 *day of May 1848, and from thence up to the 8th day of April 1849, at the county &c., did without being married to each other, lewdly and lasciviously associate and cohabit together.

The parties demurred to the indictment, upon the ground, as it seems, though the causes of demurrer are not set out, that the statute upon which the indictment was founded, did not go into operation until the 31st of May 1848. The demurrer was overruled by the Court; and thereupon the parties pleaded not guilty, on which issue was joined.

On the trial of the cause the Court excluded from the jury all evidence of acts charged in the indictment, previous to the 1st of June 1848, at which time the law under which they were prosecuted took effect. And there was a verdict against each of the parties for a fine of fifty dollars; and a judgment accordingly. Whereupon the defendants applied to this Court 591 *Commonwealth v. Cregor.

June Term, 1850.

1. Adultery and Fornication—Number of Witnesses Necessary to Convict—Repeal of Statute.—The act 1 Rev. Code, ch. 141, § 6, p. 555, which makes the oath of two credible witnesses necessary to a conviction in a case of adultery and fornication, is repealed by ch. 27, § 2, p. 164, of the Criminal Code, Sess. Acts of 1847-48.

2. Same—Same.—One credible witness is now sufficient to authorize a conviction for adultery or fornication.

Elizabeth Cregor was indicted for adultery with James Cole, in the Circuit court of Wythe county, at the April term of the Court for 1849. On the trial, the jury rendered the following verdict: "We find upon the evidence of one credible witness that the defendant is a married woman: That within twelve months previous to the finding this indictment, she habitually bedded with James Cole in the indictment mentioned, as man and wife, the said Cole not being her husband. If upon the foregoing facts so found upon the evidence of but one witness, the law be for the Commonwealth, we find the defendant guilty, and assess her fine to twenty dollars; but if the law be for the defendant, we find her not guilty."

Upon the finding of this verdict, the Circuit court, with the consent of the defendant, adjourned to this Court the following questions:

1st. Is so much of the sixth section of the act, entitled "An act for the effectual suppression of vice, and punishing the disturbers of religious worship and Sabbath breaking," 1 Rev. Code, page 555, as makes the oaths of two credible witnesses necessary to a conviction, in cases of adultery and fornication, repealed by the 2d section of the 27th chapter of the Criminal Code, Sess. Acts 1847-48, page 164?

2d. What judgment ought to be entered on the special verdict?

592 *LEIGH, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion and doth decide, first, that so much of the 6th section of the act for the effectual suppression of vice and punishing the disturbers of religious worship and Sabbath breakers, 1 Rev. Code, p. 555, as makes the oath of two credible witnesses necessary to a conviction in cases of adultery and fornication, is repealed by the 2d section of the 27th chapter of the Criminal Code, Sess. Acts 1847-48, page 164. And secondly, that judgment ought to be rendered on the special verdict in favour of the Commonwealth for the fine assessed by the jury. Which is ordered to be certified, &c.

Morgan v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1850.

Indictments—Sale of Ardent Spirits—Charging Offence in Disjunctive.*—In an indictment for retailing ardent spirits without a license, to be drank where sold, it is not error to use the word "or" in speaking of the various kinds of spirituous liquors charged to have been sold.

At the March term for 1848, of the Circuit court of Chesterfield county, Peter K. Morgan was indicted, for that he, on the 15th of February 1848, at the county &c., without a license, did sell by retail, to be drank in his house, rum, wine, brandy or other spirituous liquors, to be drank where sold, &c.

The defendant demurred to the indictment, on the ground that the charges were laid in the disjunctive: But the Court overruled the demurrer. The defendant then pleaded "not guilty," and on the trial demurred to the evidence; and the Commonwealth joined in the demurrer. Whereupon the jury found a verdict of guilty, subject to the demurrer to evidence.

593 *The evidence consisted of the tes-

Indictments—Sale of Ardent Spirits—Charging Offence in the Disjunctive.—Several cases cite and reaffirm the proposition of the principal case, that it is not error to charge the offence of selling spirituous liquors, wines, etc., without a license, in the disjunctive instead of the conjunctive, by using the word "or" in lieu of "and" in describing the various kinds of liquors and drinks charged in the indictment to have been sold without a license. See Thomas v. Com., 90 Va. 93, 17 S. E. Rep. 788; Cunningham v. State, 5 W. Va. 509; State v. Charlton, 11 W. Va. 336-7. But, in this last case, the court said: "It (i. e., the decision of the principal case) ought not to be regarded as overthrowing the general rule, that an indictment ought not to state the case disjunctively, when it is thereby left uncertain, what is really intended to be relied on as the accusation. And while Morgan's Case must govern us whenever a case like it arises, yet we cannot safely extend it to cases which differ from it and fall within this general rule." timony of a single witness, who deposed, that on the 15th of February 1848, he and John Perry drank spirits at the house of the defendant; which said spirits were called for by Perry, and by him paid for; the purchase having been made of, and the payment made to, the defendant.

The Court gave judgment upon the demurrer to evidence, against the defendant, for a fine of 30 dollars and the costs. Whereupon he applied to this Court for a writ of error, which was allowed.

Smith v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1850.

1. Criminal Law—Advising Slave to Abscond.*—Case at Bar.—A conviction for advising &c. one slave to abscond, is not a bar to a prosecution for advising &c. another slave to abscond; though the advising &c. was to both at one time, and by the same words and acts.

2. Jurors—Opinion Formed—Competency.†—The entertaining a decided opinion of the prisoner's guilt, formed on the testimony as published in the newspapers, is not a valid objection to a juror, if he thinks he can discard his opinion, and that it would not influence his judgment; and that he could give the prisoner a fair trial according to the law and the evidence submitted to the jury.

3. Same—Objection—Case at Bar.—The prisoner was charged with having advised &c. two slaves to abscond at the same time, a venireman summoned on the first trial was stricken from the panel by the prisoner. This is not a valid objection to him as a juror on the second trial.

Samuel A. Smith was indicted at the October term for 1849, of the Circuit court for the county of Henrico *and city of Richmond, for advertising and aiding a certain slave named Sawney, the property of Caroline M. Christian, to abscond from his mistress.

The prisoner being arraigned, filed a plea of autrefois convict, to which the attorney for the Commonwealth demurred, and the Court sustained the demurrer. The ground of the plea was that the prisoner had been tried at the same term of the Court, for advising, enticing and persuading a certain slave name Alfred, the property of William G. Overton, to abscond from his master. And also for aiding the same slave to escape. That the offence was the same; not two offences of the same kind, but one offence of advising, &c., and aiding both slaves at the same time, by the same means, to escape. And that he had been convicted on the first trial, and sentenced to four years imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The demurrer to the plea having been sustained, the prisoner pleaded "not guilty;" and a juror, Samuel Ayres, was called, who, upon his voir dire, stated "that he had read the evidence against the prisoner as it had been reported in the newspapers; was not certain he had read all the evidence so reported; but from what he had read, he had made up a decided opinion that the prisoner was guilty, which still rested upon his mind, and was still fresh and decided. But if sworn as a juror in this case he should feel bound, as far as possible, to discard his present opinions; and he felt satisfied that he could discard them, and that they would have no influence upon his mind; and that he could give the prisoner a fair trial, without any unfavourable effect from what he had read, according to the law and testimony which might be brought before the jury." The prisoner objected to the juror as incompetent, but the Court overruled the objection, and the prisoner by his counsel excepted.

595 *Another juror, B. F. Cochran, was called, who stated "that he had been called as a venireman upon the trial of the prisoner, during the present term, under an indictment for advising and aiding a slave Alfred, the property of William G. Overton, to abscond, at the same time when he is charged with having advised and aided the slave Sawney, named in the indictment in this case as the property of Caroline M. Christian, to abscond. That he, the said Cochran, was among those received on the panel for the trial of the prisoner, under the said former indictment, and was stricken from the said panel by the prisoner." He also stated "that he had read a part of the evidence reported in the newspapers, but had formed no decided opinion in relation to the prisoner's case." The prisoner objected to the juror as incompetent, but the Court overruled the objection, and the prisoner again excepted.

A third venireman, G. W. Royster, was called, and stated "that he had read a part of the evidence as published in the newspapers; and had made up a decided opinion from what he had read; and that the recollection of that impression was still fresh upon his mind. And that he would, if evidence to the same effect should be given in Court, and none other was introduced on the trial, find the prisoner guilty. But that he is satisfied that he could decide as fairly upon the case as though he had never read or heard a word about it. And that what he had read or heard would have no influence upon his mind." The prisoner objected to him as a juror; but the Court overruled the objection, and the prisoner again excepted.

On the trial of the case the witnesses on both sides having spoken of a former trial of the prisoner in the same Court, a few days before, under an indictment for advising and aiding a certain slave named Alfred, the property of William G. Overton, to abscond, and the *record of the trial, conviction and judgment in that case being produced in evidence by the prisoner, which record is the same referred to in the prisoner's plea of autrefois convict, the prisoner moved the Court to instruct the jury, that "if they should believe from the evidence and pleadings in this cause, that the offence for which the prisoner was put on his trial, depended on the same act, and was supported in proof by the same evidence, on which the offence charged against him in the indictment for a felony in the case of Alfred, the property of William G. Overton, rested, and the verdict of guilty in that case was procured, then they should find in this case a verdict of acquittal."

The Court declined to give the instruction in the terms asked by the prisoner, but informed the jury that the Court had already decided in this cause, that the record aforesaid, of the trial, conviction and sentence of the prisoner for the offence of advising and aiding the slave Alfred, the property of William G. Overton, to abscond, could not be received or regarded as sustaining a plea in bar offered by the prisoner, of a former conviction of the offence charged by the indictment in the present case, for aiding and advising the slave Sawney, the property of Caroline M. Christian, to abscond. And instructed the jury that whilst they had the power to acquit the prisoner, if they were satisfied upon the evidence, that the offence charged in the present case was the same offence for which he had been already convicted; yet, that under the pleadings in this cause, notwithstanding much of the evidence in this case may be the same given on the former trial, yet they cannot consider the prisoner as having been previously tried and convicted for the advising and aiding the slave Sawney to abscond, as charged in the indictment in this case, by proof either of witnesses or by the record that he was convicted of a different offence; namely, *of advising and aiding Alfred, the slave of William G. Overton, although this last offence may have been committed in the same manner, and at the same time and place, as may have been alleged and proved in the present case, in reference to the slave Sawney. To which opinion of the Court the prisoner excepted.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, and fixed the term of his imprisonment in the penitentiary, at two years; and the Court sentenced him accordingly: The term of two years to commence upon the expiration of his imprisonment under another sentence pronounced against him at the same term upon the conviction of the prisoner for another felony. Whereupon, the prisoner applied to this Court for a writ of error, which was awarded.

Hicks v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1850.

Criminal Law—Concealed Weapons—Evidence.—A jury may well find a habitual or general wearing of concealed weapons, from evidence that the defendant was seen once wearing concealed weapons under circumstances which satisfies them it was his general practice.

At the October term 1847, of the Circuit court of Albemarle county, William R. Hicks, a constable of the county, was indicted for habitually and generally carrying about his person concealed weapons.

On the trial the Commonwealth introduced two witnesses, one of whom proved 598 that on meeting Hicks *in the public road, in order to induce the witness, who was a youth, to surrender to him the horse of his father, which he was riding, and on which Hicks wished to levy an execution, he drew out a pistol and dirk, which had been before concealed about his person. The other witness, though he did not see the defendant have weapons about his person, stated facts from which it might be supposed that the defendant did have weapons concealed about his person at the time of which he spoke.

This being all the evidence, the defendant moved the Court to instruct the jury, that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a verdict of conviction under the law prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons, passed the 2d day of February 1838. But the Court refused to give the instruction; and told the jury that the law had not prescribed any particular number of times or occasions on which a party must be seen wearing concealed weapons, to constitute the offence of habitually or generally keeping or carrying about his person concealed weapons, and to make a party guilty of a violation of the law; but it was for them to consider whether the evidence was sufficient to constitute a case for conviction. And that under certain circumstances, a jury might well find a habitual or general wearing of concealed weapons, from evidence that he was seen even once wearing of concealed weapons, and much more so, if the evidence in this case should satisfy them of his having been seen wearing them on two different occasions, under circumstances which satisfied them it was his general practice. To the opinion of the Court refusing the instruction asked, and to the instruction given, the defendant excepted.

The jury found the defendant guilty, and assessed his fine at fifty dollars; and the Court rendered a judgment upon the verdict; whereupon the defendant applied

Armstead's Case.

June Term, 1850.

Criminal Practice—Recalling Witness after Argument.*—The attorney for the Commonwealth allowed to recall a witness, and ask him a question, after the attorney had made his opening argument, and one of the counsel for the prisoner had spoken in his defence.

John A. H. W. R. Armstead was indicted in the Circuit court of Henrico and the city of Richmond for larceny, in stealing a horse and buggy, the property of Thomas Duke. On the trial, after the Commonwealth had concluded its evidence tending to prove the horse and buggy in question had been hired by the prisoner of Thomas Duke on the 3d of March 1849, in Richmond, and afterwards disposed of by him at Powhatan courthouse, on the 5th of March; and also other evidence tending to shew the felonious intent of the prisoner; and after the attorney for the Commonwealth had closed his opening argument, and one of the prisoner's counsel had made his argument for the defence, the attorney for the Commonwealth moved the Court to allow him to recall a witness, Thomas Duke, who had been before examined, and to ask him a question not before put; the attorney stating that he did not have the record of the examination in the Hustings court, and therefore was not informed of what had 600 been deposed to by the witnesses in that Court. The prisoner's *counsel objected to the motion, but the Court allowed the witness to be recalled, and asked, "If the prisoner on Saturday evening, the 3d March 1849, when he hired the horse and buggy in question, gave him his name?" The answer to which was, "He said his name was J. Scott." To this question and answer the prisoner's counsel objected as irregular and inadmissible, and excepted to the opinion of the Court admitting them.

The jury found the prisoner guilty; and fixed the term of his imprisonment in the penitentiary at five years; and the Court sentenced him accordingly. Whereupon he applied to this Court for a writ of error.

By the Court. The writ of error is denied.

Commonwealth v. Harris and Hickman.

June Term, 1850.

1. Criminal Law—Sale of Ardent Spirits—Joint Indictment.—Two persons may be jointly indicted or proceeded against, by information, for retailing ardent spirits without license.
2. Same—Same—Same—Separate Fine.†—Upon their conviction there should be a separate fine against each of thirty dollars.

At the June term 1849, of the Hustings court of Danville, the grand jury presented James B. Harris and John Hickman for selling ardent spirits to be drank where sold, without a license, to Hugh Ramey. Upon this presentment an information was filed, to which the defendants pleaded jointly "not guilty;" and were tried together, when the jury found them guilty in manner and form as was alleged in the information.

When the jury brought in their verdict, the defendants moved the Court to arrest the judgment on the grounds, 601 *1st. That the information charges the offence jointly against the defendants for committing jointly one offence.

2d. That the verdict of the jury is joint against the two defendants; and the judgment of the Court, if entered up, must impose a fine upon them jointly for one offence.

But the Court overruled the motion, and gave a judgment against each of the defendants for thirty dollars, the fine imposed by the statute, for the use of the Literary fund, and the costs.

The defendants applied to the Judge of the Circuit court of Pittsylvania for a writ of error to this judgment, which was awarded. And when the cause came on to be heard, the Court with the assent of the defendants, adjourned to this Court the questions:

1st. Can two persons be jointly indicted, or proceeded against by information, for retailing ardent spirits?

2d. Is the judgment of the Hustings court of Danville right in rendering, on the finding of the jury, a several fine against each of the plaintiffs in error, for thirty dollars each; or should the Court have rendered judgment against them jointly for the sum of thirty dollars and the costs?

3d. What judgment ought the Court to pronounce in this cause?

LOMAX, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

Upon the first question adjourned, this Court is unanimously of opinion, that two or more persons may be jointly indicted for retailing ardent spirits without a license.

Upon the second question, a majority of the Court is of opinion, that the judgment of the Hustings court of Danville for several fines of thirty dollars against each of the plaintiffs in error, is correct.

Bacon v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1850.

Criminal Law—Denial of Owner's Right of Property in Slaves—Statute—What Commonwealth Must Show.—

On a prosecution under the act of 1847-48, ch. 10, § 24,* for punishing every free person who by speaking or writing shall maintain that owners have no right of property in their slaves, it is incumbent on the Commonwealth to shew, in the alleged speaking, that the defendant denied the right of owners to property in their slaves; and also to shew that that denial was maintained by him. The language must plainly express the denial, or in its plain meaning necessarily imply it.

At the April term for 1849, of the Circuit court of Grayson county, Jarvis C. Bacon, a free person, was indicted for that on the 26th of March 1849, he did by speaking, maintain that owners have not right of property in their slaves. On the trial the jury found him guilty, and assessed his fine at 49 dollars 62½ cents. Whereupon he moved the Court for a new trial.

Upon this motion the Court below certified the facts proved upon the trial as follows: That the defendant, who is a minister of the gospel, on Sunday before Christmas 1848, in the county of Grayson, preached a sermon from the text in the New Testament: "Ye are the salt of the earth," or "Ye are the light of the world." That he proceeded to point out the duty of Christians, and in the conclusion of his discourse, after 603 citing a *passage of scripture which related to the overthrow of the tables of the money changers in the temple, said that those persons, (alluding to the money changers,) were pronounced by our Saviour, thieves and robbers; and then observed that there were thieves and robbers in the church at this day. In illustration of this view, the defendant said: "If I was to go to my neighbour's crib and steal his corn, you would call me a thief, but that it was worse to take a human being and keep him all his life, and give him nothing for his labour, except once in a while a whipping or a few stripes." Defendant did not mention the name of slave owners or masters of slaves at any time during his discourse; but witness stated that he understood these remarks to refer to slaveholders. These were all the facts proved; and thereupon the Court adjourned to this Court the question:

*The act says: "Any free person who, by speaking or writing, shall maintain that owners have not right of property in their slaves, shall be punished by confinement in the jail, not more than twelve months, and by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars."

Ought this Court to grant a new trial in this cause?

The case was argued in writing by Fulton and Buckingham for the defendant.

The indictment in this case is founded upon the 24th section of the 10th chapter of the Criminal Code of Virginia, which provides that "any free person who, by speaking or writing, shall maintain that owners have not right of property in their slaves, shall be punished by confinement in the jail not more than twelve months, and by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars," &c.

The evidence in support of the indictment shews that the defendant, who was a minister of the gospel, on a certain occasion delivered a sermon from one or the other of two texts of scripture. "Ye are the salt of the earth," or "Ye are the light of the world;" in which he proceeded to point out the duty of Christians, and in the conclusion of his discourse, after citing a passage of scripture which related to the

604 overthrow of the tables of the money changers in the temple, said *that they were pronounced by our Saviour, "thieves and robbers," and then observed that there were "thieves and robbers in the church at this day," and in illustration of this said that if he were to go to his neighbour's crib and steal his corn he would be called a thief, but that it was worse to take a human being and keep him all his life and give him nothing for his labour, except once in a while a whipping or a few stripes. The defendant did not mention the name of slave owners or masters of slaves at any time during his discourse. It was the mere inference of a single witness from the remarks just quoted, that he referred to the relation of master and slave. In speaking of the "right of property," in the section referred to, the Legislature clearly meant a legal right—a right derived from civil compact, by which every citizen of the State acquires, holds and disposes of property. Beyond this point the Legislature could not go, without transcending the limits prescribed by the constitution of the State, which declares that they shall pass no "law abridging the freedom of speech." "Nor shall any man be enforced, restrained, molested or burthened in his body or goods, or otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief, but all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and the same shall in no wise affect, diminish or enlarge their civil capacities."

In the doctrines and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the question is asked, "What shall be done for the extirpation of the evil of slavery?"

The answer is: "We declare that we are as much as ever convinced of the great evil of slavery; therefore no slaveholder shall be eligible to any official station in our church hereafter, when the laws of the State in which he lives will admit of emancipation, and permit the liberated slave to enjoy freedom," &c.

605 *Dr. Adam Clark, in his commentary on the 5th verse of the 6th chapter of Ephesians says: "In heathen countries slavery was in some sort excusable; among christians it is an enormity and a crime, for which perdition has scarcely an adequate state of punishment."

These works are every where to be found in the State of Virginia; they are read by all, and the sentiments expressed in the above extracts approved by many.

Would any man, who, by speaking or writing, should maintain the correctness of these sentiments, incur the penalty imposed by the section in question? It is believed he would not. Many believe slavery to be inconsistent with the doctrines taught by scripture; and to attempt to maintain the proposition, either by speaking or writing, would be no violation of the statute. Whether such a position be tenable or not, does not matter here, the right to discuss it is guarantied by the constitution; a right which no earthly tribunal can take away or abridge.

The defendant in this case was addressing his remarks to the members of the church; he did not allude to or assail any law of the State, or attempt to impugn any right conferred by law upon the citizens, but was attempting to prove the sinfulness of members of the church keeping human beings at labour during their lives, and giving them nothing in return but stripes. In this he probably alluded to the relation of master and slave, but a man may argue that slavery is a sin, or a crime against the laws of God, without thereby violating the laws of man. The legal right to property is sometimes acquired by operation of law, which justice would withhold. In such case it might be well maintained that the man who avails himself of his legal advantage, is guilty of a great moral wrong; and this too without condemning the law or denying the right under it. That there is a distinction between legal and moral rights and legal and moral wrongs, (if the expression *may be permitted) no 606 argument is necessary to prove. How far the citizen may go in maintaining his opinions respecting religion or the duty of Christians is a question with which the Legislature, it is presumed, has nothing to do. The defendant, as has been said, was addressing the members of his church, and the language used by him on that occasion was intended in the same sense of the text of scripture referred to by him respecting the money changers in the temple. The meaning there was not that the money changers had actually stolen any thing from the temple, but the words were intended in a wholly different sense. So with the defendant, who believed slavery to be sinful, and inconsistent with true religion, and that professors of religion who held human beings in bondage, were violating the laws of God, declared that there were thieves and robbers in the church at the present day, as well as in the days of our Saviour on earth, and with a view no doubt of giving force to the expression, made use of the comparison spoken of by the witness. If it be true that the citizen has the right to discuss and maintain by argument his own opinions as to the moral right to hold human beings in bondage, then no expression which he might use, however strong it might be in attempting to prove the wrong, could subject him to punishment under human laws. To constitute crime, the intent must be manifest. In this case there is no evidence shewing an intention to violate the statute. The defendant did not allude to the institution of slavery, or the legal right by which they are held as property. To subject him to punishment upon the evidence in the cause would, it is humbly conceived, take from the citizen the safeguard afforded him by the constitution of the State. It is fair to presume that as the defendant did not deny the legal right of owners to property in their slaves, he admitted or conceded that right to exist by virtue of the law of the land, and that 607 his remarks from *the proof must be applied to the evil of slavery in the church.

LOMAX, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

Any statute tending to restrain the exercise of the freedom of speech, or supposed to have such tendency, should be strictly construed by the Courts. This should more especially be the case when the exercise of that freedom has for its object matters of religious doctrine and discipline. The acts of the Legislature should receive their construction in harmonious deference to the principles of the constitution relating to the freedom of speech and of religious faith. The Legislature has enacted (Sess. Acts 1847-8, ch. 10, § 24,) that "any free person who, by speaking or writing, shall maintain that owners have not right of property in their slaves, shall be punishable by confinement in the jail, not more than twelve months, and by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars." It is charged in the indictment that the defendant, on the 26th of March 1849, did, by speaking, maintain that owners have not right of property in their slaves. The words spoken are not, as in strictness perhaps they should have been, set out in the indictment, neither in their tenor nor in their substance. The proof is that the occasion of the alleged speaking was at a religious meeting, on Sunday before Christmas 1848, when the defendant, who is a minister of the gospel, preached a sermon from the text in the New Testament: "Ye are the salt of the earth," or "Ye are the light of the world," in which he proceeded to point out the duty of Christians. The occasion was in itself innocent, and unless it be clearly shewn that its sanctity was abused to purposes plainly illegal, the preacher who ministered should not be subjected to criminal animadversion. We may not unreasonably suppose, from such a text as that which was selected, the discourse was directed mainly to the 608 professing Christian *members of that church, of which the defendant was the minister, to whatever denomination it may have belonged. In holding up the spirituality of their creed for their consideration, and the corresponding spirituality of life and conversation for their instruction and edification, he might well be allowed to admonish them to abstain from many indulgences, without questioning, in a secular point of view, the lawfulness of such indulgences. As was said by St. Paul in regard to his spiritual duties, "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not." To dissuade a member of a Christian flock from merchandizing in slaves, or taking and keeping human beings in slavery, may be done by a pastor, without any denial of the right of owners to property in their slaves. A spiritual law, apart from human law, might be inculcated by him upon their consciences for their peculiar government, according to their creed, without exciting, or intending to excite, any spirit of rebellion against the law of the land; which, according to Christian doctrine, all are bound to obey. With the fullest sense of the sanctions with which the rights of owners to property in their slaves have been clothed by the law of the State, and the law of nations, and the law of the scriptures, and with the most profound submission to these sanctions, he might innocently urge an abstinence from the enjoyment of these rights, as not being expedient, or as inconsistent with the professions of a peculiar religious faith.

It is incumbent upon the Commonwealth to shew, in the alleged speaking, that the defendant denied the right of owners to property in their slaves; and also, to shew that that denial was maintained by him; which would seem to imply the consideration of an effort made, by adducing facts, or proofs or arguments, to verify that denial. The defendant's language must

609 *plainly express that denial, or, in its plain meaning, necessarily imply it. Its import of the offensive proposition, owners have no right of property in their slaves, must be clear and without any ambiguity of construction, leading to a meaning that is wholly innocent. The evidence is, that in the discourse which the defendant preached upon the text before cited, after proceeding to point out the duty of Christians, towards the conclusion of his discourse, the defendant cited a passage of scripture, which related to the overthrow of the tables of the money changers in the temple; and said, those persons (alluding to the money changers,) were pronounced by our Saviour, thieves and robbers; and there are thieves and robbers in the church at this day. If I were to go to my neighbour's crib and steal his corn, you would call me a thief; but that it was worse to take a human being and keep him all his life, and give him nothing for his labour, except once in a while a whipping or a few stripes. And this remark was understood by the witness, to refer to slaveholders; though the words slaves or slaveowners were not used by the defendant in his discourse.

If it was the design of the defendant in this discourse, to dispute or deny any rights of property, there was no fitness for such a purpose in the incident cited by him. In that transaction our Saviour was vindicating no rights of property; nor was he accusing or judging the offenders, in any secular sense, for any transgression of civil or social rights. It was not for any crime against the judicial law that he reproved them; but for the spiritual sin of desecrating His father's house—the house of prayer, and by their unholy and sacrilegious pursuit of gain in the temple, converting it into the den of thieves. The right of property of the money changers and those who bought and sold in the temple, was not animadverted upon or questioned.

610 The language *was strongly figurative. It could not literally be understood that the temple had sunk into a den by reason of its desecration, nor could the money changers and those who bought and sold, with a title unimpeached in the money and the goods, be literally understood to be thieves, in the sense of those who had stolen property, because of the sinful cupidity, in the indulgence of which they may have shewn a strong resemblance to thieves. It was their spiritual guilt and not any secular criminality He was reproving. Thieves were spoken of, upon the occasion, in a sense similar to that when upon another occasion, He said, "he that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up in some other way, is a thief and a robber." There seems therefore, no warrant found in the passage cited by the defendant from the scripture, for interpreting his denunciation of thieves and robbers in the church at this day, in any other sense than as sinners, not as malefactors against any social or civil rights of property. So understood, the words thieves and robbers could cast no hue of criminal import upon the rest of the defendant's expressions. But, supposing that the words thieves and robbers were used by the defendant in the ordinary sense of larcenous violators of the rights of property, it would be extremely difficult to find a construction of this obscure and incoherent fragment of the defendant's discourse, as presented by the testimony, that would make it tantamount to the offensive proposition, distinctively expressed in the statute, that owners have not right of property in their slaves; and which the law requires should be proved to have been clearly maintained by the alleged speaking. The matter which, it would seem, the defendant proposed to maintain was, that there were thieves and robbers in the church at this day. With that proposition, whether understood in a spiritual or worldly sense, the penalties of the law have no concern. All that followed the

611 *enunciation of that proposition, seems to have been adduced as proofs and arguments, or as the witness tells us an illustration, (such as they were,) to maintain that main proposition, without any effort to maintain the matters themselves which were so adduced. "If I were to go to my neighbour's crib and steal his corn," says the defendant, "you would call me a thief." That may be very true. But taken in the hypothetical manner in which it was spoken, without any direct connection with or pertinent application to the matter in hand, it is not easy to perceive its bearing, as an argument or illustration to maintain the point proposed, that there were thieves and robbers in the church at this day. In connection and in dependence upon this vague and apparently incoherent assertion as to the crime of stealing corn from a neighbour's crib; and by way of comparison with it, he proceeds to assert, without any argument or proof to maintain, that "it is worse (than thus stealing corn,) to take a human being and keep him all his life, and give him nothing for his labour, except once in a while a whipping or a few stripes." We will not pause to enquire whether this remark must necessarily, in legal construction, have reference to slaves and slaveowners. The witness so understood it. In this casuistry, in the comparison of hypothetical guilt, why was this taking and keeping, as described, worse than stealing the corn? Furtively, to take and keep a slave, as in the case of the corn, is legally and morally admitted to be worse. So inhumanly to take and keep a slave in the manner described, without any recompense, of suitable comforts or necessities, for his labour, except once in a while a whipping, &c., might, to the feelings of a humane casuist, be worse in the scale of guilt, than stealing corn; or worse than murder, or arson, or other crime against the person or property of another. In either of these views, this remark made to maintain the proposition that there were

612 thieves and robbers *in the church, &c., would be entirely innocent. If there be any ambiguity in its meaning, why should a Court, guided by the spirit of the constitution, which favours the freedom of speech and of religious faith, reject in this criminal prosecution, this innocent construction, and fasten upon another, that makes such speaking a crime? To arrive at that criminal meaning, it will be necessary for the Court, by construction to supply other words as spoken or intended by the defendant, which he did not speak or necessarily intimate. We must make him say, that to take and keep a human being (or say slave,) is worse than stealing corn, such taking and keeping being equally without right of property in the slaveowner, as in the thief who has stolen the corn.

This case comes before this Court upon a question adjourned by the Circuit court upon a motion for a new trial, after a verdict of conviction. There has been no ratification or concurrence of the Judge who presided at the trial in that verdict. This Court therefore, upon this question occupies the seat of that Judge, upon the motion pending before him. Upon the matters so adjourned, this Court is of opinion that the proofs set forth in the record are not sufficient for the conviction of the accused in this case; and consequently that the motion for a new trial should be allowed.

(Absent FIELD,* J.)

June Term, 1850.

Criminal Law—New Trial—After Two Concurring Verdicts.†—A new trial granted to a prisoner convicted of murder in the first degree, after two concurring verdicts, approved by the judge who presided at the trials; the evidence being wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment.

This is the sequel of the case reported in 6th Grattan, p. 712. The prisoner was again tried at the June term of the Circuit court of Culpeper county for 1850, when he was again found guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hung.

The prisoner moved the Court to set aside the verdict and judgment, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; but the Court overruled the motion. Whereupon the prisoner excepted, and applied to this Court for a writ of error, which was awarded.

The facts spread upon the record are in most respects the same as those which appeared on the former trial; and they are stated fully in the report of the case in 6th Grattan. The only differences in the statement of the evidence are, first, as to the time when the young men left the store on the evening previous to the murder. It was stated on the last trial that two of them remained about fifteen minutes after the others went away; and when they left it was the darkest time of the night, the moon shining brightly all night. Second. The evidence as to the appearance of the prisoner at Huffman's cabin, and his going out with another negro and a white boy, to hunt his spade and shovel, is wholly omitted. Third. It is proved that the spade and shovel were not, at 12 o'clock, on the day after the murder, in the spot where 614 they were found at 9 o'clock *that night; that spot having been examined by some of the persons who were searching for them. Fourth. The pistol of the deceased, which was taken the night of the murder, was found in July or August 1849, when the prisoner was in close custody, near the house of George Jeffries, on the side of the path leading from his road gate to the house, in a place where it could not have remained long without discovery.

Fifth. During the inquest, after the prisoner's appeal to William Wood, he further said that a negro man named Tom, belonging to Woodford Settle, went with him to the store and saw him get the spade and shovel; and if Tom was brought he would prove it; but the said Tom came and denied it, said that he did not see him get the spade and shovel; that he went with him to the store, but did not go in; that being in a hurry to have a plough sharpened at William Wood's blacksmith shop, he standing outside of the store, called to the prisoner to make haste, that he was afraid the blacksmith would be gone to bed; to which the prisoner replied, "You go on, I will come on presently;" and that this statement was not contradicted by the prisoner. Sixth. The judge certified that he considered the boy Huffman a credible witness, though he thought him mistaken in supposing he saw both the spade and shovel when sent by William Wood to see them at his house. Seventh. After the inquest had been taken and signed, the prisoner was directed to be committed to jail, when it was proposed—the certificate of facts says—by a gentleman present, as a means of finding out where the spade and shovel were to be found, that the prisoner should have his hands put into a vice, and by torture compelled to confess. His hands were put into a vice and the force of the screw applied; but he persisted in the statement that he had before made, that he was drunk, had lost his spade and shovel, and did not know where they were.

oner, and the Attorney General, for the Commonwealth.

LEIGH, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff in error, at the spring term in the year 1849, of the Superior Court of law and chancery for the county of Culpeper, was indicted for the murder of David W. Miller, and upon his trial was found by the jury guilty of murder in the first degree. He then moved the Court to grant him a new trial, but his motion was overruled, and judgment rendered against him upon the verdict. This Court at the last term reversed the judgment, and directed that another trial of the case should be had. This trial has been had, and the same verdict and judgment have been rendered against the accused; and he has again applied to this Court to reverse this last judgment. The ground upon which he makes this application is, that the evidence introduced on the trial was wholly insufficient to prove that he was guilty of the murder, or in any manner connected with it. The evidence is set forth in the exception taken to the opinion of the Court refusing to award a new trial.

This Court is fully aware of the weight which ought to be given to two concurring verdicts, approved by the Judge who presided at the trials; and if in our opinions the evidence made even a probable case of guilt, we would be unwilling to disturb the judgment. But at the last term this Court was of opinion, unanimously, that the evidence introduced on the first trial was plainly insufficient to connect the accused with the murder. The evidence on the second trial is somewhat different from the evidence on the first trial, but this difference is favourable to the accused; and after examining the testimony anew, we are again 616 unanimously of opinion, *that it is wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment.

We do not deem it necessary to make a minute examination of all the evidence, because we think it plain that the circumstances relied on to prove the guilt of the accused are slight or are sufficiently explained. These circumstances, or rather the circumstances tending most strongly to prove the guilt of the accused are, that he was at the residence of the deceased, the place where the murder was committed, at, or just before, or just after dark of the night when the crime was perpetrated; that a shovel and spade were carried by the accused during the same night from the residence of the deceased; that the wounds inflicted on the deceased were made with some blunt instrument; that the shovel carried from the residence of the deceased had upon it, when it was found the night after the murder, spots of blood, and that the accused said the morning after the murder, "that he did not know where the spade and shovel were."

We cannot consider the fact that the accused was at the residence of the deceased about dark of the night of the murder as furnishing any evidence of guilt; since he was there for a proper purpose, namely, to redeem his spade and shovel, which had been taken possession of and detained by the partner of the deceased, to secure the payment of a debt or debts due by the accused. Besides, the accused remained on this occasion at the residence of the deceased but for a short period, as it is proved clearly that he was at the house of another person, half a mile distant, very early in the same night, and the whole evidence too, makes it altogether improbable that the murder was committed at so early an hour of the night. Nor do we think that the fact, that the spade and shovel were carried from the residence of the deceased during 617 the night, furnish any *stronger evidence of guilt that the fact above mentioned, as it is proved by an uncontradicted and credible witness that the accused carried with him both the spade and shovel, when he left the residence of the deceased at or about dark. The judge who presided at the trial, was of opinion that this witness was under some mistake, and that the spade was not then carried off. This opinion was founded on the fact, that the spade carried off was not the spade of the accused, but another spade belonging to the store, and upon the fact that the accused had not enough money to redeem both the spade and the shovel. There is certainly some evidence, namely, the condition mentioned in Parr's order, and the fact that the deceased received that order as a payment, from which it may be inferred that the deceased delivered the spade as well as the shovel to the accused, and as the spades were so much alike, we cannot regard, under the circumstances, the fact that the spade belonging to the store instead of the one belonging to the accused, was carried off, as important. However this may be, we do not think the circumstances which weighed with the presiding Judge, sufficient to justify us in disregarding the testimony of the witness. The strongest circumstance against the accused, is the appearance of drops of blood upon the shovel which he carried from the residence of the deceased. This circumstance would have been entitled to much weight, if it had appeared that the accused had retained the possession of the shovel throughout the night, especially if the spots of blood had appeared to have been recently made. But we think it sufficiently proved, that the accused had not the possession of the shovel throughout the night. The Commonwealth gave in evidence the declarations of the accused made the morning after the murder was committed, and these declarations were "that he (the 618 accused) was drunk the night before; *that he lost both spade and shovel in going from Wood's to Huffman's; and that he did not then know where they were." Declarations of persons accused are not much to be relied on; but in this case the truth of the declarations was persisted in under peculiar circumstances;—

under severe torture, which we are sorry to say the bystanders, under the great excitement of the moment, forgetful of the mild spirit of our law, thought themselves at liberty to inflict. Besides, the declaration is so far supported, that it appears that at the time the declaration was made, both spade and shovel were in the possession of some other person. For both were found, two hours after dark of the night after the murder, in a place where they certainly were not at 12 o'clock of the preceding day, and of course they must have been placed where they were found by some other person, as during the whole period the accused was in close custody. There is too, other testimony which connects some other person with the murder. A pistol was carried from the residence of the deceased the night of the murder. This pistol was found at a place where it had been recently put, long after the accused was in close confinement, and it must therefore have been in the possession of some other person. The conduct of the accused is calculated, in some measure, to disprove the charge against him. He came to the place of the murder the morning after it had been committed, wearing the clothes which he had on the preceding night, and these had no stains of blood upon them. It is not at all probable that the accused changed his clothes during the night, and it is still less probable that the murderer escaped without marks of blood upon his clothes. For marks of blood were found on the floor of the room, on the counter and desk, sprinkled on the goods on the shelves, on the ground near the scene, and on a fence distant a few yards. Upon the whole case, we 619 are of opinion *that the testimony is not only not sufficient to prove the guilt of the accused, but that it is hardly sufficient to raise a suspicion against him. The judgment must therefore be reversed and a new trial awarded.

At the June term 1850 of the Circuit court for the county of Augusta, the grand jury found an indictment for arson against Martin Curran and eight others. The indictment charged that they feloniously, wilfully and maliciously did set fire to 620 and burn down a certain *dwelling house of one Charles East, contrary to the form of the statute, &c.

Curran was tried separately, and the jury found him guilty of arson in the day time; and fixed the term of his confinement in the penitentiary at three years. After the verdict he applied to the Court by petition in writing for a new trial, on the ground that one of the jury, Joseph T. Mitchell, had formed and expressed an opinion unfavourable to the prisoner before he was called as a juror; of which fact the prisoner was ignorant until after the rendition and recordation of the verdict.

The petition of the prisoner was sworn to by him, and was accompanied by the affidavits of Williams H. Grooms and H. St. J. Davis. Grooms stated that whilst the Court was empanelling the jury in the case of Chandler, tried for murder in the same Court, immediately preceding the trial of the prisoner, the affiant was standing by Lewis*, 25 Gratt. 941, it is said: "Now, by statute, persons indicted jointly for felony, may elect to be tried jointly or severally, on certain terms prescribed by the statute. Code, ch. 202, §§ 13, 14 and 15. But this statutory right of election given to the accused is subject to the right of the commonwealth, which still exists, to try the accused severally, notwithstanding they may elect to be tried jointly. Curran's Case, 7 Gratt. 619, 627." Joseph T. Mitchell in the courthouse, and heard Mitchell say that he had been summoned upon the venire in the Irish cases, and if he was taken upon the jury he would give them goss, or give them hell, or some other expression of that kind; the exact words the affiant does not remember, but the substance was, he would punish them.

Davis states, that during the trial of Chandler for murder at the present term of the Court, he had been in attendance upon the trial, and that as he left the courthouse he saw Joseph T. Mitchell, one of the jurors who tried the case of Curran, standing upon the porch in front of the courthouse, in company with several others, and as affiant passed said Mitchell and his company, he heard Mitchell say he had been summoned upon the venire in the Irish cases, and affiant says he thinks Mitchell remarked in substance, in reply to some question asked him, that something ought to be or would be done with the Irish.

621 *These witnesses being present in Court were examined orally before the Court, and made the same statement as that contained in their affidavits. The counsel for the prisoner then stated that they were prepared to prove that Mitchell, after the discharge of the jury, had stated that he as a juror was for sending the prisoner to the penitentiary for ten years; and that he would have been for a longer term if the law would have allowed it; but no witness was introduced to prove such declaration.

Mitchell was himself examined, and stated that he had made up no opinion of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, nor had he expressed any before he sat on his jury. That he did not know the prisoner personally up to the time he was sworn as a juror, nor indeed any of the Irish prisoners who were then in custody. That he had no prepossession whatever for or against the prisoner; and gave him a fair trial on the law and the evidence, as he understood them. That he heard the evidence in the case of Chandler, which was tried just before that of the prisoner; and that he expressed his opinion freely that said Chandler was guilty, and if he was on the jury he would convict him. These opinions were expressed during the progress of Chandler's trial, and must have been misunderstood and misapplied by Grooms and Davis to the Irish; as he expressed no opinion as to them.

And this being all the evidence, the Court refused to grant the new trial; and the prisoner excepted.

The prisoner then moved the Court in arrest of judgment, for errors apparent on the face of the record, viz: That the offence for which he was tried was not set forth in the indictment with sufficient certainty to enable the Court to give judgment thereon according to the very right of the case; it not being stated or averred whether the prosecution is for burning a dwelling

622 house in the night time under the act of Assembly, *entitled, "An act to reduce into one the several acts concerning crimes and punishments and proceedings in criminal cases," passed March 14th, 1848, ch. 4, § 1: or for burning a dwelling house in the day time, under the same act, ch. 4, § 2. But the Court overruled the motion and proceeded to give judgment; and the prisoner again excepted.

The prisoner applied to this Court for a writ of error, and assigned five different causes of error in his petition. All of which are noticed in the opinion of the Court.

THOMPSON, J. The first ground of error assigned in the prisoner's petition for the writ, is the refusal of the Circuit court to set aside the verdict and award him a new trial. The motion was founded upon exceptions taken after verdict to the competency of one of the venire, Joseph T. Mitchell; the grounds of incompetency, as disclosed by the first bill of exceptions, being the expression of an opinion by the jurorman unfavourable to the accused, which would have been good ground for challenge to the favour had it been known to him, and of which he was unapprised until after the trial. The declarations imputed to the jurorman are deposed to by two witnesses. He was called and examined, and upon his oath affirmed, as he had done before he was elected and sworn, his perfect impartiality; denied all prejudice or bias, and denied the declarations imputed to him in reference to the case of the prisoner. His affidavit renders it highly probable, to say the least, that the two witnesses were mistaken in referring what the jurorman admits he did say, to the case of the prisoner, instead of Chandler, who was on his trial for murder. But had the affidavits of the two witnesses remained wholly uncontradicted and unexplained, they certainly furnish no ground for a new trial. It would be supererogatory to argue the question. It is conclu-

623 sively settled by authority *to be found in the former adjudications of this Court. Smith's Case, 2 Va. Cases 6; Poore's Case, Id. 474; Kennedy's Case, Id. 510; Brown's Case, Id. 516; Hughes' Case, 5 Rand. 655; Jones' Case, 1 Leigh 598; and Hailstock's Case, 2 Gratt. 564. In all of these cases there was graver cause for impeachment of the partiality and indifference of the juror, than in this, and in all, this court held the new trial was properly denied.

The second error alleged, which raises the question of the sufficiency of the indictment upon motion in arrest of judgment after verdict, is the most important and plausible of the series, and in truth the only one deemed worthy of much consideration. The prisoner, with eight others, was indicted for feloniously, wilfully and maliciously setting fire to and burning down a certain dwelling house of one Charles East. The indictment pursues the common law form of indictment for arson, omitting to state whether the burning was in the night or the day time, merely alleging that it occurred on the 11th day of February 1850. The jury found him guilty of arson in the day time, on the 11th day of February 1850, and ascertained the period of his confinement in the jail and penitentiary house of the State to be three years. It is objected that this indictment is fatally defective for vagueness and uncertainty in omitting to state whether the burning was in the night or the day time. It is said the common law offence of arson is wholly abrogated and repealed by the revised criminal statute, to be found in the Sessions Acts of 1847-8, p. 99, ch. 4; and that by the 1st and 2d sections of that act two distinct statutory offences are created in relation to the burning of a dwelling house; the first the offence of burning in the night time; the second, the offence of burning in the day time; the first punishable with death, unless the jury shall find that at the time of committing the offence there was no person in the dwelling *house; and if they should so find, then the punishment should be confinement in the penitentiary for not less than 5 nor more than 10 years; the second punishable by confinement in the penitentiary for not less than 3 nor more than 10 years. It is then argued that as common law arson, which was irrespective of the time of day or night, was repealed; and in lieu of it, two distinct statutory offences created, which had regard to the time of the burning, the time, whether by day or by night, became an element in and of the essence of the offence; and that it became as necessary to charge the time, whether it be night or day, as to charge in burglary that the breaking and entry was by night. In the view which I have taken of this question, I do not consider it important to moot the point whether our statute has wholly abrogated the common law, and in its stead substituted new statutory offences; or whether the statute creates no new offence, but like our statute on the subject of felonious homicide, (which only graduates the common law offence, and measures the amount of the punishment by the degree of the offence,) makes the grade of the common law offence of arson, and the punishment to be inflicted, depend upon the time and circumstances of its commission. Thus at common law the felonious, wilful and malicious burning of a dwelling house was of equal malignity and enormity whether by day or night; by our statute, a felony, whether by day or night; but more enormous in legal contemplation, and more penal, if done by night than day. It is conceded that the change in the common law made by our statute graduating felonious homicide has made no change in the frame of the indictment—indeed it has been held that a change is not only unnecessary, but would be improper. In view of this apparent if not real analogy between the two cases of homicide and arson, it might with much plausibility be, as it has been contended, that no 625 change in the frame of the *indictment for the burning of a dwelling house, whether under the 1st or 2d section, was made necessary by the new statute. That by analogy to the proceeding upon an indictment for murder, upon a common law indictment for arson the jury should be charged to find whether committed by day or by night; and whether any person was in the house at the time of committing the offence, and find a verdict graduating the offence and the punishment according to the statute. Such a practice, if admissible, would certainly be convenient, rendering a single count sufficient, where otherwise, in the event of a doubt about the time of the burning, double counts would be necessary; and I do not perceive there is more objection to it upon the score of possible injury or surprise to the accused, than in the case of homicide. But it must be admitted that there is this difference between the cases of homicide and arson, and to that extent the analogy fails. The common law indictment for murder was adapted to the highest grade of murder under our statute—killing with malice prepense; hence upon the principle of the greater including the less, there was no necessity of change occasioned by the statute. Whereas, the common law indictment for arson was equally applicable to a burning whether by day or by night, to the greater and the lesser offences under the statute; and hence is the necessity of a change to meet the exigencies and requirements of the statute: and the only question is as to the extent of the change. To convict of the highest offence—a burning in the night under the first section, I concede that the indictment must charge the burning in the night, as in burglary. Here the analogy is complete between breaking in the night and burning in the night; but to convict of the minor offence—burning in the day—I hold that it is not indispensably necessary to charge expressly a burning by day; because 626 the burning *of a dwelling house feloniously, wilfully and maliciously, is a crime both at common law and under the statute; at common law equally penal whether burnt by day or night; and by the statute more penal if burnt by night than by day. The burning must ex necessitate rei either be in the night or day. The act of felonious burning being charged, omitting to state that it was done in that part of the day called night, which would constitute it the greater offence, is in legal contemplation and intendment, tantamount and equivalent to a charge of the minor offence—a burning in the day time. Therefore I must regard this indictment as sufficient, under the 2d section of the statute, to warrant a conviction for burning in the day time. I cannot perceive how such a decision can by possibility operate any surprise or injury to the party accused. He is charged with an act committed in some portion of a day of 24 hours. If done in one portion of that day it is a capital offence; if done in another portion of the day it is a lesser offence. These are the only alternatives. A failure to lay the act in that period of the day which would import a charge of the higher offence, by inevitable intendment, imports a charge of the minor offence. By sustaining such an indictment there seems to me to be no possibility of injury or surprise. On the contrary whilst the accused can never be prejudiced by it, he might be benefited by a conviction for the lesser, when he had been guilty of the higher offence.

But whilst I consider the indictment sufficient upon demurrer or motion to quash before verdict; and more especially after verdict, upon motion in arrest of judgment, I must admit it would have been better, more in accordance with the spirit of, because more conducive to that high degree of certainty so desirable in, criminal pleadings, had it charged the time of the burning expressly in the day time, thereby leaving no room for intendment or implication, however inevitable. It seems to me

627 advisable *in all cases of doubt as to the time of the burning, whether in the night or the day time, to frame the indictment with two counts, so as to adapt it to the proof of either.

I am of opinion, that the objection upon which the third error assigned is based, is neither sound nor plausible. It alleges "that it was error to try the prisoner separately, it not appearing that he elected to be so tried."

By the common law, until it was changed by a recent act for the summoning of venires and empanelling juries in criminal cases, the Commonwealth and not the prisoner, in case of joint indictments, had the right of election subject to the control and discretion of the Court, whether to arraign and try prisoners or defendants jointly indicted, separately or jointly. By the law now in force, (see Revised Criminal Statute, Sessions Acts 1847-8, p. 149, sections 11 and 12,) each defendant has a right to a separate trial, if he so elect. Indeed, they must necessarily be tried separately where the offence is felony, unless they elect a joint trial and agree in their challenges. But even if they should so elect, the attorney for the Commonwealth or the Court may nevertheless elect to have a separate trial; so that whilst any and every joint defendant is entitled to a separate trial if he so elect, against the will of the Court, or the attorney for the Commonwealth, joint defendants cannot be tried jointly without the concurrent election of themselves, on the one hand, and the attorney for the Commonwealth or the Court on the other. But were the law even such, as the objection takes for granted, that it was the right of the prisoner to be tried jointly or separately at his election, there is nothing in the record to shew that he made his election to be tried jointly, and that the right (if it had existed,) was denied him. And no such fact appearing on the record by bill of exceptions or otherwise, none such can 628 be presumed to *have existed. On the contrary, the presumption must be that he elected a separate trial, as he was so tried without any objection spread upon the record.

Of the same character, and as groundless as the last, is the objection taken in the 4th assignment of errors; "That it was error to try your petitioner by a jury not composed of the venire summoned for the purpose; no reason appearing for summoning others, and it not appearing how or by whom they were called." The answer is, that in the absence of any objection spread upon the record by bill of exceptions or otherwise, it must necessarily be presumed that the jury which was elected, tried and sworn, was properly selected from and composed of persons legally summoned, and in all respects constituted according to law.

Nor is there any validity in the objection which is made the foundation of the 5th and last assignment of errors; "That it was error to give judgment upon the verdict rendered in the cause, because not responsive to the charge in the indictment." The charge was setting fire to and burning the dwelling house of one Charles East, on the 11th day of February 1850. The verdict is guilty of arson in the day time on the 11th of February 1850. What arson or burning did the jury mean? The only answer that can be given, is the arson or burning, whether you choose to denominate it statutory or common law, charged in the indictment. I interpret the verdict to mean the same thing as if it had said, "we of the jury find the prisoner guilty of the burning in manner and form as in the indictment against him is charged, and we find that it was committed in the day time on the 11th of February 1850."

FIELD, J. As to the prisoner's motion to grant him a new trial, upon the exceptions taken to the juror after the verdict was rendered, I concur in opinion with the judge of the Circuit court.

629 *But I regard the indictment as fatally defective, in not stating that the offence was committed in the day time of some day. The law makes it felony to burn a dwelling house by night, punishable by death. This is one offence. The law also makes it felony punishable by confinement in the penitentiary to burn a dwelling house by day. These are not common law offences. They are statutory offences, separate and distinct, and having no connection with each other. They are not grades of the same offence—one a lower grade, and the other a higher grade, as would be in the case of homicide, which might be involuntary manslaughter, voluntary manslaughter, murder in the second or murder in the first degree. The doctrine of arson at common law seems to have been abolished by the new Criminal Code of 1847-8, and the burning of a dwelling house in the day is made felony, punishable by confinement in the penitentiary. The jury finds the prisoner guilty of arson in the day; and it is contended that this finding of the jury cures the supposed defect in the indictment. It is a rule well established in criminal prosecutions, that the indictment must set forth all the material circumstances of the offence. Hence, in an indictment for burglary, it must be alleged that the fact was committed in the night time of some day. No indictment would be sustained which omitted this averment. It would be a defect that could not be cured by a verdict. Suppose that the law made it felony to burn a dwelling house in the day time only, and said nothing about the burning of a dwelling house at night. Everybody, I presume, will admit that in framing an indictment upon the statute, it would be necessary to aver that the offence was committed in the day time of some day, specified in the indictment. The word day in an indictment, means the whole 24 hours, of which for one half of the year there is more night than day. Hence the necessity 630 in an indictment for burglary, *to aver that the offence was committed in the night time of some certain day; and equally necessary is it to aver in an indictment for burning a dwelling house under our statute, that the fact was committed in the day time of some day. And why is it so? The reason is plain; because the time is a material circumstance of the offence. Now let us suppose that another law is passed, making it felony punishable with death to burn a dwelling house in the night, would time then become a less material circumstance than it was before the passage of the last law. I should presume not. If time is a material circumstance of the offence, it will be so in all cases, and the pleadings must be made to conform to it.

The verdict of the jury upon an indictment for felony should be certain, and should respond to the indictment. The prisoner was indicted for burning a dwelling house. The jury found him guilty of arson committed in the day time. Now what is arson? Arson is the burning of a dwelling house feloniously. The term dwelling house embraces the dwelling house proper, kitchen, meat house, dairy, offices, barn and stables, and all other out buildings within the curtilage of the dwelling house. The finding of the jury may be construed to apply to this offence, and may have been rendered upon proof of the prisoner's burning a barn, stable, or some other out building falling within the common law definition of arson; when no out house, is to be regarded as the dwelling house, unless it be under the same roof with the dwelling house proper.

Upon the whole, I am of opinion that the judgment should be arrested, and for that purpose would award the writ of error.

Judges Lomax and Leigh concurred in the opinion of Judge Thompson.

Writ of error denied.

631 *Commonwealth v. Christian.

June Term, 1850.

1. Presentments—Commencement of Prosecution—Statute of Limitations.*—A presentment for a mis-

*Indictments—Commencement of the Prosecution.—

The date of the finding of an indictment is the com-demeanor is the commencement of the prosecution; and unless the prosecution is then barred by the statute of limitations, it will not be barred by the failure to file an information or indictment upon the presentment before the time of limitation runs out.

2. Same—Objections to—Case at Bar.—A presentment for a misdemeanor does not conclude "against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth." On this presentment process issues and the defendant appears and pleads "not guilty;" and the cause is continued. At the next term he by leave of the Court withdraws his plea; and then moves to quash the presentment for the defect aforesaid; but the attorney for the Commonwealth suggesting that an information might be filed upon the presentment, the Court overrules the motion to quash, and on the motion of the attorney orders a rule upon the defendant to shew cause why an information should not be filed upon the presentment. Upon this rule the defendant appears and again moves to quash the presentment, on the ground: 1st. That it should have been quashed upon his former motion. 2d. Because the Court having overruled his motion to quash, the presentment was pending as a separate and distinct prosecution; and therefore leave should not be given to file the information. 3d. Because the attorney for the Commonwealth having originally elected to try the case on the presentment, by suing out process thereon to answer the presentment, was not entitled to the rule for the information. 4th. Because the supposed offence must have been committed more than a year before granting the rule to file the information, and so was barred by the statute of limitations. HELD:

1. Same—Case at Bar.—That under the facts and circumstances of the case, the act of limitations does not protect the defendant against further prosecution by information.

2. Same—Same.—That the motion of the defendant to quash the presentment should be overruled.

3. Same—Same.—That the judgment of the Court at the previous term overruling the defendant's motion to quash the presentment, furnished no good reason against giving leave to file the information.

4. Same—Same.—That the issuing process against the defendant to answer the presentment, furnishes no reason against granting leave to file the information.

632 *The defendant was presented on the 8th November 1848, in the Circuit court for the county of James City and the city of Williamsburg, for unlawfully assaulting and beating Samuel S. Griffin, on the 9th of September 1848, in the city of Williamsburg, within the jurisdiction of the Court. And it was thereupon ordered that the defendant should be summoned to appear on the first day of the next term, to commencement of the prosecution, and the statute of limitations ceases to run from that date. State v. Beasley, 21 W. Va. 781, citing the principal case.

The principal case was also cited in Wilson v. Com., 87 Va. 95, 12 S. E. Rep. 108. See, further, monographic note on "Indictments, Informations and Presentments" appended to Boyle v. Com., 14 Gratt. 674.

answer the presentment; and process was awarded accordingly. A summons accordingly issued upon this presentment, on the 30th March 1849, for the defendant to appear before the Court on the first day of the following May term to answer of and upon the said presentment. This summons being returned executed, the defendant appeared by attorney on the 5th of May 1849, and pleaded not guilty to the presentment; and issue was thereupon joined, and the case continued till the next term. At the next term, on the 8th of November 1849, on motion of the defendant leave was given him to withdraw his plea; and he thereupon withdrew the same, and moved to quash the presentment, on the ground that the same did not conclude against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth. And the record states that the Court being of opinion that the defendant ought not to be put upon his trial on the said presentment, because the same did not conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth;" and the attorney for the Commonwealth suggesting that an information might be filed upon the presentment, and that leave would be asked for the necessary process for that purpose, the Court overruled the defendant's motion to quash; and on motion of the Commonwealth's attorney it was ordered that the defendant should be summoned to appear at the next term to shew cause, if any he could, why an information should not be filed against him upon the presentment. A summons was accordingly, on the 1st April 1850, issued under 633 that *order, to appear at the following

May term, to shew cause why the information should not be filed. The defendant appeared at the May term 1850, in pursuance of the summons, and again moved the Court to quash the presentment; and shewed for cause: 1. Because at the preceding term the defendant had moved to quash the presentment because informal, defective and insufficient, which motion was overruled by the Court, notwithstanding the Court was of opinion that the presentment was informal, defective and insufficient; the Court being also of opinion that though informal, defective and insufficient, yet it ought not to be quashed, but should stand as the foundation of the rule against the defendant for an information to be filed. 2. Because the Court having overruled the defendant's motion at the last term to quash, the presentment was still pending as a separate and distinct prosecution; and that therefore, by reason of the pendency of that other prosecution for the same supposed offence, charged in the information, leave should not be given to file the information. But on this point the Circuit court was of opinion that the whole proceedings formed but one prosecution, and not separate and distinct prosecutions. 3. Because the Commonwealth's attorney having originally elected to try the case upon the presentment, by suing out process thereon to answer the presentment, was not entitled to the rule for the information. 4. Because the said supposed offence in the information must have been committed more than a year before granting the rule to file the information—and so barred by the statute of limitations: referring to 1 Rev. Code, ch. 169, § 60.

The Circuit court thereupon adjourned to this Court the following questions:

1. What judgment ought the Court to have rendered at the November term 1849, on the defendant's motion to quash the presentment; and what judgment 634 *ought now to be rendered on the defendant's motion renewed to the same effect?

2. Was the judgment of the Court at November term 1849, overruling the defendant's motion to quash the presentment, any good and sufficient reason why the rule to file information should not have been granted; or does that judgment of the Court furnish any good reason now against giving leave to file the information?

3. Does the suing out of process on the presentment to answer the presentment, and the proceedings had on the presentment up to the granting of the rule on the 14th November 1849, furnish any cause or reason against the granting of the rule, or the filing the information?

4. Under the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, does the act of limitations referred to and relied on by the defendant, protect him against further prosecution by information in the mode and manner proposed, for the said supposed offence in the information charged?

LEIGH, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion and doth decide, first, that under the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, the act of limitations referred to and relied on by the defendant does not protect him against further prosecution by information in the mode and manner proposed for the said supposed offence in the said information charged. Secondly, that the motion of the defendant to quash the presentment ought to be overruled. Thirdly, that the judgment of the Court at the previous term, overruling the defendant's motion to quash the presentment, does not furnish any good reason against giving leave to file the information against the defendant for the offence mentioned in the presentment. And,

fourthly, that the suing out process
635 on the *said presentment against the defendant to answer the presentment merely, and not to shew cause why an information thereon should not be filed, and the proceedings had on the said presentment up to the granting of the said rule, on the 14th day of November 1849, does not furnish any cause or reason against the granting of the said rule or filing of the said information. Which is ordered to be certified, &c.

After the Court had decided the case the defendant presented a petition for a rehearing.

The case was argued by R. T. Daniel and Bouldin, for the defendant, and the Attorney General, for the Commonwealth.

LOMAX, J. A presentment made in the ordinary way by a grand jury is regarded, in the practice at common law, as nothing more than instructions given by the grand jury to the proper officer of the Court for framing an indictment for an offence which they find to have been committed. 4 Bl. Comm. 301; 1 Chitt. Cr. L. 162. When the indictment has been prepared by him, it is submitted to them; and upon their finding it a true bill, the prosecution commences upon that indictment. The presentment merged in the indictment ceases and becomes extinct. If, however, the officer of the Court, who is the representative of the Crown, and whose concurrence and co-operation in the prosecution are always required, declines framing an indictment upon these instructions, the presentment ceases to exist for any purpose.

In the practice of Virginia the presentment has been allowed an efficacy, not known at common law in England. It has been allowed, for many purposes, to stand in the place of an indictment; or to stand as the foundation for further proceedings against the party presented. *In the revisal of 1748, p. 188, the Legislature recognized this practice of making the presentment stand in the place of an indictment, in regard to presentments for penalties not exceeding £ 5.; and directed that such presentment need not be drawn up in other form than as the same stands presented, and thereupon the Court shall order a summons forthwith to issue, to answer the presentment at the next Court. 1 Rev. Code, 614; 12 Hen. Stat. 344. Again in 1788, in the act establishing District courts, it was declared by the Legislature, that upon presentment made by the grand jury of an offence not capital, the Court shall order the clerk to issue a summons, or other proper process, against the person presented, to appear and answer the presentment at the next Court. 12 Hen. Stat. 758; 1 Rev. Code 612. So in the gaming act, 1 Rev. Code, ch. 147, § 21, which was passed in 1802.

The presentment, moreover, seems, in Virginia, from a very distant period, to have been made the foundation for a summons to shew cause why an information for the offence presented, should not be filed against the accused. No authority has been found in the English books that warrants such an use of the presentment. From what has before been stated as to the nature of a presentment in the English practice, no such use, it is supposed, could be made of it. Such a practice as an existing one in Virginia, seems to be clearly recognized in 1786, in the act directing the method of criminal proceedings against free persons, (12 Hen. Stat. 344; 1 Rev. Code, 614,) where, in regard to presentments for small penalties, it is directed that "no information shall thereupon be filed," but a summons to answer the presentment. So in the 21st section of ch. 147, 1 Rev. Code, in gaming cases, the Legislature recognizes proceedings upon presentments by rule to shew cause why an information should not be filed. With these peculiarities as to the nature of presentments in 637 *the Virginia practice, established by judicial and legislative authority, Mr. Robinson has laid it down, that, generally speaking, when a presentment is made, the order of the Court is, that the party be summoned to appear at the next Court to shew cause why an information should not be filed against him. But in some cases, the proceedings are of a more summary character. 3 Rob. Pr. 108.

These purposes of presentments and these proceedings upon them in our practice were, doubtless, within the view of the revisors of our new Code, when that general provision was made that prosecutions for offences against the Commonwealth, unless otherwise provided, shall be by indictment, presentment or information. 1847-8, ch. 20, § 1. It seems clear that the presentment has in Virginia the character, in itself, of a criminal proceeding, until it is embodied and merged in an indictment for the same offence, or in an information filed upon it; and may stand in the place of an indictment, on which the prosecution for a misdemeanor may proceed, without indictment or information, as was decided in Towles' Case, 5 Leigh 743. Whether the process upon the presentment be a summons to answer or be a rule and summons to shew cause why an information should not be filed upon it, the presentment must be regarded as the primal accusation of the defendant, as the commencement and institution of the prosecution. The proceedings, by way of information, must equally rest upon it, as the proceedings in the other case; for the rule for the information has nothing else to rest upon but the presentment. Immediately upon the presentment, the prosecutor may take, by leave of the Court, the summons or capias to answer, or take the rule for a summons to shew cause, and although such proceedings, the summons, or the rule, should be delayed or neglected, the prosecution instituted

638 by the presentment is not *discontinued. For it is enacted that no discontinuance shall take place in any criminal prosecution, by reason of the failure of the Court to award process, or to enter a continuance on the record. Sess. Acts 1847-8, p. 147. If the presentment is not discontinued, but is still pending, notwithstanding such delay or neglect, from whatever cause it may have proceeded, why shall not the presentment, whenever proceedings are to be taken upon it, be regarded in the same plight as it stood in at the regular term at which the proceedings should have been taken? If the period of the act of limitations had become complete in the interval between making the presentment and the motion at a subsequent term for process to answer the presentment, would the running of the act of limitations, in such case preclude, by its bar, the process that was moved for? Would it not be a sufficient answer to such a defence, that there was a prosecution commenced by the presentment, before there was any time that could raise the bar; that that prosecution had ever since the presentment made, been pending; and that therefore the limitation could have no application to the case? Regarding the rule for information as only a varied mode of proceeding upon the same presentment, why should not the same principles apply to exclude such bar? When the motion is made for the rule, it seems not at all more unreasonable to carry the time back to the date of the pending presentment, than it would be in case the motion were for a summons to answer the presentment; which in both cases is equally the institution of the prosecution.

If such would have been the case, had there been no process to answer the presentment, or other proceedings upon it intervening between the presentment and the subsequent term at which the motion might be made, the prosecutor should not be any more precluded in this case from having a summons to shew cause, by the proceedings *which did here intervene.

The presentment had sufficiently, though not technically, described the body of the offence—the “unlawfully assaulting and beating of Samuel Griffin on the 9th September 1848, in the city of Williamsburg, and within the jurisdiction of the Court.” No objection is seen in the completeness and sufficiency of this presentment, as a foundation for a rule for an information according to the Virginia practice, though it did omit the conclusion required by the constitution in indictments—“against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth.” If for that or any other technical defect or informality in the presentment, regarding it as an indictment, the Commonwealth’s attorney should apprehend that the prosecution might not, perhaps, be sustainable, and the real justice of the case be sacrificed, why should he be precluded by the erroneous or doubtful step which he had at first elected to take, from resorting to another course of proceeding, which was originally open to him, whereby the real justice of the prosecution would be attainable? It is not shewn that the change of the mode of proceeding could cause any surprise, or any wrong to the defendant. Every matter of fair defence and exculpation, was still fully open to him under this new phase of the prosecution. Why should not the Court allow, for the purpose of attaining substantial justice, the correction of pending proceedings in this case, that is allowable in other cases? No reason, therefore, can be perceived, why the Commonwealth’s attorney, waiving the proceedings upon the summons to answer, should not be permitted to resort to the alternative which he might have originally elected, a summons upon the presentment to shew cause why an information should not be filed. Moreover, the defendant, at his own instance, was indulged with leave to retract his plea, and the issue which was joined upon it. In doing so he derived the prosecutor of the benefits which might have resulted, in curing 640 *the defects and informalities of the presentment, by reason of that mode of defence, and the trial and verdict which might have been obtained. The defence, instead of being thus placed upon the merits, and upon the substantial justice of the case, attempts to place itself upon mere technical exceptions, and thereby to defeat justice. Why should not the prosecutor be allowed upon his part to vary his proceedings to meet this new exigency which the defendant has produced, by reason of an indulgence which he had asked for? After the defendant was allowed to retract his plea, the obvious justice of the case required that the prosecutor should be restored to the same situation, as if there had been no appearance and plea put in by the defendant. Nor is there any strict rule of practice which should be allowed to defeat that justice. If in motions for leave to file an information, there is any likelihood of injustice or even anything inequitable being inflicted upon the defendant, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, will always refuse the leave. But none such appears in this case.

Chichester’s Case, 1 Va. Cas. 312, is essentially different from the present case. The prosecution was there instituted by indictment, and was proceeded upon in the only way marked out in cases of indictments. The prosecution rested upon the indictment alone; and if not sustainable upon the indictment, it could not be sustained at all; and the defendant when discharged from the indictment must, of course would, be discharged from the prosecution. The indictment was for its defectiveness quashed, and thereby that prosecution terminated. It is a well settled principle, that the Court will not in any case grant an information, where the prosecutor has already preferred an indictment, and the grand jury found a true bill, although it was quashed for insufficiency, (Anon. 8 Mod. 187.) Here the prosecution was by presentment, 641 which was not as was the *indictment, the act of the prosecutor, at least in part, but it was the act of the grand jury. The presentment had not been quashed. It was still a pending prosecution, from which the defendant never had been discharged.

As has before been stated, the Court regards the presentment, not the time of filing the information upon it, as the date of the prosecution; and looking to that date, there is no room for the application of the statute of limitations. Acts 1847–8, ch. 20, § 14. And that being inapplicable to the case, no other serious objection can be urged against the information.

The petition of the defendant for a reconsideration of the judgment heretofore entered in this case is overruled.

Petition for a rehearing rejected.

Hunter v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1850.

1. Criminal Law—Confessions of Accomplice—Admissibility*—Case at Bar.—Confessions or admissions of an accomplice in a felony, made after the commission and completion of the offence, are not competent evidence against a prisoner, even though a previous conspiracy and combination between the prisoner and the accomplice to commit the felony has been proved.

2. Same—Burglary—What Constitutes—Case at Bar.—The only covering to an opening for a window, is a cloth hung over two nails at the top, and loose at the bottom. QUÆRE: If the removing the cloth from one of the nails is a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary.

Frederick B. Hunter was indicted for burglary in the Circuit court of Lee county, jointly with Thomas Hardy. There was also a count in the indictment charging Hunter with counselling, hiring and procuring the *said Hardy to commit the offence. The indictment charged the offence to have been committed on the night of the 23d of October 1848, by breaking and entering the house of Nancy Rogers, and taking therefrom some 1400 dollars in money, besides other things. It seems that Hardy was first tried, and that he was convicted.

On the trial of the prisoner, the proofs were, that the entry into the house was effected through an opening intended for a window, but to which there was neither sash or shutter; and that the covering over this opening was an old cloak hung at the top on two nails, one on either side of the opening, and loose at the bottom. This cloak was removed from one of the nails, and the end of the cloak was drawn through the opening.

The robbery having been discovered in the morning, and tracks of men near the house, and then of horses a little farther off having been found, several persons tracked the horses for twenty-one miles, until they came nearly to the house of the prisoner in the State of Tennessee. Here they found a horse whose footprints corresponded with those of one of the horses they had been tracing, and which had obviously been rode during the night. Near to the prisoner's house too, Hardy was found and arrested. After the witnesses had detailed the facts as to the breaking, the pursuit to the prisoner's house, the arrest of Hardy, and the subsequent arrest of the prisoner, the attorney for the Commonwealth proposed to introduce the confessions of Hardy made after his arrest, and in the absence of the prisoner. To this evidence the counsel of the prisoner objected, on the ground that no conspiracy between Hardy and the prisoner to commit the offence charged had been proved. The Court stated that it could not then determine from the evidence that had been heard, whether the foundation for introducing the confessions of Hardy was or was not, *then sufficiently laid, but that the evidence might be introduced; and when the examination of witnesses had progressed further, the Court would direct whether it should be excluded or not, if requested by the prisoner's counsel. The witnesses thereupon went on to detail the confessions of Hardy made after his arrest and in the absence of the prisoner. These confessions shewed that the prisoner was not present when the robbery and burglary was committed, but that he was then probably at his house in Tennessee. And they only went to sustain the count against him, for advising, hiring and procuring Hardy to commit the offence.

Although the Court had reserved the question as to the competency of the confessions of Hardy, yet the question was not decided during the progress of the trial, nor was he called on to do so by the prisoner's counsel; but as the jurors were about retiring to consider of their verdict, one of them enquired of the Court, whether they were to consider the statements of Hardy as evidence for their consideration or not. And then the Court replied, "that if the jury believed from the evidence they had heard, that there was a conspiracy proved to have existed between Hardy and the prisoner, to commit the offence charged against them in the indictment, then they were to consider all Hardy's statements as proper evidence before them, and entitled to as much weight as if they were the confessions, admissions, or statements of the prisoner himself. But if they did not believe such conspiracy to be proved, they were to reject the statements of Hardy as no evidence against the prisoner." To this proceeding and opinion of the Court the prisoner excepted.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, and fixed the term of his confinement in the penitentiary at five years; and the Court gave judgment accordingly, sentencing the prisoner to solitary confinement for one twelfth of his time. Whereupon he applied to this Court for a writ of error, which was awarded.

644 *Grattan, for the prisoner.

THOMPSON, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

It is the unanimous opinion of the Court, that it was erroneous in the Court below to admit the confessions, admissions, or declarations of Hardy as evidence against the prisoner, even though a previous conspiracy and combination had been proved; because it appears from the bill of exceptions, that they were made after the arrest, and consequently after the commission and completion of the offence charged. 1 Greenleaf's Evi. 268-9; Roscoe's Crim. Evi. 38, 39. A majority of the Court deem it unnecessary, and therefore decline to express any opinion upon the sufficiency of the evidence certified, to establish such a breaking as to constitute the crime burglary, or upon any of the other questions presented by the prisoner's petition and assignment of errors. The judgment must be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and the proper order for the removal of the prisoner, who is now confined in the penitentiary, to the county of Lee for trial.

FIELD, J. The prisoner was convicted of burglary in the Circuit court of Lee county, and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for five years, one twelfth part of which he was to be confined in a solitary cell thereof. Upon the trial, the confessions of Hardy, an accomplice in the perpetration of the crime, which were made after its commission, were given in evidence against the prisoner, which he objected to, and asked the Court to exclude. The Court declined deciding the question then, and postponed it until all the testimony should be heard. And after the testimony had been closed, the Court instructed the jury, "that if they believed from the evidence that the prisoner and Hardy were accomplices, (or had entered into a conspiracy *to commit the offence,) then they were to regard Hardy's confessions as good evidence against the prisoner, otherwise not." I do not remember the precise language of the instruction. The above is the substance of it. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty. The prisoner moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and a bill of exceptions signed, which sets out the facts proved upon the trial. I am of opinion that the Court erred in not deciding the question as to the admissibility of the confessions of Hardy. This was a question of law which it was the province and duty of the Court to decide, and not refer it to a jury. These declarations were improperly received as evidence against the prisoner. The confessions or declarations of an accomplice or confidant made when they were in the act of committing an offence, or when in its way of commission, can be received as evidence against all parties to the conspiracy. But after the commission of the act is complete and over, declarations subsequently made by an accomplice are good evidence against him only, unless made in the presence of his partners in the crime. I am also of opinion, that the facts set forth in the bill of exceptions do not amount to burglary. (See Lawrence's Case, 19 Eng. C. L. R. 560.) For these three errors I think the judgment should be reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded. Believing that the offence proved upon the trial does not amount to burglary, I deem it unnecessary to say anything about the non-residence of the prisoner, and his being absent from the State when the offence charged in the indictment was committed.

I will further remark, that so much of the sentence as requires confinement in a solitary cell of the penitentiary is irregular, the law upon this subject having been repealed.

Bell's Case.

December Term, 1850.

Statute—Discharge of Prisoner—"Two Terms"—Interpretation.*—A prisoner being sent on for further trial by an examining Court, which sat during the session of the Circuit court to which he is sent for further trial; that term of the Circuit court is not one of the two at which the statute directs that he shall be indicted, or that he shall be discharged from imprisonment.

This is an application to this Court for a writ of habeas corpus by Alonzo G. Bell. It appears that he was arrested in the county of Campbell in March 1850, on a charge for horse stealing. At the May term of the County court he was examined, and sent on for further trial before the Circuit court. It seems that the Circuit court was in the sixth day of its session when the prisoner was examined before the County court; and he was not indicted either at that term of the Circuit court or at the October term.

In November the prisoner applied to the Judge of the Circuit court for a writ of habeas corpus, and to be discharged from custody, on the ground that two terms had passed since the examining Court without his being indicted. The Judge refused to

Statute—Discharge of Prisoner after Two Terms of Court—What Term Not Counted.—In Bell v. Com., 8 Gratt. 604, the court reconsidered the question as to whether the term of court during which a prisoner is sent on for trial is to be counted as one of the two at which, according to statute, he must be indicted; but the court came to the same conclusion as that above laid down.

The principal case and Bell's Case, 8 Gratt. 600, were cited with approval in Glover v. Com., 86 Va. 287, 288, 10 S. E. Rep. 420; and Kibler v. Com., 94 Va. 811, 26 S. E. Rep. 858, where similar questions were before the court. In the former of these cases, it was held that where the accused is sent on for indictment during a term of court, that term is not to be considered as one of the two terms at which he must be indicted under sec. 4001, Va. Code 1887. In the latter case, it was decided that the term at which a prisoner is indicted is not to be counted as one of the three terms at which, according to sec. 4047, Va. Code of 1887, he must be tried.

discharge him. And then the prisoner applied to this Court to be discharged out of custody on the same grounds.

647 *Irving and Johnson, for the prisoner.

LOMAX, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

Upon the petition filed in this case the petitioner asks that this Court "will cause the petitioner to be discharged from further imprisonment," &c. The writ of habeas corpus is not applied for expressly by the petition, but is now applied for by motion, as the means of effecting the discharge which is asked for. The evidence offered to shew probable cause to believe that the petitioner "is detained without lawful authority" in custody, consists of a petition offered by him to a circuit Judge, with an affidavit dated 21st October 1850, endorsed on the petition, of the truth of the statements therein contained; and the proceedings of the examining Court of Campbell county on the 13th May 1850, deciding in that Court that the charge whereof the petitioner was accused, should be "further enquired into and the accused remanded back to jail to await a trial of the said charge before the Judge of the Circuit Superior court of law and chancery for the said county, at the present or next term thereof;" and a certificate of the clerk of the Circuit court of Campbell county, dated the 21st October 1850, that there had been no indictment filed in said Court against Alonzo G. Bell; and the denial of the writ of habeas corpus endorsed on the 1st November 1850 upon the petition, by the circuit Judge when he was applied to for the writ. This Court has not paused to consider whether the application now made is presented in the proper shape, or upon sufficient proofs of the matters alleged, to be entertained by the Court. Supposing the application in all respects to be regular, the Court has considered the question upon which the petitioner contends that he is entitled to be discharged from further imprisonment. He claims his discharge upon the ground, that on the 13th of May 648 1850 he was remanded back to *jail to await a trial before the Circuit Superior court, which Court was then in session; and that he was not then indicted at that term, nor at the term of that Court in October, (presuming that there was a Court held in October,) as the second term of the Court at which he was held to answer.

This Court is of opinion that in ascertaining what is the second term of the Court at which the prisoner is held to answer, the May term, which was (as it would seem) at the time the prisoner was remanded, in the sixth day of its session, ought not to be taken into the computation. Regularly in the course of criminal proceedings, the grand jury who are to indict, are summoned to attend on the first day of the Court, (Code of 1849, p. 766,) the venire facias for the jurors to try him are summoned to the first day of the Court. Before the term of the Court, the clerk is directed to make out a docket of "the pending causes, including the Commonwealth's cases;" and in order to put the Circuit court and the officers of the law in possession of the case, it is required when a person is remanded, that the clerk of the examining Court shall certify to the clerk of the Court where the accused is to be tried, copies of all recognizances taken by the examining Court, (for attendance of witnesses &c. at the trial,) and shall certify to the attorney prosecuting for the Commonwealth in the Court wherein the trial is to be, a copy of the order remanding the accused, and of the depositions taken on the examination, and of any warrant in the case which remains filed in the clerk's office. All these preparatory proceedings for trial, to make them consistent, must all be taken together, as having reference to the first day of the term; and would seem to shew that when the Legislature speaks of a term of the Court at which the prisoner is held to answer, it contemplates a term complete by commencing on the first day. The Legislature seems to be 649 *more explicit in the 36th section of chap. 208, where "the prisoner is directed to be forever discharged from prosecution for the offence, if there be three regular terms of such Court after his examination, without a trial," &c. Consistency requires an uniformity of interpretation in both parts of the law, where the terms are spoken of, viz.: complete terms commencing on the regular days. Many mischiefs in the administration of criminal justice might arise, if the term of the Circuit court, though only an hour before its adjournment, or however engrossed with its business on hand, shall be counted for a term at which the prisoner is held to answer, because the accused has at that period of the term been remanded by the examining Court. It is very true that potentially the prisoner might be tried during the remaining term of the Circuit court, when he is remanded by the examining Court after the first day of the term. The Court may cause another grand jury to be empaneled, though the regular grand jury summoned to the first day may have been discharged; and it may award a venire facias for petit jurors; and it may cause the witnesses to be summoned; and the preparatory certificate of the clerk of the examining Court may be accepted as satisfactory, though brought in at a subsequent day of the term. It seems much better to take some fixed and uniform rule from the language and meaning of the statute, than a rule derived from what the Circuit court may be supposed, in a presumed state of its business, to have had the capacity to do.

In England "the term," according to the common law, is understood as the term of a day, and that day is the first day of the term, to which all the after proceedings have reference. This interpretation is there given in criminal as well as in civil proceedings. The same notion has been recognized in our own Courts, where the date of a judgment rendered during the 650 *term has always had reference to the first day of the term.

There is an obvious propriety in the present and the like cases, to regard the term at which the accused is held to answer, to be the term commencing on the first day of the Court; to be a complete term as well in its beginning as its ending.

Perkins v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1851.

[56 Am. Dec. 123.]

1. Criminal Law—Forgery—Indictment—Allegations.*—

An indictment for forgery charged the forgery of a negotiable note, and set it out in hac verba; without setting out the endorsements upon the back of it. On the trial when the note was offered in evidence, it was objected to on the ground of variance. Held: It was not necessary to set out in the indictment the endorsements upon the note, or any other matter written upon the same paper, constituting no part of the note itself; and not entering into the essential description of that instrument.

2. Negotiable Notes—Case at Bar.—The note said "I promised to pay," &c. It was still a negotiable note, though a bank might refuse to discount it because of its informality.

3. Criminal Proceedings—Instructions†—Case at Bar.—

After the case had been submitted to the jury and they had retired to consider of their verdict, they returned into Court and asked the Court to instruct them as to whether it was necessary that they should be satisfied that the prisoner did actually and personally forge the paper charged in the indictment, in order to his conviction. The Court instructed them that either the actual forgery by the prisoner, or his actual presence aiding and assisting with a felonious intent, when the forged instrument was made, constituted the offence of forgery. Held: The instruction being responsive to the enquiry propounded by the jury, even if it was an abstract proposition, yet as the jury asked an instruction on the point, and the instruction given, correctly stated the law, it is not cause for setting aside the verdict.

652 *In April 1851, Henry T. Perkins was indicted for forgery, in the Circuit court of law for the county of Henrico. The first count of the indictment set out the paper which was charged to have been forged, which was as follows:

"$4000.

Seven Islands, Fluvanna County,
December 10th, 1850.

Sixty days after date, for value received, I promised to pay to the order of William T. Hillous, 4 thousand dollars, without offset, negotiable and payable at the Bank of Virginia, at Richmond.

John H. Cocke."

There were two other counts which charged the forgery of the note. But none of the counts set out or referred to the endorsements upon it.

On the trial, the prosecuting attorney offered in evidence a note conforming on its face to that set out in the indictment; but on the back of it was endorsed the names of W. Gault and William T. Hillous: And the prisoner, by his counsel, moved the Court to exclude the paper from going in evidence to the jury, upon the ground that no count in the indictment set forth the endorsements upon it; so that there was a variance between the allegations and the proofs. But the Court overruled the motion, and the prisoner excepted.

After all the evidence had been introduced and the testimony closed, and the jury had retired to consider of their verdict, they returned into Court and asked the Court to instruct them as to whether it was necessary that they should be satisfied that the prisoner did actually and personally forge the paper charged in the indictment, in order to his conviction. And the Court instructed the jury that if from the evidence they were satisfied that the prisoner 653 either actually and personally *made the forged instrument, or was actually present, aiding, abetting and assisting, with a felonious intent, when the forged writing was made, they must find him guilty, and to this opinion of the Court the prisoner again excepted.

The jury found the prisoner guilty, and fixed the term of his imprisonment in the penitentiary at two years. Thereupon he applied to the Court for a new trial, which was refused; and he again excepted. The facts proved on the trial were spread on the record, and they are as follows:

On the 13th December 1850, the prisoner brought to the Bank of Virginia the paper writing referred to in the first bill of exceptions, and demanded the money for it. He was very much intoxicated, but appeared to know what he was about; and certainly seemed anxious to get the money. He was told he could not get the money, and said he was very much surprised to hear it; that his uncle had told him he had nothing to do but to present the paper and get the money. He said he had a drove of hogs coming to town; and added that the note would be all right. The president and cashier of the bank then had him taken into custody.

It was further proved that there was such a man as William T. Hillous; that he had been in Richmond in the Bank of Virginia, within ten days before the trial of this cause; and was thought to be a man of extensive dealings as a hog drover.

It was further proved that the signature, John H. Cocke, was not written by that gentleman, nor by his authority; and that no part of the note was written by him. That his post office is Seven Islands, Fluvanna county; and that he does not know the prisoner; and had never seen him, to his knowledge, until the time of his trial.

654 *It was further proved that the note introduced in evidence is informal according to the rules of the bank; and even if genuine would not have been discounted. It was further proved that the endorsement of the name of W. Gault on the note is not genuine; and the Court certified that it seemed to the Court that the names of W. Gault and William T. Hillous, endorsed on the note, are in the same handwriting with the whole body of the note, including the signature John H. Cocke.

The Court gave judgment upon the verdict, and thereupon the prisoner applied to this Court for a writ of error.

R. R. Howison for the prisoner.

LOMAX, J., delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Court is of opinion that, as this prosecution was only for forging the writing which purported to be a negotiable note, there was no necessity that the indictment should set out the endorsements, or any other matter written upon the same paper, constituting no part of the note itself, and not entering into the essential description of that instrument. It is enough to set out in the indictment the note itself, without any other extrinsic marks or writings upon the same paper. Commonwealth v. Ward, 2 Mass. R. 397; Simmons v. The State, (Ohio) 7 Ham. R. pt. 1, 116. When the paper with these unessential marks and writings is offered in evidence, for the purpose of sustaining the prosecution for the forgery of the note, there will be no valid objection on the ground of variance between the proofs and the charges laid in the indictment. Stark. Cr. Pl. 113; Rex v. Testick, in note, 1 East's R. 180; East's Cr. Law 925; Commonwealth v. Adams, 7 Metc. R. 50; Commonwealth v. Searle, 2 Binn. R. 332; Commonwealth v. Ross, 2 Mass. R. 373.

655 *Nor is there any ground for the exception that the negotiable note, which is truly set out, contained the acknowledgment of the promise to pay in the past tense, instead of the usual promise in the present tense. Whether it was in the past or present tense, it was equally a negotiable promissory note. Commonwealth v. Parmenter, 5 Pick. R. 279. Nor would the paper lose the character of a negotiable promissory note, as charged in the indictment, because there should be any thing in the frame of the note which might, for want of some conformity to the practice of the bank, deter the bank from discounting the note. It was not less a negotiable promissory note though the bank might refuse to negotiate it.

Nor is there any ground for the exception, stated as the third, in the petition. The instruction given by the Court was a direct response to the enquiry, which was propounded by the jury, for settling their doubts, according to the views taken by them of the evidence in the case. The matters of law, stated by the Court in that instruction, were correctly stated. Even if it might seem to others than the jury to be an instruction upon what might be deemed abstract and foreign from the case, yet the verdict ought not to be set aside on that account; the judgment of the Court being right upon the question submitted to it by the jury.

Another exception stated in the petition to the proceedings of the Court below, is the refusal of the Court to award a new trial, it being alleged that the evidence in the record is insufficient to sustain the verdict. It is abundantly proved that the note was forged; and that the note so forged was in the possession of the accused; and that he was seeking to utter it, and to derive benefit from it. When the forgery was detected, he offered no explanation whatsoever in regard to the paper—how or when it came to his hands—nor of any of the circumstances connected with the paper, 656 or his *possession of it. He made no attempt to offer any such explanation. By whom the forgery of the paper was committed, whether by the accused or some other person, was a question of fact for the jury to decide upon, after weighing all the proofs and circumstances of the case. It was so held by Story, J., in United States v. Britton, 2 Mason's R. 464; and seems so to have been held in Spencer's Case, 2 Leigh 751.

The rule of evidence in such cases was laid down in the Supreme court of North Carolina, in the case of The State v. Britt, 3 Dev. R. 122; and in the case of The State v. Morgan, 2 Dev. & Batt. 348. Ruffin, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the Court in the latter of these cases, maintained that the accused being in possession of the forged order, drawn in his own favor, were facts constituting complete proof that, either by himself, or by false conspiracy with others, he forged or assented to the forgery of the instrument—that he either did the act or caused it to be done, until he shewed the actual perpetrator, and that he himself was not privy. A distinction was taken between having such paper, as a forged order, in possession, and having a counterfeit bank note; an instrument current in its nature, and which might well come innocently to any one's hands. In the case of the forged order, he who holds it under such circumstances, it was said, should be taken to be the forger, unless he shews the contrary. And it was moreover said, in one of the cases cited, that with the exception of such papers as pass from hand to hand in the common transactions of life, the uttering of a forged paper, if unexplained, is in sound sense, evidence of the forgery of the paper by the utterer.

In the present case, it was proved that the endorsement of Gault, as well as the note itself, was forged. Although in the order of endorsements his name precedes the endorsement of the payee, he must be regarded as the pretended endorsee of 657 the payee; and the title *of the accused must be regarded as derived under this forged endorsement of Gault's name. This case does not require the Court to decide what is the degree of proof, or the character of the proof, as being presumptive or prima facie, which is furnished against the accused as the forger, by the mere circumstances that the instrument was forged and that he was endeavouring to utter or to use it for his own benefit. These circumstances it was the province of the jury to weigh, as important proofs against him; and to combine them in their consideration of the case, with the circumstance of the forged endorsement, and the total omission on his part, to offer any exculpatory explanation whatsoever. In combination with these or any other circumstances before the jury, the evidence tended with powerful effect to convict the accused, as charged in the indictment, with having forged the note. In the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction in a criminal prosecution, this Court cannot, without violating the authority of precedent decisions in such cases, interpose to disturb or set aside the verdict which has been rendered by the jury in this case. It cannot pronounce that the Court below erred in refusing to grant a new trial.

The writ of error applied for is refused.

658 *Livingston v. The Commonwealth.

June Term, 1851.

Cause Submitted to Jury—Admission of Evidence after—Discretion of Court.*—Although as a general rule

*Admitting Evidence after Argument—Discretion of Court.—See, on this subject, foot-note to McDowell v. Crawford, 11 Gratt. 377. The principal case is cited in the following: Taylor v. Com., 77 Va. 604; Schonberger v. Com., 86 Va. 492, 10 S. E. Rep. 718; Hunter v. Snyder, 11 W. Va. 218; Burns v. Morrison, 25 W. Va. 426, 15 S. E. Rep. 64; foot-note to Armstead v. Com., 7 Gratt. 509.

it is improper after a cause has been submitted to the jury, to introduce new testimony or examine new witnesses; yet for good cause it may be done. In such case the Court must exercise a sound discretion; and when the circumstances of the case make it necessary, either party should be permitted to introduce new testimony and new witnesses.

George Livingston was indicted in May 1851, in the Circuit court of Petersburg, for larceny in stealing three gold chains and a ring, of the goods of John B. Stevens and Thomas R. Hopkins, jewellers, in the city of Petersburg, trading under the firm of Stevens & Hopkins.

After the evidence had been introduced, the counsel for the prisoner in his argument before the jury, insisted that the gold chains and the ring charged in the indictment to be the property of John B. Stevens and Thomas R. Hopkins, jewellers, in the city of Petersburg, trading under the firm and style of Stevens & Hopkins, had not been proved to be the property of said Stevens & Hopkins, as laid in the indictment. And the attorney for the Commonwealth in his reply to that part of the argument, contended that it had been so proved. The jury retired, and not being able to agree in their verdict, were adjourned over to the next day; and upon being brought into Court the next morning, the counsel for the prisoner moved the Court to instruct the jury, "that if they believe from the evidence that the Commonwealth has failed to prove the existence of the copartnership of Stevens & Hopkins, and that the property was in them as partners as alleged in the indictment, then they must acquit the prisoner, the burden of proof being on the Commonwealth to shew these facts." Whereupon the attorney
